

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

JUDICIAL AND STATUTORY DEFINITIONS

OF

WORDS AND PHRASES.

VOLUME 6.

OBEY.

A condition to obey and perform the judgments of the court, in a bond conditioned so to do in case the principal obligee is not arrested by plaintiff, is sufficient to require the payment of the judgments. Clafin v. Ball, 43 N. Y. 481, 483.

OBITER DICTUM.

See "Dictum."

OBJECT.

Other object, see "Other."

Act Cong. July 13, 1866, amending Act March 10, 1866, declaring it to be the duty of all persons required to make returns or lists of income, articles, or objects charged with an internal tax, to declare, etc., should be construed comprehensively, and to include the gross receipts of express companies and the gross receipts of stage proprietors. The words "objects charged with an internal tax" are used in a general sense, as equivalent to "subjects of taxation." The word "objects" will not be regarded as having reference only to something tangible or having an existence in form. In this statute "lists of income" has a meaning distinct from gross receipts. "Articles" might be deemed to apply to enumerated goods in use or on sale, or produced by manufacture, and the word "objects" should be construed as a more general term, which includes what was not embraced in either of the others. Wells v. Shook (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 679.

The word "object," in Code 1871, § 1878, providing that boards of supervisors shall not appropriate money in the treasuries of their respective counties to any object not authorized by law, and in section 1886, making members liable personally for any such sum of money as the boards shall appropriate to any object not authorized by law, signifies the thing aimed at—the thing sought to be accomplished. The objects to which money in the county treasury may be appropriated are designated by law, and it is not legally appropriable to any other purpose. It is for a diversion of money from legitimate objects, and not for appropriation to a proper object, although in an irregular and unauthorized manner, that liability is imposed on members personally. It is what the money is appropriated to and not how it is applied that furnishes the test of personal liability under it. Paxton v. Baum, 59 Miss. 581, 586.

The "object of an action" is the thing sought to be attained by the action. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 399, 406.

The "object of the action" is not the cause of action or the subject of the action. The object of the action is brought into existence by the commencement of the action, which is long after the subject of action and the causes of action have had an existence. The object of the action is the thing sought to be obtained by the action. It is the remedy demanded and the relief prayed for, and is no part of the subject of action or the cause of action. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 399, 406.

Of contract.

The object of a contract is the thing which it is agreed on the part of the party receiving the consideration to do or not to do. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 1595. The object of a contract must be lawful when the contract is made, and possible and ascertainable by the time the contract is to be performed. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, §§ 3866, 3867; Civ. Code S. D. 1908, §§ 1219, 1220.

Of statute or ordinance.

The object of a statute is the aim or purpose of the enactment. Allopathic State Board of Medical Examiners v. Fowler, 24 South. 809, 813, 50 La. Ann. 1358; State v. De Hart, 83 South. 605, 606, 109 La. 570. While the subject is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. McNeeley v. South. Penn Oil Co., 44 S. E. 508, 518, 52 W. Va. 616 (citing State v. Ferguson, 104 La. 249, 28 South. 917, 81 Am. St. Rep. 123). The word "object" is so used in the clause of the Constitution providing that every law enacted by the General Assembly shall embrace but one object, and that shall be explained in the title. State v. Ferguson, 28 South. 917, 918, 104 La. 249, 81 Am. St. Rep. 123.

In the Constitution, requiring that the object of all laws shall be stated in the title, the word "object" means more nearly the same as "end" or "purpose" than does the word "subject." Day Land & Cattle Co. v. State, 4 S. W. 865, 872, 68 Tex. 542.

The object of legislation is to be determined by its natural and reasonable effect, and not by what may be supposed to have been the motives upon which the legislators acted. People v. Roberts, 19 Sup. Ct. 70, 76, 171 U. S. 658, 43 L. Ed. 823.

The word "object," as used in a provision of a city charter that every ordinance shall contain but one object, expressed in the title, was not used in the sense of "number" or "variety"; nor was it intended to require a distinct legislative act for each particular matter legislated upon. It was intended to prevent the union in one act of diverse, incongruous, and disconnected matters having no relation to or connection with each other, but was not intended to prevent the law-making power from enacting under a general title provisions affecting a variety of matters, so long as there is a natural connection between the several matters and the object named in the title. City of Seattle v. Barto, 71 Pac. 735, 81 Wash. 141.

Same—As subject.

Instead of the word "subject," in Const. art. 5, § 21, providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, the Constitutions of some of the states have, in like provisions, the word "object." Some states, as Texas and New York, give to "subject" a less restricted meaning than "object." Others, like Michigan, regard these words as substantially synonymous. In re House Bill, 30 Pac. 1096, 1098, 21 Colo. 46.

The word "object," as used in Const. art. 5, § 17, providing that "no law shall embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title," means the same and has the same signification as the word "subject." Ingles v. Straus, 21 S. E. 490, 492, 91 Va. 209.

The word "object" is not synonymous with "subject," as used in Const. art. 3, § 21, providing that no law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title; for the object is the aim or purpose of the enactment, while the subject of a statute is the matter of public or private concern for which the law is enacted. State v. Morgan, 48 N. W. 314, 317, 2 S. D. 32.

"Object," as used in the organic act of Washington Territory, providing that every law shall embrace but one "object," and that shall be expressed in the title, is for all practical purposes synonymous with "subject." If any distinction is to be made between "subject" and "object," in the connection used, "object" is obviously of broader significance than the word "subject." "Object" may be used as having the sense of "effect," the thing intended to be accomplished, not the means by which it is to be accomplished, which is properly the subject. For instance, the object of an act is to confer the elective franchise on females. Its subject is the subject-matter on which, in accomplishing that object, the legislative will operated, namely the section of the Code defining the qualification of electors. Harland v. Territory, 13 Pac. 453, 457, 3 Wash. T. 131.

Of tax.

The word "object," as used in Const. art. 7, § 13, requiring every law which imposes, continues, or revises a tax to distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied, should not be construed so narrowly as to restrict its meaning to a particular person or a particular appropriation. Its use is to require the Legislature, in imposing taxes, to specify one or another of the classes of expenditure which they are obliged or allowed to incur. It may be a wholly contingent or discretionary class, and yet be one of the objects to which the revenues of the state may be applied. The term is to be construed as intended to require the Legislature to indicate the general design with which a tax is laid, and for which it is to be used, and not to specify either a person or thing on which it is to be expended. The object of a tax is sufficiently stated where it is required to be paid into the treasury of the state to the credit of the general fund. People v. Orange County Sup'rs (N. Y.) 27 Barb. 557, 582.

In considering the provision of Const. art. 9, § 4, "that no tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of a law which distinctly states the object of the same, to which object such tax shall be applied," the court said: "It is very clear that what constitutes the object, in the sense of the Constitution, is some legal occasion that calls for the expenditure of money; that is, some obligation, present or prospective, created by law. Clearly the Constitution did not intend that the money raised under a special tax shall be applied toward the purposes cited in such tax law, independent of there being any law constituting an appropriation for its disbursement. Suppose, for instance, that money is raised to erect a public building, and no act for the erection of such building was passed during the fiscal year for which it was raised. Clearly there was no authority to be gathered from that provision of the Constitution that could warrant the disbursement of such a fund toward such purpose without such a law. This shows clearly that the object intended by the Constitution is that which is created by some law, or, in other words, some obligation, present or prospective, created and sanctioned by law." State v. Leaphart, 11 S. C. 458, 470.

OBJECTION.

See "General Objection."

Exception synonymous, see "Exception."

The word "objection," in a statement by an attorney that he desires to renew his objection to the findings of fact, was equivalent to the word "exception"; and hence an objection that no specified exception was taken to the findings of fact was groundless. Ranahan v. Gibbons, 62 Pac. 773, 775, 23 Wash. 253.

An "objection to the admissibility of evidence" in any cause can only be properly founded on the hypothesis that such testimony violates the law of evidence, in this: that the law prohibits the proof in the manner proposed of the particular fact, or of its irrelevancy to the subject-matter of inquiry. Gibbs v. Gale, 7 Md. 76, 86.

An objection to a pleading is not equivalent to a defense to an action, but is construed as relating to some formal defect. Elfrank v. Seiler, 54 Mo. 124, 126.

As used in a will devising a copyhold to testator's daughter-in-law for life, remainder in fee to her son A., on an express condition that A. should convey certain property severally to his sisters, but, in case he should "object or refuse" to make such conveyances, then the devise to him was void, the words "object or refuse" did not necessarily express a positive act, but the testator assumed that the grandson would convey if he did not object, and the words did not imply or make necessary a request by the sisters for the conveyance. Osborn v. Crisp, 8 Adol. & R. 773.

OBJECTIONABLE PURPOSE.

The conversion of a private dwelling into a public boarding house is using it for a "public or objectionable purpose," within the meaning of a lease providing that the lessor had a right to insist that the house should be occupied as a residence, and used strictly as a private dwelling, and not for any "public or objectionable purpose." Gannett v. Albree, 103 Mass. 372, 374.

OBJECTIONABLE THING.

"Objectionable thing," as used in an instruction in an action for damages for the taking of land by a railway for a right of way, charging that if the jury find, from a preponderance of the evidence, that the value of plaintiff's land not actually appropriated by defendant had been decreased by the existence of any stagnant pools, floods, or objectionable thing, necessarily caused by the improvement of said right of way, the jury should add such decrease in value to their verdict for the plaintiff; but, if such pool, flood, or objectionable thing be caused by the faulty and negligent construction of such right of way, then any decrease in value of the land must be disregarded—to some extent rendered the instruction too broad and not sufficiently specific. The court should have enlarged on the instruction in its statement, and enumerated the different elements of damages, instead of grouping them as it did under the head of "objectionable thing"; but, inasmuch as by the last clause of the instruction the jury were limited to damages shown by the evidence, the objection and generality of the instruction was harmless. Fremont, El. & M. V. R. Co. v. Bates, 58 N. W. 959, 961, 40 Neb. 381.

OBLIGATE.

"Obligated" means strictly, and in common parlance, to be bound. Wachter v. Famachon, 22 N. W. 160, 161, 62 Wis. 117.

The term "obligated," in Laws 1891, c. 4022, § 2, providing that it shall not be lawful to take, by any contract, contrivance, or device whatever whereby the debtor is required or obligated to pay, a greater sum than the actual principal sum received, together with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, is a participle from "obligate," and has the same root as the noun "obligation." In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary "obligation" in law is a bond with a condition annexed and a penalty for nonfulfillment. In Bouvier's Law Dictionary "obligation" is defined as a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. Maxwell v. Jacksonville Loan & Improvement Co. (Fla.) 84 South. 255, 267.

OBLIGATION.

See "Alternative Obligation"; "Conditional Obligation"; "Express Obligation"; "Imperfect Obligation"; "Joint Obligation"; "Maritime Obligation"; "Moral Obligation"; "Natural Obligation"; "Pecuniary Obligation"; "Perfect Obligation"; "Personal Obligation"; "Primary Obligation"; "Principal Obligation"; "Simple Obligation"; "Solidary Obligation."

All obligations, see "All."

Other obligation, see "Other."

"Obligation" is defined to be the act of obliging or binding; that which obligates; the binding power of a future promise, vow, or contract. Webst. Dict. The word is derived from the Latin "obligatio," tying up, and that from the word "obligo," to bind or tie up, to engage by the ties of a promise or oath, or form of law; and "obligo" is compounded of the verb "ligo," to tie or bind fast, and the preposition "ob," which is prefixed to increase its meaning. Blair v. Williams, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 34, 65; Lapsley v. Brashears, Id. 47, 65; Edwards v. Kearsey, 96 U. S. 595, 600, 24 L. Ed. 793.

Bouvier says: "Obligation in its general and most extensive sense is synonymous with duty. In the more technical sense it is a tie which binds us to pay or do something agreeably to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made." Webster defines "obligation" to be "the binding power of a vow, promise, or contract of law, civil, political, or moral, independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty, and which renders a person liable to coercion and punishment for neglecting it." Orndall v. Bryan (N. Y.) 5 Abb. Prac. 162, 168, 15 How. Prac. 48. See, also, Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 819, 353 (Gil. 224, 236); McRae v. Cochise County (Ariz.) 44 Pac. 299, 300.

The word "obligation" is defined to be "the constraining power or authoritative character of a duty, a moral precept, a civil law, or a promise or contract voluntarily made; that to which one is bound; that which one is obliged or bound to do, especially by moral or legal claims; a duty." Colter v. State, 39 S. W. 576, 577, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 284 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

The word "obligation" has two well-defined legal meanings: (1) Where it is the name given to the contract itself; (2) the other includes those cases where it refers to the duty imposed on a person in connection with a contract to perform it, or to a liability arising from his contract, or from his actionable, tortious conduct. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 3 Pac. 449, 451, 7 Colo. 314.

The word "obligation," as used in a requested instruction in an action against a railroad company for damages by fire, that if the jury found from the evidence that the railway ran through a prairie country, with prairie and wild grass on either side, both on the railroad's right of way and outside and adjacent to its track, "the defendant was under no legal obligation to mow or cut the said wild or prairie grass outside of its road ties along its right of way," refers to the duty of defendant as respects carelessness—its duty or obligation to avoid negligently exposing the property of others to injury from its engines. It does not refer to a duty imposed by statute. Siblrud v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 11 N. W. 143, 29 Minn. 58.

"Obligation of the instrument," as used in superior court rule No. 7, which is as follows: "In any action brought on any deed, bond, bill, note, or other instrument of writing, a copy of which shall have been filed with the declaration, the defendant, not being an executor or administrator, shall not on the trial be allowed to deny his signature, or that of any other party to the instrument, and the execution of such instrument shall be taken to be admitted, unless the defendant shall have filed an affidavit denying the signature or the obligation of the instrument, by reason of fraud, duress, or other legal cause," etc., means the obligation which arises solely from the free and voluntary signature of the instrument. The phrase does not relate to the existing obligation to pay the amount secured to be paid by the instrument, nor to any obligation, other than as hereinbefore mentioned, existing at the time of filing the plea. Vandergrift v. Hollis (Del.) 6 Houst. 90, 102.

An obligation is a legal duty by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 1427; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3762; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1114; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1920. It arises from (1) contract or (2) operation of law. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 26; Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 8475.

"Obligation" is, in its general and most extensive sense, synonymous with "duty." Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 1768.

Agreement in writing.

"The word 'obligation' originally meant a bond containing a penalty, with a condition for the payment of money or to do or suffer some act or thing. Co. Litt. 172a. The meaning of the word, however, has gradually been enlarged by the court, and it has ceased to be restricted to a bond or writing obligatory, and has been extended to mean a paper by which some fixed duty is assumed to be performed at a certain time, or an instrument in writing whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of money at a fixed date, or for the delivery of specific articles. But, however various have been the definitions given the word, the one essential element has always been that it must be a written paper. The duty assumed by it must be a fixed duty. Bouv. Law Dict. tit. "Obligations." The word, as used in Stock Corp. Law, § 48, providing that no corporation which shall have refused to pay any of its notes or other obligations may transfer property to its officers, directors, or stockholders, does not include an indebtedness for services furnished by a telegraph company under a contract providing for a fixed rental, and also compensation according to services rendered, as the amount or time of payment cannot be determined by the contract. Munsinger v. United Press Co., 65 N. Y. Supp. 194, 196, 52 App. Div. 338.

The word "obligation" in its most technical meaning implies ex vi termini a sealed instrument, but it certainly has also a very broad and comprehensive legal signification, and embraces all instruments of writing, however informal, whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of money, or for the delivery of specific articles, whether same be under seal or not. State v. Campbell, 9 S. E. 410, 411, 103 N. C. 344.

The word "obligation," as used in Gen. St. § 1834, providing that all joint obligations and covenants shall hereafter be taken and held to be joint and several obligations and covenants, means an agreement in writing, sealed or unsealed, as contradistinguished from its use with reference to legal duty or liability, arising from an oral or written contract or from actionable tortious conduct. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 3 Pac. 443, 450, 7 Colo. 314.

The word "obligation," as used in a will, reciting: "Whereas, I now hold obligations against certain of my friends, I direct my executor not to urge the payment of any such obligations before the space of two full years after my decease"—means a written instrument like a note or bond. Thorn v. Hall, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1054, 1055, 10 App. Div. 412.

The word "obligation," as used in Code, § 120, providing that persons severally liable on the same obligation or instrument, including parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes, may all or any of them be included in the same action at the option of the plaintiff, was intended to cover only those causes of action evidenced by a writing. The word "obligation" is from the Latin word "obligatio," defined to be a bond of law, by which we are necessarily bound to pay something according to the laws of our country. Strong v. Wheaton (N. Y.) 38 Barb. 616, 623, 626.

Bond.

In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary "obligation," in law, is a bond with a condition annexed and a penalty for nonfulfillment. In Bouvier's Law Dictionary "obligation" is defined as a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. Maxwell v. Jacksonville Loan & Improvement Co. (Fla.) 84 South. 255, 267.

An obligation is a bond, and must arise on a good and valid consideration between persons capable of contracting, and must be executed in the manner required by law. Felham v. Grigg, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 141, 143.

"Obligations," as used in Act Ky. 1878 (1 Sess. Acts 1878, p. 77), authorizing the county court of a certain county to compromise and settle with the holders of outstanding coupon bonds, and empowering the court to execute to the holders such bonds and coupons severally the "obligations" of such county, includes a coupon bond payable to the holder of the old bonds and bearer, and is not confined to an ordinary promissory note, nonnegotiable and payable to the holder of the old bonds only. "Obligations" is a generic word, and includes all kinds of contracts by which contracting parties bind themselves, and, in the absence of limiting words or the connection in which it is used, will be construed in its generic sense. Sinton v. Carter County (U. S.) 23 Fed. 535, 538.

Under Laws 1892, c. 686, §§ 69, 70, as amended by Laws 1896, c. 178, which authorized towns to borrow money to improve their highways and to issue obligations therefor, long term negotiable bonds are obligations within the meaning of the statute; "obligation" being a word of large extent, but commonly taken in the common law for a bond containing a penalty, with condition for the payment of money or to do or suffer some act or thing. Blackstone makes the word synonymous with "bond." Ghiglione v. Marsh, 48 N. Y. Supp. 604, 607, 23 App. Div. 61.

The words "obligation or other security," as used in Rev. St. § 5430 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3671], which provides that every person who has in his possession or custody, except under authority from the Secretary of the Treasury or other proper person, any obligation or other security engraved and printed under the similitude of any obligation or other security issued under the authority of the United States, with intent to sell or otherwise use the same, shall be pun ished, etc., imply an executed instrument, or at least one which on its face purports to be executed by somebody. They would not include false or bogus bonds, which bear no signature whatever. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 14 Fed. 550, 552. A bond issued by a mining company and resembling a United States bond, but not purporting to be executed by any party whatever, is not an obligation or other security, within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Sprague (U. S.) 48 Fed. 828, 830.

Contract.

The term "obligation," as used in Pub. St. c. 60, par. 71, allowing a counterclaim in an action arising on obligation, means contract, and comprehends all causes of action arising ex contractu, as distinguished from causes of action arising ex delicto. Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 319, 353 (Gil. 224, 236).

The word "obligation," in a strict, technical sense, means properly a bond. 2 Bl. Comm. 840. But, as used in Comp. St. p. 541, § 71, providing that a counterclaim "must be one arising out of the following causes of action: . . . (2) In an action arising on obligation, any other cause of action arising also on obligation, and existing at the commencement of the suit"—was intended to receive a more liberal construction, and to apply to all matters arising ex contractu. Folsom v. Carl, 6 Minn. 420, 426 (Gil. 284, 289), 80 Am. Dec. 456.

A partnership indebtedness is an "obligation," within Code Civ. Proc. § 235, providing that, when a judgment is recovered against one or more of several persons jointly indebted upon an obligation by proceedings as provided in this act, those who are not originally served may be summoned to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment as if originally served. It does not contemplate merely an indebtedness arising upon and evidenced by an agreement in writing. "Obligation" is a generic word, and when used in its broadest sense includes all kinds of contracts by which a person may become bound, and should be so construed unless, from the connection in which it is used, it is to be gathered that the Legislature intended to give it more limited significance. Sawyer v. Armstrong, 47 Pac. 391, 392, 23 Cole. 287.

The word "obligation," in its origin, imports compulsion, the tying or binding of one against or irrespective of his consent. But consent is of the essence of a contract. The presence of compulsion on either side is fatal to its existence. The contract, therefore, or act of contracting, does not create an obligation, and does not of itself put any force upon the contracting party, since by the very nature of the transaction he voluntarily undertakes to do the thing promised. The obligation—that which, by a force stronger than his dissenting inclination or his repelling interest, constrains his will or ties him to the performance of his promise, whether he continue willing or not, and but for which he would, in any instance, refuse such performance—is the creature exclusively of law. The contract is the occasion, but it is not the efficient cause, of obligation. It is manifestly the legal obligation of contracts which such legislation is forbidden by the Constitution to impair. Wood v. Wood (S. C.) 14 Rich. Law, 148, 154, 156.

Debt or Liability.

The term "obligation," as used in an attachment affidavit, alleging that defendant fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation, was synonymous with the term "debt," the obligation and the debt meaning necessarily the same thing; and therefore the affidavit was not rendered void for uncertainty by reason of the use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" between the allegation that the debt was fraudulently contracted and the allegation that the obligation was fraudulently incurred. Emerson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 58 N. W. 659, 660, 100 Mich. 127.

Gen. St. 1889, par. 1268, providing that any two or more railroad companies are authorized to consolidate and form one company, subject to all the "obligations and liabilities to the state" which belong to or rest upon either of the companies making such consolidation, should be construed to include all claims, debts, or other pecuniary demands of each of the original companies. If obligations to the state only were intended, it would not have been necessary to have added the words "liabilities to the state," because "liability" is defined as the state of being liable, as the liability of an insurer, liability to the law, responsibility, accountability, or bounden duty. "Obligation" is also defined as that which obligates or constrains; the binding power of a promise, or a contract; a bond with a condition annexed and a penalty for non-fulfillment. In a larger sense it is an acknowledgment of a duty to pay a certain sum or do a certain thing; responsibility; accountability; bounden duty. To hold that obligations and liabilities are limited to the state only would be to say that the Legislature was guilty of a repetition of the same meaning in different words. On the other hand, if obligations and liabilities are both given their full force and effect, "obligations" may be construed as embracing all pecuniary duties in the way of being answerable for debts, demands, etc. "Liabilities" may mean burdens imposed by the Constitution and the statutes; that is, the responsibility or bounden duty to the state under the Constitution and statutes. Berry v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 84 Pac. 805, 808, 52 Kan. 750, 39 Am. St. Rep. 371.

"Obligation," as used in Code, § 173, subd. 4, permitting the arrest of a defendant for fraud in incurring the "obligation," as used in a general sense, includes all the cases beyond those embraced in the first clause, where the fraud was committed in contracting the debt for which the action is brought. The word is to be construed in this connection as equivalent to "legal liability" or "legal duty." Crandall v. Bryan (N. Y.) 15 How. Prac. 48, 53, 5 Abb. Prac. 162.

The reward authorized by Act March 19, 1899, to be paid to the person who shall be first in obtaining an artesian well in the county, offering the reward, and providing that, on the board of supervisors being satisfied with the requirements having been complied with, it shall draw a warrant on the treasurer, and that all expenses shall be chargeable to the county, etc., is an obligation within the meaning of Act Cong. July 30, 1898, c. 818 (24 Stat. 170), limiting the indebtedness of any county to 4 per cent. of the value of the taxable property, and providing that all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount shall be void. McRae v. Cochise County (Ariz.) 44 Pac. 299, 300, 33 L. R. A. 351, 56 Am. St. Rep. 573.

Deed or sealed instrument.

An obligation is defined to be "a deed in writing whereby one man doth bind himself to another to pay a sum of money or to do some other thing." Cover v. Stem, 10 Atl. 231, 232, 67 Md. 449, 1 Am. St. Rep. 406 (citing Shep. Touch.); Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 108, 112.

The word "obligation," in its most technical signification, imports ex vi termini a sealed instrument—that is, a bond; but in its more popular sense the term signifies an instrument or writing by which a contract is witnessed. In Comyn's Digest an obligation is defined to be a deed whereby a man binds himself under a penalty to do a thing. Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321, 330; Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 319, 353 (Gil. 224, 236).

It is said there are only three things essentially necessary to the making of a good "obligation," namely, writing on paper or parchment, sealing, and delivering; and it has been adjudged not to be necessary that the obligor should sign or subscribe his name, because the subscribing is no essential part of the deed, the sealing being sufficient. Jeffery v. Underwood, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 108, 112 (citing Bac. Abr.).

"Obligation" is a technical term, which in its legal and proper meaning signifies a contract under seal. Rippon's Ex'rs v. Townsend's Ex'rs (S. C.) 1 Bay, 445, 447.

Any memorandum in writing under seal, whereby a debt is acknowledged to be owing, will obligate the party to pay. Cover v. Stem, 10 Atl. 231, 232, 67 Md. 449, 1 Am. St. Rep. 406.

An engagement entered into by a bank under its corporate seal is properly termed an "obligation." Kemmerer v. Wilson, 81 Pa. (7 Casey) 110, 113.

Draft or note.

The term "obligation or written contract" in the provision of the statute declaring that an obligation or written contract of several persons shall be joint and several, unless otherwise expressed, held not to embrace or apply to promissory notes or bills of exchange. Gale v. Myers (Del.) 4 Houst. 546, 547.

A protested draft is not an obligation, within the meaning of the provisions of Act Pa. April 16, 1850, declaring that the assignees of an insolvent bank shall receive in payment of debts due to said bank its own notes and obligations and the checks of its depositors at par. Basehore v. Rhodes, 85 Pa. 44, 46.

Duty of person occupying fiduciary relations.

The duty of an administratrix to account is an "obligation," within Code Civ. Proc. § 382, subd. 1, limiting actions on contract obligations or liabilities, express or implied, to six years after the cause of action accrued. In re Nicholls, 8 N. Y. Supp. 7, 8, 2 Con. Sur. 156.

Enforceable obligation.

"An obligation, whether arising from contract or by operation of law, is one binding upon the obligor and one that may be enforced by the obligee. It does not rest in the option of the actor to perform or to refrain from performing at his own will. It does not depend for its existence upon the happening of a future event or the event of any contingency. It is an executed, a completed thing, having an existence in the present, binding in the present upon the obligor, and capable of being enforced by the obligee." Keith v. Haggart, 33 N. W. 465, 468, 4 Dak. 438.

Evidence of debt.

As used in a will providing that if, at the distribution, there should be due to the estate from any of the legatees obligations of any kind or evidences of debt of any kind, then such obligations shall be deducted from such legatee's share before payment, the term "obligation" meant to include notes and all instruments by which the maker thereof binds himself to pay money, and as used the second time it was intended to embrace all those things mentioned in the first clause, namely, obligations of any kind and evidences of debt of any kind. Hill v. Bloom, 7 Atl. 438, 440, 41 N. J. Eq. (14 Stew.) 276.

"Obligation," as used in Code, § 1064, making an order, bill of exchange, bond, promissory note, or other obligation a subject of larceny, should be construed to include a duebill; for a duebill is evidence of an obligation to pay money. The maker by it acknowledges the indebtedness, and the law implies and raises the obligation to pay it. State v. Campbell, 9 S. E. 410, 411, 108 N. C. 844.

Judgment.

The words "contract or obligation," as used in Act June, 1879, which provides that "the rate of interest upon the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or things in action shall be $6 upon $100 for one year, and after that rate for a greater or less sum, or for a longer or shorter time; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to in any way affect any contract or obligation made before the passage of this act," would include a judgment, so that the interest on a judgment recovered before the passage of this act would not be reduced by the act. Prouty v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. (N. Y.) 26 Hun, 546, 549. Contra, see O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 428, 435, 47 Am. Rep. 64.

Limitation on powers of corporation.

Laws 1883, c. 175, which provides that, where any other state shall impose any "obligation" on co-operative life insurance companies of New York doing business in such other states, "the like obligations are hereby imposed on similar corporations of such other state transacting business in this state," does not impose on a Massachusetts corporation doing business in New York the prohibition of St. Mass. 1885, c. 183, § 10, that no policy or certificate shall be issued on "the life of any person more than 60 years of age," since it is the obligations, and not the prohibitions, that are imposed on foreign companies by the retaliatory act of 1883. The provision of the statute referred to is evidently one to be strictly construed, and, when so construed, the term "obligation" will not be held to include a limitation upon the powers of the corporations referred to. Griesa v. Massachusetts Ben. Ass'n, 15 N. Y. Supp. 71, 74, 60 Hun, 581.

National currency.

Where 13 Stat. 218, § 13, provided that the words "obligation or other security of the United States," used in the act, should include national currency, but the phrase "obligation or other security of the United States" nowhere appeared in the act, but the word "obligation" appeared alone in another section of the act, the phrase "obligation or other security of the United States" should be construed to have referred to the words used therein separately, and not as a phrase; and hence the word "obligation," as used alone, included national currency. United States v. Rossvally (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 901, 902.

Order for payment of money.

Orders on the federal treasury, payable on demand, for interest due on United States consols, are not "obligations of the United States," within the statutory provision exempting stocks, bonds, and other obligations of the United States from state and municipal taxation. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. San Francisco, 72 Pac. 920, 189 Cal. 205, 96 Am. St. Rep. 100.

Partnership indebtedness.

Code Civ. Proc. § 235, provides that, when a judgment is recovered against one or more of several persons jointly indebted upon an obligation by proceeding as provided in the act, those who were not originally served may be summoned to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment as if originally served. Chapter 8, § 42, provides that, if plaintiff recover judgment, it may be enforced against all the defendants thus jointly liable as to their joint property, and as to the separate property of the defendants served. Held, that the word "obligation" in section 235 includes a partnership indebtedness. "This word," says the court, "when used in a statute as the name of a contract, is a generic word, including all kinds of contracts by which a person may become bound, and should be so construed, unless from the connection in which it is used it is to be gathered that the Legislature intended to give it a more limited signification." Sawyer v. Armstrong, 23 Colo. 287, 290, 47 Pac. 891.

Recognizance.

A New Jersey statute of limitations provides that every action of debt or covenant, etc., upon any obligation for the payment of money only, shall be commenced within a certain time. Held, that the words "obligation for the payment of money" are used in the sense of "contracts," and do not include a recognizance, since a recognizance has more of the nature of a judgment than a contract. Elsasser v. Haines, 18 Atl. 1095, 1100, 52 N. J. Law (23 Vroom) 10.

Tort.

"Obligation," as used in legislative provisions relative to a legal duty or liability, means a duty or liability which may arise from an oral or written contract, or in some instances from tortious conduct which gives another a right of action. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 8 Pac. 449, 451, 7 Colo. 814.

"Obligation," as used in Laws 1869, p. 2883, chartering a city, which provides that no action against the city on a contract, obligation, or liability, express or implied, shall be commenced, except within one year after the cause of action shall have accrued, only includes such claims, accounts, or demands as are required to be presented for audit, and does not include liabilities for tort. McGaffin v. City of Cohoes, 74 N. Y. 887, 888, 80 Am. Rep. 807.

The word "obligation," as used in Act Feb. 16, 1865, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 191, and providing that an attachment may issue in a civil action for the recovery of money when defendant has "fraudulently or criminally contracted the debt or incurred the obligation for which the suit is about to be or has been brought," is equivalent to "liability" in cases in which the element of criminality is present, and therefore an attachment will lie to recover unliquidated damages for assault and battery; for that is a liability in the origin of which the element of criminality is present. Sturdevant v. Tuttle, 22 Ohio St. 111, 114.

OBLIGATION FRAUDULENTLY INCURRED.

"Obligation fraudulently incurred," as used in Rev. St. § 5521 (Code, § 191), providing that an attachment may be issued against the property of the person who fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation in favor of the other party, should be construed to include only contracts other than those by which a debt is created, and not to include all torts and wrongful acts to which in its widest sense the term "fraudulent" could be applied. The term "fraudulent" must be limited to actual and positive fraud, and not to embrace the wide field of constructive fraud. When a person by a device or unfair way obtains credit, he may be said to have fraudulently contracted a debt. But there are many contracts to which the assent of a party may be obtained, the effect of which is not in a strict and proper sense to create a debt. The party who has entered into such contracts, and has, by any device or unfair way, obtained from the other party his assent and the consideration, may very properly be said to have fraudulently incurred an obligation, within the meaning of the statute. Hence the fraudulent conversion of promissory notes, bills of exchange, etc., received in the usual course of business for collection, while a breach of the contract of bailment, does not create an obligation fraudulently incurred, within the meaning of the statute. Merchants Bank v. Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co., 13 Ohio Dec. 738, 740.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT.

See "Impairing Obligation of Contract."

"The Institutes (liber 3, tit. 4, Cooper's translation) say: 'An obligation is the charge of the law by which we are necessarily bound to make some payment according to the law of the land.' Pothier, in his Treatise Concerning Obligations, in speaking of the obligation of contracts, calls it 'vinculum legis,' the chain of the law. Paley (page 56) says: 'To be obliged is to be urged by violent motives, resulting from the command of another.' From these authorities, and many more might be cited, it may be fairly concluded that the obligation of the contract consists in the power and efficacy of the law, which applies to an enforced performance of the contract by a payment of an equivalent for nonperformance. The obligation does not inhere and subsist in the contract itself, proprio vigore, but is the law applicable to the contract. The term is used in this sense in the clause of a federal constitution prohibiting laws impairing the obligation of contracts." Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 218, 215, 216, 6 L. Ed. 606.

The term "obligation" has been treated in extenso by many learned moral and civil writers, and has been somewhat mystified by classification, and its correct use in connection with the various and numerous subjects in which it has been applied has not always been very clearly established; but the term, when used in relation to contracts, is neither mystical nor doubtful, and its meaning is well understood by lawyers. "Obligatio ex contractu" and "obligatio est juris vinculum," are terms of the Roman law with well-defined meaning. "Obligatio" is to bind. Obligation implies a duty, and a duty that may be enforced by law to perform the contract according to its terms. The Constitution of the United States uses the term in this sense when it prohibits the enactment of laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Wachter v. Farnachon, 22 N. W. 160, 161, 62 Wis. 117.

The foremost approved lexicographers, Johnson, Sheridan, Walker, and Jones, all in substance define the word "obligation" to mean the binding power of any oath, vow, duty, or contract; an act which binds any man to some performance. The obligation of a contract is, then, its binding power. It is that which compels its performance. In other words, it is, as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 197, 4 L. Ed. 529, the law of the contract. Contracts between individuals, voluntarily made and abstractly considered, have no law in their composition; but the law of the land says that they shall be fulfilled as made, and applies a remedy in case of a breach, and both of these constitute the obligation. Blair v. Williams, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 84, 65.

"The obligation of a contract is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement." Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.) 122, 197, 4 L. Ed. 529; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 213, 258, 6 L. Ed. 606; Mason v. Hille, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 370, 379, 6 L. Ed. 600; Bedford v. Eastern Building & Loan Ass'n of Syracuse, N. Y., 21 Sup. Ct. 597, 602, 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. Ed. 834; Walker v. Whitehead, 83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 314, 317, 21 L. Ed. 357; Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 535, 550, 18 L. Ed. 408; Curran v. Arkansas, 56 U. S. (15 How.) 304, 319, 14 L. Ed. 705; Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Alturas County (U. S.) 65 Fed. 677, 681; Wachter v. Pamachon, 22 N. W. 160, 162, 62 Wis. 117; Wood v. Mallin, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 208, 209; Bates v. Gregory, 26 Pac. 891, 893, 89 Cal. 387; Beverly v. Barints, 42 Pac. 725, 728, 55 Kan. 466, 31 L. R. A. 74, 49 Am. St. Rep. 257; Greiff v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 57 N. Y. Supp. 871, 878, 40 App. Div. 180; Shrigley v. Black, 71 Pac. 301, 306, 66 Kan. 213; Edwards v. Williamson, 70 Ala. 145, 151; Phinney v. Phinney, 17 Atl. 405, 409, 81 Me. 450, 4 L. R. A. 348, 10 Am. St. Rep. 266; Long v. Walker, 105 N. C. 90, 98, 10 S. E. 858-860; Bally v. Gentry, 1 Mo. 164, 170, 13 Am. Dec. 484.

The obligation of a contract is found in the terms in which that contract is expressed, and is the duty thus assumed by the contracting parties, respectively, to perform the stipulations of the contract. Barlow v. Gregory, 31 Conn. 261, 265.

"Obligation of contract" means the legal compulsion or obligation that grows out of a contract and makes a part of it, that enters into it at the time it is made, and that is intended to be protected and maintained in its full force and vigor by the language of the Constitution. Webster v. Rose, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 93, 97, 19 Am. Rep. 583.

The obligation of a contract is the legal tie which imposes the necessity of doing or abstaining from a particular act, as distinguished from the imperfect obligation arising from gratitude, charity, or other moral duties, binding upon the conscience, but having no legal remedy for their enforcement. This latter is the essence of the legal obligation. Moore v. Holland, 16 S. C. 15, 29.

The obligation of a contract consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made. These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and form a part of them, as the measure of the obligation to perform them by one party and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by which to ascertain the extent of either than that which the terms of the contract indicate, according to their settled legal meaning. When it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right, compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force. McCracken v. Hayward, 43 U. S. (2 How.) 608, 612, 11 L. Ed. 897; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 213, 285, 6 L. Ed. 606; Edwards v. Williamson, 70 Ala. 145, 151; Forqueran v. Donnelly, 7 W. Va. 114, 139; Cutts v. Hardee, 38 Ga. 350, 369; Larrabee v. Talbott (Md.) 5 Gill, 426, 440, 46 Am. Dec. 637.

The obligation of a contract is the duty to perform it, whatever may be its nature. It may be a moral obligation, or legal obligation, or both; but when we speak of "obligation" generally, we mean legal obligation—that is, the right to performance which the law confers on one party, and the corresponding duty of performance to which it binds the other. Larrabee v. Talbott (Md.) 5 Gill, 426, 440, 46 Am. Dec. 637 (citing Story, Conf. Laws, § 226).

The obligation of a contract, within the meaning of the Constitution, is not merely the moral obligation of the party who received the consideration, and is therefore equitably bound to perform the agreement on his part; but it is the legal obligation, which embraces not only the right of the party entitled to performance, but the power by law to enforce and consummate that right by compelling that performance. It is this legal obligation, this right to enforce and make effectual by legal compulsion in the case of unexecuted contracts, which is referred to in the Constitution as the obligation of a contract which the state Legislatures are forbidden to impair. Richardson v. Cook, 87 Vt. 599, 602, 88 Am. Dec. 622.

"Obligation of a contract" imports for the most part its binding force upon the obligor to perform the duty agreed on, according to the nature and effect of the contract. It relates to the performance, rather than to a breach, of the contract. Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 40 Miss. 29, 31, 90 Am. Dec. 311.

It is settled that the laws subsisting at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This principle embraces alike those which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement. Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 535, 550, 18 L. Ed. 408; Louisiana v. Police Jury of Parish of St. Martin, 4 Sup. Ct. 648, 650, 111

U. S. 716, 28 L. Ed. 574; Peabody v. Stetson, 34 Atl. 74, 77, 88 Me. 273.

The obligation of a contract, within the meaning of the Constitution, is a valid subsisting obligation, not a contingent or speculative one. Barton Nat. Bank v. Atkins, 47 Atl. 176, 178, 72 Vt. 83.

A contract is an agreement between two or more persons to do or not to do a particular thing, and the obligation of a contract is found in the terms in which that contract is expressed, and is the duty thus assumed by the contracting parties, respectively, to perform the stipulations of the contract. Barlow v. Gregory, 81 Conn. 261, 265.

The obligation of a contract, within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of a contract, consists in that which a person has undertaken to perform. If he has agreed to pay a certain sum at a specified period, his contract binds him to pay that sum on that day, and this is its obligation. Smith v. Mead, 8 Conn. 253, 256, 8 Am. Dec. 183.

The obligation of a contract consists in the power and efficacy of the law, which applies and enforces a performance of the contract, or the payment of an equivalent for nonperformance. The obligation does not inhere and subsist in the contract itself, but in the law applicable thereto. Shrigley v. Black, 71 Pac. 801, 806, 66 Kan. 213.

The obligation of a contract is found in the terms in which the contract is expressed, and is the duty assumed by the contracting parties, respectively, to perform the stipulations of such contract. Barlow v. Gregory, 81 Conn. 261, 265.

In construing the provisions of the United States Constitution and the Iowa Constitution, prohibiting the state from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts, it is said that "perhaps as good a definition of 'obligation' as can be given is that contained in Lesly v. Phipps, in the Supreme Court of Missouri, reported in 18 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 238, as follows: 'The obligation of a contract is the duty of performance according to its terms; the means of enforcement being the part of the obligation which the states cannot by legislation impair. It has also been said that the obligation of a contract is its binding power; that which compels the performance.' Or, as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States (Sturgis v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. [2 Wheat.] 122, 197, 4 L. Ed. 529), the law of the contract. Obligation is correlative of right. Obligation rests upon one party; right belongs to the other." Holland v. Dickerson, 41 Iowa, 367, 370.

See "Contract."

The obligation of a contract includes the laws relating to remedies for the enforcement thereof. Gunn v. Barry, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 610, 623, 21 L. Ed. 212. Contra, see Jones v. McMahan, 80 Tex. 713, 731.

A law is the true source of the obligation of contract, and the extent of the obligation is defined by law in force at the time the contract is made. The contract alone has no legal obligation, because there is no law to enforce it. The contract is made by the parties and sanctioned by the law, which promises to enforce performance should the party decline performance himself. Townsend v. Townsend, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 1, 14 Am. Dec. 722.

The term "obligation," whether we consult its etymology or its general acceptance in our own language, will be found to signify a ligament or tie, something which binds, or obliges us to do or not to do some act. It is derived immediately from the Latin substantive "obligatio," which is from the verb "obligare," to tie, to bind, to oblige; and it is in the same sense that the English words derived from these are universally used and received by all who either speak or write the English language. The obligation of a contract, therefore, is and can be nothing else but that which obliges a person to perform his contract, or to repair the injury done by a failure to perform it. To the duty of performing our contracts, or of repairing the injury done by a failure to perform them, we are, in a state of civil society, not only bound in conscience, but we are, moreover, obliged by the remedy which the law gives to enforce that duty; and as the remedy allowed by law upon a contract is the only civil means which obliges to the performance of the contract, or the repairing of the injury done by a failure to perform it, the legal obligation of the contract evidently consists in that alone. It can consist in nothing else; for if the remedy be withheld or taken away the contract is no legal obligation. The clause in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits the states from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts refers to this legal obligation. Blair v. Williams, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 84, 86; Lapeley v. Brashears, Id. 47, 53.

The obligation of a contract includes everything within its obligatory scope. Among these elements nothing is more important than the means of enforcement. Peabody v. Stetson, 34 Atl. 74, 77, 88 Me. 273; Cochran v. Ward, 29 N. E. 795, 797, 5 Ind. App. 89, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229; Edwards v. Kearsey, 96 U. S. 595, 600, 24 L. Ed. 793. This is the breadth of its vital existence. Without it the contract as such, in the view of the law, ceases to be, and falls into the class of those imperfect obligations, as they are termed, which depend for their fulfillment upon the will and conscience of those upon whom they rest. Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 600, 24 L. Ed. 798. Jones v. National Cotton Oil Co., 72 S. W. 248, 249, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 420 (citing Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 596, 24 L. Ed. 798); Long v. Walker, 105 N. C. 90, 98, 10 S. E. 858, 859, 860.

Mr. Justice Trimble, in Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 213, 350-352, 6 L. Ed. 906, says: "The obligation of the contract consists in the power and efficacy of the law, which applies to and enforces performance of the contract, or the payment of an equivalent for nonperformance." Mr. Webster, in the argument of the same case, defines it to be "the duty of performing a legal agreement." Whatever may be the correct definition (and upon this point scarcely any two judges agree), the position that the remedial laws of the state in existence at the time form part of it is untenable. The provision of the Federal Constitution, denying to any state the right to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, does not interfere with the right of a state to pass laws acting upon the remedy. Cutts v. Hardee, 38 Ga. 350, 369.

There is a distinction between the obligation of a contract and the remedy for its enforcement. Whatever pertains merely to the remedy may be changed or modified at the discretion of the Legislature, without impairing the obligation of the contract, providing the remedy be not wholly taken away, nor so hampered or reduced in effect as to render the contract practically incapable of enforcement. Smith v. Jennings, 45 S. E. 821, 825, 67 S. C. 824.

The distinction between the obligation of contract and the remedy given by the Legislature to enforce that obligation exists in the nature of things. Without impairing the obligation of the contract, the remedy may certainly be modified as the wisdom of the nation shall direct. Wood v. Mallin, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 206, 209.

The obligation of a contract is found in the terms of the agreement sanctioned by moral and legal principles, and consists in acts of the parties, and is ascertained by the binding words of the contract; while the mode of enforcing the obligation emanates from the lawmaking power, which may be exercised at the discretion of the Legislature, within the prescribed limits of the Constitution. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 36 U. S. (11 Pet.) 420, 573, 9 L. Ed. 773, 938.

The obligation of the contract is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced—by which the parties can be obliged to perform it. Rader v. Union Tp. Committee, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 259, 280; Louisiana v. City of New Orleans, 102 U. S. 208, 26 L. Ed. 182; Antoni v. Greenhow, 2 Sup. Ct. 91, 100, 118, 107 U. S. 769, 27 L. Ed. 468; Phinney v. Phinney, 17 Atl. 405, 407, 81 Me. 450, 4 L. R. A. 848, 10 Am. St. Rep. 236.

By the "obligation of contracts" is meant the legal, and not the moral, obligation; the law which obliges the parties to the performance of a contract, embracing in this idea as well the law which is applicable to the contract itself as that which pertains to the remedy for its enforcement. Rutland v. Copes (S. C.) 15 Rich. Law, 84, 105.

OBLIGATION OF RECORD.

A bond taken by an officer of the court by authority of law, and required to be returned into court, is, when so returned and placed upon the files, an "obligation of record." Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 270, 271.

OBLIGATION OR OTHER SECURITY.

The words "obligations or other security" of the United States, as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5414 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3602], punishing the forging or counterfeiting of any obligation or security of the United States, are defined by section 5413 so as to mean all bonds, certificates of indebtedness, national currency, coupon, United States notes, treasury notes, fractional notes, certificates of deposit, bills, checks, drafts for money drawn by or upon authorized officers of the United States, and other representations of value, of whatever denomination, which have been or may be issued under any act of Congress. Neall v. United States (U. S.) 118 Fed. 699, 706, 56 C. C. A. 31.

OBLIGATORY BILL.

See "Bill Obligatory."

OBLIGATORY WRITING.

See "Writing Obligatory."

OBLIGE.

The meaning of Civ. Code La. art. 2315, providing that "every act whatever of man, that causes damage to another, obliges him through whose fault it happened, to repair it," is that under our law the wrong done by one human being to another or to his estate creates an obligation, i. e., brings at once into existence the relation of debtor and creditor, between the wrongdoer and the injured party. This provision includes corporations as among those who are subjected to this obligation. United States v. City of New Orleans (U. S.) 17 Fed. 483, 487.

OBLIGEE.

An obligee or creditor is the person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay a sum of money, or to do or not to do something. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 8556, subd. 20.

The parties to a lease are the lessor and lessee, neither of whom can with propriety be called "obligee"; and therefore an act providing for the assignment of notes and other instruments in writing, and allowing a defendant in a suit by the obligee or payee of any instrument in writing to plead a want of consideration, cannot apply to an action on a lease. Dunbar v. Bonesteel, 4 Ill. (8 Scam.) 82, 84.

As used in an act relating to promissory notes, and providing that, in any action on a note or instrument in writing for the payment of property or money by an obligee, the term "obligee" has a technical meaning, and applies only to notes, bonds, and bills, whether they are given for the payment of money or property or the performance of conditions or covenants, and not to mortgages. Hall v. Byrne, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 140, 142.

OBLIGOR.

"Obligor" or "debtor" is the person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 8556, subd. 21.

OBLITERATE—OBLITERATION.

To "obliterate" is to blot out; to "cancel" is to cross out. The former leaves the words illegible; the latter leaves the words legible. By either method a will can be legally revoked in whole or in part. Townshend v. Howard, 29 Atl. 1077, 1078, 86 Me. 285.

To "obliterate," in legal effect, would be to deface, to efface, to blot out, to destroy. To "obliterate," in the law, may be to alter, but certainly to alter will not necessarily be held as an obliteration; and an indictment charging that defendant did falsely, feloniously, and without lawful authority alter, "obliterate," and deface a receipt, without alleging in what manner or how he changed the receipt or what he did to it, is insufficient to charge an offense. State v. Knippa, 29 Tex. 295, 298.

A "cancellation" is, in legal meaning, an equivalent to and synonymous with an "obliteration." This cancellation or obliteration may be effected by words written across the instrument, as "obliterated" or "canceled." The end may be equally well accomplished by any erasure, partial or complete; it may be done by drawing the pen through the words. Any act of this sort is effectual, for the reason that it puts the instrument in condition whereby its invalidity appears on its face the moment it is produced. Under a statute providing that a will may be revoked by burning, tearing, or obliterating it, a line drawn lengthwise through the name of testatrix, and an upright line through each of the words thereof, accompanied by a declaration of intention to destroy the will, is a sufficient obliteration. Glass v. Scott, 60 Pac. 186, 188, 14 Colo. App. 377.

"Obliterating" a will includes drawing a strong black line over and along the whole signature. Baptist Church v. Robbarts, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 110, 111.

"Obliteration," within the meaning of the statutes of wills of 1838, authorizing the revocation of wills by obliteration, etc., does not require the effacing of the letters of the will so completely that they cannot be read. A line drawn through the writing constitutes an obliteration, though it may leave the will as legible as before. Appeal of Evans, 58 Pa. (3 P. F. Smith) 238, 242.

"Obliteration," within the meaning of the Pennsylvania wills act, does not include a careful interlineation. Appeal of Dixon, 55 Pa. (3 P. F. Smith) 424.

The word "obliterating," in Act April 8, 1838, § 13, authorizing the revocation of a will by burning, cancelling, obliterating, or destroying the same, does not include the act of testator in writing the word "obsolete" on the margin of his will, without signing the same. Lewis v. Lewis (Pa.) 2 Watts & S. 455, 457.

OBLOQUY.

"Obloquy" is defined as blame, reprehension; and to expose one to "obloquy" is to expose him to censure and reproach, such terms being synonymous with the word "obloquy." Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 270, 275, 11 Pac. 718. So that language which tends to injure a man in his occupation, or expose him to censure and reproach, is within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 45, defining "libel" as a false and unprivileged publication which exposes any person to obloquy. Tonini v. Cevasco, 46 Pac. 103, 105, 114 Cal. 266.

OBNOXIOUS.

"Obnoxious," as used with reference to a juror, does not refer necessarily to legal incompetency or unfitness, since a juror may be "legal" by the application of legal tests, and yet "obnoxious" to one or the other of the parties. State v. Fourchy, 25 South. 106, 117, 51 La. Ann. 228.

OBSCENE—OBSCENITY.

The word "obscene" is defined in the Century Dictionary as "offensive to modesty and decency; impure, unchaste, indecent, lewd; as, 'obscene' actions or language; 'obscene' pictures. 'Obscene publication,' in law: Any impure or indecent publication tending to corrupt the mind and to subvert the respect for decency and morality." In the Standard Dictionary the definition is: "Offensive to chastity, delicacy, or decency; expressing or presenting to the mind or view something that decency, delicacy, and purity forbid to be exposed." And this is exactly the definition found in Webster. In Black's Law Dictionary "obscene" is defined as "lewd, impure, indecent." The word cannot be said to be a technical term of the law, and is not susceptible of exact definition in its juridical uses. Timmons v. United States (U. S.) 85 Fed. 204, 206, 80 C. C. A. 74.

Obscenity is such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of law and the general corruption of morals. It is applied to language spoken, written, or printed, and to pictorial productions, and includes what is foul and indecent, as well as immodest or calculated to excite impure desires. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 313, 317; United States v. Loftis (U. S.) 12 Fed. 671, 672.

The word "obscene" is defined as "expressing or presenting to the mind or view something which delicacy, purity, and decency forbid to be expressed." It is used in such sense in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], prohibiting a transmission of "obscene" books, pamphlets, etc., in the mails. United States v. Bebout (U. S.) 28 Fed. 522, 524; Same v. Britton (U. S.) 17 Fed. 731, 733. Obscene writing has been defined as one offensive to decency, indelicate, impure, as an indecent one. Same v. Williams (U. S.) 3 Fed. 484, 485.

"Obscene," as used in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], prohibiting the use of the mails for obscene matter, means matter offensive to the common sense of decency and modesty of the community, and which is of such a character as to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences. United States v. Harmon (U. S.) 45 Fed. 414, 417; Same v. Clarke (U. S.) 33 Fed. 782, 783; Same v. Williams (U. S.) 3 Fed. 484, 485; Same v. Britton (U. S.) 17 Fed. 731, 733; Same v. Bennett (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1093; Same v. Martin (U. S.) 50 Fed. 918, 919; Same v. Moore (U. S.) 104 Fed. 78.

The words "obscene," "lewd," "lascivious," or "of an indecent character," in the federal statute prohibiting the sending of such matter through the mail, does not necessarily mean that the separate words are of such a character, but the character of the letter is to be determined by treating it as a whole. United States v. Hanover (U. S.) 17 Fed. 444.

An instruction was approved, in a prosecution for the violation of a statute prohibiting the mailing of "obscene, lascivious, lewd, or indecent" publications, that the question what constitutes obscene, lewd, lascivious, or indecent publications is largely a question for the conscience and opinion of the jury, but that, before it can be said of such literature or publication, it must come up to this point, that it must be calculated with the ordinary reader to deprave his morals or lead to impure purposes. Dunlop v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 375, 376, 165 U. S. 488, 41 L. Ed. 799.

The question whether a book, writing, picture, etc., is obscene or indecent, is for the jury. People v. Muller (N. Y.) 82 Hun, 209, 210.

Accusation of indecent offense.

The words "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," as used in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], prohibiting the transmission of any obscene, lewd, or lascivious print, writing, etc., through the mails, etc., do not apply to a letter imputing to the person addressed an atrocious crime, though exceedingly coarse and vulgar, where it has no tendency to excite libidinous thoughts or impure desires, or to deprave and corrupt the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences. The words imply something tending to suggest libidinous thoughts or excite impure desires. United States v. Wightman (U. S.) 29 Fed. 633.

The mailing of a private sealed letter directed to and containing indecent charges against the mother of the writer does not constitute the offense of mailing a letter containing obscene, lewd, and lascivious matter within the statute. United States v. Wroblewski (U. S.) 118 Fed. 495, 496.

Insulting language.

The words "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], prohibiting the sending through the mails of any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, are not descriptive of language of merely an insulting character, but are limited to the use of words or pictures appealing to the animal passion, stimulating it, corrupting and debauching the mind and heart. United States v. Durant (U. S.) 46 Fed. 753.

The words "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," in Rev. St. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], making it criminal to transmit any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, etc., through the mail, do not clearly characterize letters inclosed in envelopes, directed to a debtor, on which the words "dead beats" are printed in such a manner as to attract attention. The purpose of the act was to prevent the mails from being used to circulate matter to corrupt the morals of the people. The history of this legislation clearly shows that Congress determined to exclude from the mails impure and immodest writings, and that rough and coarse language is not within the terms of the act. Ex parte Doran (U. S.) 32 Fed. 76, 77.

Medical works.

The term "obscene or indecent publication," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 3898 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], includes an illustrated pamphlet purporting to be a work on medical subjects, but of an indecent character, and intended for general circulation, even though the work consists partially of extracts from standard medical works. United States v. Chesman (U. S.) 19 Fed. 497. See, also, United States v. Smith (U. S.) 45 Fed. 476.

In a prosecution for the publication of an obscene libel, the court said: "That it did not matter whether the things published in the book were true, and in conformity with nature and the laws of our being, or not. If they were unfit to be published, and tended to inflame improper and lewd passions, it was an obscene libel. That even scientific and medical publications containing illustrations exhibiting the human form, if wantonly exposed in the open markets with a wanton and wicked desire to create a demand for them, and not to promote the good of society by placing them in proper hands for useful purposes, would, if tending to incite lewd desires, be held to be obscene libels." Commonwealth v. Landis, 8 Phila. 453, 454.

Nudity in art.

The test of the indecency or obscenity of a picture, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 817, prohibiting the selling of any obscene or indecent pictures or publications, etc., is their capability of suggesting impure thoughts. It is evident that mere nudity in painting or sculpture is not obscenity. Some of the great works in painting and sculpture, as all know, represent nude human forms. People v. Muller, 96 N. Y. 408, 411, 48 Am. Rep. 635; People v. Muller (N. Y.) 32 Hun, 209, 211.

Sexual impurity.

"Obscene," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3898 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2658], making it a criminal offense to place in the mails any obscene, lewd, or lascivious publication, signifies that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity, and has the same meaning as is given at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel. Swearingin v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 562, 563, 161 U. S. 446, 40 L. Ed. 765; United States v. Males (U. S.) 51 Fed. 41, 42.

Within the meaning of a statute forbidding obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female, the language of a man in asking a female to go to bed with him is vulgar and obscene. Dillard v. State, 41 Ga. 278.

An article is not unmailable merely because it offends the religious sentiments of the majority of the people by attacking the doctrine of the immaculate conception of Christ in coarse or even obscene language, where it has no tendency to induce sexual immorality; that being the only class of publications against which it is the purpose of the statute to protect the public. United States v. Moore (U. S.) 104 Fed. 78.

OBSCENE EXHIBITION OF PERSON.

The terms obscene and indecent exhibition of the person as used in Pen. Code, § 843, prohibiting the "obscene and indecent exhibition of the person," mean "an exposure of those parts of the person which are commonly considered as private, and which custom and decency require should be covered and kept concealed from public sight. They do not mean or include obscene or indecent prints, pictures, or written composition placed on the clothes worn on the person." Tucker v. State, 13 S. W. 1004, 28 Tex. App. 541.

OBSERVATION.

See "Ordinary Observation."

OBSERVE.

"Observed," as used in an instruction in a personal injury action by a railroad brakeman injured by the failure of his engineer either to see or obey certain signals, was obscure and confusing, since the term, in that connection, might mean either seen or obeyed. Western Ry. v. Williamson, 21 South. 827, 831, 114 Ala. 181.

"Observe," as used in a liquor dealer's bond, providing that the liquor dealer shall observe all the provisions of a certain act, the failure of the liquor dealer to pay the tax required by the act is a breach of such condition, since "observe" means to conform one's action or practice to; to keep; to heed or obey; to comply with. Marshall County v. Knoll, 69 N. W. 1146, 1148, 102 Iowa, 578.

OBSOLETE.

The act of a testator in writing the word "obsolete" on the margin of his will, without signing it, or having any person sign it for him, in the manner prescribed by law, does not constitute a revocation of the will, under Act April 8, 1833, enacting that no will in writing concerning any real estate shall be repealed otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or some other writing declaring the same, executed and proved in the same manner as thereinbefore provided, or by burning, canceling, obliterating, or destroying the same by the testator himself, or by some one in his presence, or by his express direction. Lewis v. Lewis (Pa.) 2 Watts & S. 455, 457. See, also, Jack v. Shoenberger, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 416, 420.

OBSTINATE DESERTION.

"Obstinate desertion," within the meaning of a divorce statute which provides that divorce may be decreed for willful, continued, and obstinate desertion for the term of two years, means a desertion which has resisted such effort or concession as the party alleging desertion ought, under the particular circumstances of the case, to have made to bring it to an end. A wife's desertion is not obstinate where the husband was partly to blame, and where he made no effort to prevent her going on the day of her departure, nor any subsequent effort to induce her to return, though they met several times thereafter on friendly terms. Van Wart v. Van Wart, 41 Atl. 965, 57 N. J. Eq. 598. See, also, Cornish v. Cornish, 23 N. J. Eq. (8 C. E. Green) 208; Bowiby v. Bowiby, 25 N. J. Eq. (10 C. E. Green) 406, 410; Payne v. Payne (N. J.) 28 Atl. 449; Trall v. Trall, 82 N. J. Eq. (5 Stew.) 231, 232.

The law as to what constitutes desertion is well settled. Chancellor Green, in Moore v. Moore, 16 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 275, 280, said: "To constitute desertion, a wife must absent herself from her husband of her own accord, without his consent and against his will. The simple inquiry is, has the wife for three years absented herself from her husband without his consent and against his will? If she has not, the desertion is not, within the contemplation of law, willful and obstinate. And the principle is firmly established that if a wife leaves her husband without cause, and with intent to throw off her marital duty, and afterwards realizes that she has acted hastily or foolishly, and would return if the way was open to her, and her husband refrains from doing anything to induce her to return, for the purpose of making her absence a ground of divorce, her desertion in such case is neither obstinate nor against his will." The essence of the wrong of desertion by a wife consists in the refusal by her, against the will and contrary to the wishes of her husband, to perform her marital duties and her obligations. Newing v. Newing, 45 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 498, 18 Atl. 166.

Desertion cannot be considered as obstinate when the separation is acquiesced in by, and entirely satisfactory to, the other, who neither entertains nor manifests any desire that the separation, or the cause which brought it about, should cease. And a wife who is prosecuting an action against her husband for divorce cannot maintain that separation during the pendency of such suit is obstinate on his part. Chipchase v. Chipchase, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 549, 22 Atl. 588.

Where a husband and wife separated by mutual agreement that the husband, who was not able to support his wife, should go to a distant place and build up a medical practice, and, when able to maintain the wife, should send for her, and he did not do so, and, though having an opportunity to communicate with him, the wife did not, on her part, terminate the agreement, and it did not appear that the husband was at any time during the separation able to support his wife, whereby the agreement would terminate by its own limitation, the separation is not an obstinate desertion by the husband, within the meaning of the statute allowing a divorce for such cause; nor, if the husband did nothing to induce the wife to return, even if her separation from him was without sufficient cause, her desertion is not deemed obstinate. Costill v. Costill, 21 Atl. 35, 37, 47 N. J. Eq. 846.

OBSTRUCT—OBSTRUCTION.

See "Willful Obstruction."

Hinder synonymous, see "Hinder."

"Obstruct, hinder, and prevent" are commonly used as synonymous, and are given as such in the dictionary. But they are of different roots, and are employed conventionally to express varying shades of meaning. Speaking etymologically, to obstruct "obstruo" (Latin), is to build or set up something in the way; to hinder, "hind" (Anglo-Saxon), as in "behind," "hindmost," is to pull back; to prevent, "prævenio" (Latin), is to come before; to thwart by anticipating. In a more critical acceptation, "obstruct" implies opposition without active force, and does not imply that the opposition was, in the end, effective; "hinder" implies action, and, to some extent, effectiveness; to "prevent" is to be effective, but not necessarily by force, either active or inert. Thus it may be that an officer of the law was obstructed in his duty, and hindered, perhaps, for a long time, but not finally prevented, from performing it. So, too, he may have been obstructed; but, surmounting or avoiding the obstruction, he may have been not even hindered. Again, he may be prevented by stratagem, though stratagem alone can neither hinder nor obstruct him: and yet, should the success of the stratagem involve action, as it would almost necessarily, it might be very questionable whether the act ought not to be regarded as a hindrance. These distinctions are, however, the appropriate subjects of scholastic, rather than juridical, disquisition. Statutes defining crimes, unless the phraseology they employ has been itself legally defined, must be interpreted as their language is understood by mankind at large, according to the everyday import of the words. I shall therefore charge you that the words "obstruct," "hinder," and "prevent," in the act before us (Fugitive Slave Law, § 7), making it a criminal offense knowingly and willfully to frustrate or retard the attempted recapture of a fugitive slave by his master, mean substantially the same thing. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 681, 683.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 32, § 78, authorizing a person who is hindered and obstructed, in driving logs, by the logs of another, to drive such obstructing or hindering logs to some point where they can be conveniently separated, and to recover a reasonable compensation for so driving from the owner, should be construed to mean that if the logs of one person are in the way of the logs of another, so that such other cannot drive his logs until they are gotten out of the way, he is hindered or obstructed. It is not necessary, to constitute such hindrance or obstruction, that the logs should have come in actual contact. Anderson v. Maloy, 19 N. W. 387, 32 Minn. 76.

Of due administration of justice.

The words "obstruct the due administration of justice therein," used in a penal enactment, necessarily limit the offense there denounced to cases therein—in the court, still "before the same"—and exclude past cases. They do not cover misbehavior which, though not directed to a particular case, affects all cases alike in the general administration of justice. The words "obstruct the administration of justice," in a section not penal, regarding a power to preserve the purity and independence of the court, and thereby promote the dispensation of justice, are broad enough to include not only improper acts in particular, but those which undermine the general administration of justice as well. Ex parte McLeod (U. S.) 120 Fed. 180, 189, 140.

Encroachment distinguished, see "Encroachment."

An obstruction is a blocking up—filling with obstacles or impediments, and impeding, embarrassing, or opposing passage along and over the street—and, to constitute it such, it need not be such as to stop travel. Shade trees from 25 to 40 feet high, and about 12 inches in diameter, standing within the sidewalk, from 8 to 15 inches from the curb of a street, are obstructions. Chase v.

City of Oshkosh, 51 N. W. 560, 562, 81 Wis. 313, 15 L. R. A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898.

Obstruct does not necessarily mean to render impassable, as used in an ordinance punishing whoever shall obstruct any street or highway. The word evidently means to place an obstacle in the way, or an impediment which will interfere with the free passage along the street. Overhouser v. American Cereal Co., 92 N. W. 74, 75, 118 Iowa, 417.

An obstruction, within the act of incorporation of a railroad company providing that it should be so constructed as not to obstruct or impede the free use of any public road, street, lane, or bridge, is anything set in the way, whether it totally closes the passage, or only hinders and retards progress. A road may be obstructed more or less. Such word, understood in its ordinary import, would make a railroad per se an obstruction to the free use of a street by the public. Under the charter, a railroad cannot be built on a street in such a manner as to cause any material obstruction. Commonwealth v. Erie & N. E. R. Co., 27 Pa. (3 Casey) 339, 355, 67 Am. Dec. 471.

To obstruct a highway means to stop up and wholly prevent travel upon a road, or render it unfit for travel. Newburyport Turnpike Corp. v. Eastern R. Co., 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 326, 328.

"Obstruction," as used with respect to a highway, is applied to impediments to travel and passage placed in the open street, and tending to make its use difficult and dangerous. Gorham v. Withey, 17 N. W. 272, 52 Mich. 50.

A fence along a highway is an obstruction, if it prevents public travel from being perfectly safe, although it does not extend across the track. Mosher v. Vincent, 89 Iowa, 607, 609.

"Obstruction," as used in Code, § 998, providing that the supervisors shall remove obstructions in the highways caused by fences or otherwise, means an obstacle; an impediment; a hindrance; that which impedes progress. In order to obstruct a highway, it is not necessary that it should be rendered impassable. Hence it would include trees growing within the limits of the road or highway which interfere with travel. Patterson v. Vail, 43 Iowa, 142, 145.

Rev. St. § 1826, providing that whoever shall obstruct any highway, or fill up or place any obstruction in any ditch constructed for the draining of water from any highway, shall forfeit a certain sum, should be construed to include a barn occupying nearly one-half of the width of a highway in a populous village, and impeding and interfering with travel on such highway. The fact that a portion of the width of the street was left open, so that travelers thereon could conveniently pass the structure, does not make it an encroachment, instead of an obstruction of the street. It is difficult to lay down any general rule by which to determine, in any given case, whether an object placed in a highway is an obstruction or an encroachment. It may safely be said that an object or structure, to be an obstruction, need not necessarily be such as to stop travel on the highway. State v. Leaver, 22 N. W. 576, 578, 62 Wis. 387.

The term "obstruction" will not include the rightful use of a highway by individuals, which is itself in reasonably safe and fit condition, or their misconduct upon it, though such misconduct may amount to a public nuisance, as used in Rev. St. c. 5701, making persons causing an obstruction on a highway liable for damages arising therefrom. Ray v. City of Manchester, 46 N. H. 59, 60, 88 Am. Dec. 192.

The obstruction of a public road is a public nuisance, but private individuals cannot complain of such a matter unless they can show an injury peculiar to themselves. Hill v. Hoffman (Tenn.) 58 S. W. 929, 931.

Of mails.

"Obstructing the mails," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3995 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2716], providing that any one guilty of obstructing the mails shall be punished, etc., includes the placing of obstructions by boys on the track of an electric railway whereon the United States mails are carried, by which the mail is delayed or forced to be carried in some other way. United States v. Thomas (U. S.) 55 Fed. 380.

Within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 3995 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2716], which provides that any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, for every such offense shall be punishable, etc., would include the stopping of a train carrying United States mail, although the person stopping the same had a judgment and writ of possession from a state court against the railroad company in respect to the lands about to be crossed by such train. United States v. De Mott (U. S.) 3 Fed. 478.

The meaning to be given to the words "not to obstruct the navigation," as used in Rev. St. § 5263 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3579], requiring cable companies constructing a submarine cable to so construct and maintain it as "not to obstruct navigation," must depend upon each individual case, and must be disposed of upon its own facts; and it may be taken as a safe rule that the degree of obstruction will vary with the character and extent of the navigation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Inman & I. S. S. Co. (U. S.) 59 Fed. 365, 367, 8 C. C. A. 152.

As applied to navigation, there cannot be a distinction between an obstruction and an interference. Where submarine telegraph cables, laid in the soft mud at the bottom of a navigable river, whatever their exact position was, were in a permanent position, if they interfered at all with the rightful or necessary use of steamers in that locality, the interference was also permanent; and a permanent interference which prevents a vessel from going where she ordinarily has the right to go, and wherever in her maneuvers she may find it necessary to go, whether the necessity be constant or frequent, or only occasional, as emergencies may compel her, constitutes obstruction. In re City of Richmond (U. S.) 43 Fed. 85, 88.

By an "obstruction" to the navigation of a river is meant such an impediment to the navigation that boats, in passing along the stream, cannot, by the use of skill and care, avoid being injured. Terre Haute Drawbridge Co. v. Halliday, 4 Ind. 36, 41.

The prohibition contained in Act Cong. Sept. 19, 1890, 26 Stat. 454, prohibiting creating an obstruction in navigable waters, is general in its terms. Where, by reason of the plastic nature of a substratum of clay under a railroad right of way located some distance from a navigable river, the track of the road settled, and the additional weight of an embankment built by the company forced the clay onto the bed of the river, causing a bar which obstructed navigation, such a bar was an obstruction, within the meaning of the statute. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States (U. S.) 104 Fed. 691, 694, 44 C. C. A. 135, 59 L. R. A. 80.

What is an unlawful obstruction to navigation must always depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. In a sense, every vessel that is launched upon a river is an obstruction to its navigation, but such obstruction is not an unlawful one. So long as the vessel, however guided or propelled, does not actually prevent or render hazardous the navigation of the river by others, it cannot be considered an obstruction to navigation in the ordinary sense of the term. The Vancouver (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 958, 960.

The word "obstruction," in Act Feb. 2, 1854, § 28, making it the duty of the city of Philadelphia to keep the navigable waters within such city free from obstruction, was construed not to include a rock in the bottom of the river, of which no notice had been given to the city authorities. Snyder v. City of Philadelphia, 78 Pa. (28 P. F. Smith) 23, 25.

The term "obstruction," employed in reference to navigation, includes a rope stretched across the archway of a bridge over a navigable river, and over the principal channel of the river crossed. The Swan (U. S.) 19 Fed. 455.

"Obstruction by ice," within the meaning of a clause in a charter party that during the obstruction of the navigation by ice the lay days are not to be counted, applies to such obstructions as prevent the loading of a vessel, as well as those which prevent her from going to sea. Ladd v. Wilson (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 923.

"Obstruct," as used in Code, § 4476, providing for the punishment of any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any sheriff, coroner, or other officer or person duly authorized, in serving or attempting to serve or execute any lawful process, means to oppose. According to Webster, "to obstruct an officer" means to oppose that officer. It does not mean to oppose or impede the process with which the officer is armed, or to defeat its execution, but that the officer himself shall be obstructed. It is opposition to the officer, and the words "obstruct, resist, or oppose" have nearly the same meaning, and the word "oppose" would cover the meaning of the words "resist or obstruct," and they all mean the same thing. Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 721, 722.

Of prosecution of action.

"Defeat or obstruct," within the statute providing that if any surety shall abscond, or otherwise defeat or obstruct any person from bringing suit, signifies the performance of some act on the part of the surety which will amount to the prevention or hindrance of a suit in opposition to the will and right of a creditor, such as he cannot with reasonable diligence obstruct. The terms import resistance and obstruction in his rights, and unless the acts complained of are, in point of fact, such as would hinder and prevent him from bringing suit notwithstanding his desire to do so, they cannot be properly said to defeat or obstruct such suit. Walker v. Sayers, 68 Ky. (5 Bush) 579.

Persistent legal resistance to a judgment is not an obstruction, within Gen. St. c. 71, art. 4, § 9, providing that, if a defendant by any indirect means obstructs the prosecution of an action, the time of the obstruction shall not be computed as part of the period within which the action may be commenced. Phillips v. Shipp, 81 Ky. 438, 442.

Of railroad track or train.

Pen. Code, art. 678, punishing any person who shall willfully place "any obstruction upon the track of any railroad," means an obstruction such as might have endangered human life; and a piece of iron bar, which a person was unable to remove with his foot, but could remove with his hands, is not such an obstruction. Bullion v. State, 7 Tex. App. 462, 463.

The term "obstruction," as used by railroad men, means that which may obstruct or hinder the free and safe passage of a train, or that which may receive an injury or damage such as would be unlawful to inflict if run over or against by the train, as in case of stock or a man approaching on the track. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 53 Tenn. (6 Helak.) 347, 368.

To constitute an obstruction, within the meaning of a statute prescribing the duties of a railroad company when a person, animal, or other obstruction appears on the road, the animal must be in a position to be struck or directly injured by the train while moving on the rails. Where the animal appears on some other part of the company's right of way, it is not an obstruction. Louisville, N. & G. R. Co. v. Reidmond, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 205, 208; Alabama G. S. Ry. Co. v. Chapman, 80 Ala. 615, 619, 2 South. 738.

Under a statute requiring a locomotive engineer, on perceiving any obstruction on the track of the road, to use all means in his power, known to skillful engineers, in order to stop the train, and making the railroad company liable for damages to persons, stock, or property, resulting from a failure to comply with such requirements, where plaintiff's mule was killed by defendant's train the burden was upon defendant to show a compliance with such statute. A mule is a pretty large object. All trains running at night carry headlights casting bright light on the track before them, and an engineer keeping a proper lookout will perceive so large an obstruction as a mule on the track some time before encountering it. It then becomes his duty to use all means in his power to stop the train. South & North Alabama R. Co. v. Williams, 65 Ala. 74, 77.

Gen. St. §§ 63, 107, making it an offense for any one to obstruct a railroad train, does not apply to a passenger who, from whatever motive, pulls a signal rope to a bell upon the engine, and thereby causes the train to be stopped, and the safety of the passengers to be endangered. Commonwealth v. Killian, 109 Mass. 345, 347, 12 Am. Rep. 714.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 94, § 63, providing for the punishment of any one who shall willfully obstruct any engine or carriage passing on any railroad so as to endanger the safety of any person conveyed in or on the same, does not mean the actual stoppage or impeding the passage of such engine or carriage by its coming in collision with some obstacle placed in the way, but means the placing of an obstacle on a railway in such a manner that any train, in passing, may strike it, and of such a character that the safety of persons conveyed will be endangered if a train come in collision with it. State v. Kilty, 10 N. W. 475, 28 Minn. 421.

Of sidewalk.

It is not necessarily an obstruction to a sidewalk to cover it by a roof 12 or 15 feet above it. Beecher v. People, 88 Mich. 289, 291, 81 Am. Rep. 816.

OBTAIN.

A landowner signed an agreement with a railroad company by which he relinquished to such company the right of way for its railroad through his land "in consideration of the prospective advantages which may accrue to him, arising from the road's location through such county." The company surveyed a road across such land, and did some work thereon within the six years thereafter, but did not complete the road, and for more than 25 years did no work upon such land, nor asserted any dominion over the right of way. During such time such landowner cultivated the land as the rest of his farm. The statute provided that "no railroad company shall be barred or presumed to have conveyed any right of way, easement, or other interest in the soil which may have been condemned or otherwise obtained for its use as a right of way by any statute of limitations, or by occupation of the same by any person whatsoever." The court, in construing this statute, held that the word "obtained" must have been used in the sense of "secured" or "acquired," and that by mere survey and preliminary work the railroad company had not obtained the right of way across such land, so as to prevent loss of its right there to by the adverse occupation of the landowner. Beattie v. Carolina Cent. Ry. Co., 108 N. C. 425, 482, 12 S. E. 913, 915.

"Obtaining," as used in an indictment charging a person with obtaining money under false pretenses, means the same as the word "get," in its sense of "acquire"; that is, the word means not so much a defrauding or depriving another of his property, as the obtaining of some benefit by the defendant. People v. General Sessions of New York County (N. Y.) 13 Hun, 395, 400.

"Obtaining goods by false pretenses" is defined by statute in New York as follows: "Every person who, with intent to cheat or defraud, shall designedly, by color of any false token in writing, or by any other false pretense, obtain from any person any money, personal property, or valuable thing, shall be guilty of obtaining goods by false pretenses." Baldwin v. Need (N. Y.) 17 Wend. 224, 229.

The word "obtain," in a statute providing that when any judgment is obtained, and execution is returned unsatisfied, an alias execution, etc., may issue, is to be construed as having a prospective operation only, and is to be read as "hereafter obtained." McGovern v. Connell, 48 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 106, 109.

In shipping articles by which seamen engaged to perform a whaling voyage in consideration of the shares or lays to be paid for all that was obtained during the voyage, as soon after the return of the ship to a certain port as the oil could be sold and the voyage be made up, "obtained" means the products brought safely to the port of destination. It does not mean that the seamen shall have a right to be paid their lays in all the oil taken on board the ship during the fishing voyage. Reed v. Hussey (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 440, 444.

Though the Supreme Court of Tennessee, in Barnes v. Hayes, 1 Swan, 304, said that an execution related to the date of the teste, which is the first day of the term from which it issues, and operates as if it were actually running from the date of its return, and is a lien on all the goods owned by the defendant during that time, yet a lien of a judgment may be said to have been obtained within four months, within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, where the judgment was obtained in Tennessee, and the lien of the execution related back to the teste thereof, which was more than four months prior to the petition in bankruptcy. In re Darwin (U. S.) 117 Fed. 407, 408, 54 C. C. A. 581.

As acquire possession of.

"Obtain," as used in a charge stating that defendant may be convicted of larceny if he obtains property with intent to steal it, is synonymous with "to acquire possession of." State v. Will, 22 South. 878, 879, 49 La. Ann. 1337.

"Obtain," as used in an instruction that certain money must have been obtained by means of force and violence, in order to constitute robbery, is equivalent to "take," as used in a statute, since "to obtain" means to get hold of by effort; to gain possession of; to acquire; and "take," as used in the statute, also means to get possession of. State v. Miller, 86 Pac. 751, 752, 53 Kan. 324.

"To obtain" is to get hold of; to obtain possession of; to acquire; to maintain a hold upon; to keep; to possess. "To contract for" does not approach it in meaning. Sundmacher v. Block, 39 Ill. App. 553, 562 (quoting Webb Dict.); State v. McGinnis, 33 N. W. 838, 339, 71 Iowa, 686; Connor v. State, 10 South. 891, 892, 29 Fla. 455, 30 Am. St. Rep. 128.

As continue.

"Obtaining," as used in an averment that a conspiracy was to prevent a certain person from obtaining work or employment, or continuing in his said work and employment, is synonymous with "continue." The two words convey a conjunctive, and not a disjunctive, meaning. Any other signification than that the conspiracy was to prevent the person from having employment would be forced and unnatural. State v. Dyer, 82 Atl. 814, 818, 67 Vt. 690.

As issuance of patent.

"Obtain," as used in St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 83, § 4, providing that "if any person who now hath or shall hereafter obtain any letters patent as aforesaid, shall advertise," etc., on petition the crown may grant an extension of the patent, means to become possessed of it either by original grant, by assignment, or by any other title, and does not refer solely to those originally had from the crown. Russell v. Ledsam, 14 Mees. & W. 573, 588.

"Obtained," as used in St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 83, § 1, authorizing any person who, as grantee, assignee, or otherwise, "hath obtained" letters patent for using an invention, to disclaim any part of the title of such invention or of the specification, means only the party who obtains letters patent from the crown, not simply one who has possession of them by assignment or otherwise. Spillsbury v. Clough, 2 Q. B. 466, 471.

As obtaining in person.

Code, § 4370, declaring that any person who by any false pretense obtains from another any money, etc., is not limited in its meaning to an obtaining in person by the accused, but money paid to another at his request is obtained, within the meaning of the statute. Sandy v. State, 60 Ala. 58, 60.

"Obtains," as used in Comp. Laws 1879, p. 339, c. 81, § 94, providing for the punishment of any one obtaining money by false pretenses, means getting possession of something purposely by effort; that is, by false pretense. It is not alleged that money was obtained when it is said that, upon false representations and pretenses, certain liens and incumbrances were paid. State v. Lewis, 26 Kan. 123, 129.

Delivery.

As used in an information charging that defendant obtained complainant's signature by fraud, "obtain" means to get hold of, to get possession of, or to acquire, and hence includes the idea of delivery, so that an allegation of the delivery of the note containing the signature was not necessary. People v. Kinney, 67 N. W. 1089, 1090, 110 Mich. 97.

"Obtain," as used in a statute providing for the punishment of any person who by false pretense or pretenses shall obtain from any other person any money, goods, merchandise, or effects whatever, with intent to cheat and defraud such person, in its primary meaning, as given by Webster, is to get hold of by effort. There is a difference between frauds which are perpetrated by means of the abuse of the forms of legitimate commercial transactions, and those which consist of personations and so-called confidence games and tricks. In either case, and by whatever means accomplished, the crime consists in the obtaining of the property; getting hold of the property. That is the corpus delicti. In this case, the goods not being delivered to defendants, they were held not to have obtained them. Ex parte Parker, 9 N. W. 33, 34, 11 Neb. 309.

Retention.

An indictment for conspiracy to obtain from the Ansonia Clock Company, by false pretenses, money, etc., is not sustained by proof that the accused was an agent of the clock company, and as such collected money belonging to it, which he retained, and, by falsification of his accounts, concealed the fact of such retention. The word "obtain," in the statute and in the indictment, is not used in any antiquated and obsolete sense, but in its ordinary and popular signification, as an active verb, meaning to acquire. Watson v. People, 27 Ill. App. 493, 497.

OBVIOUS.

Giving a copy of the writ to one of defendant's negro servants in the piazza of his dwelling house is a good service, under a statute requiring it to be left at some "obvious" part of the house. Bowers v. Alsten's Ex'rs (S. C.) 1 Nott & McC. 458.

"Obvious" is defined as meaning readily perceived by the eye. In an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by the absence of lights at an excavation in a street, a charge that, to render defendant free from negligence, the lights must have been such that the ditch could have been readily seen, was equivalent to an instruction that the lights should have been sufficient to make the excavation obvious. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Johnson, 67 S. W. 768, 769, 771, 95 Tex. 409.

Where the defendant in an action for a malicious prosecution claimed that, in order to entitle plaintiff to a recovery, the malice of the defendant and the innocence of the plaintiff must be obvious to the jury, and prayed the court so to instruct them, which was not done, it was held that such omission was no ground for a new trial, the instruction shown not being sufficiently precise and definite; the court saying: "The word 'obvious' might have received different interpretations by different jurors. Some of them might have supposed it meant the highest attainable certainty; others, that it was to be understood to mean absolute certainty; and others might suppose it meant reasonable certainty." Stone v. Stevens, 12 Conn. 219, 229, 30 Am. Dec. 611.

OBVIOUS RISKS.

The phrase "obvious risk," in an accident policy excepting an insurer from liability in case injuries result from exposure to an obvious risk, includes not only a risk which may be readily perceived by the eye or senses, but one also that may be perceived by the intellect. Small v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 45 S. E. 708, 708, 118 Ga. 900, 63 L. R. A. 510.

The obvious dangers of an employment are those which are apparent. They are the apparent risks of the work. They are the risks which are apparent in the exercise of ordinary observation, and which are disclosed by the use of the eyes and other senses. If the servant fails to observe what is obvious, and suffers, he cannot charge the consequences on his master. The risk so taken is impliedly assumed by him. Dillenger v. Weingartner, 45 Atl. 638, 640, 64 N. J. Law, 292; Foley v. Jersey City Electric Light Co., 54 N. J. Law, 411, 24 Atl. 487; Chandler v. Atlantic Coast Electric Ry. Co., 39 Atl. 674, 61 N. J. Law, 880.

In an action for an injury to a servant while operating a machine, in which defendant contended the plaintiff had assumed the risk, it was said that risks which are incident to the business must not be confounded with such as are denominated obvious. "The former sort comprises those which accompany or arise from the natural or usual method of conducting the particular business, and has more special relation to perils which attend the business generally, while the latter includes such as are manifest to the sense of observation, open, and readily discernible, whether they arise from the nature of the business, the particular manner in which it is conducted, or the use of defective or unsafe appliances." Stager v. Troy Laundry Co., 63 Pac. 645, 647, 38 Or. 480, 53 L. R. A. 459.

Under an accident insurance policy providing that it should be void if the accident occurred from voluntary or unnecessary exposure to danger or to obvious risk of injury, it is held that jumping from a moving train after it had passed a station was an exposure to obvious risk of injury, within the meaning of the policy. Smith v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 104 Mich. 634, 635, 62 N. W. 990.

OCCASION.

See "Solemn Occasion."

The word "occasion" signifies necessity or need as well as a particular time. In a personal injury action against a railroad, a charge that "the only question, so far as the negligence of the defendant was concerned, was, was the brake defective, out of order, not in reasonable repair, not reasonable for the occasion?" correctly used the word in either sense. Mackey v. Baltimore & P. R. Co., 19 D. C. 282, 301.

The use of the word "occasion" in the report of the viewers of a private road, that "there is occasion for it," is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring them to report whether it is necessary, for, though mere convenience is perhaps not sufficient to authorize such road, the report is never drawn with the precision of an indictment, and, in the apprehension of the mass, the terms "necessary" and "occasion" are convertible. In re Pocopson Road, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 15, 17.

Where the husband, without further consideration, conveyed land in trust that it should be conveyed to his wife, and the trustee, without consideration, conveyed it to the wife accordingly, the conveyance to the wife was occasioned by a payment or pledge of the property of the husband, within the meaning of those terms as used in the statute providing that every married woman shall hold to her own use, and free from the control of her husband, the property inherited by her, provided the conveyance or bequest is not occasioned by payment or pledge of the property of the husband. Vogt v. Ticknor, 48 N. H. 242.

As directly or indirectly cause.

Webster defines an occasion, as distinguished from a cause, to be that which incidentally brings to pass an event, without being itself efficient cause or sufficient reason. Pennsylvania Co. v. Congdon, 33 N. E. 795, 796, 134 Ind. 228, 39 Am. St. Rep. 251.

The word "occasioned," as used in an instruction in an action for injuries that, if the jury could find the injuries were occasioned by the negligence of the defendant, they should find for the plaintiff, is used as a synonym of "caused," and the jury would not be misled thereby. Union Gold Min. Co. v. Crawford, 69 Pac. 600, 603, 29 Colo. 511.

Where injunctions caused delay, and the delay resulted in loss, the loss was occasioned by the injunctions, though they might not be the direct cause of the loss. Meysenberg v. Schlieper, 48 Mo. 426, 434.

The statute giving a right of action for all damages occasioned by laying out, making, and maintaining a railroad, etc., refers to any damage which may be directly or indirectly caused by the railroad. Parker v. Boston & M. R. Co., 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 107, 50 Am. Dec. 709; Rand v. City of Boston, 41 N. E. 485, 487, 164 Mass. 354.

The word "occasioned," in a statute imposing a liability for damages occasioned by the failure of a railroad to construct and maintain a fence, means occasioned by that only, and therefore the contributory negligence of one allowing his stock to go on the track is a defense to an action against a railroad for violation of the statute. "Of course, the want of a fence cannot cause injury, but it gives occasion to the injury; causes it incidentally. The word was apparently used in one sense of 'caused,' and accurately used. Dr. Johnson's first definition of the verb 'to occasion' is to cause occasionally; his second, simply to cause. Dr. Webster's is not substantially different—to give occasion to; to cause incidentally; to cause. Mr. Crabb appears to give a like construction to the word: 'What is caused, seems to follow naturally; what is occasioned, follows incidentally.'" Curry v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 48 Wis. 685, 678.

OCCASION OF PRIVILEGE.

See "Privileged Occasion."

OCCASIONAL WEAIGHER.

Where one was employed by the customhouse officials as an "occasional weigher," and paid as such, the officials must have meant by the use of such term that the employe's position was to be a different one from that of customhouse weigher, within the meaning of Act July 28, 1866, fixing the salary of customhouse weighers. Pray v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 256, 262.

OCCUPANCY.

In relation to building in insurance, see "Vacant"; "Unoccupied."

"Occupancy" is defined by Blackstone as the taking possession of those things which before belonged to nobody, and movables found on the surface of the earth or in the sea, and unclaimed by any owner, are supposed to be abandoned by the last proprietor, and, as such, are returned into the common stock and mass of things, and therefore they belong, as in a state of nature, to the first occupant or founder." Goodard v. Winchell, 52 N. W. 1124, 86 Iowa, 71, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481; Peabody v. Proceeds of Twenty-Eight Bags of Cotton (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 89, 48.

Occupancy is a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with the intention of acquiring a right of ownership upon it. Civ. Code La. 1800, art. 8412.

Occupation is ownership, with a present, active use. New England Hospital v. City of Boston, 118 Mass. 518, 520.

"Occupancy is the taking possession of those things which before belonged to nobody. Whatever movables are found upon the surface of the earth or in the sea, and are unclaimed by any owner, are supposed to be abandoned by the last proprietor, and as such are returned to the common stock and mass of things, and therefore they belong, as in a state of nature, to the first occupant or finder." An aërolite falling upon land cannot be acquired by occupancy, but becomes a part of the soil. Goddard v. Winchell, 52 N. W. 1124, 86 Iowa, 71, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481.

Puffendorf, lib. 4, c. 6, §§ 2, 10, defines occupancy of beasts feræ nature to be the actual corporeal possession of them; and Bynkershoek is cited as coinciding in this definition. Barneyrac, in his notes on Puffendorf, does not accede to the definition of occupancy by the latter, but, on the contrary, affirms that actual bodily seizure is not in all cases necessary to constitute possession of wild animals. He does not, however, describe the acts which, according to his ideas, will amount to an appropriation of such animals to private use so as to exclude the claims of all other persons by title or occupancy to the same animals, and he is far from averring that pursuit alone is sufficient for that purpose. Actual bodily seizure is not indispensable to acquire a right to, or possession of, wild beasts. On the contrary, the mortal wounding of such a beast by one not abandoning his pursuit may with the utmost propriety be deemed possession of him, since thereby the pursuer manifests an unequivocal intention of appropriating the animal to his individual use, has deprived him of his natural liberty, and brought him within his certain control. So, also, encompassing and securing such animals with nets and toils, or otherwise intercepting them so as to deprive them of their natural liberty and render escape impossible, may justly be deemed to give possession of them to those persons who by their industry and labor have used such means of apprehending them. But the mere pursuit of a fox by a hunter with his dogs is not such possession or occupancy as gives such hunter a right to the fox as against another who killed it and took it away. Pierson v. Post (N. Y.) 8 Caines, 175, 177, 178, 2 Am. Dec. 204.

"Occupancy" means possession, and may be used with reference to personal property as well as real estate. Herman v. Kata, 47 S. W. 86, 87, 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L. R. A. 700.

Act Feb. 19, 1849, § 10, authorizing a railroad company to determine and locate its road as may be deemed expedient, except as to "dwelling houses in the occupancy of the owner," means dwelling houses which are occupied in good faith by the owner.

"The Legislature meant to protect the man who owned his land and occupied it in good faith. Their protection cannot extend to the man who becomes an occupant for the mere purpose of defeating public improvements, or for the purpose of extorting excessive compensations." Hagner v. Pennsylvania S. V. R. R., 25 Atl. 1062, 1064, 154 Pa. 475.

The term "occupancy," as used in a fire insurance policy, requires a living in, and not a supervision over, so that where the assured, a farmer, rented his place to a tenant, and left the house four weeks before the fire, visiting it at intervals, and removing all the stock, but leaving most of the wearing apparel and a portion of the household articles, there was no occupancy. Craig v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 34 Mo. App. 481.

OCCUPANCY—OCCUPATION—OCCUPY (Of Land).

See "Actual Occupancy"; "Actual Occupation"; "Actually Occupy"; "Cease to Occupy"; "Constructive Occupancy." Change in occupation, see "Change." Occupied for unlawful purpose, see "Unlawful Purpose." Otherwise occupied, see "Otherwise."

"Occupy," as used in General Indian Protection Act March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. 980, 1005), relating to the opening to settlement of certain Oklahoma lands, and providing that, until such lands are open for settlement by proclamation of the President, no person shall be permitted to enter upon and occupy the same, and no person violating such provision should ever be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any right thereto, are used in the ordinary sense of the words, and have no technical significance. Smith v. Townsend, 13 Sup. Ct. 634, 635, 148 U. S. 490, 37 L. Ed. 538.

One's occupancy of land being in its nature a continuing act, every day's occupancy thereof by him is, in legal contemplation, a new and independent act of occupation, so that under Pen. Code, § 250, making it an offense to occupy land under a forged title, knowing the same to be forged, a prosecution is not barred if the accused was in possession of the land within the time of the statute of limitations, though the occupancy was taken first prior to such time. Coker v. State, 41 S. E. 684, 115 Ga. 210.

"Occupy," as used in 11 Geo. III, c. 12, § 36, relating to rates to be paid by any person who shall "inhabit, hold, occupy, be in possession of, or enjoy" any lands, etc., would include water or gas companies in respect of their pipes which are laid beneath the soil. Reg. v. Waterworks Co., 13 Q. B. 705, 715.

Neighbors frequently run up fences within or beyond the boundary lines or joint fences with the knowledge and understanding that such acts are merely temporary, and done with reference to the right of both to ultimately ascertain and fix the rights by an action of boundary or by a formal legal survey, and, until this happens, such land is held in occupancy. Williams v. Bernstein, 25 South. 411, 415, 51 La. Ann. 115.

Actual occupancy or residence.

Occupancy implies that a person is in actual, bona fide possession of the land as a resident. One who has never had actual possession cannot be an occupant. Gill v. Wallis (N. M.) 70 Pac. 575, 579.

"Occupy" is to hold or keep for use, to possess, and to cover or fill. So to say that one occupies or has occupied land continuously is tantamount to saying that he has or has had actual possession of the same. Hall v. Roberts (Ky.) 74 S. W. 199, 200.

The term "occupancy," as used in the homestead exemption laws of this state, has invariably been construed as meaning an actual occupancy of the premises. Quehl v. Peterson, 49 N. W. 390, 391, 47 Minn. 13.

A will providing that the testator's wife should hold, use, occupy, and enjoy his entire estate, both real and personal, as he had done before, during her natural life, means that she is to live on it with her children, servants, and employes. Rountree v. Dixon, 11 S. E. 158, 159, 105 N. C. 350.

"Occupy" as used in the possessory act (St. 1852, p. 158), relating to actions for the recovery of possession of real estate, and providing that no person can maintain an action thereunder unless he occupy the land, is equivalent to the term "reside upon." Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 89 Cal. 276, 279.

The term "occupy," as used in the homestead statutes, does not require continuous actual possession. In discussing the meaning of the term, the court says: "What is the meaning of 'occupy,' or 'continuing to occupy,' within the meaning of the Legislature? In common parlance, and in reference to housekeeping, we at once attach the idea of actual residence, dwelling, abiding on; the place of bed, board, and washing—three acts of constant recurrence to supply the necessities of life and renew the physical man. This is the second sense given it by Webster, but it is used also in the sense of possess generally; and Webster also uses the word 'possess' in the same variety of senses, in the main, as is given to 'occupy' or 'occupancy.' Turn to 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 240, 'Occupancy,' 838, 'Possess,' and we find the words used and understood in the same great variety of senses. If a man go abroad, animo revertendi, and reside for temporary purposes of trade or business, he will not lose his domicile, and yet we know that the party's domicile follows his actual residence. So it is with foreign ministers and diplomatic agents. In contemplation of law, they continue to occupy their mansions or dwellings in their own country, though actually resident abroad for years. A person may have a constructive possession or occupancy, and he may have a possessio pedis by tenants or actual inclosures, and, in contemplation and within the meaning of the law, he may have actual possession, actual occupation, without residence." Tumlinson v. Swinney, 22 Ark. 400, 405, 76 Am. Dec. 482.

The occupancy contemplated by the laws requiring notice to the occupant before a tax title could exclude a redemption is constituted by the building of a house thereon, and using it as a home. People v. Wemple, 89 N. E. 897, 898, 144 N. Y. 478.

"Occupied," as used in Laws 1849, relating to homesteads, and exempting from execution, as such, premises occupied, means something more than what is known in law as "constructive possession," as contradistinguished from "actual possession." It also means more than such possession as arises where land is cultivated, or being fenced and improved. It means premises which are used and occupied as a home; a place to abide in; a place for the family. Charles v. Lamberson, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 435, 443, 63 Am. Dec. 487.

"Occupied," as used in the statute exempting every homestead owned and occupied by any resident, means actual occupancy; possession of the premises as a home. McConaughy v. Baxter, 55 Ala. 379, 382.

"Occupied," as used in Comp. St. p. 569, § 92, exempting from execution the homestead occupied by a debtor and his family, should be construed to require actual residence on the premises, and not as meaning "use, tenure, possession," though such is the frequent meaning of the word. Tillotson v. Millard, 7 Minn. 513, 518 (Gil. 419, 420), 82 Am. Dec. 112.

Though the word "occupy," applied to a house, conveys to any man the meaning of living in the house, yet, in a statement of grounds of appeal made under an act of Parliament, the word "occupy" does not mean "reside in." Even actual occupation would not necessarily mean residence, because a man might dwell in one parish, and then rent a house and land in the adjoining one, occupying it by his servant. Some other words, therefore, are necessary to show residence. Per Patteson, J. A man may occupy either land or dwelling house without residing. Per Whitman, J. Reg. v. West Riding Justices, 2 Q. B. 705, 711.

Under a statute requiring seven years' residence by adverse possession to give title, seven years' occupancy was not a bar. An occupancy may exist without a residence. Ohlles v. Jones, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 479, 484.

Under Gen. St. c. 39, § 1, providing that when the lands of two persons join, and both parties shall occupy the land, it shall be the duty of each party to build one-half of the line fence, the word "occupy" does not mean actual residence upon the land, but only such occupation as makes it necessary or advantageous for the purpose thereof to fence the land. Maudlin v. Hanscombe, 20 Pac. 619, 620, 12 Colo. 204.

Occupation of land is a fact. The effect of it, when its nature and extent are shown, is a matter of law; and a witness may testify to the fact of occupation and its extent, as to time and space, without stating the particular acts of which it consists. Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47, 55.

Adverse possession distinguished.

Distinguished from adverse possession, see "Adverse Possession."

Constructive occupancy.

To occupy means to take; to hold possession of; to hold or keep for use; to possess; to use; to hold possession. The popular idea of a homestead is uniformly associated with that of the occupancy of the place so designated, either in the past, the present, or the future. The nature of the occupancy by which land may be impressed with the homestead character should always be carefully distinguished from possession such as may be sufficient to serve as evidence of notice of title in the owner. The latter may be constructive, while the former must in every instance be actual, in the sense that it should not depend upon paper evidence, the mere erection of improvements, the payment of taxes, or the exercise of personal control over the property to be affected. Occupancy is essential to the existence of the homestead right, but when the premises have become invested with the homestead character, and the homestead has once been acquired, a constructive occupancy may be sufficient to retain it. Ball v. Houston, 66 Pac. 358, 359, 11 Okl. 238.

Constructive possession.

The term "occupancy," as used in the law relative to adverse possession, includes constructive possession of land adjoining a line acquiesced in. Child v. Kingsbury, 46 Vt. 47, 55.

"Occupied," as used in a notice to terminate a lease as provided by Rev. St. c. 80, § 10, which notice spoke of "the premises now occupied by you" (referring to the premises occupied by the lessor), is used in the sense of "held in possession," and as indicating a constructive possession only. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Schaefer, 25 N. E. 788, 789, 135 Ill. 210.

Cultivation.

Under Laws 1858, p. 178, § 9, relating to the sale of swamp lands, and making provision for two distinct classes of purchasers, namely, settlers and occupants of such land at the time of the passage of the act, and owners and occupants of adjoining lands, occupancy of the adjoining lands might consist of cultivation and use without actual residence, or might be by a tenant. People v. State Treasurer, 7 Mich. 866, 870.

The use of the word "occupy," in § Stat. 823, granting to religious societies certain missionary stations occupied by them in Oregon, not exceeding 640 acres, does not confine the grant to the land actually inclosed and cultivated by the societies, but it is to be construed to include the maximum quantity at each station occupied by them; that is, claimed and in any way used by them, and not in the actual possession of anyone else. In so ruling, the courts say: "To occupy is to possess, not constructively, but actually. It is derived from 'ob' and 'capio'—to lay hold of—and means to possess by having hold of, or being actually upon the thing possessed, continuously and exclusively." Dalles City v. Missionary Soc. (U. S.) 6 Fed. 356, 370.

Laws 1896, c. 315, § 4, provides that, when the line between two towns divides a farm, it shall be taxed, if occupied, in the town where the occupant resides. A. owned a farm which was intersected by a town line, and lived with his father on an adjoining farm owned by his father, and wholly within one town. Work was done on A.'s farm with the father's teams and tools, and the father's cows were pastured there, but milked on his own farm. Produce was brought from A.'s farm to that of the father, where the teams were kept. Held, that A.'s farm was occupied, within the meaning of the law above cited. People v. Gaylord, 5 N. Y. Supp. 348, 350, 52 Hun, 335.

Where land was used and cultivated by the owner, it was occupied by him, though he did not reside on it. Lyons v. Andry, 31 South. 38, 39, 106 La. 356, 55 L. R. A. 724, 87 Am. St. Rep. 299.

Setting out trees or building a sidewalk in a highway is not such an occupation as can be made the foundation of a claim to title by adverse possession against the true owner. Bliss v. Johnson, 94 N. Y. 235, 242.

Inclosure of part.

Occupancy, within the meaning of How. Ann. St. § 8503, which provides that, if dis-tingent lots be occupied as one parcel, they may be sold together on foreclosure sale, does not require that all the lands be improved. The actual inclosure of a part carries with it the occupancy of a balance which is used, or intended to be used, as part of one farm. Harris v. Creveling, 45 N. W. 85, 86, 80 Mich. 249.

Location or selection of public lands.

"Occupation," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 2319 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424], providing that "all mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found, to occupation and purchase," means possession. The right to occupy is the right to possess and hold, and includes the right to locate. Tibbitts v. Ah Tong, 2 Pac. 759, 761, 4 Mont. 536.

The mere selection by surveying platted ground into lots, blocks, and streets will not be sufficient to constitute an occupation of the land for the purposes of a town site. Carson v. Smith, 12 Minn. 546, 562 (Gil. 453, 476).

Occupancy by mistake.

As used in 1 Rev. St. 412, § 83, requiring that if, when proceedings are brought to redeem land sold for unpaid taxes, the land is occupied, the occupants must have notice, means being occupied with an intention on the part of the occupant to enjoy the property; and an accidental or chance occupation of a small part of the land by a mistake in the fencing thereof was not an occupancy, within the meaning of the statute. Smith v. Sanger, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 577, 579.

The term "occupy," both in a popular and legal acceptation, has a known, certain, and definite meaning, and implies actual use, possession, and cultivation; and it would be nonsense to say that a man occupied a farm which was in the possession and management of another. Jackson v. Sill (N. Y.) 11 Johns. 201, 214, 6 Am. Dec. 363.

"Occupier," as used in Code, § 936, providing that, before a highway can be lawfully established, a notice shall be served on each owner or occupier of land lying in the proposed highway, or abutting thereon, as shown by the transfer books in the auditor's office, who resides in the county, cannot be construed to include a foreign railroad company whose right of way crosses a proposed highway. The occupier who is entitled to notice is one who personally resides in the county. The statute does not contemplate an occupier who is represented only by an agent, and who through such agent is in the occupation of the land, and himself an actual resident of some other state. State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 26 N. W. 37, 68 Iowa, 135.

"Occupy," as used in 2 Wm. IV, c. 45, § 27, conferring a right of voting on one occupying a house as a tenant, did not include one who occupied a house of the requisite value, where it was necessary, for the discharge of his duties as hall keeper, that he should reside in the house in question, which was built for the residence of a hall keeper, as such occupancy was rather that of a servant than of a tenant. Clark v. Bury St. Edmunds, 1 C. B. (N. S.) 28, 32.

Occupancy by tenant.

"Occupancy," when applied to land, is nearly synonymous with "possession," and may, in contemplation of law, exist in the same manner by and through a tenancy. Walters v. People, 21 Ill. 178; People v. State Treasurer, 7 Mich. 363, 370.

Where a farm has been rented, and the rent used for the support of the widow and family, the homestead is occupied, within the meaning of the homestead laws. Walters v. People, 18 Ill. 194, 199, 65 Am. Dec. 730; Brinkerhoff v. Everett, 38 Ill. 263, 265.

The word "occupied," within a statute exempting from taxation the real property of a board of trade so long as such property shall be occupied by said board of trade for the purposes contemplated in its organization, does not apply to that portion of the realty of the board which is rented for business purposes to third persons, though the rent is applied to the purposes of the board, and the remainder of the building is used for board of trade purposes. City of Louisville v. Board of Trade, 14 S. W. 408, 90 Ky. 409, 9 L. R. A. 629.

Rev. St. c. 7, § 5, enacts that "the personal property of all literary, benevolent, charitable, and scientific institutions, * * * and such real estate belonging to such institutions as shall be actually occupied by them or by the officers of such institutions for the purposes for which they were incorporated, shall be exempt from taxation." The occupation of a building by an officer or professor as lessee is not such an occupation as is intended by the statutes. It would be otherwise if the building were built for the professor or officer, and had been occupied by him with the permission of the college, and without his having any estate therein, or paying any rent therefor. Pierce v. Inhabitants of Cambridge, 56 Mass. (2 Oush.) 611, 613.

Gen. St. tit. 7, § 192, providing that any person may seize any animal in any highway opposite to land owned or occupied by him, etc., means an actual or constructive occupation, and a mere ownership while a tenant was in actual and exclusive occupation is not sufficient. Herskell v. Bushnell, 87 Conn. 36, 41, 9 Am. Rep. 299.

"Occupy," as used in a stipulation in a lease declaring that it shall be void in case the lessee permitted more than one family or tenant to every 160 acres to reside on, use or occupy any part of the premises, would include a letting of parts of the premises to persons for a year to cultivate for shares. Jackson v. Brownell (N. Y.) 1 Johns. 267, 271, 3 Am. Dec. 323.

A pauper who hired a distinct and separate building, and held same for one year, with part of the house let to an undertenant, occupied it, within the meaning of St. 59 Geo. III, c. 50, requiring that, in order to acquire a settlement by the renting of a tenement, it shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling house or building, hired at £10 a year, and shall be held and the land occupied for the term of one whole year. Rex v. Inhabitants of Great Bolton, 8 Barn. & C. 71.

The term "person in actual possession or occupancy of land," within the meaning of Revenue Law, § 216, providing that, before a purchaser at a tax sale shall be entitled to a deed, he shall serve notice on every person in actual possession or occupancy of such land, does not include a person who is allowed, without payment of rent, to stack hay on a part of land which is rented to a third person. Drake v. Ogden, 21 N. E. 511, 128 Ill. 603.

Operation of mine.

"Occupancy," to constitute the foundation of title to mining land, must be with the intent or design to acquire the ownership of the thing desired; and a temporary occupation, though entitled to protection against unlawful intrusion, is insufficient to give title, real or presumptive, to the land, and no title to mineral lands can be acquired by occupancy, unless for the purpose of mining or extracting the minerals, and an entry and occupation not for this purpose, but for the establishment of a mill site, is not the occupancy required under Rev. St. U. S. § 2319 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424]. Burns v. Clark, 66 Pac. 12, 14, 133 Cal. 634, 85 Am. St. Rep. 233.

Occupancy of mining property, under the statute, implies a substantial and practical use of the earth for the uses for which it was claimed or located, and as contemplated by the claimants and locators. When a man occupies a dwelling house, his character of occupancy is with reference to the purposes for which the house was built. He lives in it. When he occupies a barn, his occupancy is complete, under the law, if he puts his horses and wagons in it. That is, an occupancy of property is to be understood with reference to the nature and character of the property involved. To occupy mining property, and to enjoy the right of occupancy, under the statute, is to mine the same in a miner-like manner, and to extract ore from the same, mill it and dispose of it, and not to merely go upon it, yet refuse to dig and mine the ground. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 60 Pac. 1089, 1042, 24 Mont. 125.

Possession.

To "occupy land" means to possess it. Gardener v. Wagner (U. S.) 9 Fed. Cas. 1154, 1156.

The words "possession" and "occupancy," as used in Revenue Law, § 216 (Rev. St. 1874), are convertible terms, and are practically synonymous. Taylor v. Wright, 13 N. E. 529, 533, 121 Ill. 456; Walker v. Converse, 36 N. E. 202, 204, 148 Ill. 622.

There is a distinction between "occupation" and "possession," because there may be a legal or constructive possession where there is no actual occupation. Ward v. Dewey, 16 N. Y. 519, 531.

"Occupation" is synonymous with the expression "subjection to the will and control" and with "possessio pedis," and signifies "actual possession." Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683, 690. The word occupation ordinarily, in the law, means subject to the will and control—possessio pedis—and is synonymous with "subjection to the will and control." United States v. Rogers (U. S.) 23 Fed. 658, 666; McKenzie v. Brandon, 12 Pac. 428, 429, 71 Cal. 209.

"Occupation," as used in Acts 1893, c. 22, providing that occupation shall constitute sufficient ownership to entitle the party to the benefit of the act which prescribes the proceedings for the establishment of boundaries, is employed in the sense of "possession." Basnight v. Meekins, 27 S. E. 992, 993, 121 N. C. 23.

"Occupancy" as used in How. Ann. St. § 7836, providing for compensation for improvements made by defendants in ejectment who shall have been in actual, peaceable occupation of the premises for six years before the commencement of the action, or who shall have occupied for a less time than six years under a claim of title and in good faith, means such occupancy as under the rules of common law would entitle one to acquire a title by adverse possession. Jones v. Merrill, 71 N. W. 838, 839, 113 Mich. 433, 67 Am. St. Rep. 475.

"Occupied," as used in Organic Act, § 1, providing that the title to the land, not exceeding 640 acres, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes of said territory, shall be confirmed and established in the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong, is synonymous with the word "possession." Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Nesqually v. Gibbon, 21 Pac. 815, 816, 1 Wash. St. 592; Id. (U. S.) 44 Fed. 321, 323. It is an appropriate word to use for the purpose of identifying land in actual possession and use. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Nesqually v. Gibbon (U. S.) 44 Fed. 321, 323.

"Occupied," as used in Act Cong. Jan. 6, 1883, § 2, providing that "all that part of the Indian Territory lying north of the Canadian river, and east of Texas and the one hundredth meridian, not set apart and occupied by the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indian tribes, shall after the passage of this act be annexed to and constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Kansas," means no more than possession of the country. To have possession does not require actual residence. Where there is a subjection of land to the will and control of another, with title in him, it is occupied by that other. It is in the actual, legal possession of that other. United States v. Rogers (U. S.) 23 Fed. 658, 665.

"Occupied," as used in Rev. St. p. 1152 (P. L. 65, § 6), providing that when the line between two townships divides a farm owned by the person taxed, the same shall be taxed, if occupied, in the township or ward in which the occupant resides, means such an occupation or possession as will enable the tenant or possessor, without the aid of a paper title, to maintain an action for a trespass on it. Colwell v. Abbott, 42 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 111, 113.

"Occupation," as used in an affidavit on which an application to purchase lands from the state was based, reciting that there was no occupation of such lands adverse to any which the affiant had, is equivalent to "actual possession." McKenzie v. Brandon, 12 Pac. 428, 429, 71 Cal. 209.

"Occupied," as used in an instruction in an action of trespass to try title, where the defendant had been in possession under no color of title, that the defendant was entitled by reason of such adverse possession to only so much of the land as he actually occupied, is synonymous with "possession." Hence the instruction is correct. Evans v. Foster, 15 S. W. 170, 171, 79 Tex. 43.

Within the meaning of Comp. Laws 1871, § 778, requiring the occupant of land to erect line fences, "occupancy" means something more than boarding or living on the premises. To be an occupant in the sense of the statute, one must be in possession and have the use and control of the land. His connection with the property must be such that it would be proper and consistent for him, if he so willed, to fence voluntarily. Carpenter v. Vail, 86 Mich. 226, 228.

Residence distinguished.

See "Residence."

Sole possession.

"Occupancy," as used in 2 Rev. St. 806, providing that, if the premises for which ejectment is brought are actually occupied by a person, such actual occupant shall be named "defendant," the occupancy intended was the possession which was requisite to subject the party to the action before the passage of the statute. It is only another name for such possession, and the occupant named in the statute was the same person who before was called the "tenant in possession," and who alone, at common law, could be served with notice to appear and defend the suit brought in form against the casual ejector. An occupant is one who has actual use or possession. Bouv. Law Dict. It is distinguished from a claim. Possession is the detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself or by another, who keeps or exercises it in his name. Occupancy or possession by one implies the exclusion of every other individual from the occupancy and possession. A man who only enjoys the use of premises in common with the public can in no just sense be said to be an occupant. Redfield v. Utica & S. R. Co. (N. Y.) 25 Barb. 64, 68.

The word "occupied," as used in the homestead act exempting from sale one-fourth of an acre within a recorded town plat or city or village, and a dwelling thereon owned and occupied by the debtor as a homestead, is to have a controlling effect in the application of the statute; and hence while by the law of the state the owner of a lot bounded by a street in a recorded town plat, city, or village takes the fee to the center of the street, he has no right to occupy any portion of such street as his homestead, and land included in any such public street or alley is consequently not to be reckoned with in determining the homestead. Weisbrod v. Daemicke, 86 Wis. 73, 76.

Tenancy.

"Occupy," as used in a lease providing that the rent should be paid monthly in advance so long as the tenant should occupy the house and lot of ground, should not be construed simply in the sense of actual or personal occupancy, but in the larger sense of tenancy actually existing under the lease. The word means sometimes the actual use of premises as a residence or as a place to store goods, but that is not the only meaning in which it is used.

In the primary and most familiar sense of the word, it is the equivalent of the word "possess." It implies the conception of permanent tenure for a period of greater or less duration. Lane v. Nelson, 81 Atl. 864, 868, 187 Pa. 602 (citing Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. 520); Morrow v. Brady, 12 R. I. 180, 181.

Use.

"Occupied," as used in Hill's Ann. Laws Or. § 2732, subd. 3, exempting from taxation such real estate belonging to educational institutions as shall be actually occupied for the purposes for which they were incorporated, is synonymous with the word "use." Willamette University v. Knight, 56 Pac. 124, 126, 85 Or. 83.

Real estate purchased by an incorporated charitable institution, upon which, as soon as purchased, the corporation begins to erect a building for the purposes for which it was incorporated, will be deemed to be occupied, and, as such, exempt from taxation, under Gen. St. c. 11, § 5, cl. 3. New England Hospital v. City of Boston, 113 Mass. 518, 520; Trinity Church v. City of Boston, 118 Mass. 164, 166.

In Rev. St. c. 7, § 5, cl. 2, relating to exemptions from taxation of property owned by certain educational institutions, and requiring that the property exempted should be actually occupied by them, the word "occupied" was not used in the general sense in which a corporation or individual may be said to occupy their real estate when it is not occupied by any one else, but in the sense in which such institutions as an incorporated college, academy, hospital, or like institution, occupies its lands and buildings connected therewith. Lynn Workingman's Aid Ass'n v. City of Lynn, 136 Mass. 233, 235.

The requisites of occupancy of land for the purpose of a town site are complied with by an occupation for purposes of trade, commerce, or manufacture. Leech v. Rauch, 3 Minn. 448 (Gil. 832, 837); Hagar v. Wikoff, 89 Pac. 281, 283, 2 Okl. 580.

Whole interest in estate.

"Occupy," as used in a provision of a lease and release that the lessor shall live in and occupy the said cottage, with the appurtenances, as he theretofore had done and then did, for life, reserves the whole estate to the lessor for life. Rex v. Inhabitants of Elington, 4 Term R. 177, 179.

"Occupancy," as used in a charter of a railroad company giving it the right to take possession of land on paying or tendering damages for the occupancy, was intended to embrace all the right and interest which the company could acquire in the land. Mettler v. Easton & A. R. Co., 25 N. J. Eq.

(10 C. E. Green) 214, 218; Browning v. Campden & W. R. & Transp. Co., 4 N. J. Eq. (8 H. W. Green) 47, 54.

OCCUPANT—OCCUPIER.

See "Actual Occupant"; "Bona Fide Occupant."

As owner, see "Owner."

Change of occupants, see "Change."

An occupant is one who has the actual use or possession of a thing. City of Bangor v. Rowe, 57 Me. 438, 439.

Of land.

"Occupant of the land," as used in a statute requiring commissioners to cause notice in writing to be given to the occupant of land over which a contemplated railroad is to run, should be construed to mean actual occupant. People v. Supervisors of Allegheny County (N. Y.) 86 How. Prac. 544, 548.

The most ordinary meaning of the word "occupant" is one who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in the possession, of a thing. Occupancy is said to be the act of holding possession. Davis v. Baker, 14 Pac. 102, 108, 72 Cal. 494.

Within the statutes relating to forcible detainer, the word "occupant" is defined as one who within five days preceding such unlawful entry was in the peaceable and undisputed possession of such lands. Kennedy v. Dickie, 69 Pac. 672, 674, 27 Mont. 70; Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410, 422. It does not require an actual residence—a personal presence—but only that occupancy which is sufficient in cases of forcible entry, which is that the occupant must show an actual, peaceable, and exclusive possession. Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410, 422.

"Occupant," as used in Rev. St. § 1810, relating to the liability of railway companies to occupants of adjoining lands when cattle are injured on railway tracks in consequence of the neglect of the company to erect fences, has the same meaning as when used in other statutes, such as relate to taxation, partition, fences, highways, etc., and as in common parlance, and means one in actual possession. Veerhusen v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 11 N. W. 433, 434, 53 Wis. 689 (citing 2 Abb. Law Dict. tit. "Occupancy"; Smith v. Sanger [N. Y.] 3 Barb. 380).

The word "occupant," in Gen. St. 1894, § 1808, providing that, whenever the supervisors of a town receive a petition to lay out a highway, they shall cause notice of the time and place fixed for hearing thereon to be served on all occupants of land through which the highway may pass, is used not in the sense of owner, but rather synonymously with "possessor." The Legislature undoubtedly considered that every purpose would be subserved by requiring notice to be served upon the person having the actual occupancy or possession and control of the land to be affected by the highway. It is frequently inconvenient to reach the owner of land by the local authorities, because of his nonresidence; and, in the supposition that notice to the occupant or person in possession would in most instances reach the owner, such service was deemed all that was necessary, beside the general service by posting the same in a public place. A son residing upon land with his mother, who had a life estate therein, and who was in control thereof, was not entitled to a notice. Thompson v. Town of Berlin, 91 N. W. 25, 87 Minn. 7.

Same—Agent or employé.

"Occupant," as used in Sp. St. 1868, c. 448, § 3, providing that if any sawdust or refuse wood or timber of any sort shall be thrown into the Penobscot river "by any person or persons who may be in the employ of any mill owner or owners, mill occupant or occupants, such owner or owners, occupant or occupants, shall also be liable" for such offense, does not apply to the agent of the owner and lessor of a mill. State v. Coe, 72 Me. 456, 459.

"A servant or employé claiming no title or interest in himself, or any right to the possession, is not an occupant, within the meaning of the rules of law governing ejectments. He is acting under the control of another, and it is only in another's right that he occupies the premises. Spencer v. Kansas City Stockyards Co. (U. S.) 56 Fed. 741, 745 (citing Sedg. & W. Tr., tit. "Land," § 242).

Where a pauper employed as a laborer by the board of ordinance, having previously occupied a house at an annual rental of £7, which was then purchased by the board, still continued to reside in part of the premises at a weekly rent of 2s, which was deducted from his wages, and during such last occupation he also occupied a shop which, together with the house, was of the annual value of £10, and on his dismissal he gave up possession as required, his last occupation was not that of a tenant, but as a servant, and no settlement was gained thereby. Rex v. Inhabitants of Cheahunt, 1 Barn. & Ald. 473, 476.

A clerk who attends his employer on a race track, and records in a book bets which his employer makes on the races, but who makes no bets himself, is not guilty of "occupying a place on the ground for the purpose of recording bets," within Pen. Code, § 351, providing a punishment for such offenses. People v. Fallon, 46 N. E. 302, 152 N. Y. 1; 46 N. E. 302, 37 L. R. A. 419.

Same—Guardian.

The occupier of property, who is held to be liable criminally for nonrepair of a bridge, the repair of which is charged on the land, should be one in whom the law supposes to be vested a command over, and actual possession of the profits of, the land. An infant inheriting land on which his guardian in socage resides, and on which the infant did not, except on occasional visits, was not such an occupier of the land, but the guardian was the person liable. Rex v. Sutton, 8 Adol. & El. 597, 600.

Same—Husband of owner.

A husband residing with his wife on her separate property is not the occupant of the property within the meaning of the statute allowing lands to be assessed to occupants. The statute meant one who occupied the property in his or her own right, as tenant or otherwise, and in the absence of a possession by the real owner. Hamilton v. City of Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 496, 497.

A husband, though the head of the family, is not in any legal sense the possessor or occupant of the house or land owned by his wife, and in or upon which the family reside. Kavanagh v. Barber, 12 N. Y. Supp. 608, 59 Hun, 60.

Under a statute of New York providing that real estate shall be assessed and taxed in the name of the owner or occupant, it is held that a husband living separately from his wife is neither an owner nor occupant of land belonging to his wife, so that an assessment to him of such land was void. Smith v. Read, 51 Conn. 11, 18.

Same—Landlord.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1160, giving an "occupant" of land the right to maintain an action for an unlawful detainer, would not include a landlord in possession merely through his tenant. Hammel v. Zobelein, 51 Cal. 532, 533.

Same—Mortgagee in possession.

"Occupant," as used in Rev. St. c. 116, giving to an occupant of land the right to recover gross damages awarded by a jury on a complaint for flowing land, would include a mortgagee who makes entry under his mortgage title on the premises, and demands of the tenant holding by parol leases from the mortgagor to attorn to him, to which demand the tenant has acceded. Abbott v. Upham, 54 Mass. (18 Metc.) 172, 174.

Same—Tenant.

To make one an occupant within a statute requiring land to be assessed in the name of the occupant, it is not necessary that the person should have his home upon the premises, but refers to one who lives upon his own lands, but cultivates or raises crops upon other lands not his own. Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 Mich. 578, 583.

"Occupant," as contained in a deed giving a right to take water from a certain spring "by the aqueduct as now laid from said house to said spring to the extent and as has been the custom of the occupant of the house hereby conveyed," refers to the custom of the tenants, and not that of the original builder of the aqueduct. Wright v. Newton, 180 Mass. 552, 555.

"Occupier," as used in a law which declares that the occupier and not the owner of the building is liable to third persons for damages arising from any defect in the building, means the person who occupies it as a tenant, having control of it, and not merely the person who physically occupies such building. Ahern v. Steele, 22 N. E. 193, 197, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 449, 12 Am. St. Rep. 778 (citing Cunningham v. Cambridge Sav. Bank, 138 Mass. 480).

The term "occupant," within the meaning of the statute providing that one who occupies land without special contract shall be liable for rent, does not apply to one who lives with, and as a member of the family of, a tenant, in pursuance of a contract with the tenant. Tinder v. Davis, 88 Ind. 99, 101.

A statute providing that, if any lands sold and conveyed by the controller be in the actual occupancy of any person, the grantee shall serve written notice on the person occupying such land, should be construed to include a tenant in actual possession of a portion of the lands. Boarders, lodgers, and servants, however, are not occupants, within the meaning of the statute, upon whom notice is to be served. National Fire Ins. Co. v. McKay (N. Y.) 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 445, 449.

Six persons jointly leased a house which they and others used for the purposes of a political association. The rent and wages of the servants who had charge of the premises were paid out of a common fund, to which the lessees and other members of the association were subscribers. Various members of the association transacted the business of the association on the premises, and the lessees when in London frequented the premises, partly transacting the business of the association, and partly transacting their own affairs. Held, that the possession by the lessees was an occupation of each, within 2 Wm. IV, c. 45, § 27, giving the right to vote to the actual occupants of buildings, either in their own right or as tenants. Lockett v. Bright, 2 Man. G. & S. 193, 195.

Under Act April 4, 1798, directing that a writ of scire facias sued out to preserve the lien of a judgment on real estate must be served on the terre-tenants or persons occupying the real estate, the occupiers are those who come in under the owners of the fee simple. In re Dohner's Assignees, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 101, 104.

Of public land.

One who erects, or causes at his own expense to be erected, on a town lot, a building for the purpose of trade or business, is an occupant, within the town site law. Hagar v. Wikoff, 89 Pac. 281, 283, 2 Okl. 580; Leech v. Rauch, 8 Minn. 448, 453 (Gil. 332, 338).

"An occupant, within the meaning of the town site law of Congress, is one who is a settler or resident of the town, and is in the bona fide actual possession of the lot at the time the entry is made." Singer Mfg. Co. v. Tillman (Ariz.) 21 Pac. 818; Hussey v. Smith, 1 Utah, 129, 132.

"Occupant," as used in the law of the United States allowing occupants who possess certain qualifications, and who have made a certain character of improvements, to pre-empt a quarter section of land, means the person who is living on the quarter to be pre-empted, but does not necessarily mean one who is in possession of the entire quarter. The person living on a quarter section, and possessing the other qualifications of a pre-emptor, and having made the necessary improvements, is entitled to pre-empt the entire quarter, though he may not be in actual possession of a tenth part thereof. O'Neale v. Cleveland, 3 Nev. 485, 492.

"Occupant," as used in the laws of the United States relating to occupants of government lands, and entitling them to a deed to the land under certain conditions, and on proof of actual occupancy, meant that the party should have the actual use or possession of land. The acts necessary to constitute possession must in a great measure always depend on the character of the land, and the locality and object for which it is taken up. But in all cases where a party relies solely on the possession there must be a subjection of the land to the will and control of the claimant. The occupant must assert an exclusive ownership over the land, and his acts must at all times be in harmony with his title. His possession must, in the language of the authorities, be apparent, open, notorious, and unequivocal pedis possessio, carrying with it the evidence and marks of ownership. Lechler v. Chapin, 12 Nev. 65, 72 (citing Eureka Min. & Smelting Co. v. Day, 11 Nev. 171, and authorities there cited).

The hiring of logs to be sawed does not constitute the owner of them, if a nonresident, such an occupant of the sawmill as to subject the logs to taxation in the town wherein the mill is situated, within St. 1845, c. 151, § 10, cl. 1, providing that all goods, wares, and merchandise, and all logs, timber, boards, and other lumber, in any city, town, or plantation within this state, other than where the owners reside, shall be taxed in such city, town, or plantation, "if the owners occupy any store, shop, mill, or wharf therein, and shall not be taxed where the owners reside." Campbell v. Inhabitants of Machias, 33 Me. 419.

Of street.

The city of St. Louis is not the "occupant" of that portion of a street which has been set apart by ordinance as a stand for market wagons during certain hours of the day, within Rev. Ord. 1866, p. 329, § 21, making the owner or occupant of property fronting on portions of streets liable to the contractor for the cost of repaving the streets. Bixler v. Hagan, 42 Mo. 367, 373.

OCCUPANT STATUTES.

Statutes which provide that a bona fide occupant, making lasting improvements in good faith, shall have a lien upon the estate recovered by the real owner, to the extent that his improvements have increased the value of the land, are called betterment or occupant statutes. Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. (U. S.) 86 Fed. 370, 386, 30 C. C. A. 108.

OCCUPATION.

See "Usual Occupation."

Like occupation, see "Like."

Occupation of land, see "Occupancy—Occupation—Occupy (Of land)."

Other occupation, see "Other."

"Occupation," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, requiring a materialman to file his lien claim within 30 days after the completion of the structure, and providing that the occupation of the structure by the owner shall be deemed conclusive evidence of completion, should be construed to include the releasing of the contractor, and the taking control and possession of the work by the owner for the purpose of completing it. Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 25 Pac. 976, 88 Cal. 20.

Of dwelling house.

When used in a will giving the testator's widow the use and occupation of his mansion house, "occupation" does not mean living and residing, in the absence of any language in the will which implies a personal occupation or residence. Reeve v. Troth (N. J.) 42 Atl. 571, 574.

The occupation of a house is not sufficient to satisfy the words "live and reside" in it. Fillingham v. Bromley, 1 Turn. & R. 530, 536.

"By the term 'occupation' is meant use or tenure, as of a house." Fleming v. Maddox, 80 Iowa, 289, 241.

For a dwelling house to be in a state of occupation, there must be in it the presence of human beings, as at their customary place of abode, not absolutely and uninterruptedly continuous, but that must be the place of usual return and habitual stoppage. For what length of time it may remain unoccupied will depend upon the circumstances. Van Derhoof v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 841, 843.

Of pond.

Stocking a great pond with a new species of fish, and closing the outlet with a wire screen, is a sufficient occupation of a pond for the purpose of artificially cultivating and maintaining fish therein, within St. 1867, c. 384. Commonwealth v. Weatherhead, 110 Mass. 175, 178.

Of wharf.

The piling of sawed lumber upon a wharf to season, and the payment of wharfage therefor, do not constitute such an occupation of the wharf as to make the lumber taxable there, instead of at the owner's residence. Stockwell v. Inhabitants of Brewer, 50 Me. 286, 289.

OCCUPATION (Vocation).

As property, see "Property."

Occupation is defined to be that which occupies or engages the time or attention; the principal business of one's life; vocation; employment; calling; trade. Union Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Frohard, 25 N. E. 642, 643, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L. R. A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664.

"Occupation" means regular business. Standard Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Fraser (U. S.) 76 Fed. 706, 709, 22 C. C. A. 499.

The word "occupation," as used in an insurance policy stating that any member receiving an injury while engaged temporarily or otherwise, in an occupation more hazardous than the one in which he was engaged when insured, means the vocation, profession, trade, or calling which the assured has engaged in for hire or profit, and does not preclude him from the performance of acts and duties which are simply incidents connected with the daily life of men in any or all occupations, Union Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Frohard, 25 N. E. 642, 643, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L. R. A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664; Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 70 N. W. 460, 462, 112 Mich. 196, 40 L. R. A. 444; or from engaging in mere acts of exercise, diversion, or recreation, and hence a merchant who was killed while hunting could not be said to be engaged in the occupation of a hunter at the time of his death, so that his beneficiary would be only entitled to the indemnity allowed in case of a hunter, Union Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Frohard, 25 N. E. 642, 643, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L. R. A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664; Willey Casualty Co. v. Sheppard, 59 Pac. 651, 652, 61 Kan. 351, 47 L. R. A. 650; Holiday v. American Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 72 N. W. 448, 449, 108 Iowa, 178, 64 Am. St. Rep. 170.

Within the meaning of the statute imposing a tax upon all occupations, the keeping of a private billiard table for the use of the owner and his guests, for which no charge is made or profit derived therefrom, directly or indirectly, is not an occupation. The word "occupation," as used in the Constitution, authorizing such a tax, and in the statute imposing the tax, means a profitable pursuit, or a pursuit undertaken and prosecuted for a profit. Tarde v. Benesman, 81 Tex. 277, 282.

In construing Pen. Code, art. 110, providing that "any person who shall pursue or follow any occupation, calling, or profession, or do any act taxable by law, without first obtaining a license therefor, shall be fined," as applied to a charge of an unlicensed sale of intoxicating liquors by one who never followed the occupation of selling liquors, but on the day alleged in the information had sold four bottles of medicated bitters that was an intoxicant when drunk in sufficient quantities, the court said: "A single sale of intoxicating liquors would not of itself constitute pursuing or following the occupation of a liquor dealer. 'Occupation,' as used in this statute, and as understood commonly, would signify vocation, calling, trade, or business which one principally engages in to procure a living or obtain wealth. It is not the sale of liquor that constitutes this offense. It is the business of engaging in the sale without paying the occupation tax. It does not require even a single sale to constitute the offense, for a person may engage in the business without succeeding in it even to the extent of one sale. So, on the other hand, a person may make occasional sales of liquor without pursuing or following, or intending to pursue or follow, the occupation of selling liquor." Standford v. State, 16 Tex. App. 331, 332; Williams v. State, 5 S. W. 184, 187, 23 Tex. App. 499; State v. Austin Club, 33 S. W. 113, 115, 89 Tex. 20, 80 L. R. A. 500.

A person is not engaged in the "occupation of vending medicine," who, while performing missionary duties, sold three bottles of a mixture which was called the "Oil of Life"; the person not being in the business of selling this oil, but his occupation and profession being that of a missionary preacher. "Occupation" means a vocation, trade, or business in which one principally engages to make a living or to obtain wealth. Love v. State, 20 S. W. 978, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 469.

The phrase "occupation or exposure classed by this company as more hazardous," in a life policy, was construed to mean distinct, classified occupations or employments, such as railroad conductors, brakemen, engineers, blacksmiths, carpenters, etc., and not to include the act of insured in attempting to board a moving train, he in fact not being a railroad employé. Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 40 N. W. 839, 840, 39 Minn. 548.

Attorney in fact or guardian.

"Occupation," as used in Act April 15, 1884 (P. L. 512) § 4, making all offices and posts of profit, professions, trades, and occupations taxable, should be construed to include an employment or business. One who had become the attorney in fact of some of the owners of a large and valuable estate, consisting of lands and ironworks, etc., and the guardian of the remaining owners of the same, who were minors, and had undertaken to superintend and manage the whole estate, for which he was to receive and had been receiving $2,000 a year for attending to and managing it, was engaged in an occupation, within the meaning of the statute. Commissioners of Lebanon County v. Reynolds (Pa.) 7 Watts & S. 829, 830.

Building contractor.

Code Or. § 211, exempting from execution tools and implements used by a person engaged in any "trade, occupation, or profession," does not include the business of a building contractor. In re Whetmore (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 921.

Manufacturer.

Under a statute exempting tools, implements, etc., to enable a person to carry on the profession, trade, occupation, or business in which he is wholly or principally engaged, a manufacturer is entitled to the exemption. Wood v. Bresnahan, 30 N. W. 206, 208, 63 Mich. 614.

Minister.

The term "occupations," in Act April 29, 1844, § 32, declaring that all offices, posts of profit, professions, trades, and occupations, except the occupation of farmers, shall be valued, assessed, and subject to taxation, include a minister of the gospel. Miller v. Kirkpatrick, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 226, 229.

Public office.

"Occupation" means calling or avocation, and embraces the duties of a public office. Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 501, 506, 39 Am. Rep. 34.

OCCUPATION TAX.

As assessment, see "Assessment."

An occupation tax is peculiar in its character. It is not a tax upon property, but upon the pursuit which a man follows in order to acquire property and support his family. It is a tax upon income, in the sense only that every other tax is a tax upon income; that is to say, it reduces a man's fair income by the precise amount of the tax, but it is an income tax in no sense. Appeal of Banger, 109 Pa. 79, 95.

An occupation tax is a tax upon an occupation or the prosecution of a business, etc. "The distinction between a tax upon a business, and what might be termed a license, is that the former is exacted by reason of the fact that the business is carried on, and the latter is exacted as a condition precedent to the right to carry it on. In the one case the individual may rightfully engage in and carry on the business without paying a tax. In the other he cannot." Adler v. Whitbeck, 9 N. E. 672, 675, 44 Ohio St. 539.

The tax imposed by Laws March 24, 1881, imposing on every firm, person, or association of persons owning or running any palace, sleeping, or dining room cars not owned by the railroad company an annual tax, is an occupation tax, which is unconstitutional, because it is not equal and uniform, as it exempts one class of persons pursuing an occupation, and imposes a tax on others pursuing the same occupation. Pullman Palace Car Co. v. State, 64 Tex. 274, 276, 53 Am. Rep. 758.

OCCUPIED AS DWELLING HOUSE.

A condition in a fire policy that it is to be occupied as a dwelling house does not render the policy invalid because a part of the building insured is used as a stable. If the family live in the building, it is not deprived of its character as a dwelling because domestic animals are also housed there. Hannan v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co., 45 N. W. 1120, 1122, 81 Mich. 556, 9 L. R. A. 127.

A recital in a policy of fire insurance that the building insured is occupied as a dwelling is ordinarily a warranty by the insured that the building so described, and on which the risk is taken, is in fact at the time of issuing the policy a building occupied only as a dwelling house. Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 283, 288.

In an application for fire insurance, and in a policy issued, the premises were described as occupied by a certain individual as a private dwelling or residence. Held, that such clause should not be construed to amount to a warranty of the continuance of the occupation during the risk, and therefore the insurer was liable, though before the loss the occupant had removed and left the premises vacant. O'Neil v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co., 8 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 122.

OCCUPIED AS A MOROCCO FACTORY.

An insurance policy describing the property insured as "occupied as a morocco factory" indicates the use contemplated by the parties to the contract, and hence, there being a provision in the policy that in case the property should become unoccupied the policy should be suspended, it became unoccupied on a total and absolute suspension of the business; that is, when it ceased to be occupied as a morocco factory. Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co., 23 N. E. 482, 483, 118 N. Y. 165 (cited in Caraber v. Royal Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. Supp. 864, 63 Hun, 82).

OCCUPIED AS A RESIDENCE.

The term "occupied as a residence," as used in a statute exempting homesteads so occupied from seizure and sale on judicial process, means that the premises shall be the home of the party claiming a homestead right therein, and this implies a permanent occupation; and hence mere temporary absence by the householder and his family, without acquiring another home, does not constitute an abandonment of the right. Potts v. Davenport, 79 Ill. 455, 458.

Const. art. 15, § 9, which provides that a homestead "occupied as a residence by the family of the owner," together with all the improvements on the same, etc., shall be exempt from sale under process of law, etc., is construed so that a purchase of a homestead with a view to occupancy, followed by an occupancy within a reasonable time, will secure ab initio the exemption of the homestead from sale on execution or other process, as provided by this section of the Constitution. Ingels v. Ingels, 32 Pac. 887, 888, 50 Kan. 755. It does not always require an actual occupancy, but may sometimes permit a constructive occupancy. Ashton v. Ingle, 20 Kan. 670, 671, 27 Am. Rep. 197.

Under the homestead exemption laws (Comp. Laws 1879, p. 437, § 1), where the owner had a family, consisting of a wife and children, who resided in Illinois, and the owner never had any intention of bringing them to reside on the property in Kansas, he cannot be said to have occupied the property with his family, so as to render the same exempt. Farlin v. Sook, 26 Kan. 397, 403.

"Occupied as a family residence," as used in a fire policy describing the house insured as occupied as a family residence, must be construed and regarded as a representation as to the then use of the house, and not as a warranty or obligation that it should continue to be so used during the continuance of the policy. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Kiernan, 83 Ky. 468, 471.

OCCUPIED AS STORE.

Where property insured was described as a five-story brick building "occupied as stores on the first floor," and such floor was divided into several rooms, the policy did not require that all the rooms should be occupied for stores at the same time; it being satisfied if any of the rooms were so occupied. Carter v. Humboldt Fire Ins. Co., 17 Iowa, 456, 459.

OCCUPIED AS STOREHOUSE.

Where an application for fire insurance described the premises to be insured as a building occupied as a storehouse, such language was not a warranty that the building was used only as a storehouse, but was a mere representation. Wall v. Howard Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 14 Barb. 383, 391.

The words "occupied as a storehouse," in a fire policy in which there are other words to identify the building containing the property insured, have been held to explain a fact relating to the risk, and cannot be regarded as employed for any other purpose, or as implying that the house is not occupied for any other purpose. Texas Banking & Ins. Co. v. Sonne, 49 Tex. 4, 11.

OCCUPIED DWELLING HOUSE.

A house used as a place of residence by a man and his family is an occupied dwelling house, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 188, though every member of the family may be temporarily absent at a time when the house is maliciously and willfully burned. Meeks v. State, 27 S. E. 679, 102 Ga. 572.

OCCUPIED FOR SAME PURPOSE.

A condition in a lease of property occupied for the manufacturing of carpet bags, that "the property is to be occupied for the same purpose as it is now," is not violated by the use of the property for the manufacture of caps. Shumway v. Collins, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 227, 231.

OCCUPY.

See "Occupancy — Occupation — Occupy (Of Land)."

The word "occupy" is defined by the Century Dictionary as "to take possession of; seize; take up; employ; to take possession of and retain or keep; enter upon the possession and use of; hold and use; especially to take possession of a place as a place of residence, or, in warfare, a town or country, and to become established in it; to be in possession or occupation; hold possession; be an occupant; have possession and use." Lyons v. Andry, 81 South. 88, 89, 106 La. 356, 55 L. R. A. 724, 87 Am. St. Rep. 299.

"To occupy" means "to hold in possession; to hold or keep for use, as to occupy an apartment." Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church v. Dallas City, 2 Sup. Ct. 672, 674, 107 U. S. 836, 27 L. Ed. 545 (citing Webst. Dict.).

"To occupy" means to take; to seize; to hold or get possession of; to have in possession and use of a thing—and is applicable to personal property as well as to realty. Herman v. Kata, 47 S. W. 86, 87, 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L. R. A. 700; Coleman v. Eberly, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 197, 201.

The use of the words "hold and occupy" in a lease which recites that the lessee shall hold and occupy the premises for a term of years amounts to a general covenant for quiet enjoyment during the term. Ellis v. Welch, 6 Mass. 246-250, 4 Am. Dec. 122.

"Occupied by me," as used in the following devise, "I give to my dear wife, E. B. F., during her natural lifetime, the house and lot occupied by me in Market street, in the city of Camden, together with the lot adjoining the same on the east"—are used merely to identify the corporeal hereditament devised. Fetters v. Humphreys, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 471, 480.

Where a municipal provision provides that no one shall occupy any stand within a certain market without permission from the clerk, etc., a stand may be occupied, within the meaning of the regulation, by a person having a box within the limits of the market containing articles for sale, and offering them for sale. Commonwealth v. Rice, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 253, 256.

OCCUPYING CLAIMANT.

When any person has settled upon any real estate, and occupied the same for three years, under or by virtue of any law or contract with the proper officers of the state for the purchase thereof, or under any law of, or by virtue of any purchase from, the United States, and shall have made valuable improvements thereon, and shall be found not to be the owner thereof, or not to have acquired a right to purchase the same from the state or the United States, such person shall be an occupying claimant, within the meaning of the chapter relating to occupying claimants. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 2025.

The word "occur," as used in a policy of fire insurance providing that no action can be maintained on such policy unless commenced within the term of 12 months next after such loss or damage shall occur, must be construed as synonymous with "accrue"; meaning that the limitation commences when the loss is due and payable, and not from the time of the physical burning of the property. Though there is undoubtedly a difference in the derivation and etymological meaning of the words "accrue" and "occur," yet, as used by insurers in contracts of insurance, they have the same signification; representing the happening of an event from which a claim arises. Moreover, this construction accords with the general rule which regards the statute of limitations as beginning to run on a contract of indemnity from the time at which the plaintiff is actually damaged, and not from the happening of the event from which the loss arises. Steen v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 89 N. Y. 315, 324, 42 Am. Rep. 297; Hay v. Star Fire Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 235, 243, 33 Am. Rep. 607; Chandler v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 21 Minn. 85, 86, 18 Am. Rep. 385. See, also, Steen v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 61 How. Prac. 144, 146.

"Occur," as used in a fire insurance policy requiring an action to be commenced thereon within 12 months after the loss shall occur, is not to be construed in the sense of "accrue." The word "occur" means to happen, in its general and most popular sense, while the word "accrue" is to be added or attached to something else, in its generally received sense. The loss occurred at the time the fire destroyed the property. Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 92, 94, 33 Am. Rep. 47.

OCEAN.

See "Western Ocean."

The open sea, the high seas, the ocean, is that which is the common highway of nations, the common domain, within the body of no country, and under the particular right or jurisdiction of no sovereign, but open, free, and common to all alike, as a common and equal right. United States v. Morel (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1310, 1312.

The term "ocean," when used as a boundary of land granted, means the ocean at the ordinary high-water mark. Seaman v. Smith, 24 Ill. 521, 524.

The ocean was thought by Sir Matthew Hale to include only that portion of the sea which lies without the body of a county, and not to include "the arms or branches of the sea lying within the fauces terre, where a man may reasonably discern between shore and shore, which is or may be within the body of a county." De Jure Mar. c. 4. United States v. Rodgers, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 111, 150 U. S. 249, 37 L. Ed. 1071; United States v. Grush (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 48, 51.

"In other matters than crimes connected with admiralty jurisdiction, it may be important at times to discriminate between the seas and the high seas, but I apprehend that in crimes 'the seas' or 'the high seas' or 'the ocean' means much the same." United States v. New Bedford Bridge (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 91, 120.

The term "ocean" has the same meaning as the term "main sea," and is used to designate that portion of the sea which lies outside the body of the county, and is distinguished from the term "sea," in that the latter includes arms or branches of the sea which may be within the body of the county. De Lovio v. Bolt (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 418, 428.

OCEAN WATERS.

The phrase "ocean waters" embraces all waters opening directly or indirectly into the ocean, and navigable by ships, foreign or domestic, coming in from the ocean, of draft as great as is drawn by the larger ships which traverse the open seas. The Victory (U. S.) 68 Fed. 631, 636.

OCTB.

The objection that "Octb.," in a writ commanding the sheriff to summon the defendant "to appear before the judges on the first day of their next octb. term, to be holden on the third Monday of said month," expressed no particular month, is too slight, as the abbreviated word could not be mistaken. Kearns v. State (Ind.) 3 Blackf. 834, 837.

ODIUM.

"Oidium" means hatred, dislike, and it is used in such sense in Rev. St. 1881, § 412, providing that the court in term, or the judge in vacation, shall change the venue of any civil cause upon application, supported by affidavit, showing, among other things, that an odium attaches to the applicant, or to his cause of action or defense, on account of local prejudices. It implies such a general ill feeling toward a party to an action as will render it uncertain, at least, whether the cause can be tried by impartial triers, free from an atmosphere impregnated with malice or corrupting prejudices. Brow v. Levy, 29 N. E. 417, 418, 8 Ind. App. 464.

OF.

A contract for the sale of "mess pork of Scott & Co." means pork manufactured by Scott & Co. Powell v. Horton, 2 Bing. N. C. 668, 675.

Acts La. 1887, § 1, provides that "the circuit court shall not have cognizance of any suit, except upon foreign bills of exchange, to recover the contents of any promissory note, or other chose in action, in favor of any assignee or of any subsequent holder of such instrument, to be payable to bearer, and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit," etc. Held, that the word "of," in the phrase "or of any subsequent holder of such instrument," should be construed to mean "if"; the word "of" being erroneously used in its stead. Newgass v. City of New Orleans (U. S.) 83 Fed. 196, 198.

As belonging to.

The "property of another," within the meaning of the embezzlement statutes of many of the states in which the subject of the offense is required to be the "property of another," has been construed almost universally to mean that it must be wholly the property of another. It has resulted that, as a rule, a member of an ordinary partnership could not be convicted of embezzlement of partnership property. State v. Kusnick, 15 N. E. 481, 482, 45 Ohio St. 535, 4 Am. St. Rep. 564; State v. Reddick, 48 N. W. 846, 847, 2 S. D. 124.

Money or property of another, within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 95, § 23, authorizing the punishment of any clerk, agent, servant, etc., for embezzling, without the consent of his employer, or master, any money or property of another, means any money or property not belonging to the defendant. State v. Kent, 22 Minn. 41, 42, 21 Am. Rep. 764.

"Among the definitions of the preposition 'of' as given by Webster's International Dictionary is 'belonging to,' and another is 'denoting possession or ownership.'" Thus the word "of," in an indictment for larceny, alleging the property to be the goods and chattels of J., imports ownership of such goods and chattels in the said J. State v. King, 51 Atl. 1102, 1103, 95 Md. 125.

"Of," as used in an indictment charging that the accused burglariously broke and entered into the infirmary of Morgan county, is equivalent to "the property of" or "belonging to." Davis v. State, 38 Ohio St. 505.

The use of the word "or" in an indictment for arson, describing the burned building as the house of a certain person, renders the allegation a sufficient statement of the person to whom the property belonged. Jordan v. State, 41 N. E. 817, 818, 142 Ind. 422.

"Of another," as used in Code, § 283, providing that every person who shall set fire to the dwelling house of another shall be guilty of arson, is employed in the sense of ownership of property; and an indictment for burning a dwelling house, which alleged that it was used and occupied as a place of abode by anybody, was sufficient. McClaine v. Territory, 25 Pac. 453, 455, 1 Wash. St. 345.

The words "right of way of such railroad company," in a conveyance of "all the line of railroad heretofore belonging to the S. Railroad Company, together with the right of way," etc., "of the said railroad company," are to be construed as meaning "right of way owned by such company," as the phrases "property of" and the "property owned by" an individual or corporation, as commonly used and understood, mean precisely the same thing. Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Barker, 17 N. E. 797, 799, 125 Ill. 303.

"Of them," as used in 20 Stat. p. 141, c. 250, providing that no postmaster intrusted with the sale or custody of postage stamps shall use or dispose of them in the payment of debts or purchase of merchandise, confines the operation of the statute to stamps intrusted to the postmaster by the government. United States v. Williamson (U. S.), 28 Fed. 690, 691.

The words "land of," in a description of land in a deed as being bounded westerly by the land of L., means land belonging to or owned by L. Segar v. Babcock, 26 Atl. 257, 18 R. I. 203.

Under a statute providing that judgments shall be liens on the real estate of a debtor, the term "real estate of the debtor" means that which is in fact of or belonging to the debtor, irrespective of the fact whether the legal title appears in the debtor or another. Burke v. Johnson, 15 Pac. 204, 207, 27 Kan. 337, 1 Am. St. Rep. 252.

The preposition "of," in Act April 7, 1852, which provides that "all personal property, moneys at interest, bonds, and mortgages of the taxable inhabitants of the borough of Carlisle, county of Chamberlain, now taxable for state, county, and school purposes, shall hereafter be taxable for borough purposes," expresses the relation of ownership or property, and the whole section means that the inhabitants of Carlisle shall pay taxes to the borough on the same description of property owned by them as is taxed for county and school purposes. The word "of," in such connection, is to be construed as meaning "belonging to" and "owned by." Borough of Carlisle v. Marshall, 36 Pa. 397, 401.

Rev. St. c. 103, § 14, providing that a widow may remain in the "house of her husband" 90 days next after his death without being chargeable with rent therefor, means the house in which her husband owned the fee at the time of his decease. Young v. Estes, 59 Me. 441.

Gen. St. c. 113, § 44, providing that an assignment under the insolvent laws shall vest in the assignee all the "property of the debtor" real and personal, which he could have lawfully sold, assigned or conveyed, or which might have been taken on execution or judgment against him, cannot be construed to include property held in trust by the debtor. Silbey v. Quinsigamond Nat. Bank, 133 Mass. 515, 517.

As by.

"Of," as used in a deed of land described as "all the land situate and lying north of the road aforesaid, bounded north of the heirs of Matthew Clark's land," should be construed in its obsolete, but perfectly grammatical, meaning of "by," as in the familiar examples, "seen of men," "led of the spirit," "tempted of the devil." Hannum v. Kingsley, 107 Mass. 355, 361.

As for.

The words "of the county," as used in a statute in reference to the clerks of the county, is synonymous with the phrase "for the county," as used in the statute with reference to such clerks. Slymer v. Maryland, 62 Md. 237.

As from or off.

The word "of," in a requested instruction that the "defendants were discharged from all liability on the note sued on, the plaintiffs not having used due diligence in collecting said note of Burke," was construed to have been used in the sense of the word "from." Rives v. McLoaky (Ala.) 5 Stew. & P. 330, 333.

Act June 30, 1885, § 4, requiring the treasurer of every private corporation, upon payment of interest, to assess the tax provided in the act, and that he shall deduct three mills on every dollar of the interest paid as aforesaid, means that he shall deduct the tax off the interest paid. Commonwealth v. Delaware Division Canal Co., 16 Atl. 584, 585, 123 Pa. 594, 2 L. R. A. 798.

As in.

The word "of," in Act Aug. 14, 1885, to establish the city court of Macon, was construed as synonymous with the preposition "in," and to have been used to indicate that the city court should be located in the city. These prepositions are frequently used as synonymous. When we speak of A. of Macon, we mean that he is a resident of Macon and lives in Macon. When the defendant is alleged to be of a certain county, the allegation is sufficient to show that he is a resident in that county. Ivey v. State, 87 S. E. 396, 399, 112 Ga. 176.

As portion or part of.

"Of," as used in a declaration in ejectment describing the lands as "lots 1 and 2 of range 81 east, 19 south, and fractional section 30," means portion or part of the township. Wade v. Doyle, 18 Fla. 680, 683.

"Of and concerning," as used in an allegation of libel declaring that the words were used of and concerning different matters alleged to be libelous, should not be construed to mean that the libel is stated to be of and concerning all of such matters, so that it would be necessary to prove a libel relating specifically to every one of the matters alleged, and that there would be a failure of proof if such was not the case, but the words only require that plaintiff prove the libel relating to those matters, so far as they are concerned with the libel, in respect either to the particular defamatory character ascribed to it in the declaration, or of the manner in which it is afterwards set out. May v. Brown, 8 Barn. & C. 113, 125.

Where testator by his will devised his property to his wife for life, with power to appoint the remainder "to whom she thinks proper of her heirs," the testator only meant that she might appoint to any one or more of her legal heirs. Her selection was limited to that class. She could select among them. This is the import of the word in the portion of the will above quoted. She could not, in executing this power, go out of this class of her legal heirs. Milbollen's Adm'r v. Rice, 18 W. Va. 510, 513.

Residence in place implied.

Certain English statutes direct that the maintenance of parents by children who have a sufficiency shall be according to that rate prescribed by the justices of the peace of such county where that person dwells. Thereunder an order was duly entered on Thomas Gilbert, "of the parish of Mersham in the county of Kent, for the maintenance of his destitute father, and it was objected that the order did not show that Gilbert dwelt within the county of Kent, and was therefore within the jurisdiction of the justices." Held, that "of," in such connection, generally imports dwelling, and that it was sufficiently averred that the man dwelt in the parish of M., and that the words "of a parish" in Kent sufficiently denotes that the person identified resides in that parish. Reg. v. Toke, 8 Adol. & E. 227.

24 Geo. II, c. 44, 1, requiring that on the back of a notice shall be endorsed the name of the party's attorney or agent, together with the place of his abode, is sufficiently complied with by an endorsement of the attorney's name with the words "of Birmingham," the same being a sufficient description of the attorney's place of abode. Osborn v. Gough, 3 Bos. & P. 551, 554.

"Of Brooklyn," as used in a certificate of the formation of a partnership declaring that the general partners interested therein were two certain persons, "both of Brooklyn," is a precise equivalent to "both residents of Brooklyn," which conveys the same idea. It is universally so understood. It is the better mode of indicating a man's residence, and it means present residence. Where a former residence is described, the term is "from Brooklyn," or "late of Brooklyn," while "of Brooklyn" has no appropriate signification but that the person resides there. Lachaise v. Marks (N. Y.) 4 E. D. Smith, 610, 616.

An affidavit stating that "G. S., 'of the city of Albany, being duly sworn, says,' etc., does not sufficiently indicate that the affiant was a resident of Albany. Staples v. Fairchild, 8 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 41, 44.

A notice by the selectmen of one town to those of another town stating that "paupers of your town are here, poor and unable to support themselves," means that they were paupers who were supported by the town to which they belonged, and did not imply that they were being supported as paupers by the town in which they were residing. Town of Beacon Falls v. Town of Seymour, 46 Conn. 281, 283.

As to.

The changing of the word "of," as used in a bond requiring the master of a vessel to exhibit a certified copy of the list of the ship's company of the first boarding officer, to the word "to," is immaterial because it does not alter the meaning and construction of the bond. United States v. Hatch (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 220, 222, 223.

As with.

"Of his malice aforethought" is equivalent in meaning to "with malice aforethought," so that the use of the former expression in an indictment for murder, instead of the latter, does not invalidate the indictment, though the latter is the statutory form. Rocha v. State, 63 S. W. 1018, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 169.

As word of exclusion.

A deed describing a line as running within four rods of a brook excludes the stream, and means from the side of the stream, and not from the center of it. The word "of," as well as the word "from," is used as a term of exclusion. Haight v. Hamor, 22 Atl. 369, 372, 83 Me. 453.

OF THE BLOOD.

See "Blood."

OF THE BODY.

See "Heirs of the Body"; "Issue of the Body."

"Of the body," usually denominated words of procreation, are not indispensable to the creation of an estate tail by devise. Ewan v. Cox, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 10, 12.

OF COUNSEL.

A statute disqualifying a judge where he had been "of counsel" for either party means where he had been of counsel in the particular action in which he is sought to be disqualified, and not where he had been of counsel for either of the parties in some other and different action. The Richmond (U. S.) 9 Fed. 863, 864.

OF COURSE.

"Of course," as used in Prac. Act, § 495, declaring that the prevailing party shall be entitled to costs of course, means as a matter of right. Stoddard v. Treadwell, 29 Cal. 281, 282.

The term "of course," as applied to writs, means according to the course and practice of the court from which it issues, and it is competent for the court to prescribe the precise course in which it shall issue. Yates v. People (N. Y.) 6 Johns. 337, 359.

Motions of course are those which are granted without the court being called upon to investigate the truth of any allegation or suggestion upon which they are founded. Merchants' Bank v. Chrysler (U. S.) 67 Fed. 388, 390, 14 C. C. A. 444.

OF GRACE.

The phrase "of grace," predicated of a decree in equity, had its origin in an age when kings dispensed their royal favors by the hands of their chancellors; but, although it continues to be repeated occasionally, it has no rightful place in the jurisprudence of a free commonwealth, and ought to be relegated to the age in which it was appropriate. Walters v. McElroy, 151 Pa. 549, 557, 25 Atl. 125.

OF LIKE TENOR.

See "Like Tenor."

OF MY NAME.

See "Name."

OF RECORD.

See "Books of Record"; "Court of Record"; "Court not of Record"; "Debt of Record"; "Matter of Record"; "Mortgage of Record"; "Obligation of Record"; "Title of Record."

"Of record," as used in Crim. Code, § 382, providing that recognizances shall be of record, means of record in the sense that is taken by inferior tribunals—that they have been taken and certified to the clerk of the court of record and by him recorded. King v. State, 25 N. W. 519, 523, 18 Neb. 375.

OF UNSOUND MIND.

See "Unsound Mind."

OFF.

The word "off," written by the clerk of the court in preparing the court docket for the next term under an entry showing the filing of a motion for a new trial, cannot be regarded as an entry overruling the motion. St. Francis Mill Co. v. Sugg, 44 S. W. 247, 248, 142 Mo. 358.

OFF LARGE.

A vessel off large is a vessel having the wind free on either tack, which enables it to take a course to either side, or proceed straight forward, or return back to its anchorage. It is a vessel free in the wind. Ward v. The Fashion (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 181, 182, 183.

OFF SHORE.

A marine insurance policy prohibiting "loading off shore" means loading at a distance from and away from the shore while the vessel is lying at anchor, and does not include loading at a bridge pier. A bridge pier is really a projecting wharf, is a permanent structure attached to and firmly connected with the mainland, and loading from such a place one would naturally suppose was like taking in a cargo from shore. We should not understand that the words loading off shore include or were intended to apply to the case of loading at a bridge pier. In a certain sense loading at the end of a bridge pier 1,500 feet long is loading off shore or away from and distant from the mainland, but it is apparent that it is loading under quite different conditions from a vessel taking in a cargo from rafts and barges while anchored off shore, which manner of loading is that intended to be and in fact prohibited by the inhibition against loading off shore. Johnson v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 87, 89.

OFFAL

In an ordinance prohibiting the deposit of garbage or offal in certain places, the words "garbage" and "offal" were defined to include every refuse accumulation of animal, fruit, or vegetable matter, liquid or otherwise, that attends preparation, use, cooking, dealing in, or storing of meat, fish, fowl, fruit, or vegetable. City of Grand Rapids v. De Vries, 82 N. W. 269, 270, 128 Mich. 570.

Where a fishing lease stipulated that the lessor, as a consideration for the lease, shall be entitled to all the offal, the word "offal" means that portion of the product of the seine which is not fit for food or is sold or consumed for that purpose. Read v. Granberry, 80 N. C. 109, 112.

"Offal" is defined in the Century Dictionary as: "(1) That which falls off, as a chip or chips in dressing wood or stone; that which is to fall off as of little value or use. (2) Waste meat; the parts of a butchered animal which are rejected as unfit for use. (3) Refuse of any kind; rubbish." The heads and feet, and bones of beef cattle from which the flesh and skin have been removed, and which are fresh and clean, and emit no offensive odor, do not come within the meaning of "offal" as used in an ordinance regulating the hauling of the same in the public streets. City of St. Louis v. Robinson, 87 S. W. 110, 113, 135 Mo. 460.

Offal is refuse animal matter, and is garbage. City of St. Louis v. Weitzel, 81 S. W. 1045, 1050, 130 Mo. 600 (citing Cent. Dict.).

OFFENDER.

The word "offender," as used in 2 Rev. St. p. 639, § 21, declaring the term "felony," when used therein, to mean an offense for which the offender, on conviction, shall be liable by law to be punished by death or imprisonment in the state prison, is not employed as a word of limitation, making it dependent on the personal status of the criminal or his exemption from a particular punishment by reason of mental capacity, youth, etc., where the offense for which he is convicted is a felony, but as a word of general application, in a general sense to define the punishment defining the crime. People v. Park, 41 N. Y. 21, 24, 1 Cow. Cr. R. 227, 228.

OFFENSE.

See "Capital Crime or Offense"; "Combined Offense"; "Compound Offense"; "Continuing Offense"; "Criminal Offense"; "Cumulative Offense"; "Indictable Offense"; "International Offense"; "Malum in Se"; "Malum Prohibitum"; "Municipal Offense"; "Public Offense"; "Same Offense." Any offense, see "Any."

"An 'offense,' in its legal signification, means the transgression of a law." Moore v. State of Illinois, 55 U. S. (14 How.) 13, 19, 14 L. Ed. 306; People v. Welch, 9 N. Y. Cr. R. 144, 149, 26 N. Y. Supp. 694.

As synonymous with the word "offense," Webster gives "misdemeanor," "transgression," "delinquency." State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 24 S. W. 457, 458, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 663.

"Offense" is defined by Bouvier to mean the doing of that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. It has been held that the terms "offense" and "crime" are synonymous. People v. Police Com'rs of City of New York, 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 800, 802, 89 Hun, 507; Same v. French, 102 N. Y. 583, 7 N. E. 913. Abbott's Law Dictionary says: "An offense is a breach of the laws established for the protection of the public as distinguished from an infringement of mere private rights. A punishable violation of law; a crime; also, sometimes, a crime of lesser grade; a misdemeanor." In Moore v. Illinois, 55 U. S. (14 How.) 13, 14 L. Ed. 306, the court said: "An 'offense,' in its legal signification, means the transgression of the law. The terms 'crime,' 'offense,' and 'criminal offense,' are all held, in the appeal of State v. West, 42 Minn. 147, 43 N. W. 845, to be synonymous." Cruthers v. State, 67 N. E. 980, 982, 161 Ind. 139.

An offense is defined to be an act committed against the law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it; and where the statute speaks of a party as having committed an offense we understand a crime, and when it employs the words "crime" and "offense" we understand these as mere synonymous terms, or as an expression of different degrees of crime. To commit an offense is in legal parlance to be guilty of crime. The words "crime" and "offense" are used in the lawbooks as convertible terms, and the latter word is often employed both in the common and our statute law as crime of every degree. Illies v. Knight, 8 Tex. 812, 814.

The word "offense," as used in Excise Act 1857, § 17, as amended by Laws 1869, c. 356, making the offense of intoxication an offense against the provisions of the act, and providing for its punishment, is synonymous with "crime," and a conviction therefor is a conviction of a crime, within the meaning of Consolidation Act, § 263 (Laws 1882, c. 410), providing that no person should be appointed to membership in the police force who has been convicted of any crime. People v. French, 7 N. E. 913, 915, 102 N. Y. 583.

"An offense," says Mr. Wharton, "which may be the subject of criminal procedure, is an act committed or omitted in violation of the public law, either forbidding or commanding." United States v. Chapel (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 395.

The word "offense" means any act or omission for which the laws of this state prescribe a punishment. Gen. St. p. 820, § 2; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 15.

The term "offense," when used in any statute, shall mean any violation of law liable to punishment by criminal prosecution. Code Miss. 1892, § 1511.

The term "offense," when used in any statute, is to be construed to mean any offense for which any criminal punishment may be inflicted. 2 Rev. St. p. 886, § 87; Behan v. People (N. Y.) 3 Parker, Cr. R. 696, 690.

The word "offense" includes every act or omission for which a fine, forfeiture, or punishment is imposed by law. Code W. Va. 1899, p. 134, c. 13, § 17.

An offense is an act or omission forbidden by positive law, and to which is annexed, on conviction, any punishment prescribed in this Code. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 58; Hardin v. State, 46 S. W. 803, 806, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 428.

All offenses against persons or property are in some sense offenses against the injured individual, but they are also offenses against the public. State v. Corliss, 85 Iowa, 18, 51 N. W. 1154.

As used in Rev. St. art. 1198, subd. 8, providing that where the foundation of the action is some crime, offense, or trespass for which a civil action in damages will lie, the suit may be brought in the county where such crime, offense, or trespass was committed, the term "offense" means an offense punishable by law. Austin v. Cameron, 18 S. W. 437, 438, 83 Tex. 851.

The terms "crime," "offense," and "criminal offense" are all synonymous, and are ordinarily used interchangeably, and include any breach of law established for the protection of the public as distinguished from an enforcement of mere private rights, for which a penalty is imposed or punishment inflicted in any judicial proceeding. State v. West, 43 N. W. 845, 847, 42 Minn. 147.

The word "offense," as used in the Declaration of Rights, art. 12, declaring that no subject shall be held to answer for any crimes or offenses until the same is fully and plainly and formally described to him, does not embrace the affidavit and proof required by Gen. St. c. 124, § 5, before a person can be arrested in a civil action. In re Frost, 127 Mass. 550, 554.

Under Cr. Code, making it an offense to institute a criminal prosecution against any person for the purpose of harassing him, the offense consists in instituting the prosecution or causing it to be instituted; and where the process was issued in D. county, and the arrest was made in W. county, the arrest did not constitute the offense, but the offense was committed when the preliminary steps, including the issuance of the warrant, were taken. Hubbard v. Lord, 59 Tex. 384, 385.

"Offense," as used in the statute which points out the penalty to be imposed for a third offense against the liquor law, means the third offense which has been legally ascertained and determined, and is synonymous with third conviction. In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472, 475.

As act or transaction.

"Offense," as used in Rev. St. § 4499 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3090], authorizing a seizure in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of an offense for the purpose of the collection of a penalty, "has no precise or technical signification, and is used generally and loosely in the sense of the transaction which constitutes the subject or cause of the suit." The Idaho (U. S.) 29 Fed. 187, 189, 192.

The word "offense," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 7, providing that no person for the same offense shall be put twice in jeopardy of punishment, is not identical in meaning with the word "act." It imports, in legal sense, any infraction or transgression of a law—the wilful doing of an act which is forbidden by law, or omitting to do what it commands. State v. Oleson, 5 N. W. 959, 960, 26 Minn. 507.

Act Cong. March 3, 1875, c. 145, 18 Stat. 479, 1 Supp. Rev. St. p. 89 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3722], declares that any person convicted of an offense against the laws of the United States, and confined in any prison or penitentiary of any state or territory which has no system of commutation for its own prisoners, shall be allowed a deduction of five days in each calendar month during which no charge of misconduct has been charged against him. Held, that the term "convicted of an offense against the laws of the United States" meant an offense for which the person charged was entitled to be proceeded against by indictment, information, or written complaint, and to be tried by a jury, and hence such statute had no application to an imprisonment for contempt, that not being an "offense," as that term was intended in the statute. In re Terry (U. S.) 37 Fed. 649, 651.

Violation of city ordinance.

The word "offenses," as used in Const. art. 5, § 8, providing that the Governor shall have power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, means violations of state laws, and does not include violations of city ordinances. There is a well-recognized distinction between the nature of offenses which consist in violations of city ordinances, and those which consist in the violation of a state law. State ex rel. Kansas City v. Benick, 57 S. W. 713, 715, 157 Mo. 292.

Felonies and misdemeanors.

The word "offenses," as used in Cr. Code, § 54, entitled "An act to provide for prosecuting offenses on information," embraces all infractions of the Criminal Code of the grade of felonies. Bolla v. State, 71 N. W. 444, 445, 448, 51 Neb. 581.

"Bouvier defines 'offense' as the doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting what it commands. In this sense it is nearly synonymous with 'crime.' In a more confined sense it may be considered as having the same meaning as a misdemeanor, but it differs from this in this: that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by forfeiture or a penalty. In re Terry (U. S.) 87 Fed. 649, 650.

The terms "crime," "offense," and "criminal offense," when used in any statute, shall be construed to mean every offense, as well misdemeanor as felony, for which any punishment by imprisonment, or fine, or both, may by law be inflicted. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 2311; Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2396; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 15; State v. Blitts, 71 S. W. 1027, 1080, 171 Mo. 580.

Omission of duty.

The Pennsylvania statute which requires real estate brokers to pay a yearly license, and imposes a penalty, to be recovered in an action at law as debts are, for each offense, does not mean a crime, but only an omission or failure of duty year by year. Angell v. Van Schaick, 9 N. Y. Supp. 568, 569, 56 Hun, 247.

Act April 12, 1859, declares that it shall not be lawful for any person, within the limits of certain counties, to expose to sale at auction, etc., any goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured within the limits of such counties. It is also provided that each and every person "offending against the provisions of this act shall for every such offense forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, to be recovered in an action of debt." Held, that the words "offending" and "offense," as used in the statute, were not used in any criminal sense, but in the sense of breaking or violating the prohibitory injunction of the statute. Ott v. Jordan, 9 Atl. 821, 823, 116 Pa. 218.

Vagrancy or incorrigibility.

Rev. St. § 2071, providing that the expenses of maintaining infants, committed to a house of refuge and correction for "offenses against a law of the state," does not include infants committed to a house of refuge and correction under Rev. St. § 2050, providing for the incarceration of infants in consequence of vagrancy or of any incorrigible or vicious conduct, since an offense against a law of the state must be an act punishable as a crime. State v. Schlatterbeck, 89 Ohio St. 268, 270.

OFFENSE CHARGED.

In a prosecution for homicide the court instructed that the defendant was presumed to be innocent of the offense charged, and that before conviction the state must overcome that presumption by proving him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The specific offense charged in the indictment was murder in the first degree. Held that, inasmuch as an indictment for murder in the first degree embraces all grades of homicide, the words "offense charged" would also include all grades of homicide, and not first-degree murder only. State v. Smith, 65 S. W. 270, 273, 164 Mo. 567.

Under St. 1867, p. 126, providing that the indictment "must be direct and contain . . . the offense charged," and St. 1861, p. 479, § 412, providing that "in all cases the defendant may be found guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged in the indictment" a person charged in the indictment with assault with intent to kill is also charged with simple assault, for an indictment charging an offense of a higher grade, as an assault with intent to kill, also charges, by operation of law, every less offense that may be included under the charge of assault with intent to kill. State v. Quinn, 16 Nev. 89, 90.

Under the Constitution giving an appeal in all criminal cases in which the offense charged amounts to a felony, the judgment appealed from determines the offense charged. If punished as a felony, that is the offense charged, and an appeal may be taken, and, if punished as a misdemeanor, that is the offense charged, and an appeal will not lie. State v. McCormick, 14 Nev. 847, 849.

OFFENSE OF POLITICAL CHARACTER.

During a revolution in the republic of Salvador the killing of persons because of their actual or supposed enmity to the government by the president and his officers, and the capture or the taking possession of funds of a bank by way of a forced loan to obtain money with which to protect the government, are offenses of a political character, and as such the authors of such acts should not be subject to extradition. In re Ezeta (U. S.) 62 Fed. 972, 997.

OFFENSIVE.

Anything that is hurtful, disturbs happiness, impairs rights, or prevents the enjoyment of them is injurious, and if it causes displeasure, gives pain, or unpleasant sensations, it is offensive. The disturbing cause must be real, not fanciful; something more than mere delicacy or fastidiousness; but it need not necessarily be apparent to the senses of sight, smell, or hearing, for it may be injurious without offending either. Thus, by the general principles of equity, the continuance of a powder, dynamite, or fire establishment, or a house of ill fame, will be enjoined at the suit of one who is deprived of the comfortable enjoyment of his property by the close proximity of such a nuisance. The use of premises as an undertaker's establishment for the sale of caskets and furnishing goods for funerals, also for embalming bodies, for autopsies, and post mortem examinations, and for the reception and temporary deposit of human remains awaiting burial, is offensive and injurious, within the meaning of a covenant that such premises shall not be used for any trade or business injurious or offensive to the neighboring inhabitants. Rowland v. Miller, 15 N. Y. Supp. 701.

The term "noxious or offensive," in a conveyance of property which contains a provision that the premises are not to be used for any trade or business which may be noxious or offensive to neighboring inhabitants, will not be construed to include a building thereon for use as a residence for nurses, without evidence justifying a conclusion that the building so used will be more noxious to neighboring inhabitants than a building used as a common residence for any other class of persons. "To be included within the general terms mentioned it must be found as a fact that it is the business which may be in any wise noxious or offensive to the neighboring inhabitants. The definition given to such a covenant by the Court of Appeals (Rowland v. Miller, 34 N. E. 765, 139 N. Y. 93, 22 L. R. A. 182) would seem to include the use to which the defendant intends to put these premises. In that case the court said: 'We cannot suppose that the parties had in mind any business which might be offensive to a person of supersensitive organization or to one of a peculiar or abnormal temperament, or to the small class of persons who are generally annoyed by sights, sounds, and objects not offensive to other people. They undoubtedly had in mind ordinary, normal people, and meant to prohibit trades and business which would be offensive to people in general, and thus render the neighborhood to such people undesirable as a place of residence.'" Moller v. Presbyterian Hospital, 72 N. Y. Supp. 483, 485, 65 App. Div. 134.

"Offensive business," within the meaning of a covenant in a lease not to employ the leased tenement in a business that may be offensive, does not include the opening of the tenement as a public house. Jones v. Thorne, 1 Barn. & C. 715.

A mutual covenant between grantors and grantees, providing that the premises conveyed should not be used for any business offensive to the neighboring inhabitants, prohibits the establishment of a coal yard on a part of the premises conveyed, since nothing would be more offensive to the ladies of the neighborhood than the filthy coal dust, which settles on their doorsteps, thresholds, and windows, and enters into their dwellings, and into their carpets, their cups, their kneading troughs, their beds, and their lungs, discolored their linen and their robes of beauty and comfort, defacing their furniture, and blackening and besmearing and injuring every object of utility, of beauty, and of taste. Barrow v. Richard (N. Y.) 8 Paige, 351, 360, 35 Am. Dec. 713.

OFFENSIVE WEAPON.

"'Offensive' and 'dangerous' weapons would seem to be synonymous terms." State v. Dineen, 10 Minn. 407, 411 (Gil. 325, 328).

"Offensive weapons," as used in 9 Geo. IV, c. 69, § 9, relating to night poaching, would include large stones capable of inflicting serious injury if used offensively, and which were brought and used by the defendants for that purpose. Rex v. Grice, 7 Car. & P. 808.

Bats, which are long poles used by smugglers to carry tubs of spirits, are not "offensive weapons," within 6 Geo. IV, c. 108, § 56, providing that if any persons to the number of three or more, armed with firearms or other offensive weapons, shall be assembled in order to be aiding and assisting in the illegal landing of uncustomed goods, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a felony and suffer death. Rex v. Noakes, 5 Car. & P. 326.

OFFER.

To offer to do a thing is to bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to exhibit something that may be taken or received, or not. Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa, 304, 346.

An offer, without more, is an offer in the present, to be accepted or refused when made.

Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co., 80 Atl. 901, 185 Pa. 402.

"Offer," as used in Pen. Code, § 67, making it a felony for any one to offer any bribe to any executive officer, means a proposition to do a thing, to bring to or before, to hold out, to proffer, to make a proposal to; and hence the crime of offering to bribe an executive officer is complete under the Code without any tender or production of the money offered. People v. Ah Fook, 62 Cal. 408, 494.

Act 1825, regulating the general election, which imposes a penalty on any one who shall offer any reward to a voter to bribe or influence him, means to present a reward for acceptance or rejection. State v. Harker (Del.) 4 Har. 559, 561.

As attempt.

Webster defines the word "offer" as (1) a proposal to be accepted or rejected; (2) first advance; (3) the art of bidding a price or sum bid; (4) attempt, endeavor. "Attempt" is defined to make an effort to effect some object; to make a trial or experiment; to direct; to endeavor; to use exertion for any purpose. Accordingly the words "offer" and "attempt" are convertible terms. Consequently, an indictment for bribery which alleged that the accused did offer to do a certain act was sufficient, as the offer to bribe was an attempt to do so, within the meaning of the statute. Commonwealth v. Harris (Pa.) 1 Leg. Gas. R. 455, 457.

"Offer," in reference to the duty of a party, seeking to rescind a contract for the purchase of goods, to restore, or offer to restore, whatever he has received under the contract, is frequently used by courts and text writers as synonymous with "tender," and it may be properly so used with reference to articles capable of manual delivery and actually produced. But with respect to heavy articles of merchandise situated at a distance from the place to which they must be transported if restored to the vendor, the phrase "offer to return" is more commonly and more aptly employed to express a willingness or to make a proposal to rescind the contract and return the goods. Milliken v. Skillings, 36 Atl. 77, 78, 89 Me. 180.

As will buy.

The words "we offer," as used in the following offer in writing, "For a period of six months from date we offer for the product of the Robert E. Lee mine as follows," etc., is equivalent to and synonymous with the phrase "we will buy." Robert E. Lee Silver Min. Co. v. Omaha & Grant Smelting & Refining Co., 26 Pac. 826, 880, 16 Colo. 118.

OFFER (In Evidence).

"Offer," as used in an exception to a ruling allowing a person to offer certain evidence, is to be construed as meaning to read. Ansley v. Melkie, 81 Ind. 260, 261.

A statement in a bill of exceptions that "the parties respectively offered the following evidence" is not equivalent to an assertion that the evidence was introduced or admitted. Lyon v. Davis, 111 Ind. 384, 386, 12 N. E. 714; National Bank of Battle Creek v. Lock, 132 Ind. 424, 425, 81 N. E. 1115, 1116; American Ins. Co. v. Gallahan, 75 Ind. 163, 171; Garrison v. State, 110 Ind. 145, 148, 11 N. E. 2; Peck v. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co., 101 Ind. 363.

The word "offered," in a bill of exceptions reciting that it contains all the evidence offered in the case, is not equivalent to the word "given," and therefore it does not purport to include all the evidence. Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Barnum, 79 Ind. 261, 263.

In Goodwine v. Crane, 41 Ind. 835, it was stated in the bill of exceptions that "the finding was all the evidence offered," and this was followed in the record by what purported to be the evidence. It was held that the evidence was not in the record. Of the evidence offered, the court said, "How much of it was admitted is not shown." Feljenzer v. Van Valsah, 95 Ind. 128, 133.

A record on appeal showing that a statement of evidence agreed upon by the parties was offered, together with a certificate of the judge that it was all the evidence given in the cause, should be construed to mean that such statement was introduced in evidence. Ragsdale v. Barnett, 37 N. E. 1109, 1115, 10 Ind. App. 478.

The word "offered," as used in a bill of exceptions showing that, in connection with each instrument given in evidence, the word "offered" is used instead of the word "introduced," which is usually used, should be construed to be synonymous with the word "introduced," and to mean that the evidence offered was introduced in evidence. Harris v. Tomlinson, 30 N. E. 214, 215, 180 Ind. 426.

OFFER FOR SALE.

In United States v. Dodge (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 879, Mr. Justice Dady explains very aptly and concisely what may constitute an offer of sale under the internal revenue act, defining the business of a retail dealer as a person who shall sell or offer for sale spirits in quantities of three gallons or less. He says a license must be first obtained, and then, and not before, the party is at liberty to sell, or offer for sale, liquor in less quantities than three gallons. The liquor may be offered for sale without a special or personal solicitation of any particular person to become a purchaser. It may be done by general advertisements in the press, or by exhibition of signs or symbols in the vicinity of the place of the alleged business, or by having the article unsealed with intent to dispose of it to any offering to purchase. Hence under Laws 1885, p. 128, making it criminal to offer for sale an oleaginous substance except under certain conditions, it includes the act of a merchant in keeping such articles in his storeroom, though he makes no offer to any individual to sell the same. State v. Dunbar, 11 Pac. 298, 299, 13 Or. 591, 57 Am. Rep. 83.

"Offered for sale," in Laws 1876, c. 90, § 2, as amended in 1877, providing for the inspection of illuminating oils offered for sale, means held for sale, though they had not been put on the market for sale. It does not require an actual proffer for sale to some particular person. Willis v. Standard Oil Co., 52 N. W. 652, 653, 50 Minn. 290.

To constitute such an offering for sale of the seminary lands under Act Dec., 1840, by the Governor, as to subject the land, if not sold, to be entered at the graduation price, there must have been not only a proclamation published at the time and in the manner provided by law, but the land must have been regularly proposed for sale to the highest bidder by the crier of the sale on the day designated by the proclamation of the Governor. The proclamation of the Governor does not constitute an offering for sale, but is only a notice to all persons desirous of purchasing any of the seminary lands that an opportunity for the purpose will be afforded them. Hardwick v. Reardon, 6 Ark. 77.

OFFER OF PILOT SERVICE.

An offer of pilot service may be made by some arbitrary or established sign or demonstration, made from beyond earshot and addressed exclusively to the eye. There is a distinction between speaking or hailing a vessel and a mere offer of pilot service. The speaking or hailing a vessel implies that the parties are within speaking distance, and can only be done by word of mouth, supplemented, it may be, by some such device for projecting the sound of the voice as a speaking trumpet, or even personal gesticulation. The Ullock (U. S.) 19 Fed. 207, 208 (citing Commissioners v. Ricketson, 46 Mass. [5 Metc.] 412; 2 Pars. Shipp. & Adm. 109).

OFFER OF REWARD.

See "Reward."

OFFER TO BUY PEACE.

Admissions distinguished, see "Admission."

OFFER TO CONFESS JUDGMENT.

An offer to confess judgment, which is not accepted, cannot be treated as an admission of the cause of action or the amount to which plaintiff is entitled. Kelley v. Combs, 57 S. W. 476, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 863.

OFFER TO VOTE.

To offer to vote by ballot is to present one's self with proper qualifications at the time and place appointed, and to make manual delivery of the ballot to the officers appointed by law to receive it. Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 408, 419; Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa, 804, 846.

OFFERED LANDS.

Act Cong. June 8, 1878, c. 151, § 1, 20 Stat. 89 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1545], providing that surveyed public lands of the United States within certain states, valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation, and which have not been offered at public sale according to law, may be sold to citizens of the United States in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, should be construed as applying to lands which, at the date of the act, belonged to the class of unoffered lands, as contradistinguished from what, in the practice of the land department, are known as "offered lands"—that is, lands which are subject to private cash entry at the minimum price. United States v. Budd (U. S.) 43 Fed. 630, 631.

OFFERING PRIZE.

"Offering prizes," as used in Rev. St. § 8894 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2659], which provides that no letter or circular concerning lotteries, so-called gift concerts, or other similar enterprises offering prizes, or concerning schemes devised and intended to deceive and defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretenses, etc., "qualify and limit the words 'similar enterprises.' They indicate the nature of the similarity to lotteries and so-called gift concerts which must characterize other enterprises than lotteries and gift concerts to bring them also within the embrace of the statutes." United States v. Noelke (U. S.) 1 Fed. 426, 430.

OFFICE.

See "General Offices"; "Home Office"; "House"; "In His Office"; "Public House"; "Public Place."
Of corporation, see "Chief Office."

Webster defines an office to be "the place where a particular kind of business or service for others is transacted; a house or apartment in which public officers and others transact business; as a register's office, a lawyer's office." Anderson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 805, 310; Bigham v. State, 20 S. W. 577, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 244.

The word "office," in 2 Hill's Ann. Code, p. 662, § 46, which defines burglary as an unlawful entry, with intent to commit a felony, of an office, shop, store, warehouse, malthouse, stillhouse, mill, factory, bank, church, schoolhouse, railroad car, barn, stable, ship, steamboat and water craft, or any building in which goods, merchandise, or valuable things are kept for use, sale, or deposit, means any office, without regard to whether any valuable things are kept therein or not, as the latter clause of the statute only refers to buildings not specifically designated. State v. Sufferin, 32 Pac. 1021, 6 Wash. 107.

"Office" is the proper designation for an apartment or room in the corner of a hardware room, made of pickets four feet high, one inch square, and three inches apart, on top of which there was a plank, the door or gate of such place being made of the same material, in which the account books, money, etc., of a lumber company were kept, and where the business of such company was transacted by its agent or clerk; the place being partitioned off and used separately from any portion of the hardware house for a particular business. Anderson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 305, 310.

The inclosure where the books of a railroad corporation are kept, and where tickets are kept and sold, and where the business of the corporation is transacted, may with propriety be called an "office," but not the waiting room for passengers. Commonwealth v. White, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 181-183.

OFFICE.

See "Annual Office"; "Army Officer"; "By Virtue of His Office"; "Civil Office"; "Color of Office"; "Constitutional Office or Officer"; "Corporate Office"; "De Facto Office"; "Disabled from Holding Office"; "District Officer"; "Elective Office"; "Fiducial Office"; "Government Office"; "Hanaper Office"; "Highest Office"; "Incompatible Office"; "Judicial Office"; "Land Office"; "Legislative Office"; "Local Office or Officer"; "Lucrative Office"; "Ministerial Office—Officer"; "Petty-Bag Office"; "Political Office"; "Post Office"; "Principal Officer"; "Probate Office."

Particular positions held to be offices, see "Officer."

An "office," as defined by Cowell, is a function by virtue whereof a man has some employment in the affairs of another. Webster defines it to be a duty, charge, or trust.

United States v. Fisher (U. S.) 8 Fed. 414, 415; Bradford v. Justices of Inferior Court, 33 Ga. 332, 336.

Whether we look into the dictionaries of our language, the terms of politics, or the dictum of common life, we find that whoever has a public charge or employment, or even a particular employment affecting the public, is said to hold or be "in office." Rowland v. City of New York, 33 N. Y. 372, 375, 376.

An office is defined by the Century Dictionary as a post, the possession of which imposes certain duties on the possessor, and confers authority for their performance; and by Cochran as a position or appointment entailing certain rights and duties. State v. Brennan, 49 Ohio St. 33, 37, 29 N. E. 593.

An office has been defined to be a right to exercise a public function or employment and to take the fee belonging to it. Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Jones & S.) 481, 487 (quoting 7 Bac. Abr. [Ed. 1879] p. 279, tit. "Office and Officer"; Bouv. Law Dict.); People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65, 68; Miller v. Sacramento County Sup'rs, 25 Cal. 98, 98; People v. Stratton, 28 Cal. 332, 338; Quigg v. Evans, 53 Pac. 1093, 1094, 121 Cal. 546 (quoting 3 Kent, Comm. 454); *People v. An office is a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments, in which one has a property, and to which there are annexed duties, and, with us, in public offices, oaths to support the Constitutions of the state and of the United States. Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199, 202.

A public office is a permanent trust to be exercised in behalf of the government or all citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer. It means the right to exercise generally, and in all proper cases, the functions of a public trust or employment, and to receive the fees and emoluments belonging to it, and to hold the place and perform the duty for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. Under this definition an officer of the United States army retired from active service, on three-quarters pay, on account of age, under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1254-1259 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 887-889], and Act June 30, 1882, c. 254, 22 Stat. 118 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 885], does not hold a "federal office," within the meaning of Laws 1888, c. 584, providing that the aqueduct commissioners appointed by the mayor of the city of New York shall hold no federal office. People v. Duane, 121 N. Y. 867, 875, 24 N. E. 845.

"An 'office,'" said Chancellor Sanford, "is a public charge or employment, and the term seems to comprehend every charge or employment in which the public are concerned. Wood's Case (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 30, note. Every office is considered public, the duties of which concern the public." People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 7 How. Prac. 248, 250 (citing 5 Bac. Abr. 180; 2 Toml. Law Dict.).

An office is simply an appointment or authority on behalf of the government to perform certain duties at and for a certain compensation. People v. Rathbone, 82 N. Y. Supp. 108, 109, 11 Misc. Rep. 98.

One of the earliest definitions of the word "officium" is "that function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another, as of the king or another person." Again, it is said that the word "officium" principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty, and that it is a rule that, where a man hath to do with another's affairs against his will and without his leave, this is an office, and he who is in it an officer. United States v. Trice (U. S.) 30 Fed. 490, 494.

The terms "office or public trust" as employed in the Constitution, requiring an oath to be taken by persons occupying an office or public trust, "have no legal or technical meaning distinct from their ordinary signification. An 'office' is a public charge or employment, and the term seems to apprehend every charge or employment in which the public are interested. The words 'public trust,' still more comprehensive, appear to include every agency in which the public repose special confidence in particular persons, and appoint them for the performance of some duty or service." In re Wood (N. Y.) Hopk. Ch. 6, 8.

A public office has been well described to be when one man is specially set by law, and is compellable to do another's business against his will and without his leave, and can demand therefor such compensation, by way of salary or fees, as by law is assigned, to the doing of which business no other person but the officer, or one deputed by him, is legally competent. Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 17, 25 Am. Dec. 677.

An office has been defined to mean public employment, and its legal meaning to be an employment on behalf of government, or any station of public trust, or place of trust by virtue of which a person becomes charged with the performance of certain public duties. Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294, 297.

An office is a special trust or charge created by competent authority. State ex rel. Cannon v. May, 17 S. W. 660, 665, 106 Mo. 488 (citing People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673, 682). If not merely honorary, certain duties will be connected with it, the performance of which will be the circumstance for its being conferred upon a particular individual, who, for the time, will be the officer. People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673, 682.

A public office is a trust to be exercised on behalf of the government or of all citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer. It means the right to exercise generally and in all proper cases the functions of a public trust or employment, and to receive the fees and emoluments belonging to it, and to hold the place and perform the duty for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. People v. Duane, 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 516, 520.

"An office is a public station or employment, conferred by the appointment of government, the term embracing the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties." United States v. McCrory, 91 Fed. 295, 296, 38 C. C. A. 515 (quoting United States v. Hartwell, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 893, 18 L. Ed. 832); Territory v. Hopt, 4 Pac. 250, 254, 8 Utah, 396; In re Searls, 48 N. Y. Burrill says the idea of office clearly embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, fees or emoluments, rights and powers, as well as that of duty. United States v. Fisher (U. A public office exists, if at all, by a constitutional provision, or else by the fiat of the Legislature or by some body or board to which the Legislature has delegated power to create an office. Meyers v. City of New York, 60 Hun, 298, 23 N. Y. Supp. 484. And the employment of a day laborer, though he was taken from the civil service list, did not create an office, or him an office holder. Eckerson v. City of New York, 30 N. Y. Supp. 168, 169, 80 App. Div. 12.

An office embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties, and these ideas or elements cannot be separated, and each considered abstractly. All taken together constitute the office. Kendall v. Raybould, 44 Pac. 1084, 1086, 13 Utah, 226.

It is said to be impossible to give a definition of an office that will be applicable to all offices. State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 847, 849.

The words "office" and "officer" are terms of vague and variable import, the meaning of which necessarily varies with the connection in which they are used; and to determine it correctly, in a particular instance, resort must be had to the intention of the statute, and the subject-matter in reference to which the terms are used. State v. Klichil, 53 Minn. 147, 155, 54 N. W. 1069, 1071, 19 L. R. A. 779.

The use in the Penal Code of any word expressive of office or trust includes both males and females. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 22.

Agency, duty, or trust.

Public office is intended for the public good, and not for the particular gain of the incumbent. It is a mere agency or trust. Wilson v. City of New York, 65 N. Y. Supp. 323, 329, 31 Misc. Rep. 638.

Speaking generally, it may be said that a public office is an agency for the state. School Com'rs of Worcester County v. Goldsborough, 44 Atl. 1055, 1057, 90 Md. 198.

Public offices are not incorporeal hereditaments, nor have they the character or quality of grants. They are agencies. With few exceptions they are voluntarily taken, and may be voluntarily resigned. They are created for the benefit of the public, and are not granted for the incumbent. Their terms are fixed with a view to public utility and convenience, and not for the purpose of granting the emoluments during that period to the office holder. Trimble v. People, 84 Pac. 981, 985, 19 Colo. 187, 41 Am. St. Rep. 286 (citing Conner v. City of New York, 5 N. Y. [1 Seld.] 285).

A public office is an agency from the state, and the person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a public officer. Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, 63, 8 Am. Rep. 488; State Prison of North Carolina v. Day, 32 S. E. 748, 749, 124 N. C. 862, 46 L. R. A. 295. See, also, State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 68 Am. St. Rep. 174; McCormick v. Thatcher, 8 Utah, 294, 301, 30 Pac. 1091, 17 L. R. A. 248 (citing 4 Jac. Law Dict. 438).

An office is a trust created for the public. Robb v. Carter, 4 Atl. 282, 283, 65 Md. 321.

The word "office" imports a duty or trust. Ex parte Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269, 297.

The terms "office" and "public trust" in the California Constitution are nearly synonymous; at least, the term "public trust" is included in the more comprehensive term "office." The terms have relation only to those persons and duties that are of a public nature. Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 241, 244, 85 Am. Dec. 62.

"It is said that the word 'officium' principally applies to a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty; and that it is a rule that where one man hath to do with another's affairs against his will and without his leave, that it is an office, and he who is in it is an officer." Bradford v. Justices of Inferior Court, 88 Ga. 332, 336 (citing Carth. 478, 4 Jac. Law Dict.).

The Legislature has no power to deprive a constitutional officer of his fees by relieving him of the duties of his office, and providing that if he exercises such duties he shall be entitled to no compensation, for there can be no public office with no duties to be performed. People v. Howland, 17 N. Y. App. Div. 165, 171, 45 N. Y. Supp. 347.

In the text-books it is taught that the word "office" in its primary signification implies a duty or duties, and secondarily a change of such duties—the agency from the state to perform the duties. The duties of the office are the first consequence, and the agency from the state to perform those duties is the next step in the creation of an office. It is the union of the two factors, duty and agency, which makes the office. An act purporting to abolish an office does not abolish it where it also requires the performance of all the duties previously performed by the incumbent of such office, though it requires the duties to be performed by three persons. State Prison of North Carolina v. Day, 32 S. E. 748, 749, 124 N. C. 362, 46 L. R. A. 295.

In People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 678, it is said: "An office is a special trust or charge created by competent authority. If not merely honorary, certain duties will be connected with it, the performance of which will be consideration for its being conferred on a particular individual, who for the time will be an officer." State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson (Mo.) 25 S. W. 855, 856; Id., 27 S. W. 399, 401, 123 Mo. 43; State ex rel. Cameron v. Shannon, 33 S. W. 1137-1144, 138 Mo. 139.

"Webster defines an 'office' to signify a particular duty, charge, or trust conferred by public authority and for a public purpose. In Re Attorney's Oaths (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 492, Platt, J., delivering an opinion of the court, defines the legal meaning of the word to be an employment on behalf of the government in any station of public trust not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546, 556.

An office is a position to which certain duties are attached, a post, the position of which imposes certain duties upon the possessor, and confers upon him authority for the performance. State v. Griswold, 46 Atl. 829, 830, 73 Conn. 95.

An office is a particular duty, charge, or trust conferred by public authority and for a public purpose. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569, 572.

As a matter of law, "officers of the land department" of the government are agents of the law. They cannot act beyond its provisions, nor make any disposition of land not sanctioned by law. Stimson Land Co. v. Rawson (U. S.) 62 Fed. 426, 429.

Classes of offices.

Offices may be classed into two kinds—public and private. The incumbents of public offices perform duties for and owe obligations to the public, while the incumbents of private offices do not. Commonwealth v. Christian (Pa.) 9 Phila. 556, 558. See, also, Bradford v. Justices of Inferior Court, 33 Ga. 382, 386; Polk v. James, 68 Ga. 128.

Officers are civil or military, public or private, according to the nature of their trusts. A public officer is one who has a duty concerning the public, and is none the less a public officer where his authority is confined to narrow limits. Civil officers are political, judicial, or ministerial. Ex parte Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269, 297 (citing 7 Bac. Abr. 279, 280, tit. "Office and Officers").

Officers are civil, judicial, ministerial, executive, political, municipal, military, ecclesiastical, etc. An office is a right to exercise a public function or employment, and may be classed into civil and military, and civil may be classed into political, judicial, and ministerial. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569, 572.

"Offices may be and usually are divided into two classes, civil and military. Civil offices are usually divided into three classes, political, ministerial, and judicial. Political offices are such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice or the execution of the mandates of a superior, as the president or head of a department. Judicial offices are those which relate to the administration of justice, and which must be exercised by the persons appointed for that purpose and not by deputies. Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no power to judge the matter to be done, and which require him to obey some superior, many of which are merely employments requiring neither a commission nor a warrant of appointment as temporary clerks or managers. Fitzpatrick v. United States (U. S.) 7 Ct. Cl. 290, 293.

Offices are civil and military, and the civil are divided into political, judicial, and ministerial. Of the former the President, the Governors of the states, heads of departments, members of Congress and Legislature, are examples. The judicial are those which relate to the administration of justice, and cannot be exercised by a deputy. The ministerial are those wherein the officer has no power to judge of the matter to be done, must act in obedience to the orders of the superior, and the duties of which can be performed by a deputy. All offices in this country are public. People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 65, 68.

• Compensation.

Webster defines the word "office" as "a special duty, trust, or charge conferred by authority and for a public purpose. An employment undertaken by a commission and authority of the government, as a civil, judicial, executive, legislative, or other office." Burrill's Law Dictionary defines the word to mean "a position or station in which a person is employed to perform certain duties, or by virtue of which he becomes charged with the performance of certain duties, pub-lie or private; a place of trust." From these definitions—and we think they are correct—it is quite apparent that compensation is not indispensable to the existence or creation of the office, within the meaning of Const. art. 15, § 2; Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 224, providing that the General Assembly shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years. Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Claypool, 48 N. E. 228, 230, 149 Ind. 198.

The right to the fees or compensation attached to an office does not grow out of contract between the government and the officer, but arises from the rendition of services. Therefore, an officer who has been kept out of his office and has not performed his duties cannot maintain an action against the government to recover the amount of his fees accruing from the office. Smith v. City of New York, 37 N. Y. 518, 520.

The oath, the salary, or fees are mere incidents, and they constitute no part of the office. Clark v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, 63, 8 Am. Rep. 488; State Prison of North Carolina v. Day, 32 S. E. 748, 749, 124 N. C. 362, 46 L. R. A. 295.

Continuance regardless of incumbency.

In the abstract, "office" signifies a place of trust. In legal idea an office is an entity, and may exist in fact, though without an incumbent. In this sense the word "office" is used in a number of instances in the Constitution and in the statutes. People v. Stratton, 28 Cal. 882; Wardlaw v. City of New York, 19 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 174.

In People v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 785, it is said: "An office is a position which does not end with the termination of the term of the person filling it, but its duties continue to be performed by the successors of such person, whether elected or appointed." Piacek v. People, 62 N. E. 590, 532, 194 Ill. 125. See, also, State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 68 Am. St. Rep. 174; United States v. Maurice (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1211, 1214.

Continuing employment.

An office "has been defined to be an employment on behalf of the government in any situation of public trust not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." People v. Nichols, 52 N. Y. 478, 484, 11 Am. Rep. 784; Wardlaw v. City of New York, 19 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 174; People v. Nostrand, 46 N. Y. 875, 881; Lewis v. Board of Public Works, 17 Atl. 112, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 240; Attorney General v. McCaughey, 21 R. I. 341, 346, 43 Atl. 346, 648.

"Public office," as used in the Constitution, has respect to a permanent trust to be exercised in behalf of the government and of all the citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer in any matters or duties pertaining to the character of the trust, and it does not include the appointment to meet special exigencies of the individual to perform transient, occasional, or incidental duties, such as are ordinarily performed by public officers, and as to such appointments the Legislature is at liberty to invest the courts with power to make them. In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238, 244.

Within the ordinary acceptance of the term, one who is engaged to render service in a particular transaction is not an "officer." That word implies continuity of service, and excludes those employed for a special and a single transaction. Clark v. Renninger, 42 Atl. 928, 929, 89 Md. 66, 44 L. R. A. 413. See, also, Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 289, 72 Am. Dec. 169; State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 68 Am. St. Rep. 174; State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 847, 848; Brathwaite v. Cameron, 38 Pac. 1084, 1087, 3 Okl. 680.

"Officer" means one with public duties somewhat continuous in their nature. The merchant appraisers are appointed by collectors of customs for each case. The theory of the law is that the collector appoints a merchant appraiser for each occasion, and if two or three reappraisements are acted on at the same time, it is not because the merchant appraiser holds the office for a day or an hour or for a month, but it is because the same man may be appointed in two or three instances to act upon more than one appraisal, and he acts on several at the same time. He does not hold an office, but merely holds a designation for that one thing. Auffmordt v. Hedden (U. S.) 30 Fed. 360, 362.

Wis. Const. requiring that certain "officers" should be elected or appointed by the people of the district to which their offices appertain, cannot be construed to include commissioners appointed by the circuit judge to review certain actions by a board of supervisors of a county wherein a city or town is located, and determine what sum should be added or deducted from the aggregate valuation of the taxable property of the city, village, or town to produce a just relation between valuations. Such commissioners are merely appointed to do a specific act, and, when that is performed, their power ceases. They bear a strong analogy to the commissioners appointed by the justices of the peace in reviewing the action of town supervisors in laying out or discontinuing highways. There is a distinction between an office and a mere service or employment. State v. Myers, 9 N. W. 777, 778, 52 Wis. 628.

Created and duties prescribed by law.

From the mass of learning displayed in cases determining the meaning of the term "office," it is almost impossible to deduce a definition of the term universally applicable. One of the requisites is that the office itself must be created by the Constitution of the state, or it must be authorized by some statute; but not all employments authorized by law are public offices, in the sense of the Constitution. The presidency of a private corporation may be spoken of as an office. An executor, guardian, a referee for the decision and the trial of an action, are all officers who derive their existence from statutes, but they are not public officers in the constitutional sense. It seems to be reasonably well settled that, where the Legislature creates and prescribes the duty and fixes the compensation, these duties pertain to the public, and are continuing and permanent, not occasional and temporary. Such compensation or employment is an office, and one who occupies it is an officer. In such a case there is a declaration by the Legislature that some portion, great or small, of the function of the government, was to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and the Legislature has decided for itself that the employment is of sufficient dignity and importance to be deemed an office. Patton v. Board of Health of City and County of San Francisco, 59 Pac. 702, 703, 127 Cal. 388, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66.

The right to an office embraces the idea that the "office" has been created by adequate authority, that the manner of designation for, and the conditions of eligibility to, the office, as well as the tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties pertaining to it, have been prescribed. Gosman v. State, 106 Ind. 203, 204, 6 N. E. 349.

A public office is not a natural growth of the soil, and can be created only by the Legislature, or some municipal board or body authorized by the Legislature to create one. Miller v. Warner, 59 N. Y. Supp. 956, 957, 42 App. Div. 208.

A public office exists, if at all, either by a constitutional provision or by the fiat of the Legislature, or by some body or board to which the Legislature has delegated the power to create an office. Eckerson v. City of New York, 80 N. Y. Supp. 163, 169, 80 App. Div. 12 (citing Meyers v. City of New York, 69 Hun. 293, 23 N. Y. Supp. 484).

The true test of a public office seems to be that it is a parcel of the administration of government, civil or military, or is itself created by the lawmaking power. Ellison v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235, 241.

An office is a place created, or at least recognized, by the laws of the state, and to which certain public duties are assigned, either by the law itself or by regulations adopted under authority of the law. Stewart v. Hudson County, 33 Atl. 842, 61 N. J. Law, 117 (citing Bownes v. Meehan, 45 N. J. Law [16 Vroom] 189); Peterson v. Salem County, 42 Atl. 844, 845, 63 N. J. Law, 57; Cramer v. Water Com'rs of New Brunswick, 31 Atl. 384, 385, 57 N. J. Law (23 Vroom) 478; O'Brien v. Thorogood, 39 N. E. 287, 288, 162 Mass. 598.

An office is defined by the Constitution of Illinois as a public position created by the Constitution or by law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power or for a fixed time, with a successor elected or appointed. People v. Loeffler, 51 N. E. 785, 789, 175 Ill. 586; People v. Bollam, 54 N. E. 1032, 1033, 182 Ill. 523.

It may be stated that, where an employment or duty is a continuing one, which is defined by rules prescribed by law, and not by contract, such charge or employment is an office, and the person who performs it is an officer. State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 347, 348. See, also, State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 63 Am. St. Rep. 174; Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 289, 72 Am. Dec. 169; United States v. Maurice (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1211, 1214.

An office is a public position created by the Constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power or for a fixed time, with a successor elected or appointed. Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 186, 192 (citing Const. 1870, art. 5, § 24).

Election or appointment.

An office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of the government. Polk v. James, 68 Ga. 123.

A person in the service of the government, who derives his position from duly, legally authorized election or appointment is a public officer. State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 63 Am. St. Rep. 174.

Certainly, where an individual has been appointed or elected in a manner prescribed by law, has a designation or title given him by law, and exercises functions concerning the public, assigned to him by law, he must be regarded as a public officer. It can make no difference whether he be commissioned by the chief executive officer with the authentication of the seal of state or not. Where that is given, it is but evidence of his title to the office. Bradford v. Justices of Inferior Court, 33 Ga. 332, 336.

Every office is an appointment or an employment, but it does not follow that every appointment is an office, and the words are not convertible terms. Commonwealth v. Binns (Pa.) 17 Serg. & R. 219, 220, 232.

An officer, within the meaning of the St. Louis charter provision forbidding the change of an officer's salary during the term for which he was elected or appointed, is one who by the local law enjoys either an annual salary or a definite term of office. State ex rel. Bartraw v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 596, 597, 95 Mo. App. 690.

Employment distinguished.

"In every definition of the word 'office,' the features recognised as characteristic, and distinguishing it from a mere employment, are the manner of appointment and the nature and duties to be performed, and whether the duties are such as pertain to the particular official designation, and are continuing and permanent, and not occasional or temporary." State v. Board of Public Works, 17 Atl. 112, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 240.

"An officer is distinguished from an employé in the greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position; in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond; in the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office; and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of his position." State ex rel. Cameron v. Shannon, 83 S. W. 1187, 1144, 133 Mo. 139; State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson (Mo.) 25 S. W. 855, 856; City of Baltimore v. Lyman, 48 Atl. 145, 146, 92 Md. 591.

The term "office" has no legal or technical meaning attached to it, distinguishing it from its ordinary acceptation. An office is a public charge or employment. But as every employment is not an office, it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between employments which are and which are not offices. 7 Bac. Abr. 280. Legislatures generally define "office" to be public employment on behalf of the government in any station of public trust. In common parlance, the term office has a more general signification; thus, we say the office of the executor, or the office of the president. In re Attorneys' Oaths (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 492, 494; In re Ricker, 66 N. H. 207, 282, 29 Atl. 559, 572, 24 L. R. A. 740.

Const. art. 5, § 24, defines an office as follows: "An office is a public position created by the Constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointive power or for a fixed time, with a successor elected or appointed. An employment is an agency for a temporary purpose, which ceases when that purpose is accomplished." Lasher v. People, 55 N. E. 663, 666, 133 Ill. 228, 47 L. R. A. 802, 75 Am. St. Rep. 108.

The term "office" implies a delegation of a position of the sovereign power to, and possession of it by, the person filling the office, while an "employment" does not comprehend a delegation of any part of the sovereign authority. State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 39 Fla. 477, 63 Am. St. Rep. 174; Montgomery v. State, 18 South. 157, 159, 107 Ala. 372.

In United States v. Maurice (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1211, Chief Justice Marshall said: "An office is defined to be a public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. * * * Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act or to perform a service, without becoming an officer; but if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by the rules prescribed by the government, and not by contract, which an individual is appointed by the government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertaining to his station without any contract defining them, if those duties continue though the person be changed, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer." Vincenheiler v. Reagan, 64 S. W. 278, 284, 69 Ark. 460; Ptacek v. People, 94 Ill. App. 571, 577, 578.

There are various tests by which to determine who are officers in the meaning of the law, but at last, in a case of uncertainty, the intention of the lawmakers controls. To constitute an officer it does not seem to be material whether his term be for a period fixed by law or to endure at the will of the creating power; but, if an individual be invested with some portion of the functions of the government to be exercised for the benefit of the public, he is an officer. Per Lewis, C. J., in City of Louisville v. Wilson, 36 S. W. 944, 99 Ky. 598 (cited with approval in Pratt v. Breckinridge, 65 S. W. 136, 137, 112 Ky. 1, and Lowry v. City of Lexington, 68 S. W. 1109, 1112, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 616).

A public office is defined to be the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public. State ex rel. Walker v. Bees, 36 S. W. 636, 637, 135 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 616 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. 1); Hendricks v. State, 49 S. W. 705, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 178; Kimbrough v. Barnett, 93 Tex. 301, 310, 55 S. W. 120, 122; Attorney General v. McCaughey, 43 Atl. 646,

Many efforts have been made to define a "public office," but it is easier to conceive the general requirements of such an office than to express them with precision in a definition that shall be entirely faultless. It will be found, however, by consulting the cases and authorities, that the most general distinction of a public office is that it embraces the performance by the incumbent of a public function delegated to him as part of the sovereignty of the state. The fact that a public employment is held at the will or pleasure of another as a deputy or servant, who holds at the will of his principal, is held in the state of Maine to distinguish a mere employment from a public office, for in such case no part of the state sovereignty is delegated to such employée. State v. Jennings, 49 N. E. 404, 405, 57 Ohio St. 415, 68 Am. St. Rep. 728.

The words "public office" are used in so many senses that it is impossible to give a precise definition covering all cases. It depends, not on what we call it, or even on what a statute may incidentally call it, but upon the powers wielded, the functions performed, and other circumstances manifesting the character of the position. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 4, says: "The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from an employment or contract is that the creation of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public. . . . Unless the powers conferred are of this nature, the individual is not a public officer." The test is that he should exercise something that can fitly be called a part of the sovereignty of the state. Hartigan v. Board of Regents of West Virginia University, 38 S. E. 608, 701, 49 W. Va. 14.

An office is a public station or position, to which a portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, judicial, or executive, attaches for the time being, and which is exercised for the benefit of the public. High, Rec. § 625. The word itself implies a more or less permanent delegation of a portion of governmental power, coupled with legally defined duties and privileges, continuous in their nature, and which, upon the death, resignation, or removal of the incumbent, devolve upon his successor. Commonwealth v. Murphey (Pa.) 17 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 174, 176 (citing Tied. Mun. Corp. [Ed. 1894]).

An office is the right and duty conferred on an individual to perform any part of the functions of government, and receive such compensation, if any, as the law may affix to the service. McArdle v. Jersey City, 49

Atl. 1013, 1016, 66 N. J. Law, 590, 88 Am. St. Rep. 496.

The term "office" implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power, and a possession of it by the person filling the office. State v. Hocker, 22 South. 721, 722, 89 Fla. 477, 63 Am. St. Rep. 174.

An office is where, for the time being, a portion of the sovereignty, legislative, executive, or judicial, attaches, to be exercised for the public benefit. United States v. Lockwood (Wis.) 1 Pin. 359, 363.

A public office is one whose duties are in their nature public; that is, involving in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, whether great or small, and in whose proper performance all citizens, irrespective of party, are interested, either as members of the entire body politic, or of some duly established division thereof. Attorney General v. Drohan, 48 N. E. 279, 281, 166 Mass. 534, 61 Am. St. Rep. 301.

In 2 Spell. Extr. Rem. § 1780, it is said: "There are three principal tests for determining whether one performing duties of a public nature is a public officer, in the sense of subjecting his incumbency or employment to a quo warranto proceeding: First, whether the sovereignty, either directly, as through legislative enactment or executive appointment, or indirectly, as through a municipal charter, is the source of authority; second, whether the duties pertaining to the position are of a public character—that is, due to the community in its political capacity; third, whether the tenure is fixed and permanent, for a definite period, by law, unless for neglect of duty or malfeasance, or subject to termination at the will of others without assignment of cause." "We apprehend that the term 'office' implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power, and the possession of it by the person filling the office, and the exercise of such power, within the legal limits, constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such officer. And power thus delegated and possessed may be a portion belonging sometimes to one of the three great departments, and sometimes to another. Still, it is a legal power, which may be rightfully exercised, and in its effects will bind the rights of others, and be subject to revision and correction only according to the laws of the state. An employment, merely, has none of these distinguishing features. A public agent acts only on behalf of his principal, the public, whose sanction is generally considered necessary to give the act performed the authority and power of a public act or law, and if the act be such as not to require such subsequent sanction, still it is only a species of service performed under public authority, but not in execution of any standing laws. . . . It appears, then, that every 'office,' in the constitutional meaning of the term, implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power, either in making, administering, or executing the laws. Montgomery v. State, 18 South. 157, 159, 107 Ala. 372.

Every office implies an authority to execute a portion of the sovereign power of the state, either in making or executing or administering the laws. Wardlaw v. City of New York, 19 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 174.

Public office is a right to exercise generally, and in all proper cases, the function of a public trust or employment, and to receive the fees and emoluments, and to hold the office and perform the duties for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law. In re Rupp, 59 N. Y. Supp. 997, 999, 23 Misc. Rep. 703.

An office is defined by good authority as involving the delegation to the individual of some of the several functions of government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public, by which it is distinguished from employment or contract. State v. Thompson, 29 S. E. 720, 721, 122 N. C. 498 (citing Mech. Pub. Off. §§ 1, 4).

Limitations on powers as affecting.

Officers are public or private, and it is said that every man is a public officer who hath any duty concerning the public; and he is not the less a public officer because his authority is confined to narrow limits, since it is the duty, and the nature of that duty, which make him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority. Commonwealth v. Binns (Pa.) 17 Serg. & R. 219, 220, 232. See, also, Polk v. James, 68 Ga. 123; Bradford v. Justices of Inferior Court, 33 Ga. 332, 333.

Persons who, under an act of the General Assembly of October 17, 1870, had been appointed commissioners to purchase a tract of land at the place selected for a county site, to lay off the same into town lots, sell them, and to apply the proceeds to the building of a courthouse and jail for the county, were officers, under the law. Polk v. James, 68 Ga. 123.

Oath required.

The frame of the government of the state of North Carolina after its secession from the Union still existed, but there were no officers, as the officers had renounced their allegiance to the government of the United States, and had taken an oath to support the government of the Confederate States. The government of the United States could not recognize, as rightly officers of the state, men who were not bound by the oath required by the federal Constitution, but who, on the other hand, were bound by the oath to support another government. After the surrender of the state to the federal government, the latter government had the right to call the convention for the establishment of a new state government, though certain persons were declared to be ineligible as delegates. Therefore, one elected to the office of governor of North Carolina pursuant to the Constitution adopted by that convention properly held the office. In re Hughes, 61 N. C. 57, 61, 68.

As occupation.

See "Occupation (Vocation)."

As property.

The purpose of creating public offices is the common good. Hence most of the rules regulating them have a reference to the discharge of the duties and the promotion of the public convenience. Hence they are not the subjects of property in the sense of that full and absolute dominion which is recognized in many other things. They are only the subjects of property as far as they can be so in safety to the general interest involved in the discharge of their duties. This principle demands that different rights of property should be recognized in different offices. It is one of the ordinary rights of property to alien and dispose of it at pleasure; but that is inadmissible in public offices, because the public require a responsible person to answer for defaults. Besides, the power of alienation is not the test of property. Property in reference to a thing means whatever a person can possess and enjoy by right; and in reference to the person, he who has that right to the exclusion of others is said to have the property. That an office is the subject of property thus explained is well understood by every one, as well as distinctly stated in the lawbooks from the earliest times. Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 17, 25 Am. Dec. 677.

"Offices" are classed by Blackstone among incorporeal hereditaments. An office may further be said to be a vested right. The officer has an estate in it as a property, of which he cannot be divested, except in the three ways pointed out by Lord Coke, viz.: First, by abuse; second, nonuser; third, refusal. Under our system of government it may be regarded as a contract between the state on one hand, and the individual on the other, whereby he assumes the performance of certain duties for a certain compensation. For these purposes he becomes seised of the office as of any other property in the right and enjoyment of which he cannot be disturbed or defeated, except by operation of law. People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, 203.

A public office is a mere public agency, revocable according to the will and appointment of the people as exercised in the Constitution and the laws enacted in conformity therewith, and is not property within the meaning of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. State v. Crumbaugh, 68 S. W. 925, 927, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 521. See, also, Cameron v. Parker, 38 Pac. 14, 19, 2 Okl. 277; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94, 103; Attorney General v. Jochim, 58 N. W. 611, 613, 99 Mich. 353, 23 L. R. A. 699, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606; Moore v. Strickling, 33 S. E. 274, 276, 46 W. Va. 515, 50 L. R. A. 279; State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 261, 267; Hawkins v. Roberts, 27 South. 327, 332, 122 Ala. 130.

In New York public offices are not incorporeal hereditaments, nor have they the character or qualities of grants. Conner v. City of New York, 5 N. Y. (1 Seld.) 285, 296.

An office is not property, nor are the prospective fees thereof the property of the incumbent. The incumbent cannot sell his office, or purchase it or incumber it. The Legislature, in the absence of constitutional prohibitions, may diminish or abolish the fees of the office at pleasure, or may render it a salaried office. Smith v. City of New York, 37 N. Y. 518, 520.

"A public office is a trust held for the benefit of the public. The incumbent, if he performs the duties, may be entitled to the emoluments, but he cannot have any property in the office itself. And hence, there being no property right involved in an inquiry as to one's right to an office, a jury cannot be had to try the title." Mason v. State, 50 N. E. 6, 10, 58 Ohio St. 30, 41 L. R. A. 291.

A public office is a mere right to exercise a public function or employment; a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power of the government to the person filling the office. The duties are to be performed for the benefit of the public and in the public interest. It is not property, nor are the prospective fees of an office the property of its incumbent. Therefore, section 12 of the civil service act (Act March 20, 1895), which provides for the trial by the civil service commission of charges against officers appointed under the act, and for their removal by the commission in case the charges are substantiated, does not violate the constitutional right of trial by jury, since a public office is not property. People v. Kipley, 49 N. E. 229, 238, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L. R. A. 776.

A public office is a public trust, and the incumbent has to some extent a property right in it, which he holds, not subject to barter and sale, but for the benefit of the political society of which he is a member. State v. Wadhams, 64 Minn. 318, 324, 67 N. W. 64.

While it is true that an officer de jure has a property right in the emoluments of his office, and may recover the same in an action at law from an officer de facto who has collected them while in his possession (citing Kreits v. Behrensmeyer, 149 Ill. 496, 36 N. E. 983), a public office is not property, but a mere public agency created for the benefit of the state. People v. Barrett, 67 N. E. 742, 745, 203 Ill. 99, 96 Am. St. Rep. 296.

An office is not regarded as property or as a vested right, and the Legislature may, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, make a provision for the abolition thereof. State v. Common Council, 90 Wis. 612, 618, 64 N. W. 304.

Place or position.

The intrinsic meaning of the word "office" is expressed by the old English word "place." People v. Nichols, 52 N. Y. 478, 484, 11 Am. Rep. 734.

Pamph. Laws 1882-83, p. 186, relating to the depositories of money, uses the words, "the Governor shall declare said office vacant," and in the same section the words used are, "and the Governor may declare the position vacant." As thus used, the words "position" and "office" are synonymous. The word "office" is used in the sense of place, position, and agency, and not in the sense that it is a public office. Colquitt v. Simpson, 72 Ga. 501, 510.

As public officer.

The word "office," as used in article 647 of the Code of Practice, which provides that "if a debtor has neither movables, nor slaves, nor immovable property the sheriff may seize the rights and credits which belong to him, and all sums of money which may be due to him, in whatsoever right, unless it be for alimony or salaries of office," means a public office. The commissioners appointed under the statute of March 14, 1842, providing for the liquidation of banks, are not public officers. Conrey v. Copland, 4 La. Ann. 307, 308.

Relates to functions to be performed, not place.

The word "office," as used in 14 Stat. 569, authorizing the payment of employés in the office of the coast survey, etc., "refers to the functions to be performed, and not to the place where they are performed." Stone v. United States (U. S.) 3 Ct. Cl. 260, 262.

Tenure required.

"Office" is defined as a public station or employment conferred by the government, and embraces the idea of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties. A professor of the University of West Virginia is not an officer. He has not what is called "tenure in office"; that is, a fixed term. That he is paid a compensation does not make him an officer; a mere employé is paid.

That an official oath is required by law is a sign of office, and the Code prescribing it as to "officers" does not require a university professor to take it. Hartigan v. Board of Regents West Virginia University, 38 S. E. 693, 704, 49 W. Va. 14.

An officer is one empowered to act in discharge of a duty or trust, under obligations imposed by the sanctions and restraints of legal authority in official life, and does not include one who receives no certificate of appointment, or has no term or tenure of office, but performs such duties as are required of him by the persons employing him, and whose responsibility is limited to them. Wardlaw v. City of New York, 19 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 174.

A municipal officer subject to removal at the pleasure of the council is not an "officer" within Const. art. 14, § 8, prohibiting an increase in the salary of any officer during his term of office. State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson (Mo.) 25 S. W. 855, 856.

One who enjoys a definite term of office is an officer. State ex rel. Bartraw v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 596, 597, 95 Mo. App. 690.

As term of office.

The words "incident to said office," as used in the official bond of a sheriff, reciting the fact that the sheriff has been elected for the term of three years, and that he has undertaken the obligations and duties "incident to said office," mean incident to said term of three years. Baker v. Baldwin, 48 Conn. 131, 137.

Yearly salary.

The meaning of the word "office" necessarily varies with its use in different statutes, and, to determine its meaning correctly in a particular instance, regard must be had to the intention of the act, and the subject-matter in respect to which the terms are used. The word "office," as used in Laws 1863, c. 854, § 4, prohibiting the board of supervisors for the county of New York from creating new offices, is to be construed in its ordinary and familiar signification as in general and popular use, for the intention of the act was to prohibit the board of supervisors from creating any new position with a regular yearly salary attached to it. Ryan v. City of New York (N. Y.) 50 How. Prac. 91, 93.

OFFICE COPY.

An "office copy" of a record or instrument is a copy made by an authorized officer. Stamper v. Gay, 23 Pac. 69, 70, 3 Wyo. 322.

The term "office copies" was used at common law to designate copies of judicial records made by the officer in custody of the records. West Jersey Traction Co. v. Board of Public Works, 80 Atl. 581, 582, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 813.

OFFICE FOR WEIGHING OF MERCHANDISE.

Const. art. 5, § 8, provides: "All offices for the weighing, measuring, culling or inspecting of any merchandise, produce, manufacture or commodity whatever, are hereby abolished; and no such offices shall hereafter be created by law; but nothing in this section contained shall abrogate any office created for the purpose of protecting the public health, or the interests of the state in its property, revenue, tolls or purchases, or of supplying the people with correct standards of weights and measures, or shall prevent the creation of any office for such purpose hereafter." Act 1837, c. 406, reorganizes the wardens' office of the port of New York, the duties of the wardens involving the examination of vessels and cargoes. "The constitutional restraint on legislative power was without doubt suggested by, and was primarily aimed at, a system of laws which had grown up in this state, and which required a very large class of the productions of the soil and of manufacture and mechanical industry to undergo an inspection, or the determination, by weighing, measuring, or gauging, of the quantity contained in the parcels in which they are usually sold by public officers, preliminary to their being sold for the purpose of exportation, and, in regard to some articles, as a condition to being sold and trafficked in the state. Almost every species of property which was extensively dealt in had been subjected to these regulations. The officers created for the execution of this system were numerous, and their exactions were considerable in amount, and were complained of as vexatious in practice." Held, that the prohibition of the Constitution was against public officers for testing the quantity and quality of articles with a view to the security of trafficking in them, and the act was not in conflict with such provision. Tinkham v. Tapeccott, 17 N. Y. 141, 147.

OFFICE FOUND.

"By the common law an alien cannot acquire real property by operation of law, but may take it by act of the grantor to hold it until 'office found'; that is, until the fact of alienage is authoritatively established by a public officer upon an inquest held at the instance of the government. The proceeding which contains the finding of the fact upon the inquest of the officer is technically designated in the books of law as 'office found.' It proved the fact upon the existence of which the law devests the estate, and transfers it to the government, from the region of uncertainty, and makes it a matter of record. It was devised, according to the old law-writers, as an authentic means to give the King his right by solemn matter of record, without which he, in general, could neither take nor part with anything; for it was deemed a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the King may not enter upon or seize any man's possessions upon bare surmises without the intervention of a jury." Strickley v. Hill, 62 Pac. 893, 895, 22 Utah, 257, 83 Am. St. Rep. 786 (quoting Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 212, 25 L. Ed. 608).

"Inquest of office" or "office found" was a summary inquest by the King's escheater, either by virtue of his office or by special royal writ, to ascertain whether in the particular case the sovereign has a right to the possession of lands in the hands of an alien. It was done under the King's officer by a jury of no determined number, either 12 or more or less. Baker v. Shy, 56 Tenn. (9 Heisk.) 85, 89.

By the civil law some proceeding equivalent in its substantial features to an "office found" was essential to take the fact of alienage from being a matter of mere surmise and conjecture and make it a matter of record. Such a proceeding was usually had before a local magistrate or council, and might be taken at the instance of the government, or on the denouncement of a private citizen. The sale of land in Texas, made before her separation from Mexico, by a citizen to a nonresident alien, passed title to the latter, who thereby acquired a defeasible estate in the land, which he could hold until deprived thereof by the supreme authority on the official ascertainment of the fact of his nonresidence and alienage by the government, or on the denouncement of a private citizen. Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 212, 25 L. Ed. 608.

OFFICE OF CORPORATION.

See "Corporate Office."

OFFICE OF HONOR.

Const. art. 3, § 29, providing that no person holding any "office of honor" or profit under the government of the United States shall hold "any office of honor" or profit under the authority of the state, should be construed to include the office of director of a state institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, appointed by the Governor with the advice of the Senate, though there are no fees, perquisites, profit, or salary. It is merely an honorable trust that is confided to the director of the institution. It is an office, and not merely an employment. It is an "office of honor," and, if not of great distinction, it is one of a high, benevolent, and important trust. Dickson v. People, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 191, 193.

OFFICE OF PROFIT.

The term "office of profit" is frequently used to designate offices otherwise known as "lucrative offices." It describes an office to which salary, compensation, or fees are attached, and the amount of the salary or compensation is not material. Baker v. Board of Crook County Com'rs, 59 Pac. 797, 9 Wyo. 51.

An "office of profit" is property, as much so as any other article that can be possessed. It is a franchise, and, when the lawful owner of it is kept out of possession by an intruder, he has as much right through the courts to have himself placed in possession as to recover any other property unlawfully withheld from him. State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 261, 267.

Rev. St. § 6969, which makes it a crime for "an officer elected to an office of trust or profit in this state" to become interested in any contract for the purchase of any property or fire insurance for the use of the state, county, city, etc., applies to a person duly elected to and holding the office of member of the board of public works of the city of Cincinnati. There is no rule of construction which authorizes the court to say that the language, "any contract for the purchase of property for the use of the state, county, city," etc., means simply contracts for the purchase of property for the penal and benevolent institutions of the state, or that an officer elected to an office of trust or profit, etc., includes none but trustees, physicians, matrons, and stewards of such institutions. Doll v. State, 15 N. E. 293, 295, 45 Ohio St. 445.

As used in Rev. St. 1833, p. 208, prescribing, as a part of the punishment on the conviction of larceny, that the person convicted be disfranchised and rendered incapable of holding any office of trust or profit, the term "profit" was also included in the term "trust," as all offices of profit are necessarily offices of trust, and a verdict disfranchising a defendant from holding any office of trust was a substantial compliance with the statute. Doty v. State (Ind.) 6 Blackf. 529, 530.

The office of postmaster is an "office of profit or trust under the authority of Congress," so as to prevent a postmaster from holding an executive or judicial office while continuing to exercise the office of postmaster. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 423, 436, 39 Am. Dec. 231.

OFFICE PAPER.

A written agreement between the parties to a pending case, bearing upon and affecting the disposition to be made of the same, and duly filed with the other papers in the case, is an "office paper," of which a copy may be established instantan on a motion made by one of the parties and supported by a proper showing. In such case a formal rule nisi with service on the opposite party is not essential, especially when that party is present and offers no valid objection to the establishment of the lost paper. Watson v. Hemphill, 25 S. E. 262, 99 Ga. 121.

OFFICE WITHIN GIFT OF PEOPLE.

The expression "office within the gift of the people," as used in Const. art. 3, § 2, declaring that all persons entitled to vote shall be eligible to any office within the gift of the people, means all offices, as well those filled by the Legislature as those filled by popular vote. Black v. Trower, 79 Va. 123, 126.

An "officer" is defined to be one who is lawfully invested with an office. Brandt v. Godwin, 3 N. Y. Supp. 807, 809; Olmstead v. City of New York, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Jones & S.) 481, 487; State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. 82, 60; Mitchell v. Nelson, 49 Ala. 88, 89; Braithwaite v. Cameron, 38 Pac. 1084, 1087, 3 Okl. 630; Commonwealth v. Christian (Pa.) 9 Phila. 556, 558.

Chief Justice Marshall says: "He who performs the duties of that office is an officer." Hamlin v. Kassafer, 15 Pac. 778, 779, 15 Or. 456, 3 Am. St. Rep. 176.

An officer is one who holds an office. State v. Griswold, 46 Atl. 829, 830, 73 Conn. 95.

The individual who is invested with the authority and is required to perform the duties incident to an office is a public officer. State ex rel. Walker v. Bus, 36 S. W. 636, 637, 135 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 616; Attorney General v. McCaughey, 43 Atl. 648, 649, 21 R. I. 841.

An officer is a part of the personal force by which the state acts, thinks, determines, administers, and makes its constitution and laws operative and effective. He is an arm of the state, and always on its side. People v. Coler, 59 N. E. 716, 723, 168 N. Y. 1, 52 L. R. A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 606.

A public officer is every one who is appointed to discharge a public duty and receives a compensation for the same. Conner v. City of New York, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 855, 867 (citing Henly v. Mayor of Lyme, 5 Bing. 91).

A public officer is one who hath any duty to perform concerning the public. Piereson v. McCormick, 2 Pa. Law J. 201, 202.

A public officer is one on whom the public have a right to call for the discharge or performance of certain duties. In re A. B., 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 136, 138.

A public officer is an agent elected or appointed to perform certain political duties in the administration of the government. State v. Trousdale, 16 Nev. 387, 390.

A public officer is one who holds a public office, which is an agency of the state, and whose duty it is to perform the agency. McCormick v. Thatcher, 8 Utah, 294, 301, 80 Pac. 1091, 17 L. R. A. 243; 4 Jac. Dict. 433.

Best, C. J., in Henly v. Mayor of Lyme, 5 Bing. 91, said: "In my opinion, every one who is appointed to discharge a public duty, and receives compensation, in whatever shape, whether from the Crown or otherwise, is a public officer." People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 7 How. Prac. 243-250; Dempsey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 40 N. E. 867, 868, 146 N. Y. 290; Folts v. Kerlin, 4 N. E. 439, 440, 105 Ind. 221, 55 Am. Rep. 197.

The thought running through every definition of an "officer" is that he shall perform some service or owe some duty to the government, state, or municipal corporation, and not merely to those who appoint or elect him. His tenure must be defined, fixed, and certain, and not arising out of mere contract of employment. Commonwealth v. Murphey, 17 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 174, 176.

One of the earliest definitions of the word "officium" is that function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another, as of the King or another person. Again, it is said that the word "officium" principally implies a duty, and in the next place the charge of such duty, and that it is a rule that, where a man hath to do with another's affairs against his will and without his leave, this is an office, and he who is in it an officer. United States v. Trice (U. S.) 30 Fed. 490, 494 (quoting Cowell).

"Public officers are the agents of the community which they represent, but a public officer is not the agent of each individual member of the community, and no citizen can be presumed to assent to an illegal or unauthorized act of a public officer; and hence, where a city charter authorized the city to make certificates, issued to persons making sewer improvements under contract with the city, bearing a different rate of interest from that prescribed by the Constitution, the interest would not be declared legal on the theory that the city was the agent of the property owner on whom the assessment was made, and that the certificate was a contract by him through such agent." Bayha v. Carter, 26 S. W. 137, 138, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

A public officer is the person whose duty it is to perform the agency for the state of a public office. The essence of it is the duty of performing an agency; that is, of doing some act or acts or series of acts for the state. State v. Stanley, 68 N. C. 59, 8 Am. Rep. 488. Similar definitions might be almost indefinitely multiplied. But, after all, it is rather a narrow view to lay down a general definition of the term "public officer," and then to measure by it the meaning of that same term, no matter under what conditions it may be used. The nature of the duties, the particular method in which they are to be performed, the end to be attained, the depository of the power conferred, and the whole surroundings, must be all considered when the question as to whether a position is a public office or not is to be solved. Board of Worcester County School Com'rs v. Goldsborough, 44 Atl. 1055, 1057, 90 Md. 198.

Under an act authorizing the acknowledgment of deeds before any mayor, chief magistrate, or officer of the cities, towns, or places where the deed was made, it is held that the word "mayor" refers to cities, "chief magistrate" to towns, and "officers" to places. McIntire's Lessee v. Ward (Pa.) 3 Yeates, 424, 426.

The term "officer," as used in Const. art. 18, § 1, applies and refers to such offices as have some degree of permanency, and are not created by a temporary nomination for a single and transient purpose. Shurbun v. Hooper, 40 Mich. 503, 505 (citing Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 Mich. 361, 366, 93 Am. Dec. 194).

"A public office is the right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law, or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the government, to be exercised by and for the benefit of the public. The individual so invested is a public officer." Attorney General v. McCaughey, 43 Atl. 646, 647, 21 R. I. 341.

All officers.

Pen. Code, § 55, makes any agent, officer, or collector guilty of larceny if he fraudulently converts to his own use money intrusted to him to apply to a municipal office. The statute itself does not undertake to define or restrict the word "officer," and we do not know by what authority or by what rule of construction the court would be warranted in announcing that the word "officer," as employed in the statute, refers to one character of officer more than another. State v. Isensee, 40 Pac. 985, 12 Wash. 254.

"Public officers," as used in Rev. St. 1889, § 8589, providing that the fiscal year of the state shall commence on January 1st and terminate on the 31st day of December of each year and the books, accounts, and reports of the public officers shall be made to conform thereto, includes county as well as state officers. State ex rel. Exchange Bank v. Allison, 56 S. W. 467, 468, 155 Mo. 325.

Under Act 1890, No. 78, § 1, providing that "any person who shall directly or indirectly offer or give any sum of money, bribe, present or reward . . . to any officer, state, parochial or municipal, . . . or to any member or officer of the General Assembly, . . . with intent to induce such officer or member of the General Assembly . . . to perform any duty of him required with partiality or favor . . . , and the officer or member of the General Assembly so receiving . . . any money, bribe, etc., . . . with the intent or for the purpose or consideration aforesaid, shall be guilty of bribery," the words "officer or member of the General Assembly" must be taken to refer to all persons enumerated in the foregoing portion of the act; that is to say, a state, parish, or municipal officer, or member of the General Assembly. State v. Callahan, 17 South. 50, 59, 47 La. Ann. 444.

The word "officer," as used in Const. art. 7, declaring that "every male person of the age of 21 years or upwards, belonging to either of the following classes, who shall have resided in the United States one year and in this state four months next preceding any election, shall be entitled to vote at such election, in the election district in which he shall at the time have been for ten days a resident, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people," etc., means the executive or administrative agents of the state or governmental subdivisions thereof. State v. Johnson, 91 N. W. 840, 841, 87 Minn. 221, 94 Am. St. Rep. 718.

Under a constitutional provision that the General Assembly, in cases not provided for in the Constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers, it is held that the term "officers" cannot be regarded as comprehending more than such offices as may be created to aid in the permanent administration of the government, and does not include all agencies which the General Assembly may authorize municipal and other corporations to employ for local and temporary purposes. Walker v. City of Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 50, 8 Am. Rep. 24.

The Constitution adopted in 1846, art. 10, § 2, declared: "All county officers, whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the board of supervisors or other county authorities, as the Legislature shall direct. All city, town and village officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, shall be elected by the electors of such cities, towns, or villages, or of some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the Legislature shall designate for that purpose. All other officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this Constitution, and all officers whose offices shall hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may direct." Held, that the officers and offices designated in the first two sentences of the section were those instituted and existing under actual laws of the state at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and those embraced in the last clause, all officers of every description, both local and general, whose offices were to be thereafter created by law. People v. Pinckney, 82 N. Y. 377, 381.

The reference to any "officer" shall include any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such office. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8; Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. 1897, § 4787.

"Officer," as used in the bankruptcy act, shall include clerk, marshal, receiver, referee, and trustee, and the imposing of a duty upon or the forbidding of any act, shall include his successor, and any person authorized by law to perform the duties of such officer. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3419.

Army or militia officer.

The position of colonel in the Fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers of the United States army is an "office" within the meaning of the statute creating the board of street and water commissioners, which provides that, if such commissioner shall accept any other appointment to "public office," his office of commissioner shall thereupon become vacant. Oliver v. City of Jersey City, 42 Atl. 782, 784, 68 N. J. Law, 96.

Although, by Rev. St. U. S. § 1094, an officer on the retired list is declared to be a part of the army, and though he may, by other provisions, be appointed to certain duties, under certain circumstances, in connection with the Soldiers' Home, he does not "hold office" within the meaning of Laws 1898, c. 584, § 1, providing that the person appointed to the office of aqueduct commissioner shall hold no other federal, state, or municipal office. His mere eligibility to the appointment as an officer of the Soldiers' Home is not equivalent to holding another office. From other sections of the Revised Statutes it appears that such retired officer is deprived of all the functions of the office previously held by him, and divested of all its authority, and wholly discharged from the performance of all its duties. People v. Duane, 55 Hun, 315, 318, 8 N. Y. Supp. 439, 440.

Assignee, receiver, or trustee.

Gen. St. 1872, c. 167, authorized the court to appoint a new trustee in case of the "vacancy in office thereof." It was held that, inasmuch as at the time the statute was enacted it had become common to speak of some trusts as "offices," where a trustee under a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors died, the court had power to appoint a new trustee. Ex parte Ballou, 11 R. I. 359, 360, 363.

An assignee under the insolvency law of Minnesota is recognized as an officer of the state district court, and, as long as he is in possession of the property, the marshal of the federal court cannot interfere with such possession, even to enforce a maritime claim. McCaffrey v. The J. G. Chapman (U. S.) 62 Fed. 939, 940.

"Officer," as used in Rev. St. § 5504 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3710], providing that every clerk or other officer of a United States court who fails to deposit money belonging in the registry of the court, etc., with the treasurer, assistant treasurer, or a designated depository of the United States in the name and to the credit of the court, or who retains or converts to his own use, etc., any such money, is guilty of embezzlement, etc., does not include an assignee in bankruptcy. While such a person is an officer of the court, the funds of the estate which come into his hands are not required to be deposited in any of the places designated in this section in the name of the court and to its credit. Hence, he is not an "officer" within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Bixby (U. S.) 6 Fed. 375, 376.

Officers appointed under an act of the Legislature to close up the affairs of the insolvent State Bank of Illinois were not "officers," but merely trustees. People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 65, 68.

The commissioners appointed under the statute of March 14, 1842, providing for the liquidation of banks, are not public officers. Conrey v. Copland, 4 La. Ann. 307, 308.

A receiver is not a common-law officer, and his functions have no relation to the title to the exercise of a franchise, which is the sole question raised upon quo warranto. Commonwealth v. Order of Vesta, 27 Atl. 14, 15, 156 Pa. 531.

"Officer," as used in Code Iowa, § 8915, providing for the punishment of any person who knowingly annuls, and without authority of law takes, carries away, secretes, or destroys, any property or chattels while the same are in the lawful custody of any sheriff, coroner, marshal, constable, or other "officer," or rightfully held by such officer by virtue of any execution, writ of attachment, or other legal process issued under the law of Iowa, cannot be construed to include a receiver. State v. Rivera, 13 N. W. 73, 74, 60 Iowa, 381.

In Lord Coke's time and prior thereto an attorney was considered a public officer. Afterwards Lord Holt (1 Salk. 87) held that he was not compelled to appear for any one unless he takes his fee or backs his warranty. In Seymour v. Ellison (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 13, and Merritt v. Lambert (N. Y.) 10 Paige, 352, practitioners of the law are said to be public officers, but in other cases they are held not to be such, and as remarked by Platt, J., in Re Attorneys' Oaths (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 492: "As attorneys and counselors, they perform no public duties on behalf of the government; they execute no public trust. I am of the opinion that the law is with the negative of that question, nor do I think that Congress in the act of Congress of January 24, 1865, involving the subject of the oath to be taken by attorneys and counselors in the federal courts, considered them public officers." In Const. art. 1, § 6, cl. 2, it is declared that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office, and it has never been questioned that practicing as an attorney or counselor in the federal courts is inconsistent with holding at the same time the office of senator or representative in Congress. Ex parte Law (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 3, 4, 35 Ga. 285.

An attorney at law is a public officer. In re Leigh (Va.) 1 Munf. 468, 479; Merritt v. Lambert (N. Y.) 10 Paige, 352, 356; Waters v. Whittemore (N. Y.) 22 Barb. 598, 595; but the practice of law is not an office or place, under the statute to suppress dueling. In re Leigh (Va.) 1 Munf. 468, 479.

An attorney at law is not an officer. In re Bland & Giles County Judge (Va.) 83 Grat. 443.

An officer is a person who performs any public duty, and an attorney at law is not an officer, and does not hold a public trust. Maxey v. Wright, 54 S. W. 807, 811, 3 Ind. T. 243.

A lawyer is a "public officer" in the sense of that clause of the Constitution requiring that all executive and judicial officers of the United States and of the several states shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support that Constitution. So far as the legal profession is an occupation open to all, there is no reason to consider a lawyer as a public officer. The exercise of his profession is in part an occupation in which every person is free to engage, but it is not so in respect to proceedings in the courts of justice, as the admission of an attorney is a general appointment to conduct cases before the courts, a station having its peculiar powers, privileges, and duties, and it thus becomes an office in the administration of justice. In re Wood (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 29, 30, note.

Attorneys are in a certain sense "public officers," but are not within the statute (1 Rev. St. 122, § 86) providing, among other things, that every "office" shall become vacant by the incumbent ceasing to be an inhabitant of a state. Richardson v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 22 How. Prac. 868, 869.

The term "public office," within the common-law rule which excludes women from government by withholding electoral and official power, does not include vocation of a member of the bar as an attorney and officer of the court. In re Ricker, 29 Atl. 559, 66 N. H. 207, 24 L. R. A. 740.

An attorney is an officer of the court, and is not a public officer of the state in such a sense as to be entitled to have his right to the office determined by a legal action. In re Burchard (N. Y.) 27 Hun, 429.

The word "officers," as used in Act 1868, c. 2, § 5, requiring the courts to administer the abjuration of the Ku-Klux to "all off-cers," does not apply to attorneys. Ingersoll v. Howard, 48 Tenn. (1 Helsk.) 247, 251.

Const. § 80, art. 16, provides that all terms of office not otherwise fixed by the Constitution are limited to two years. Held that, since the office of an attorney is one for life, he cannot be regarded as a constitutional officer. Neither can he be regarded as a public officer, for his duty appertains only to the court in which he is authorized to practice. Ex parte Williams, 20 S. W. 590, 581, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 262, 21 L. R. A. 783 (citing Ex parte Garland, 71 U. S. [4 Wall.] 333, 18 L. Ed. 866; Ex parte Law, 35 Ga. 285, 15 Fed. Cas. 3; Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 241, 85 Am. Dec. 62).

Const. art. 11, § 3, prescribes the form of oath to be taken by officers and persons executing public trusts, which is that such officer or person will discharge the duties of the office of — according to the best of his ability. Held, that the words "office" and "public trust" in such section were used in the same sense and applied only to persons whose duties and responsibilities were of a public nature. An attorney at law, is not an "officer" in the constitutional sense of the word, and he does not hold a public trust. Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 242, 244, 85 Am. Dec. 62.

"Officer," as used in Act 1827, authorizing the recovery of specific bank paper which has appreciated in value while in the possession of the officer collecting the same, includes attorneys at law. Bank of Commonwealth v. Patton's Ex'r, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 190, 192.

An attorney at law is not, indeed, in the strict sense, a public "officer," but he comes very near it. As was said by Lord Holt, the office of an attorney concerns the public, for it is for the administration of justice. In re White, 6 Mod. 18. By our statutes he is required, upon his admission, to take and subscribe in open court the oaths to support the Constitutions of the United States and of this commonwealth, as well as the oath of office. This oath, the form of which has remained without substantial change since the time of Lord Holt, nearly 180 years, pledges him to conduct himself in the office of an attorney within the courts according to the best of his knowledge and discretion, and with all good fidelity, as well to the courts as to his clients, and he becomes by his admission an officer of the courts, and holds his office during good behavior, subject to removal by the court for malpractice. In re Robinson, 181 Mass. 376, 379, 41 Am. Rep. 289 (citing Gen. St. c. 121, §§ 80, 31).

"An attorney or counselor does not hold an 'office,' but exercises a privilege or franchise. As attorneys or counselors, they perform no duties on behalf of the government; they execute no public trust." In re Attorneys' Oaths (N. Y.) 20 Johns. 492, 493.

The term "office or public trust," in the clause of the Constitution providing that neither the chancellor nor justice of the Supreme Court, nor any circuit judge, shall hold any other office or public trust, includes an attorney or counselor. Seymour v. Ellison (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 13-29.

An attorney or counselor at law holds an "office or public trust," within the meaning of the terms as used in the Constitution. In re Wood (N. Y.) Hopk. Ch. 6, 8.

Attorneys at law belong properly to the class of judicial officers, and derive their office by appointment. Ex parte Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269, 297.

A public officer is one who has a duty concerning the public, and is none the less a public officer where his authority is confined to narrow limits. Attorneys at law are public officers. Ex parte Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269, 297 (citing 7 Bacon's Abr. 279, 280, tit. "Office and Officers").

Counselors and attorneys are not "public officers" within the meaning of the Constitution, prohibiting certain courts from appointing public officers to office. In re A. B., 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 136, 138.

The power of a court to appoint attorneys as a class of public officers was conferred originally, and has been from time to time regulated and controlled, in England by statute. In this state it seems that attorneys, prior to the Revolution, were appointed by the Governor of the colony. The Constitution of 1846 provided that judges "shall not exercise any power of appointment to public office. Any male citizen of 21 years of good moral character, etc., shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of this state." The object of this provision is plain. Attorneys, solicitors, etc., were public officers; the power of appointing them had previously rested with the judges, and this was the principal appointing power which they possessed. In re Cooper (N. Y.) 20 How. Prac. 1, 11, 13, 14.

While it is true that an attorney is in some sense an "officer" of the court, he is certainly not a public officer, so that while he may be required, as incident to the privilege of practicing, to discharge certain duties imposed upon him by statute, as, for instance, to defend a criminal, he is under no obligation to give his services to the public without compensation; and hence, under Code, § 825, providing that proceedings to remove an attorney may be commenced by direction of the court, who must direct some attorney to draw up the accusation, an attorney appointed to prosecute disbarment proceedings may recover from the county a reasonable compensation for his services, though there is no statutory provision for compensation. Hyatt v. Hamilton County, 98 N. W. 856, 856, 121 Iowa, 292, 63 L. R. A. 614.

In Re Wood (N. Y.) Hopk. Ch. 6, Chancellor Sandford held that a solicitor in chancery was an "officer" within the meaning of the new Constitution, and therefore could not be compelled to take any other oath than that prescribed therein. And in Seymour v. Ellison (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 13, Chief Justice Savage, in a concurring opinion, held that an attorney was an "officer" within the meaning of the phrase prohibiting chancellors and justices of the Supreme Court and circuit judges from holding any other office. The opinion of the court, as delivered by Justice Woodworth, however, was decided on other grounds. In Re Leigh (Va.) 1 Munf. 468, it was decided that an attorney was not an "officer" within a statute requiring every person appointed to any office to take an anti-dueling oath. In Re Dorsey (Ala.) 7 Port. 293, it was held that the provision of the statute empowering the General Assembly to disqualify from office for dueling did not extend to attorneys and counselors at law. And it was held in Re Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67, 84, 92, that the provision of the statute forbidding judges to exercise any power of appointment to public office did not prohibit the appointment of attorneys. Under these authorities an attorney at law is not an "officer" within the meaning of the Constitution, providing that a certain oath therein set forth shall be the only oath or test required as a qualification for any office or public trust, and could therefore be compelled by the Legislature, before being admitted to practice, to take another and more comprehensive oath. Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 298, 301, 315, 320.

If a statute excluded from "office" one convicted of a particular offense, and used no other term or designation, the profession of a lawyer would not be included within the meaning of the term as generally used, because he can no more be said to hold an "office" than one who follows the profession of a physician, the avocation of a teacher, or who discharges the function of an administrator. In Re Dorsey (Ala.) 7 Port. 293, 365.

An attorney at law is not a public officer; he is not appointed by the Legislature, nor is he amenable to it, nor does he possess any portion of the public authority, and can be construed in no other light than that of a private agent for the citizens of the country who might employ him to do their legal business in the court; and though the law requires of him certain qualifications, and he receives a license from the judges, yet his office is no more a public one than would be any other profession or trade which the Legislature might choose to subject to similar regulations. Byrne's Adm'r v. Stewart's Adm'r (S. C.) 3 Desaus. 463, 478.

Members of the bar are officers of the court, and in a sense officers of the state, for which the court acts. Officers charged with the general business of the state within the state must be residents of the state. Under ordinary circumstances, members of the bar of other states are permitted to argue causes in the Supreme Court without any general license to practice. In re Moenness, 39 Wis. 509, 510, 20 Am. Rep. 55.

The word "office," in the constitutional clause providing that "neither the chancellor nor justices of the Supreme Court, nor any circuit judge shall hold any office or public trust," does not apply to an attorney or counselor. Seymour v. Ellison (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 13, 28.

Candidate for office.

St. 1884, c. 299, § 43, prescribing a punishment for any person who shall alter a ballot cast for "any officer," includes the alteration of a ballot cast for one who was merely a candidate for office and was not elected, and cannot be limited to existing officers who might be candidates for re-election. Commonwealth v. McGurty, 14 N. H. 98, 101, 145 Mass. 257.

Commissioner of highways.

Commissioners appointed by the act of the Legislature to lay out and build a road for the use of the public are public officers. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 7 How. Prac. 248, 250.

Commissioners appointed by a board of aldermen to lay out a highway under Gen. Laws R. I. c. 71, § 2, providing that for the due marking out of any highway the town council shall appoint three suitable and disinterested men, are not public officers, but mere statutory servants and agents of the board appointing them. Attorney General v. McCaughey, 43 Atl. 646, 647, 21 R. I. 341.

"An office is a public employment conferred by appointment of government, and in the performance of its functions the citizen selected to represent the sovereign is in the exercise of both a private right, or privilege, and a public duty." United States v. Patrick (U. S.) 54 Fed. 338, 349.

The term "office" has reference to functions conferred by public authority and for a public purpose. Moll v. Shisa, 25 South. 141, 142, 51 La. Ann. 290.

The position of commissioner, under Laws 1869, c. 905, relating to the construction of a highway in the county of Queens, is an office, and hence vacated by the commissioner's acceptance of the office of sheriff, Const. art. 10, § 1, declaring that sheriffs shall hold no other office. People v. Nostrand, 46 N. Y. 375, 381.

Road commissioners, as established by Acts 1871, c. 158, Pub. St. c. 27, § 75, while engaged in making improvements and alterations on an existing way for the purpose of rendering it safe for travelers, are public officers, and not servants of the town, although the work was ordered by the county commissioners upon petition by the town. McManus v. Inhabitants of Weston, 41 N. E. 301, 302, 184 Mass. 233, 31 L. R. A. 174.

Corporation.

Sees. Laws 1895, p. 47, § 25, providing that all printing, binding, etc., which is paid out of the territorial treasury shall be done and furnished by the State Capitol Printing Company, of Guthrie, does not make the State Capitol Printing Company a public officer. Guthrie Daily Leader v. Cameron, 41 Pac. 635, 636, 8 Okl. 677.

County officer or employé.

The term "officer" held not to include commissioners of a county, in a statute against bribery, reading "any member of the General Assembly, or any officer of this commonwealth, judge, juror, justice, referee or arbitrator," who shall accept a bribe shall be punished (Pen. Code, § 48), the phrase being evidently intended to include none but state officers or officers of the commonwealth, as distinguished from merely local or county officers. Commonwealth v. Neely (Pa.) 3 Pittsb. R. 527, 530.

A member of the county board of education is a public officer under Const. art. 14, § 7, providing that no person holding an office or place of trust shall hold or exercise any other. Barnhill v. Thompson, 29 S. E. 720, 721, 122 N. C. 493.

Under an act regarding honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, and which declares that no person of that description who holds a position or office within the state shall be removed except for cause, it is held that a janitor of the county courthouse does not hold an office. State v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Salem County, 42 Atl. 844, 845, 63 N. J. Law, 57.

The right to exercise the duties, and take the compensation therefor, of county recorder, is an office; and equally so the right to the employment and pay of a county commissioner. Dailey v. State (Ind.) 8 Blackf. 329, 330.

A law authorizing the appointing of a practicing physician for a certain county, fixing the term for which he shall be appointed, providing for his salary, and prescribing his duties, creates an office. People v. Harrington, 63 Cal. 257, 260.

The term "public officer," in Rev. Code, § 183, which authorizes the discharge of sureties upon the official bond of any public officer required to be approved by the judge of the circuit court or judge of probate or chancery, does not include the public administrator of a county. "A public officer is a person who exercises the functions of a public office, while under our law an administrator is a trustee whose duty it is to be employed wholly about private affairs." Mitchell v. Nelson, 49 Ala. 38, 39.

The word "officer," as used in Const. art. 8, requiring officers to take an oath of office, includes a county treasurer. Riddle v. Bedford County (Pa.) 7 Serg. & R. 336-391.

The post of deputy warden of a county almshouse is not an office, but a position. State v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 38 Atl. 842, 61 N. J. Law, 117.

The term "office," within the meaning of the Constitution, does not include a levee inspector. State v. Green, 9 South. 42, 43, 43 La. Ann. 402.

The exercise of the duties of the clerk of the poor-law commissioners materially affects a great body of persons, and the public within his district have an interest in such exercise. The office is therefore one of a public nature. Reg. v. Guardians of Poor of St. Martin's in the Fields, 17 Q. B. 149, 150.

The board of supervisors of a county is not a "public officer" within the statute in reference to double costs. People v. Niagara County Sup'rs (N. Y.) 50 How. Prac. 353, 354.

Any man is a public officer who is appointed by the government and has any duty to perform concerning the public; nor is he any the less a public officer because his authority or duty is confined to narrow limits. Persons who, under an act of the General Assembly of October 17, 1870, had been appointed commissioners to purchase a tract of land at the place selected for a county site, to lay off the same into town lots, sell them, and to apply the proceeds to the building of a courthouse and jail for the county, were "officers" under the law. Polk v. James, 68 Ga. 123.

A stationery storekeeper charged with the purchase and safe-keeping of the stationery required by a county is a public officer. A public officer is one who exercises, in an independent character, a public function in the interest of the people by virtue of law, which is only saying in another form that he exercises a portion of the sovereignty of the people delegated to him by law. State v. Jennings, 49 N. E. 404, 405, 57 Ohio St. 415, 63 Am. St. Rep. 723.

Court officer or employé.

The post of a president judge is within the common-law definition of an "office." Commonwealth v. Gamble, 62 Pa. (12 P. F. Smith) 343, 349, 1 Am. Rep. 422.

An attendant upon the Supreme Court, to attend upon it and to perform the duties required to be performed by him at a fixed salary, is "in office," within the meaning of the statute providing that "the board of supervisors of the county of New York are hereby prohibited from creating any new office or department, or increasing the salaries of those now in office or their successors." Rowland v. City of New York, 83 N. Y. 372, 376, 378.

An attendant of the Marine Court of the City of New York holds an "office," within the meaning of that term as used in section 3 of chapter 882, Laws of 1870, prohibiting any increase in the salaries "of persons then in office or their successors." Moser v. City of New York (N. Y.) 21 Hun, 163, 164.

Const. art. 5, § 3, which declares that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall extend over the state, and the judges thereof shall have original jurisdiction of quo warranto as to all "officers of the commonwealth" whose jurisdiction extends over the state, includes judges and associate judges of the court of common pleas. Commonwealth v. Dumbauld, 97 Pa. 293, 295.

"Public officers," within the rule that statutes directing the mode of proceedings by public officers are directory, and are not regarded as essential to the validity of the proceedings themselves unless it be so declared in the statutes, includes a judge of a court. In re Hennessy, 58 N. E. 446, 447, 164 N. Y. 393.

The municipal court of the city of Wilmington, under 17 Laws, c. 207, § 14 et seq., creating it and defining its jurisdiction, being an "inferior court" within the meaning of Const. art. 4, § 30, the judge of such court is a "public officer" within Const. art. 3, § 9. State v. Churchman (Del.) 49 Atl. 381, 385, 3 Pennewill, 167.

The term "public officer," in Cr. Code, § 3931, providing that any public officer who deals in claims against the county shall be fined, includes a probate judge's clerk appointed in pursuance of Acts 1893, p. 1190. Scruggs v. State, 20 South. 642, 643, 111 Ala. 60.

De facto officer.

The word "officer" is defined in Webster's Dictionary as one who holds an office; a person lawfully invested with an office. The latter branch of this definition would seem to embrace only officers de jure, but the first is clearly comprehensive enough to include officers de facto. An officer de facto as clearly holds an office as an officer de jure. The term "officer" is generic, and when used in the statute, and there is nothing in the context or authority to indicate that it is used in a different sense, it should be held to include all classes of officers, officers de facto as well as officers de jure, and there is no good reason why an officer de facto should not be punished for embezzlement as well as an officer de jure. State v. Goss, 69 Me. 22, 28.

Depository.

See "Depository."

Deputy.

The bond of a deputy sheriff was conditioned that he should well and faithfully perform "all the duties of the said office as deputy sheriff." It was objected that there was no such office as deputy sheriff. The court said that a "deputy sheriff performs the functions of the office of sheriff. He occupies the place and performs the duties of an officer, and it does not matter whether he in fact is an officer, or only occupies the place and performs the duties. Such deputies are generally known and designated as officers, * * * but the word 'office,' used in the condition, may refer as well or better to the office of sheriff as to that of deputy." Gradle v. Hoffman, 106 Ill. 147, 153.

The office of deputy sheriff, appointed by the sheriff under Rev. St. 1889, §§ 8181, 8182, requiring them to take the oath of office and to perform the duties prescribed by law to be performed by the sheriff, is a public office. State ex rel. Walker v. Bus, 36 S. W. 636, 637, 135 Mo. 325, 33 L. R. A. 616.

A deputy sheriff is an officer of the government, within a statute punishing embezzlement by officers of the government. State v. Brooks, 42 Tex. 62, 66.

Acts 1847, c. 40, § 3, providing that all redemptions that shall hereafter be made on or after the last day of the 15 months by any creditor shall be made at the sheriff's office of the county in which the sale took place, and it shall be the duty of the "officer making such sale" to attend at such office during the last day, etc., applies either to the sheriff, the undersheriff, or to a deputy sheriff. People v. Lynch, 68 N. Y. 473, 478 (cited and approved in Wilson v. Russell, 31 N. W. 645, 652, 4 Dak. 376); Livingston v. Arnoux, 56 N. Y. 507, 517.

A special deputy sheriff is not an officer, but is merely the agent of the sheriff. Prince v. Dickson, 18 S. E. 83, 84, 39 S. O. 477; Kavanaugh v. State, 41 Ala. 399.

A deputy county clerk is not an "officer" within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring the Legislature to provide for the election of county officers, to prescribe their duties, and regulate their compensation. Nelson v. Troy, 11 Wash. 435, 442, 89 Pac. 974.

"Office," as used in Const. art. 7, § 6, providing that no person except a qualified elector or shall be elected or appointed to any civil or military office in this state, does not include deputy clerkships of county courts, and hence women may hold such deputy clerkships. Jeffries v. Harrington, 17 Pac. 505, 506, 11 Colo. 191.

"Office," as used in Const. art. 15, § 4, providing that no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector, does not include the office of the deputy clerk of the probate court, and therefore a female is eligible to that clerkship. Warwick v. State, 25 Ohio St. 21, 24.

Deputy clerks of counties in New Jersey are public officers, though they have no term of office, and though they are employés of the county clerk, so that their employment is a mere matter of private contract. Gibbs v. Morgan, 89 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 128, 128.

In Rev. Laws, p. 206, providing for proceedings on information in the nature of a quo warranto where any person usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or executes any "office" within the state, the word "office" should be construed to include the office of deputy adjutant general of a brigade of militia, it being provided that, whenever the commander in chief of the militia should consider that the service required, he could appoint a deputy adjutant general to each brigade or division, for such office is a public office concerning the public, and is a valuable as well as an honorable office. Miller v. Utter, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 84, 87.

As employé, laborer, or workman.

See "Employé"; "Laborer"; "Workman."

Ex-officer or officer elect.

"County officers," as used in the constitutional provision that such officers, under the laws of the territory when the Constitution shall take effect, shall continue in office until a certain date fixed, means officers who may be exercising the functions of the office when the Constitution takes effect. Those who have been elected but not inducted into office are, properly speaking, "officers elect." Those in office are simply "officers." Those who have been in office but have gone out are properly "ex-officers." But where the term "officer" is used in a sentence where there is nothing to qualify or control its meaning, it refers to an officer then holding and enjoying the office. It means neither an ex-officer nor an officer elect. Cordell v. Frisell, 1 Nev. 180, 182.

Irrigation district officers.

An irrigation district organized under the Wright act is a public corporation, and its officers are public officers of the state. Hertle v. Ball (Idaho) 72 Pac. 953, 954 (citing In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal. 298, 28 Pac. 272, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 1009).

Jailer or other prison keeper.

In Bac. Abr. "Offices and Officers," it is said: "An office is a right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it." Every part of this definition applies to the place of jailer. No public employment is more clearly marked by these distinguishing traits of an office than the ordinary functions of a jailer. State v. Sellers (S. C.) 7 Rich. Law, 868, 870.

The superintendent of the Albany County Penitentiary is a public officer, inasmuch as he has charge of a public institution, and the position is denominated an "office" in the statute establishing the penitentiary. Porter v. Pillsbury (N. Y.) 11 How. Prac. 240, 241.

The office of keeper of the workhouse is an "office" within the meaning of the authorities, as the employment was not transient, occasional, or accidental, and the salary fixed was by the year. The position was not a menial one, such as a janitor or servant, nor was the incumbent a per diem laborer, whose employment might be evidenced by a mere verbal direction to go to work at prevailing rates. Stenson v. City of New York, 82 N. Y. Supp. 946, 947, 40 Misc. Rep. 533.

Juror or jury commissioner.

The term "public officers" includes grand jurors and listers. State v. Rollins, 27 Atl. 498, 499, 65 Vt. 608.

A grand juror is a public officer. State v. Rollins, 27 Atl. 498, 499, 65 Vt. 608.

The term "public officers," as used in the Constitution and statutes, does not include jurors, although they serve the public, and perform important duties in the administration of justice. State v. Bradley, 48 Conn. 535, 538.

A grand juror is a public officer. State v. Noyes, 87 Wis. 340, 346, 53 N. W. 886, 27 L. R. A. 776, 41 Am. St. Rep. 45 (citing Jac. Law Dict., Bac. Abr. tit. "Office and Officers").

As used in St. U. S. March 22, 1882, c. 47, § 8, providing that no polygamist, bigamist, or any other person cohabiting with more than one woman should be entitled to vote at any election held in any territory or place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, or be elgible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold, any "office" or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such territory or place, or under the United States, "office" cannot be construed to include the right to sit on a jury. An office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of government, and embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, employment, and duties. It is the right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. Jury duty is in the nature of service due from the citizen to the government, necessarily required in the administration of its laws. Its character has but little similarity to tenure, duration, power, and the right to exercise powers conferred by the appointment of government, which are essential characteristics of office, and not mere transient, occasional, or incidental. It is true a person summoned to appear as a juror has a duty of a public nature to perform, and for it he is compensated out of the public treasury; but in no other respect does his position or his duties correspond with the essential elements of office. He has no certain term of office. He has no right to, and has no power to enforce a right to, the performance of any act or service which constitutes the performance of official duty. He is liable at any moment to be discharged by the court from all service, and to be excused by either party from serving in the trial of any cause, without consulting his wishes or interests. The oath he takes, in its terms and scope, limits his duty to the facts of the particular case then on trial, and is not the oath required by the laws of this territory, or by the Constitution and laws of the United States, to be taken by public officers." People v. Hopt, 4 Pac. 250, 254, 3 Utah, 393.

Police jurymen are the officers of a political corporation, and they continue in office, after the expiration of their terms, until their successors are chosen and inducted into office, under Rev. St. 1870, § 2008, providing that "all officers, whether appointed or elected, shall hold their offices and discharge the duty thereof until their successors are elected or appointed, as the case may be, and duly qualify." Because the office of a police juror is not a constitutional office, it by no means follows that it is no office at all. State ex rel. Gorham v. Montgomery, 25 La. Ann. 138, 139.

The term "officers" includes county commissioners charged with a duty of electing jurors for the courts of the counties, within the meaning of Act June 16, 1836, restricting the powers of the several courts to issue attachments and to inflict summary punishments for contempts of court, as without such officers a court could not discharge its functions, and their disobedience or neglect of its legal orders would arrest the course of justice and produce infinite inconvenience to the community. Such commissioners are chosen by the people to execute this duty, among others. They undertake to perform it by accepting the office, and become thereby public officers, and as such assigned, like other officers, to the proper discharge of their duty. In re Hummell (Pa.) 9 Watts, 416, 431.

Justice of the peace.

A public officer is one who has "the right, and corresponding duty, to execute a public or privileged trust, and to take the emoluments belonging to it." 3 Kent, Comm. 454. Justices of the peace and constables are "public officers" within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 13, providing that "no law shall extend the term of any public officer or increase or diminish his salary or emoluments after his election or appointment." Rupert v. Chester Co., 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 342, 348.

Magistrate.

The general term "officers" includes both magistrates and peace officers. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 61.

Minister.

It was decided in Commonwealth v. Gwyler (Pa.) 5 Watts & S. 275, that a minister in an unincorporated society is not an officer whose salary is liable to taxation. Conceding that he may be in some senses an "officer," it is plain that he is not an officer within the meaning of the law regulating taxation. Miller v. Kirkpatrick, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 223, 230.

Municipal officer or employé.

It cannot be doubted, as a general proposition of law applying to the construction of statutory and constitutional provisions alike, that the word "offices" or "officers," taken by themselves, in a statute or Constitution, means state or county offices or officers only, and cannot be construed to mean the offices or officers of municipal or other corporations, unless there be language, expressly or by necessary implication, extending their meaning to corporation officers. Thus Const. 1897, art. 3, § 9, requiring the consent of the Senate to the appointment by the Governor of such "officers" as he is authorized by law to appoint, does not require the appointment of a city officer, required by the city charter to be made by the Governor, to be confirmed by the Senate. State v. Churchman, 51 Atl. 49, 50, 3 Pennell, 361.

An officer of a municipal corporation is a "public officer," within 2 Rev. St. 693, § 38, punishing delinquency of a public officer as a misdemeanor. People v. Bedell (N. Y.) 2 Hill, 196, 199.

"Officer," as used in Const. c. 2, § 11, providing that the Governor shall have power to commission all officers, and section 24, providing that every "officer" of the state, whether judicial or executive, shall be liable to be impeached by the General Assembly, and section 29, providing that every "officer," whether executive, judicial, or military, in authority under this state, shall take and subscribe the oath of office prescribed therein, has reference only to such officers of the state as are either elected by the freemen at large or required to be commissioned by the Governor. Municipal officers are not included therein. Rowell v. Horton, 8 Atl. 908, 907, 58 Vt. 1.

"Public officer," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 257, § 7, providing for the punishment of any public officer, being a receiver of public money, who shall fraudulently convert the same to his own use, includes a selectman. State v. Boody, 53 N. H. 610, 611.

Within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 72, providing that any judicial officer, or any person who executes the functions of a public office, who receives a bribe, shall be punished, the expression of "person who executes any of the functions of a public officer" includes a member of the common council or other municipal officer. People v. Jaehne, 8 N. E. 374, 377, 103 N. Y. 182.

A chief engineer of a city fire department, appointed by the council and subject to removal by it, is not an "officer" within Const. art. 14, § 8, prohibiting an increase in the salary of any officer during his term of office. State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson, 27 S. W. 399, 401, 123 Mo. 48.

"Public office," as used in Rev. St. § 6770, authorizing an action in quo warranto to be brought against a person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises a public office, includes the presidency of a city council. State v. Anderson, 12 N. E. 666, 667, 45 Ohio St. 196.

The charter of a village authorized the election of certain officers, giving power to the trustees to appoint an attorney, street commissioner, fire wardens, and such other officers as authorized by the act. The office of village collector was not named in any class of officers in the act, but one section provided that the collector should collect all moneys that shall be ordered by the corporation to be raised by taxes. The board of trustees appointed a collector. Held, that he was a "public officer" within Rev. St. c. 120, § 7, declaring that, if a public officer embezzles any money in his position, he shall be punished, etc. State v. Walton, 62 Ma. 106, 111.

which extends to all persons owing debts which shall not have been created in consequence of a defalcation, as a public officer, or an executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, or while acting in any other fiduciary capacity. Morse v. City of Lowell, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 152, 154.

A messenger to the president of the board of aldermen in New York City, whose duties were to carry messages and run errands, and who was clothed with no power to perform any official duty of the office, was not a public officer, there being no statute creating such an office, or defining the duties to be performed officially. Smith v. City of New York (N. Y.) 67 Barb. 223, 224.

Laws 1897, c. 108, constituting the sheriff and other county officers of Richmond county a board to appoint police commissioners for the county, does not violate the provision of Const. 1895, art. 10, § 1, providing that sheriffs shall hold no other office, a membership in the board of police commissioners being held not to constitute an office. People v. Howland, 45 N. Y. Supp. 847, 850, 17 App. Div. 165.

Under Code, § 124, providing that causes against a public officer for an act done by him in virtue of his office must be tried in the county where the cause, or some part thereof, arose, one appointed by Laws 1870, c. 382, to audit certain accounts against the city of New York, became the incumbent of an office. People v. Tweed (N. Y.) 18 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 419, 420, 424.

The commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco are not "officers" within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 7, which provides that the duration of any office not fixed by the Constitution shall never exceed four years, and the term during which the commissioners are authorized to act is not limited to four years. People v. Middleton, 28 Cal. 603.

"Public offices" are in general, if not always, directly created by the Legislature itself, the municipal authorities selecting the persons to perform their functions. The term cannot be applied to the general superintendent of waterworks, employed by the water commissioners of a city for a term of years, the position being the creature of the board of commissioners, and entirely unknown to the statute. Cramer v. Water Com'rs of New Brunswick, 31 Atl. 384, 385, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 473.

St. 1865, c. 153, being an act for supplying the city of Cambridge with water, provides, in section 6, that the powers therein granted shall be exercised by such agents as the city council shall direct. A water board is not provided for by any subsequent act, but subsequent ordinances of the city, in designating its agents, use the phrase

"water board." St. 1891, c. 384, amending such charter, recognizes the existence of the water board, and makes no provision for the election of its members, except in section 9, which provides that all officers not elected by voters shall be appointed by the commissioners, subject to confirmation by the board of aldermen. Held, that the members of the water board are "officers" within the meaning of the latter section, and therefore an ordinance providing for their appointment in such manner is valid. O'Brien v. Thorogood, 39 N. E. 287, 288, 162 Mass. 598.

A health inspector appointed by the board of health of the city of San Francisco, whose duties are to inspect and report concerning the premises on which nuisances are situated, and to serve notice for their abatement, is a public officer. Patton v. San Francisco Board of Health, 59 Pac. 702, 703, 127 Cal. 388, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66.

Members of the board of public works of the city of Detroit are "officers" within the meaning of Const. art. 15, § 14, providing that "judicial officers of cities and villages shall be elected, and all other officers shall be elected or appointed at such time, and in such manner as the Legislature shall direct," though they are not officers required or designated by name in the Constitution itself. People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 59, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

The term "officers," whenever used in the articles relating to cities of the first and third classes, shall include all persons holding any situations under the city government or its departments, with an annual salary or for a definite term of office. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 5333, 5777.

The terms "officers," "clerks," "subordinate officers," and "employees," in Act June 1, 1885, relating to cities of the first class, in reference to the appointment of officers, clerks, subordinate officers, and employees, do not include the medical staff, or the board of visiting physicians of the Philadelphia Hospital, consisting of specialists or experts in the various departments of medical science, who perform gratuitous services. Commonwealth v. Fittler, 23 Atl. 568, 571, 147 Pa. 288, 15 L. R. A. 205.

The governor of an almshouse is one of the heads of departments, and an officer of the city of New York, prohibited by chapter 187 of Act 1894, § 19, from being interested in the purchase of any real estate belonging to the corporation. Roosevelt v. Draper, 23 N. Y. 318, 319.

A position as organist, to which one was appointed and continued at the pleasure of the vestry, was not a "public annual office." Rex v. Inhabitants of St. George's, Hanover Square, 5 Barn. & Adol. 571.

The position of chief clerk in the office of the assessor of the city of Detroit is not an officer. People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 678, 682.

A poundmaster appointed from time to time by the common council of a city does not hold an "office" within the meaning of the city charter, providing that every person chosen or appointed to any office or place of trust shall take and subscribe an oath. Wilcox v. Hemming, 58 Wis. 144, 145, 15 N. W. 435, 46 Am. Rep. 625.

A person appointed by the board of police of the city of Rochester as superintendent of the police telegraph system of that city, there being no office of that name or nature known to the law, is merely an employé of the city, and the proper authorities of the city have the same power to discharge him that a private employer would have. Miller v. Warner, 59 N. Y. Supp. 953, 957, 42 App. Div. 208.

A person employed by the city council to trim lights in its electrical light department is not a "public officer." There is no more reason for calling him such than there would be to call a person employed in the public streets to shovel dirt a "public officer." State v. Anderson, 49 N. E. 406, 407, 57 Ohio St. 429.

By Laws 1895, p. 518, c. 371, amending the New York City Charter, tit. 2, §§ 4, 5, p. 10, the chamberlain is a public officer. In re Haase, 83 N. Y. Supp. 932, 933, 41 Misc. Rep. 114.

Notary public.

Every man is a public officer who has any duty concerning the public, and it is held that a notary public is a "public officer" within Const. art. 18, § 5, providing that any public officer who shall travel on a free pass shall forfeit his office. People v. Rathbone, 32 N. Y. Supp. 108, 109, 11 Misc. Rep. 98.

A notary public is not an "officer" in view of Const. art. 10, § 2, providing that no one can hold an office within the state who is appointed or chosen in the manner as therein provided. In re Searis, 48 N. Y. Supp. 60, 63, 22 App. Div. 140.

The powers conferred by Rev. St. §§ 5252, 5254, on an officer taking depositions, to punish for contempt by a witness, extend to a notary public. In re Rauh, 61 N. E. 701, 702, 65 Ohio St. 128.

Officer authorized to execute process.

The word "officer," used in Rev. St. § 4296, declaring that any person who shall knowingly and willfully resist or oppose any officer of the state, or any person authorized by law, in serving or attempting to execute any legal writ, rule, order, or process, or who shall knowingly or willfully resist any such officer in the discharge of his duties without such writ or process, shall be punished, means only such officers as are authorized to execute legal processes. Therefore a road supervisor is not an "officer" within the meaning of the statute. State v. Putnam, 85 Iowa, 561, 562.

Officer of political party.

The fact that the Legislature has by statute regulated the election and conduct of political committees, the members of which are the officers of the party which selects them, and whose duties are confined to the party to which they belong, does not make the office of committeeman a public one. Attorney General v. Drohan, 48 N. E. 279, 281, 169 Mass. 584, 61 Am. St. Rep. 301.

Pilot.

See "Pilot."

Police officer, marshal, or other peace officer.

After quoting Henley v. Mayor, 5 Bing. 91, and Case of Wood (N. Y.) 2 Cow. 29, it was said that a railroad policeman employed by a corporation is a "public officer" within Const. art. 13, § 5, providing that no public officer shall receive a pass over any railroad. Dampsey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 40 N. E. 867, 868, 146 N. Y. 290.

A policeman of an incorporated town or city is an officer. Proctor v. Blackburn, 67 S. W. 548, 549, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 851.

A policeman appointed by the board of trustees of Brooklyn Bridge, in pursuance to Laws 1875, c. 300, § 8, authorizing the board to appoint an adequate police force, and to regulate and direct the same for the protection of the bridge and persons, etc., passing over the same, and conferring on the policemen so appointed all the powers of the policemen of the cities of New York and Brooklyn, is a public officer, for whose torts the cities are not responsible. Woodhull v. City of New York, 44 N. E. 1088, 1089, 150 N. Y. 450.

The position of assistant superintendent of police in the city of Chicago is an office, and title thereto may accordingly be tested by quo warranto. Placek v. People, 62 N. E. 530, 194 Ill. 125.

A policeman appointed by the board of trustees of the Brooklyn Bridge, in pursuance of Laws 1885, c. 300, § 8, authorizing the board to appoint an adequate police force, and to regulate and direct the same for the protection of the bridge and persons passing over the same, and conferring on the policemen so appointed all the powers of policemen for the cities of New York and Brooklyn, is not a public officer. Woodhull

v. City of New York, 44 N. E. 1088, 1040, 150 N. Y. 450.

A policeman is an "officer," under Cr. Code, art. 488, providing that an assault becomes aggravated when committed on an officer in the lawful discharge of the duties of his office. The statute was intended to punish any one who had assaulted any officer of the state while in the discharge of his official duty as an officer. It matters not by what name such officer is called; though he might be no more than a taxgatherer in the lawful discharge of his humble duties, yet the interests of the state require that he should be protected. Sanner v. State, 2 Tex. App. 458, 459.

A village marshal is a public officer. State v. Schram, 85 N. W. 155, 82 Minn. 420.

Persons appointed to the detective department of the district police force of the commonwealth under Pub. St. c. 108, and amendments thereof, are public officers. Brown v. Russell, 43 N. E. 1005, 1010, 168 Mass. 14, 32 L. R. A. 253, 55 Am. St. Rep. 337.

By "officer," as used in the chapter on offenses relating to the arrest and custody of prisoners, is meant any peace officer, as sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable of a beat, marshal, constable, or policeman of a city or town, any jailer or guard, or any person specially authorized by warrant to arrest. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 243.

Road commissioner.

A "public office" is a trust or charge, created and defined by the public authority. A road commissioner elected under the provisions of Pub. St. c. 27, §§ 74-77, is not an officer of the town from which he is elected, but is a "public officer," for whose acts the town is not responsible. Clark v. Easton, 146 Mass. 43, 45, 14 N. E. 795.

School district officer.

A trustee of a school district is intrusted with a part of the sovereign function of the state, hence his must be a public office, and he would be subject to removal under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3531, providing for removal for incompetency, etc., of all district attorneys, etc., and "all other county officers." Hendricks v. State, 49 S. W. 705, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 178 (quoting Mechem, Pub. Off.).

School trustees are officers, recognized as such by the law of the land, and as such are embraced by Const. art. 3, § 6, which requires all persons entering upon the discharge of any functions as officers of the state to take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before entering upon their duties. Childrey v. Rady, 77 Va. 513, 530.

The term "officer," as used in Crim. Act, § 198, making it criminal to bribe any officer or any other person, is not limited to officers of a state or county, but is broad enough to include the officers of a school district, or any other officer referred to in the preceding sections of the crimes act. In re Roseman, 22 Pac. 628, 630, 42 Kan. 451.

Sheriff or constable.

The word "office," as used in Virginia statutes prohibiting the sale of any office or deputation of office touching the administration or execution of justice or the receipt of payment of the public revenues, or any clerkship in a court of record, includes the office of sheriff, and therefore prohibits the sale by the sheriff of his office. Salling v. McKinney (Va.) 1 Leigh, 42, 44, 19 Am. Dec. 722.

Article 14 of the amendments to the federal Constitution, disqualifying certain persons from holding offices, includes a sheriff and other officers required by Rev. Code, c. 77, to take and subscribe the oath to support the federal and state Constitutions. Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199, 202.

The word "officer," as used in the chapter relating to attachments, is meant to apply to constables when the proceedings are in a justice's court, or the like officer of any other court. Code Iowa 1897, § 3934.

The word "officer," as used in the act in relation to attachments issued out of justices' courts, shall be construed to mean the sheriff, constable, or other officer executing the process of the court of justice. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 2745.

State officer or employe.

The office of governor, created by Const. art. 5, providing that the executive power, shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for two years, declaring that no person except a citizen of the United States and a qualified elector of the state shall be qualified to the office of governor, is an "office," within the meaning of the term as used in Rev. St. c. 128, providing for the filing of an information in the nature of quo warranto against any person usurping and intruding into or unlawfully holding or exercising any public office; the word "office," as used in the Constitution and in the statute, not being used in its restricted sense, but in its most popular and general acceptance, and applying to any place which imposes upon him who occupies it the performance of duties of a public nature. Attorney General v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567, 661, 745.

Under Const. art. 5, § 24, declaring that an office is a public position, created by the Constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power, or for a fixed time, with a successor elected or appointed, factory inspectors provided for in Act June 7, 1893, must be regarded as state officers or officers of the government. Their duties are continuing, and prescribed by statute and not by contract, and some portions of the functions of government are committed to their charge. They seem to come within the definition of "officers" as given in the Constitution and as laid down in the decisions of court. Ritchie v. People, 40 N. E. 454, 461, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 48 Am. St. Rep. 815.

The term "public officers," in Rev. Code, p. 188, art. 194, providing that the official acts of any person in possession of any public office and exercising the functions thereof are valid and binding as lawful official acts in regard to all persons intrusted therewith or affected thereby, whether such person be lawfully entitled to hold such office or not, etc., was construed to include members of the Legislature during the War of Secession. Hill v. Boyland, 40 Miss. 618, 625.

Persons appointed by an act of the Legislature as managers to conduct and execute a lottery grant for the benefit of a college, although required to enter into bonds and render important services from which the state derives a benefit, are not public officers, but trustees. State v. Platt (Del.) 4 Har. 154.

"Officer," as used in the Revision of 1838, providing for the punishment of any officer, clerk, or other person employed in the treasury of any county, or in any other public office within the state, who commits any fraud or embezzlement therein, should be construed to include the state treasurer. People v. McKinney, 10 Mich. 54, 85.

The clerks of the different departments of the state are "officers," within Act April, 1856, providing that the act shall not apply to reduce the salary of incumbents in office, but only to every such officer thereafter elected. Vaughn v. English, 8 Cal. 39, 41.

A stenographer employed temporarily, and not in pursuance of any law providing for his employment in permanent or continuous discharge of his duties, is not an "officer" within Rev. St. U. S. § 1855, providing that no law of any territorial legislature shall be made or enforced by which the governor or secretary of a territory, or the members or officers of any territorial legislature, are paid any compensation other than that provided by the laws of the United States. Braithwaite v. Cameron, 38 Pac. 1084, 1087, 3 Okl. 630.

The term "officer," as used in the act to restrain officers in the charge of the fiscal affairs of state institutions from contracting indebtedness beyond certain limits, shall be taken to include members of the various boards created by law to govern or supervise the respective state institutions. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1881, § 4116.

The term "officer," as used in the act relating to the accounting for money received and expended by certain officers, shall be construed to include all commissioners, boards of commissioners, trustees, boards of trustees, inspectors, boards of inspectors, regents, boards of regents, agents, or other person or board, of whatever denomination or character, receiving or disbursing money for the state for or on account of any building or work for the state, or for the maintenance or for the use or benefit of any state, educational, charitable, reformatory or penal, or other institution or organization, or for or on account of any purpose whatsoever, under any act of appropriation or other law of the state. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 1210.

Act March 10, 1892, § 5, appropriated $65,000 for colleges, which sum should be expended under the direction of the board of construction, which board was to be appointed, giving bonds, etc. Const. § 7, declares that the Governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly, appoint all officers not otherwise provided for. Held, that the members of the board were officers. McCornick v. Thatcher, 8 Utah, 294, 801, 80 Pac. 1091, 17 L. R. A. 243 (citing 4 Jac. Dict. 433).

Pharmacy commissioners appointed under Laws 18th Gen. Assem. c. 75, which authorized them "to make by-laws necessary for the proper fulfillment of their duties without expense to the state," elected a treasurer as provided by by-laws they had adopted, and fixed the tenure of his office, and his compensation. Held, that he was a mere employé of the commission, and not a "public officer" within Code 1878, § 8908, providing that a public officer converting money given to him by virtue of his office is guilty of embezzlement, since the Constitution and statutes neither created nor authorized the creation of his office, nor prescribed nor authorized any one to prescribe his duties, nor delegated to him sovereign functions of government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public. State v. Spaulding, 72 N. W. 288, 289, 102 Iowa, 689.

Code Md. art. 72, regulating the oyster fishery in the waters of the state, charges the board of public works with the duty of keeping in repair the vessels of the state fishery force; and Act Md. 1886, c. 296, provides for the appointment of commanders for such vessels by the board. These commanders are required by law to take an oath and give bond to the state. Held, that such a commander is himself a public officer, and hence the members of the board are not personally liable for injuries resulting from his negligence to a workman repairing such vessel, especially where there is nothing to show that the commander is incompetent. Riggin v. Brown (U. S.) 59 Fed. 1005, 1006.

Tax collector.

A person who collects taxes is a "public officer," within the constitutional provision that no law shall diminish the salary of a public officer after his election or appointment. Donohough v. Roberts (Pa.) 15 Phila. 144, 148.

Superintendent or employé of state institution.

It is held that a person appointed for a definite term, and required to take an oath prescribed by the Constitution of the state, and to reside in the institution that he superintends, performing the duties prescribed by law, and clothed with the right and correspondent duty to execute a public trust and receive a salary attached to the office, is an officer. State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 347, 348.

The word "officer," within the meaning of Act 1882, c. 410, § 59, prohibiting any member of the common council, head of department, chief of bureau, or other officer of the city of New York from becoming directly or indirectly interested in the performance of any work or business, the expense or price or consideration of which is payable from the city treasury, does not include the medical superintendent of the asylum for the insane at Ward's Island, who receives, as such superintendent, his salary payable out of the appropriations for the salaries of the officers and employés of the department of charities and corrections, and therefore such superintendent may properly be employed for a consideration by the district attorney of New York to examine the sanity of one on trial for crime. Macdonald v. City of New York (N. Y.) 82 Hun, 89.

A fireman at the State Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is not employed by the state or any "officer" thereof, within the meaning of Laws 1889, c. 380, § 1, providing that a laborer so employed shall receive not less than $2 per day. Drake v. State, 89 N. E. 842, 144 N. Y. 414.

United States officer or employé.

"Public officers," as used in Rev. St. § 3639 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2422], requiring the Treasurer of the United States, assistant treasurer, and those performing the duties of assistant treasurer, collector of customs, surveyor of customs, acting also as collectors, receivers of public moneys at the several land offices, postmasters, and all "public officers" of whatsoever character, to keep safely all public money collected by them, or otherwise at any time placed in their possession and custody, until the same is ordered by the proper department to be transferred or paid out, means officers of the United States, and does not include a clerk of a collector of customs, for he is not an officer of the United States. An officer of the United States can only be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by a court of law or the head of a department. A person in the service of the government who does not derive his position from one of these sources is not an "officer" of the United States in the sense of the Constitution. United States v. Smith, 8 Sup. Ct. 595, 597, 124 U. S. 525, 31 L. Ed. 534.

A representative in Congress holds a "public office" within the meaning of the charter of the city of Brooklyn, which prohibits an alderman from holding any other public office save as excepted, etc. People v. Common Council of City of Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659.

An examining surgeon appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions is not an "officer" of the United States. United States v. Van Leuven (U. S.) 62 Fed. 62, 65; United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 510, 25 L. Ed. 482.

Act Cong. May 15, 1820 (3 Stat. 592), § 2, providing for the issuance of a distress warrant from the treasury department against any collector of the revenue, receiver of the public money, or any other "officer who shall have received the public money before it is paid into the treasury of the United States," describes a person who holds an office under government, to whose hands the public money comes before it reaches the treasury, and includes no other person than one who was properly designated by the term "officer," and hence does not include a purser in the navy. Ex parte Randolph (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 242, 254.

Letter carriers in the postal service, being appointed by the Postmaster General under authority of the acts of Congress, practically during good behavior, sworn and giving bond for the fulfillment and performance of their duties, paid their moneys appropriated by the Congress, their salaries fixed by law, having regulated and prescribed services to perform, and their duties being continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary, are "officers" of the United States within the meaning of the amendment to section 2 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1887 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 753], taking away from the Circuit Courts and District Courts jurisdiction of suits against the United States by such officers to recover fees or compensation. United States v. McOrory (U. S.) 91 Fed. 295, 296, 33 C. C. A. 515.

A clerk in the United States pension agency, serving by appointment for a period not exceeding three months, and compensated with money of the United States appropriated for that purpose by Congress, having no duties defined by law, nor discretion to act independently of the direction of the pension agent, is not "holding an office under the authority of the United States," within the meaning of article 2, § 4, of the Constitution of the state, which renders persons so holding office ineligible to membership in the General Assembly, his position not being an office, but merely an employment. State v. Mason, 55 N. E. 167, 61 Ohio St. 62.

The situation of paymaster of the United States army is an office, and hence it follows that where a clerk of a county court, which is likewise an office, accepts the position of paymaster, he thereby vacates his clerkship. Taylor v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 401, 407.

An internal revenue supervisor's clerk, appointed pursuant to the authority of the internal revenue commissioner, under Rev. St. § 3160, giving such commissioner power to allow supervisors their necessary expenses, was held not a "government officer" within Rev. St. § 1756, requiring all such officers to take the oath prescribed thereby. Hedrick v. United States (U. S.) 16 Ct. Cl. 88, 100.

A post office is not an office of profit or trust under the authority of Congress, so as to prevent a postmaster from holding an executive or judicial office while continuing to exercise the office of postmaster. McGregor v. Balch, 14 Vt. 423, 39 Am. Dec. 281.

OFFICER (Of Corporations).

The term "officers," applied to a corporation, refers to those in regular and continual service. Within the ordinary acceptance of the term, one who is engaged to render service in a particular transaction is not an "officer." It implies continuity of service, and excludes those employed for a special and single transaction. Lewis v. Fisher, 30 Atl. 608, 610, 80 Md. 139, 26 L. R. A. 278, 45 Am. St. Rep. 327; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 11 Sup. Ct. 405, 407, 138 U. S. 501, 34 L. Ed. 1023.

The officers of a corporation not shown to be stockholders, prima facie, are mere agents or servants, having no direct interest in a suit by or against the corporation which prevents them being witnesses at common law. Gantt v. Cox, 48 Atl. 992, 199 Pa. 208.

In a case involving a statute requiring certain returns to be made by the officers of banks, it was said: "When the law requires an act to be done, it includes the power of performance and makes it a duty; and where such duty is imposed on the officer of the corporation as an official act, and for a public purpose, they are thereby constituted officers for that purpose, and willful disobedience on their part will be a misdemeanor." Commonwealth v. Dunham (Mass.) 1 Thacher's Cr. Cas. 519, 578.

Rev. St. c. 126, § 29, providing that any "officer, agent, clerk or servant of any incorporated company" embezzling any money or property of another coming into his possession by virtue of his employment shall be deemed to have committed simple larceny, should be construed to include a treasurer in a railroad corporation, for he is an officer distinctly recognized by law, chosen by the directors, and required to give a bond for the faithful discharge of his trust. Commonwealth v. Tuckerman, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 173, 187.

The term "officers," as used in Act 1886, p. 127, providing that the officers of any fair or agricultural joint-stock company or association shall not rent or devote any portion of their grounds for gambling purposes, and imposing a fine on officers who violate any of its provisions, should be construed to designate and include any person or persons duly invested with authority to grant privileges on the society's grounds. State v. Johnson, 17 N. E. 910, 912, 115 Ind. 467.

The "officers," agents, or clerks mentioned in article 3, § 42, of the act concerning crimes and punishments, which provides a punishment for any officer, agent, clerk, or servant of any incorporated company for embezzlement, etc., means officers, agents, or clerks of corporations, and the statute only authorizes a conviction in cases where the embezzlement is committed by such officers, agents, or clerks while exercising their corporate employment. Hamuel v. State, 5 Mo. 260, 264.

In an action on an insurance policy after the death of the assured, the testimony of a clerk in the office of the agent of the company was admissible as to the terms of an agreement between insured and the agent for a change in the policy, as she was not an "officer" of the company within the meaning of the statute excluding testimony by interested parties in actions by or against a corporation, and declaring that officers of the corporation should be considered interested parties. Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 105 Mich. 329, 334, 68 N. W. 440.

As agent, employé, etc.

See "Agent"; "Employé"; "Laborer"; "Servant."

Director or trustee.

In Laws 1875, c. 611, § 21, providing that, if any certificate or report made or public notice given by an officer of a corporation shall be false in any material representation, all the "officers" who have signed the same shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the corporation contracted while they are officers thereof. "Officers" should be construed to include the directors of the corporation, for, in a strict sense, the directors of a corporation are its officers. Torbett v. Eaton, 1 N. Y. Supp. 614, 616, 49 Hun, 209. See, also, Brand v. Godwin, 15 Daly, 456, 460, 8 N. Y. Supp. 339.

A director of a corporation is an "officer," within the meaning of Laws 1875, c. 611, § 21, requiring that the annual report shall be signed by the president and a majority of the directors. Brand v. Godwin, 15 Daly, 456, 458, 460, 8 N. Y. Supp. 339.

By the words "officers of a corporation" is meant the president, vice president, secretary, and others who are invested with a part of the executive authority. The trustees of a corporation are no doubt in one sense "officers," and, when that term is used in some connections, it would embrace all who participate in the exercise of the corporate functions. The word "officers," as used in Laws 1881, c. 122, relating to the incorporation of building, mutual loan, and equitable associations, is used in the former sense only, for the act itself points out the distinction between officers and trustees, and therefore the trustees of such corporations are not "officers" within the intent of the act. Second Manhattan Bldg. Ass'n v. Hayes, *41 N. Y. 192, 193.

The offices pertaining to a private corporation are, as a general rule, defined in its charter and by-laws. Trustees of an insurance company, one of whom was its solicitor and the other its travelling agent, and not designated in the charter or by-laws as officers, are not "officers" within Act March 3, 1860, relating to officers of private corporations. Commonwealth v. Christian (Pa.) 9 Phila. 556, 558.

The word "officer," as used in Rev. St. c. 126, § 27, providing for the punishment of embezzlement committed by any cashier or other officer of the bank, includes embezzlement committed by the president and directors of the bank. Commonwealth v. Wyman, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 247, 253.

A director is an "officer," within Code Civ. Proc. § 525, allowing verification of the pleading of a domestic corporation by one of its officers. Eastham v. York State Telephone Co., 83 N. Y. Supp. 1019, 86 App. Div. 562.

The term "officer," as used in Rev. St. § 5209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3497], includes directors of a national bank. United States v. Means (U. S.) 42 Fed. 599.

Family of officer.

The terms "officers" or "employés," in the exception to the provision of the interstate commerce act forbidding the giving of passes, that nothing in the act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employes, cannot be construed to include the families of officers or employes. Ex parte Koehler (U. S.) 81 Fed. 815, 821.

Under a statutory provision (Rev. St. c. 128, § 27) providing for the punishment of embezzlement committed by any cashier or "other officer" of a bank, it is held that the phrase "other officer" includes the president and directors of the bank. Commonwealth v. Wyman, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 247, 258.

General agent or attorney.

Code, § 525, providing that the petition for condemnation of property, where the petitioner is a domestic corporation, shall be verified in its behalf by an "officer of the corporation," does not mean a general officer, but should be construed to include a duly authorized attorney and agent appointed by the corporation to verify petitions and pleadings in its behalf for the institution of condemnation proceedings and otherwise, and who was its agent for the purpose of acquiring real estate by condemnation proceedings. His relation to the company was that of a general agent in respect to those matters, acting under an appointment from the corporation. He was not simply an attorney acting under an ordinary retainer, but was engaged in a special department of the corporate business, having the general management thereof. In re St. Lawrence & A. R. Co., 81 N. E. 218, 220, 183 N. Y. 270.

Manager or managing director.

Code Civ. Proc. § 525, subd. 1, providing that, where the party is a domestic corporation, pleadings must be verified by an "officer" thereof, does not mean a general manager or managing agent, since the word "manager" is not synonymous with "officer." Thomas F. Meton & Sons v. Isham Wagon Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 215, 216, 15 Civ. Proc. R. 259.

The managing director of a foreign corporation is an "officer" within Code, § 258, providing that, when a corporation is a party, the verification of pleadings may be made by an officer thereof. Best v. British & American Mortg. Co., 42 S. E. 456, 181 N. C. 70.

Minister or teacher.

The term "office under a corporation," in a statute authorizing the assessment of a tax on the salary of any one holding office under a corporation, does not include ministers of incorporated congregations or teachers in the common schools. Commonwealth v. Cuyler (Pa.) 5 Watts & S. 275, 276.

Professors and instructors are not members of the corporation of a college, but are "officers" of the college, within the meaning of the statute exempting from taxation the real estate of the college when occupied by it or by its officers. From the nature of the institution, the members of the board of trustees, except the president, usually would not occupy real estate in person for the purpose of instruction. Professors or instructors impliedly are called "officers" of the college in the charter, and, when they occupy real estate for the purposes of the college, the occupation may be said to be by the college, or by them as its officers. Williams College v. Assessors of Williamstown, 46 N. E. 894, 895, 167 Mass. 505.

A professor in a college is not properly an "officer" of the corporation, but a person in its employment, within Act April 29, 1849, regulating the taxation of officers of a corporation. Union County v. James, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 525.

A professor in the University of Wisconsin is not a "public officer" in such a sense as prevents his employment as such creating a contract relation between himself and the board of regents. He stands in the same relation to the board that a teacher in a public school occupies with respect to the school district by which such teacher is employed, and that is purely a contract relation. Butler v. Regents of the University, 82 Wis. 124, 181.

As public officer.

The office of the chief engineer of a railroad company is not a public office, though the power to make all necessary by-laws and regulations is invested in the company by its charter, and the stockholders have, under its authority, created the office and declared the salary. Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235, 240.

A director of an ordinary business corporation is not a public officer, but is merely an agent of the shareholders, selected, conformably to the organic law of the company, to represent them in the management of its affairs. Unless there is some provision in the charter or by-laws to the contrary, like the agent of an ordinary partnership, he can renounce his agency at will, and can manifest his purpose by oral notice as well as by a formal written resignation, and can terminate the relation without the consent of his principal. A statute giving stockholders authority in general meeting to remove any director to fill the vacancy, and providing that, unless so removed, the directors shall continue in office until the next annual meeting of the stockholders and until their successors shall be appointed, does not prevent a director from resigning at any time. Fearing v. Glenn (U. S.) 73 Fed. 116, 119, 19 C. C. A. 388.

Secretary.

A secretary is not necessarily an "officer" of the corporation. He may hold such position and yet be without authority to bind the corporation. Karsch v. Pottier & Styms Mfg. & Imp. Co., 81 N. Y. Supp. 782, 783, 82 App. Div. 230.

OFFICER, CIVIL OR MILITARY.

The court of claims is not an "officer, civil or military," within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5488 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8674], prohibiting every person from presenting for payment or approval to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States any claim against the government of the United States, knowing the same to be false, etc. United States v. Moore (D. C.) 8 MacArthur, 226, 235.

OFFICER MAKING SALE.

"Officer making such sale," as used in statutes in reference to execution sales, which speaks of the "officer making such sale," "refers to an officer legally authorized to sell." It does not include a deputy sheriff, as the latter cannot act in his own right, but only for the sheriff. Wilson v. Russell, 81 N. W. 645, 650, 4 Dak. 376.

OFFICER OF COURT.

Attorney at law as, see "Attorney at Law."

Clerk of court as, see "Clerk of Court."
Executor as, see "Executor."

OFFICER OF THE CUSTOMS.

See "Customs Officer."

OFFICER OF THE LAW.

Receiver as, see "Receiver."

"Officers of the law," as used in Pub. Laws, c. 508, § 81, which gives permission to officers of the law to bring complaints for the violation of said chapter (508) without giving recognizance for costs, refers only to such officers as are designated in other sections of the same chapter, and does not include a deputy chief of police. State v. Collins, 12 R. I. 478.

An "officer of the law" is any magistrate, peace officer, or clerk of a court. Pen. Code, art. 351. A sheriff is a peace officer. Code Cr. Proc. art. 53. Therefore a sheriff is included in the phrase "officer of the law" as used in Pasch. Dig. art. 348a, providing that if any officer of the law shall willfully or negligently fail to perform any duty imposed on him, etc., he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Gordon v. State, 2 Tex. App. 154, 158.

By an "officer of the law," as used in an article designating all offenses committed by officers of the law as "malfeasance in office," unless otherwise designated, is meant any magistrate, peace officer, or clerk of the court. Pen. Code Tex. 1896, art. 297.

A magistrate is included under the term "officer of the law." Gordon v. State, 2 Tex. App. 154, 158 (citing Pen. Code, art. 351).

OFFICER OF THE POLICE.

See "Police Officer."

OFFICER OF THE REVENUE.

See "Revenue Officer."

OFFICER OF SCHOOLS.

See "School Officers."

OFFICIAL.

While the term "official" sometimes applies to persons holding fiduciary positions, to distinguish their transactions in such relations from their purely private business, yet in the statutes relating to official bonds the word is clearly confined to the bonds of public officers. Bissell v. Durfee, 24 N. W. 886, 887, 58 Mich. 237.

Statutes, in speaking of the "official who levies" executions or attachments, "refer to an officer authorized by law to levy upon property. It does not include a deputy sheriff, as the latter can only act for and in the name of the sheriff." Wilson v. Russell, 81 N. W. 645, 650, 4 Dak. 376.

Public officials are merely agents of the state for the carrying out of public purposes, and their selection and the fixing of the time for which they shall serve are matters of public convenience, and do not fall within the scope of the term "contract" as applied to individuals. Duer v. Dashiell, 47 Atl. 1040, 1041, 91 Md. 660.

OFFICIAL ACT.

"Official act," within the object of a bond given by a deputy sheriff to make the sureties responsible for the due performance of his official acts, does not mean a lawful act of the officer in the service of process. If so, the sureties would never be responsible. It means any act done by the officer in his official capacity under color and by virtue of his office. Turner v. Simson, 137 Mass. 191, 192.

By an official act is not meant the lawful act of an officer in the service of process, for if this were so the sureties who became liable for his official acts would never be responsible. It means any act done by the officer in his official capacity, under color of title and by virtue of his office. Turner v. Sisson, 137 Mass. 191. The distinction originally made between acts done by virtue of an office and acts done by color of office has been entirely disregarded by leading authorities within the last few years. Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 4 Sup. Ct. 286, 28 L. Ed. 837. The object of an official bond is to obtain indemnity against the misuse of an official position for wrong purposes; and that which is done under color of office, and which would obtain no credit, except for its appearing to be a regular official act, is within the protection of the bond. Hall v. Tierney, 95 N. W. 219, 220, 89 Minn. 407 (citing Murfree, Off. Bonds, § 211).

Under Rev. St. art. 4897, making the sheriff responsible for the official acts of their deputies, the Legislature, in the use of the term "official," will be presumed to have had knowledge of the well-defined distinction between official acts and acts done colore officii—a distinction on which many of the apparently conflicting cases may perhaps be reconciled—and to have intended to include responsibility for mere usurpation of authority on the part of the deputy. Mad-dox v. Hudgeons, 72 S. W. 414, 415, 81 Tex. Civ. App. 291.

OFFICIAL ACTION.

Separate individual action on the part of the members of a municipal board, even though all might concur, is not an official action, and does not bind a municipality. Burkett v. City of Athens (Tenn.) 59 S. W. 667, 668.

OFFICIAL BALLOT.

In statutes relative to elections the term "official ballot" shall mean a ballot prepared for any election or caucus by public authority at public expense. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 104, c. 11, § 1.

OFFICIAL BOND.

A bond taken in pursuance of a public statute falls under the description of an "official bond." Faurote v. State, 11 N. E. 472, 474, 110 Ind. 463.

An official bond is an obligation under which the sureties may, on default of their principal, become liable to pay money to another. Connor v. Corson, 83 N. W. 588, 591, 13 S. D. 550.

The term "official bond," as used in Act March 21, 1871, providing that the remedy against the sheriff for failure to collect and pay over the tax listed to him by the tax collector shall be by motion or suit on his "official bond," should be construed to include every bond executed by the sheriff in obedience to law, by which his sureties undertake that he shall discharge a public duty imposed on him by law as sheriff, and is not limited to the bond executed by him at the time he takes the oath of office. Anderson v. Thompson, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 132, 136.

OFFICIAL CAPACITY.

The commissioner of pensions has the authority to appoint examining surgeons and to organize boards of surgeons. Therefore the person thus appointed acts under or by virtue of the authority lawfully exercised by the pension office through its head, the commissioner, the same being an office of the government. The authority under which they act is derived from the office of pensions, and their action is official in that they act on behalf of an office of the government; and they act in an official capacity because they are representatives of the pension office, and their services are in aid of the official duties committed to that office. A person may act in an official capacity because he is an officer lawfully appointed and qualified and acts as such, or he may act in an official capacity because he lawfully performs duties which are of an official character. Therefore members of boards of surgeons come within the provisions of section 5501, Rev. St. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3709], which impose a penalty on any one accepting a bribe while acting in an official capacity. United States v. Van Leuven (U. S.) 62 Fed. 62, 65.

Code, § 92, subd. 1, requiring actions against a sheriff in respect to liabilities incurred by reason of acts in his official capacity to be brought within three years, construed to include a trespass by the sheriff in levying on property not belonging to the judgment debtor, though the liability arises in tort. Cumming v. Brown, 43 N. Y. 514, 515.

Code Civ. Proc. § 885, which provides that an action against a sheriff or coroner upon a liability incurred by him by doing an act in his official capacity, or by the omission of an official duty, except the nonpayment of money collected upon an execution, must be brought within one year, refers to a liability incurred by official malfeasance or misfeasance, but not to a liability arising out of a mutual contract voluntarily entered into by a sheriff or coroner, for his own convenience, with another. Rice v. Penfield, 2 N. Y. Supp. 641, 49 Hun, 368.

The fact that a schedule of fees has been prescribed for the services of an officer is not an invariable test that the enumerated services are the only ones rendered in his "official capacity," within the meaning of an act providing that his salary shall be in full for all services rendered in his "official capacity." Hennepin County Com'r's v. Dickey, 90 N. W. 775, 776, 86 Minn. 831.

OFFICIAL CERTIFICATE.

The certificate of an invoice for the convenience and security of the collector of customs and the government, which was a memorandum between the officers in the customhouse as a part of their system of checks and authentications, and was not an official document required by the merchant, nor given to him, is not an official certificate, for which the collector is entitled to fees. Cochran v. Schell, 2 Sup. Ct. 801, 807, 107 U. S. 617, 27 L. Ed. 490.

OFFICIAL DEED.

A certificate of the county auditor executed under section 19, c. 2, Gen. Laws 1874, assigning the right of the state to lands bid in at tax sale, is an "official deed," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1878, c. 75, § 15. Pfefferle v. Wieland, 56 N. W. 824, 55 Minn. 202.

OFFICIAL DUTY.

Official duties are the duties imposed on officers of the government. In Owners of Land v. People, 118 Ill. 296, it is said official duties are supposed to be susceptible of classification under three heads—of legislative, executive, and judicial, corresponding to the three departments of government bearing the same designation; but the classification cannot be very exact, and there are many officers whose duties cannot be properly, or at least exclusively, arranged under either of these heads. People v. Hoffman, 5 N. E. 598, 608, 116 Ill. 587, 56 Am. Rep. 793.

The phrase "faithful performance of official duty," as used in a bond requiring a faithful performance of official duty, should be construed as equivalent to a recital of all the statutory duties of the officer in the bond, and is as binding on the principal and sureties as if such duties were inserted. State v. Nevins, 7 Pac. 650, 651, 19 Nev. 162, 8 Am. St. Rep. 878.

Where a law requires surveyors to give bond for the faithful disbursement of public money, it is evident that it contemplates such surveyors as disbursing officers. Nevertheless, where the statute requires that bond be given both for the disbursement of money and for the faithful discharge of the duties of the office, and in fact the bond is conditioned only on the latter, a serious question arises as to whether it was not open to prove that the disbursement of money was not known as one of the "duties of the office," and included in the general words. Farrar v. United States, 30 U. S. (5 Pet.) 373, 388, 8 L. Ed. 159.

An act requiring a bond by the cashier of a bank, conditioned for "the faithful performance of the duties of his office," was complied with by a bond conditioned that he should "faithfully perform all the duties of his office according to law and the by-laws of the institution," as the condition required nothing which could not have been required under the statutory bond. Bank of Carlisle v. Hopkins, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 245, 246, 15 Am. Dec. 118.

The words "duties" and "duties of their office" as used in the act of 1868 relating to elections and electors—section 18 providing for the punishment of any person who, without just and reasonable cause, neglects or refuses to perform any of the duties required of him by the act, and section 8 providing that all registrars and deputy registrars shall, before entering on the duties of their office, take the oath by law provided for executive and judicial officers—have the same meaning, and comprehend only official acts to be done by the officer after being duly sworn, and do not include the taking of the oath by a registrar of election, the refusal to take which does not render him liable to the penalty. State v. Maynard, 41 Conn. 540, 541.

OFFICIAL FUNCTION.

A secret service operative, employed by the Secretary of the Treasury to aid in the detection, prosecution, and suppression of crimes against revenue laws, with which duty the secretary is charged while in the performance of such service, is acting, on behalf of the United States, in an "official function" of the Secretary, within Rev. St. § 5451 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3880], making it a criminal offense to bribe, or attempt to bribe, any officer of the United States or any person acting for or on behalf of the United States in an official function under or by authority of a department or office of the government thereof. It does not require that one who exercises an official function should be an officer of the United States. The official function is not necessarily a function belonging to the office, held by the person acting on behalf of the United States. It may also be a function belonging to the office held by his superior, which function has been committed to the subordinate, whether to a lower officer or to a mere employé for the purpose of being executed. United States v. Ingham (U. S.) 97 Fed. 935, 936.

OFFICIAL MISCONDUCT.

See, also, "Misconduct in Office."

Const. art. 5, § 3, provides that the district court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor involving official misconduct. Rev. St. art. 8393, declares that "by 'official misconduct,' as used in this title with reference to county officers, is meant any unlawful behavior in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, of any officer intrusted in any manner with the administration of justice or the execution of the laws; and under this head of official misconduct are included any willful or corrupt failure, refusal, or neglect of an officer to perform any duty enjoined on him by law." In construing these provisions as applied to an indictment of a sheriff that charged him with negligently permitting the escape of persons in his legal custody, who were charged or convicted of felonies less than capital, the court said: "The Legislature having defined 'official misconduct,' such definition materially restricts the general significance of the term as used in the Constitution, if it was so used in its common acceptance, and thus limits the jurisdiction of the district court to that class of misdemeanors which involve unlawful official behavior on the part of a county officer, willful or corrupt in its character, no matter whether it is an act or omission. It was not the intention of the Constitution to burden the district court with every possible act or omission of the officer for which the law fixed no penalty, and the omission of which may have been prompted by casual inadvertence instead of corrupt or willful design or negligence"—and held that the indictment did not charge an offense of which the district court had any jurisdiction. Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 212, 214, 216, 217.

By "official misconduct," as used in the title relating to the removal of officers, with reference to county officers, is meant any unlawful behavior in relation to the duties of his office, willful in its character, of any officer intrusted in any manner with the administration of justice or the execution of the laws; and under this head of official misconduct are included any willful or corrupt failure, refusal, or neglect of an officer to perform any duty enjoined on him by law. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3534.

Where a jailer, being an officer, is charged with the custody and safe-keeping of a person who has been accused or convicted of a capital offense, he is charged with the performance of a duty imposed by law, and, if he negligently permits such person to escape, he is guilty of a violation of the law, constituting a misdemeanor involving "official misconduct," within the meaning of the Constitution, declaring that the district court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanors involving official misconduct. Hatch v. State, 10 Tex. App. 515, 517.

Under such statutory definition of "official misconduct" an officer who willfully demands fees not allowed by law is guilty of official misconduct, willful in its character, and a conviction of that offense is a conviction involving misconduct which not only warrants, but demands, his removal from office. Brackenridge v. State, 11 S. W. 630, 633, 27 Tex. App. 512, 531, 4 L. R. A. 360.

The words "official misconduct," as used in Code, § 305, which provides that only public officials who shall be guilty of any official misconduct shall be liable to indictment, must be construed as not to embrace the case provided for in section 308, providing that any judge of probate who shall willfully fail or neglect to discharge the duties and perform all the services which are required of him by law shall be indicted. State v. Green, 30 S. E. 683, 684, 52 S. C. 520.

The phrase "official misconduct," in Rev. St. arts. 3388, 3389, authorizing removal from office on account of official misconduct, does not include drunkenness, inasmuch as drunkenness in itself does not indicate corruption or neglect of duty. Craig v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 29, 30, 19 S. W. 504.

OFFICIAL NEWSPAPER.

Official newspapers are those designated by state or municipal legislative bodies, or agents empowered by them, in which the public acts, resolves, advertisements, and notices are required to be published. Albany County Com'rs v. Chaplin, 37 Pac. 370, 372, 5 Wyo. 74.

OFFICIAL RECORDS.

Certificates of death filed in the health department are "official records," within Code Civ. Proc. § 859, providing that certain official records shall be presumptive evidence of their contents. Robinson v. Supreme Commandery, Order of Golden Cross, 79 N. Y. Supp. 13, 16, 77 App. Div. 215.

OFFICIAL SERVICE.

The term "official service," as used in acts of Congress and the regulations of United States consuls, and providing that only the prescribed fees may be collected for official service, includes only such services required by law or by the regulations, and such services specified in any tariff of fees or official service. United States v. Mosby, 10 Sup. Ct. 327, 330, 133 U. S. 273, 33 L. Ed. 625.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHER.

An official stenographer is an officer of the court charged with the duty of carefully reporting all the proceedings on the trial, and his certificate is entitled to the same force and credit as that of any other officer. The transcription of his notes, when certified to by him and filed by the clerk of the court where the cause was tried, becomes a part of the record, and prima facie a correct statement of the testimony and proceedings on the trial, and is entitled to effect and credit as such in the Appellate Court. Tallmadge v. Hooper, 61 Pac. 849, 352, 37 Or. 508.

OFFICIAL TERM.

Const. art. 4, § 19, forbidding the increase or diminution of the salary of any executive officer during his "official term," means the term for which the officer is chosen or the whole period of time during which the officer may occupy or hold his office. Carille v. Henderson, 31 Pac. 117, 118, 17 Colo. 532.

OFFICIAL TITLE.

Under the occupying claimant's act (Gen. St. 1878, c. 75, § 15), providing for two classes of occupants, to wit: "First. . . . Second, those who have taken possession of any land under the official deed of any person or officer employed by law . . . to sell land," etc.—the second class may be defined as those who go into possession under color of what may be called "official title." Pfefferle v. Wieland, 55 Minn. 202, 209, 56 N. W. 824, 825.

OFFICINA JUSTITIÆ.

In the ordinary or legal court the officina justitiæ is kept, out of which issue all original writs that pass under the great seal. Those writs that related to the subject were originally kept in a hamper, and those that related to the interests of the crown were kept in a little bag. Hence arose the distinction between the "hanaper office" and the "petty-bag office." Those offices are at all times open to the subject, who may at any time demand and have, ex debito justitiæ, any writ that he may call for. The denomination "officina justitiæ" was adopted to signify that all justice between man and man proceeded from that source; it being, as it is styled in the books, the shop, mint, or manufactory of justice. Yates v. People (N. Y.) 6 Johns. 337, 363.

OFFSET.

An offset does not deny the existence or the merits of a claim, but is a contrary sum or claim, by which a given claim may be lessened or canceled. Leonard v. Charter Oak Life Ins. Co., 33 Atl. 511, 513, 65 Conn. 529.

The word "offset," in an answer which first denied the allegations of the complaint, and then set out facts showing the breach of a contract on the plaintiff's part, separate and distinct from the one sued upon, by reason of which defendants suffered damages, as a separate and distinct defense by way of offset to plaintiff's claim, was construed to be used as equivalent to the word "counterclaim," as the facts set forth in the answer show a counterclaim, within the definition given in Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 2, providing that a counterclaim must tend to diminish or defeat the plaintiff's recovery. Cable Flax Mills v. Early, 76 N. Y. Supp. 191, 193, 72 App. Div. 213.

The word "offsets," as used in a mechanic's lien law requiring the notice or statement of the demand for a lien to state the sum demanded over and above all credits and offsets, is substantially the same as "effects," as used in the notice or statement of the demand for a sum over and above all credits and effects. Merchant v. Humeston, 7 Pac. 903, 904, 2 Wash. T. 433.

"Offset," as used in a negotiable note purporting on its face to be payable without offset, should be construed to mean "without offset as against the holder by indorsement." The sole purpose and effect of offsets is to give negotiability and credit to the paper. They are not treated by the courts as having any effect between the maker and the original payee of the paper. Harmanson v. Bain (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 539, 541.

OFFSPRING.

The term "offspring," in a mortgage on mares and their offspring, includes increase. King v. Lacrosse, 44 N. W. 517, 518, 42 Minn. 483.

The word "offspring," by the common-law interpretation, embraces any heirs of a given description collectively as a class of persons, unless there is a direct intention plainly and clearly expressed to the contrary. Powell v. Brandon, 24 Miss. (2 Cushm.) 343, 365.

"Offspring," as used in a will making a certain disposition of property in case of testator's daughter dying without offspring by her husband, is a synonym for "issue," and issue cannot be lawful without marriage. Mitchell v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. Ry., 31 Atl. 67, 68, 165 Pa. 645.

In a devise to a girl of five years, of certain lots, and providing that in the event of her dying unmarried, or, if marrying, dying without offspring, then these lots were to be sold and the proceeds to be divided equally among certain other persons, the word "offspring" here used is but a synonym for "issue." Barber v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., 17 Sup. Ct. 438, 494, 166 U. S. 83, 41 L. Ed. 925.

The word "offspring," in a will devising testator's real estate to his son during his natural life, and, at his decease, to his legitimate offspring forever, but, in case the issue of the son should become extinct, then over to other devisees in fee, is used interchangeably with the word "issue"; but, even if it had not been defined by the use of the word "issue," it would still have been a term of limitation, and not of purchase. Allen v. Markle, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 117, 118.

"Offspring" is a word of limitation, not of purchase. As used in a devise of certain lots to a party, declaring that in the event of such party's dying unmarried, or, if married, dying without offspring by her husband, such lots should be sold, and the proceeds divided among other persons designated, did not create merely a defeasible fee, and, if it did not vest in the devisee a fee simple, it at least gave her an estate tail. Barber v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. (U. S.) 69 Fed. 501, 504.

OFTEN.

A testator directed that the whole of his property, real and personal, be equally divided between his wife and children, and be kept together by his executor and executrix during the widowhood of his wife, or until his children became of age or married, and then, and not till then, "dividends take place as often as they become of age or marry." It was held that the word "often" implied a repetition of the act of division, and hence that the period of division was not to be delayed till all the children became of mature age or all were married. Charles v. Stickney, 50 Ala. 86, 88.

The words "often or daily" in an application for a life policy, requiring the applicant to state whether he uses intoxicating stimulants often or daily, is an inquiry as to his habit in that regard; not whether he uses such stimulants at all, but whether he uses any of them habitually. Etina Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 8 Sup. Ct. 381, 382, 123 U. S. 789, 81 L. Ed. 315.

OHIO.

"Ohio," as used in descriptions of the surveys of the townships of land in Indiana bordering on the Ohio, means the Ohio river. City of Madison v. Hildreth, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 274, 283.

OIKEI MANIA.

Oikei mania is a form of insanity manifesting itself in a morbid state of the domestic affections, as an unreasonable dislike of wife or child without cause or provocation. Ekin's Heirs v. McCracken (Pa.) 11 Phila. 534, 540.

OIL

See "Coal Oil."

See, also, "Mineral"; "Petroleum."

Oil is a mineral. Jennings v. Bloomfield, 49 Atl. 135, 136, 199 Pa. 638 (citing Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 36 Atl. 201, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601).

Oil is a mineral, and, being a mineral, is part of the realty. Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. (3 P. F. Smith) 229. In this it is like coal or any other natural product which in situ forms part of the land. It may become, by severance, personalty, or there may be a right to use or take it originating in custom or prescription, as the right of a life tenant to work opened mines, or to use timber for repairing buildings or fences on a farm. Nevertheless, whenever conveyance is made of it, whether that conveyance is called a lease or a deed, it is, in effect, the grant of part of the corpus of the estate, and not of a mere incorporeal right. Appeal of Stoughton, 38 Pa. 198, 201.

"Oil," as used in a lease of property to be occupied and worked for petroleum, rock or carbon oil, and not for any other purpose, and, if no oil was found in paying quantities within four years, the lease should be null and void, is not synonymous with "gas." Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 6 Atl. 74.

OIL IN BARRELS.

Where a fire policy was on refined "oil in barrels" at a refinery, such phrase could not by any construction be held to include oil in a cooling and settling tank. Weisenberger v. Harmony Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 442, 444.

OIL LEASE.

An oil lease investing the lessee with the right to remove all the oil in place in the premises was said by Chief Justice Sterrett, in Blakley v. Marshall, 34 Atl. 564, 174 Pa. 425, to be in legal effect a sale of a portion of the land. To the same effect are Kier v. Peterson, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 357, and Appeal of Stoughton, 38 Pa. 198; Jennings v. Bloomfield, 49 Atl. 135, 136, 199 Pa. 638; Southern Oil Co. v. Colquitt, 69 S. W. 169-171, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 292.

OIL REFINERY.

As building, see "Building (In Lien Laws)."

OIL TANKS.

As building, see "Building (In Lien Laws)."

OIL WELL.

The term "oil well," as used in the pleadings in an action for a mechanic's lien for material furnished for an oil well, etc., will be construed to embrace not only the mere hole in the earth, in the drilling of which the plaintiffs performed labor or furnished material, but also the derrick engine, boiler pump, piping, and appliances attached thereto. Haskell v. Gallagher, 50 N. E. 485, 486, 20 Ind. App. 224, 67 Am. St. Rep. 250.

The term "oil well," in Rev. St. § 3184, giving a mechanic's lien on oil wells, consists, in addition to the excavation or hole in the ground, of the drive pipe which is inserted in the ground, and the casing and iron tubing, but does not include the derrick or other things used in connection with the well. Devine v. Taylor (Ohio) 4 O. C. D. 248, 250.

There is no failure of consideration good as a defense against notes given for an oil well, by reason of the fact that the oil well does not produce oil sufficient to pay for its operation. Penniman v. Winner, 54 Md. 127, 135.

OILCLOTH FOUNDATION.

The terms "oilcloth foundations" and "floor cloth canvas," as used in Act June 6, 1872, § 4, imposing a duty on such materials, are convertible terms designating the same article. Arthur v. Cumming, 91 U. S. 362, 364, 23 L. Ed. 438.

OLD.

"Old," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 502, § 2, authorizing commissioners of highways to lay out new roads and discontinue old ones, does not necessarily mean an ancient or long existing road. The phrase "new road" means a road newly laid out where one was not, and the words "old road" are opposite thereto, and mean one laid out and used, whether long ago or of more recent date. People v. Griswold, 67 N. Y. 59, 61.

The words "old road," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 517, § 81, authorizing the discontinuance of an old road where it has become useless and unnecessary, implies a road for a time open to the public for its use, but by change of circumstances, and of local needs and habits of trade and intercourse, losing its usefulness. It does not mean a uselessness existing at the laying out of it. People v. Griswold, 67 N. Y. 59, 62.

Extrinsic evidence is admissible, in the construction of a building contract, to show that a clause in it requiring "old style roofing tin," had acquired a peculiar significance in the trade. Storck v. Meeker, 55 Mo. App. 26, 35.

OLD COUNTRY.

"Old country" is a term in common use to designate a country occupied by civilized man before the American continent was. It plainly means a different country from our country, just as the "old continent" means the continent of Europe as distinguished from our continent. It is both a geographical term and a term in common use to designate a country, and therefore it cannot be used as a trade-mark. Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. Iowa Soap Co. (U. S.) 122 Fed. 793, 797, 59 C. C. A. 54.

OLD METAL.

In an action on a fire policy against loss on a junk dealer's stock of old metals, etc., it was proper to admit evidence that the phrase "old metals" had acquired a broader signification than belonged to such words ordinarily, and to permit plaintiff to prove that old metals, in the understanding of the trade, included old rubber and old glass. Mooney v. Howard Ins. Co., 188 Mass. 375, 52 Am. Rep. 277.

OLDEST IN OFFICE.

Hill's Code, § 2601, providing that the "oldest in office" of the school directors present shall be chairman of all school meetings, means the director who has held office for the longest time under an election. State v. McKee, 25 Pac. 292, 298, 20 Or. 120.

OLEINE.

In Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 707, 26 L. Ed. 279, the court said: "It was discovered by Chevreul, an eminent French chemist, as early as 1813, that ordinary fat, tallow, and oil are chemical compounds consisting of a base which has been termed glycerin, and of different acids, termed generally fat acids, but specifically stearic, margaric, and oleic acids. These acids, in combination severally with glycerin, form stearin, margarin, and olein. They are found in different proportions in the various neutral fats and oils; stearin predominating in some, margarin in others, and olein in others. When separated from their base (glycerin), they take up an equivalent of water, and are called free-fat acids." Tilghman v. Proctor, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 895, 125 U. S. 183, 31 L. Ed. 864.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Oleomargarine is a product or compound made wholly or partly out of any fat, oil, or oleaginous substance. Cook v. State, 20 South. 360, 362, 110 Ala. 40.

The term "oleomargarine" is used to designate compounds resembling butter in appearance and flavor, put on the market as a substitute for it. A statute requiring oleomargarine to be distinctly marked is within the police power of the state. Butler v. Chambers, 30 N. W. 308, 309, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638.

The word "oleomargarine," as defined in section 4 of Act May 18, 1894 (91 Ohio Laws, p. 274), does not include butter made from pure milk or cream without any adulteration, though it may be deficient in butter fats. State v. Ransick, 56 N. E. 1024, 1025, 62 Ohio St. 283.

Oleomargarine is usually made of leaf lard and beef fat, and churned in milk and cream, or milk, cream, and butter, to give it flavor, with the vegetable dye annatto; and a product known as "fruit of the meadow," which is composed of leaf lard and beef fat bathed in salt ice water for the purpose of taking away the fat and lard odor, and containing no mixture of cream, milk, or butter to give it a butter flavor, and no coloring matter to give it a butter appearance, is not oleomargarine, and is not taxable as such under Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, 24 Stat. 209 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2228]. Braun & Fitts v. Coyne (U. S.) 125 Fed. 331.

For the purpose of the statutory provisions relative to the sale of oleomargarine, the word "oleomargarine" shall, in addition to its ordinary meaning, include "butterine," "imitation butter," and any article, substance, or compound made in imitation or semblance of butter or as a substitute for butter, and not made exclusively and wholly of milk or cream, or containing any fats, oils, or grease not produced from milk or cream. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 547, c. 56, § 35.

For the purposes of an act relating to oleomargarine, certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annatto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or, when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2228.

OLOGRAPHIC WILL.

See "Holographic Will."

LOGY.

"Ology" is derived from a Greek word which means a discourse or treatise, and in the English language it is used as a termination of the name of a science, or of the subject indicated by the prefix. Stockham v. Western Union Tel. Co., 63 Pac. 658, 659, 10 Kan. App. 580.

OMISSION.

See "Willful Omission."

The term "omission or mistake" in the statute giving the court power in any stage of the proceedings to permit amendments by changing or adding the name or names of any party plaintiff or defendant, whenever it shall appear to them that a mistake or omission has been made in the name or names of any party, means "something done or left undone in the bringing of the suit, that will prevent a trial of the cause upon its merits." McLoney v. Edgar, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 27, 29.

Failure to appoint commissioners for more than seven years is an "omission to appoint," within the meaning of Pub. St. c. 44, § 59, providing that the omission to appoint commissioners to allow claims against the estate of a deceased person will not prevent the prosecution of the claims against the executor, etc. Wilkinson v. Winne's Estate, 15 Minn. 159, 167 (Gil. 123, 128).

The meaning of the word "omissions," in a building contract which provides that if the owner, at any time during the progress of certain buildings, desires any alterations, deviations, additions, or omissions, he shall be at liberty to do so, and the same shall in no way affect or make void the contract, but will be added to or deducted from the contract, as the case may be, is limited to things which, upon the conditions specified, may be entirely left out of the building, and does not extend to anything within the specifications which the owner may elect to take off the contractor's hands and perform himself. Shaver v. Murdock, 36 Cal. 293, 296.

Code, § 1990, making it criminal for public officers to willfully "omit or neglect to discharge" any of the duties of their office, will be construed not to include the acts of the county commissioners in auditing accounts for and receiving a greater amount of mileage than was due them. State v. Norris, 16 S. E. 2, 111 N. C. 652.

As concealment.

"Omission," as used in a policy of insurance which contained a condition that any omission to make known every fact material to the risk should avoid the policy, is equivalent to "concealment." Rumsey v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. 396, 398; Ramsey v. Same (U. S.) 2 Fed. 429, 431.

As error or mistake.

Act 1854, providing that notwithstanding any mistake in the name or names, or omission to name the real owner, an assessment shall be valid, etc., does not mean an entire omission of the owner's name, but means a mistaken name or the substitution of a wrong owner for the real owner. Tindall v. Vanderbilt, 33 N. J. Law (4 Vroom) 38, 39.

"Omission," as used in Rev. St. c. 6, § 142, providing that any error, mistake, or omission by the assessors, collector, or treasurer shall not render the tax void, but any person paying such tax may bring his action against the town, and recover the sum not raised for a legal object, should be construed in connection with the words "error" and "mistake," which precede it, and be interpreted with reference to the rule of ejusdem generis. It was intended to signify an absence of the requisite formalities in assessments and commitments, and a failure to observe the regulations of the statute which were intended to promote method, system, and uniformity in the mode of proceeding. It was clearly never in the contemplation of the Legislature that it would be extended to apply to cases of omission to include in the assessment all the property which ought to be taxed. Emery v. Inhabitants of Sanford, 48 Atl. 118, 119, 92 Me. 525.

OMIT.

The term "omit," in an insurance policy providing that, if insured shall omit to communicate any circumstances which are material to the risk, the insurance shall be of no force, has reference solely to the time when the insurance is effected, and therefore the policy is not avoided by the subsequent omission of the insured to notify the company that the risk has become more hazardous by reason of a more hazardous occupation being carried on therein. Pim v. Reid, 6 Man. & G. 1, 13.

"Omission to make known," as used in a policy of fire insurance, providing that it should be void for "omission to make known a fact material to the risk," cannot be construed to include a failure to make a full disclosure of the insured's interest in the premises when he applied for insurance. Ramsey v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (U. S.) 2 Fed. 429, 431.

The words "omit to provide" in Civ. Code Cal. § 1307, providing that when any testator omits to provide in his will for any child, etc., means simply an omission to make provision in the will, and has no reference to the pecuniary value of such provision. In re Callaghan's Estate, 119 Cal. 541, 51 Pac. 860. Any provision which afforded evidence that the child had not been forgotten is sufficient to prevent the application of the statute relating to pretermitted children. The statute not being intended to produce equality or diminish the power of the testator, but merely to regulate its exercise, a vested remainder carrying with it a vested right to property, though postponing its actual enjoyment, does not show an omission to provide for the child to whom it is devised. Allison v. Allison's Ex'rs (Va.) 44 S. E. 904, 917, 63 L. R. A. 920.

OMNIBUS.

An omnibus is a very large kind of coach, "which serves to carry passengers, newspapers, and furniture." Cincinnati, L. & S. Turnpike Co. v. Neil, 9 Ohio (9 Ham.) 11, 13.

An ordinance providing for the licensing of omnibuses, or vehicles in the nature thereof, applies to passenger street railway cars, as they are omnibuses, or, if not, they are vehicles in the nature of omnibuses. They are open to all and intended for all, and the change of form from that of anything known when the act of assembly was passed is not a change in the nature of the vehicle. In one city, at least, of Europe, large conveyances intended for indiscriminate public use run sometimes upon a railroad track and at other times on the common pavement. The form of the wheels or the character of the roadway over which a vehicle runs does not determine its nature so much as do the uses to which it is put and for which it was designed. Frankford & P. Pass. Ry. Co. v. City of Philadelphia, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 119, 125, 98 Am. Dec. 242.

OMNIBUS BILL.

Bills of a multifarious character are not inappropriately called "omnibus bills." Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184, 193, 74 Am. Dec. 522.

Bills joining a number of different subjects in one, thereby putting the executive under compulsion to accept some enactments that he cannot approve, or to defeat the whole, including others that he thinks desirable or even necessary, are popularly called "omnibus bills." Commonwealth v. Barnett, 48 Atl. 976, 977, 199 Pa. 161, 55 L. R. A. 882.

The term "omnibus bills" is used to designate legislative bills which include in one act various separate and distinct matters.

OMNIBUS COUNT.

An omnibus count, in the law of pleading, is a count which combines in one all the money counts, with one for goods sold and delivered, work and labor, and an account stated. It is indorsed by Mr. Chitty in his work on pleading in volume 1, pp. 348, 349, and approved in Webber v. Tivill, 2 Saund. 122, and Inhabitants of Cape Elizabeth v. Lombard, 70 Me. 396, 400. Griffin v. Murdock, 34 Atl. 80, 88 Me. 254.

OMNIBUS LINE.

"Omnibus line" means a line of coaches for the carriage of passengers and their baggage." Parmelee v. McNulty, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 556, 557.

ON—UPON.

See "And so on."

The meaning of the word "upon" in any particular case must depend on the circumstances. In agreements to do a certain thing upon the happening or the doing of an act, it sometimes means before, sometimes concurrently, sometimes after. Scott v. Parker, 1 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 806, 818.

The word "upon" may mean at a certain time or before or after it. In re Hofmann (Pa.) 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. 563, 565 (citing Reg. v. Humphrey, 10 Adol. & E. 365).

The statement in a contract of sale that the above cargo "is accepted on the report and samples of" a certain firm amounts to a warranty that the bulk was equal to the report and samples, and not merely a representation that the report was a genuine report of such firm and the samples taken by them. Russell v. Nicolopulo, 8 C. B. (N. S.) 362, 367.

An act giving a lien for labor or work done on a railroad does not include materials furnished and work and labor done in laborers' machine shops upon locomotive engines. Chattanooga, R. & O. R. Co. v. Evans (U. S.) 66 Fed. 809, 818, 14 C. C. A. 116.

Webster defined the word "on" as meaning, among other things, in reference or in relation to; and hence where plaintiff let a contract to one M. to do the stone work on a building, providing for monthly payments not to exceed 80 per cent. of the estimated value of the work "performed on the building," the contract should be construed as meaning that payments to M. should be based on the stone prepared for the building, as well as that actually put in. Smith

v. Molleson, 26 N. Y. Supp. 653, 658, 74 Hun. 606.

Along synonymous.

"Upon," as used in Laws 1890, c. 565, § 4, permitting a railroad company to construct its road across, along, or upon any highway, means only a casual or incidental occupation and use of the highway, and does not authorize a company to build its entire railway along the highway. Burt v. Lima & H. F. R. Co., 21 N. Y. Supp. 482, 483.

"Along and upon," as used in Code 1887, c. 54, § 50, relating to the use of public streets by railroad companies, means along in the street, at, above, or below the common level of the existing or changed surface of the street, according as the particular facts and circumstances may require, but does not authorize an occupancy by the railroad, for its exclusive use, of the entire street, or of such considerable portion of it as would substantially prevent the use of it by the public. The word could not mean "along the side of the street," because such meaning would confer no right whatever in respect to the street, but would leave the railroad to make its way through adjoining lots owned by private individuals without the consent of the city or any aid of the statute. Arbenz v. Wheeling & H. R. Co., 10 S. E. 14, 17, 38 W. Va. 1, 5 L. R. A. 371.

"On," "over," and "along," as used in an ordinance authorizing a railroad company to construct a switch on, over, and along a certain alley, are all synonymous, and the word "along" does not necessarily mean "by the side of." We say "the troops marched along the highway," by which we mean that they marched on or over, not by the side of it. Heath v. Des Moines & St. L. Ry. Co., 15 N. W. 573, 574, 61 Iowa, 11.

"Upon," within the meaning of Laws 1890, c. 152, § 2, declaring that no bicycle sidepaths shall be constructed upon or along any regularly constructed or maintained sidewalk, is synonymous with the word "along" as so used, the provision being intended to prevent the appropriation of any portion of a regularly constructed sidewalk for a bicycle path, and not to forbid the construction of a bicycle path at the side of or adjoining any such sidewalk. Ryan v. Preston, 66 N. Y. Supp. 162, 163, 32 Misc. Rep. 92.

As as soon as.

"Upon receipt thereof," in a covenant to pay over certain proceeds upon receipt thereof, means as soon as such proceeds are realized and the covenantor has power to receive them, regardless of whether he receives them in fact, it being his duty to collect them. Smith v. Nesbitt, 2 Man., G. & S. 236, 237.

As across.

Gen. St. c. 64, § 2, providing that incorporated telegraph companies may, under the provisions of certain sections, construct lines of electric telegraph upon the highways and public roads, etc., includes crossing a way by the wires. Banks v. Highland St. Ry. Co., 136 Mass. 485, 486.

Actual contact.

The word "upon" does not always, in legal or other phrase, import actual contact; so the word "upon," as used in a declaration alleging that defendant unlawfully and negligently drove its locomotive engine upon the plaintiff, does not necessarily import actual contact, and therefore there is no variance between the allegation and the proof showing that the train, without signal, ran at a high rate of speed very close to plaintiff's horse and wagon, thereby frightening the horse, though not actually striking either the horse or wagon. Bevel v. Newport News & M. V. R. Co., 84 W. Va. 538, 546, 12 S. E. 582.

Adjacent.

The words "in and on the alley," in a declaration averring that plaintiff's injury resulted from an excavation in and on an alley, while taken in the strictest sense, would not cover the case if the excavation were shown to be adjacent to, and immediately along the side of, the alley, yet, taken in the ordinary acceptance of the phraseology, they would. We speak of a town or city as situated on a lake or river. The subject-matter defines the language, so that everybody understands at once that the place is on the bank or shore of the lake or stream—is hard by or adjacent to it; so that in the present instance the language of the declaration, especially when taken in connection with the other descriptive circumstances, fairly means that the excavation was along the side of and adjacent to the alley, just as the church would be referred to as situated on the alley, or on Church street, yet no one understanding it to be anywhere but adjacent to the street or alley, or along the side of one or the other. Niblett v. City of Nashville, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 684, 686, 27 Am. Rep. 755.

In the phrase "upon, along, or off the Atlantic seaboard," the word "upon" refers to the waters adjacent to and easily reached from the coast line. It relates to any given spot or place. American Fisheries Co. v. Lennen (U. S.) 118 Fed. 869, 878.

As after.

"On," as used in a statutory provision that the court may grant alimony on any such decree, means "after." The word is an elastic expression, and does not exclude the idea of after. Bradley v. Bradley, 3 Prob. Div. 47, 50, 82 Moak, Eng. R. 36, 39.

A covenant in a lease providing that on the expiration of the said lease the lessee would deliver up the possession of the premises to the lessor should not be construed as contemplating any other thing than the full term for keeping the covenant. Reed v. Snowhill, 16 Atl. 679, 680, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 162.

As used in St. 59 Geo. III, c. 184, § 189, providing that an order for stopping paths through a churchyard is to be made with consent of two justices, on notice being given in the manner prescribed by St. 55 Geo. III, c. 68, which act provides that the stopping up was to be by an order of two justices, providing that notices were given in the form announced, which form stated that the order had been signed, the words "on notice being given" must, with reference to such an order, be read "after notice given." Reg. v. Arkwright, 12 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 990, 996.

"Upon each payment," as used in an agreement and receipt by a pledgee of stock providing that upon each payment by the pledgor a proportionate amount of the shares of stock should be given up to the pledgor, meant that the shares were to be returned after the money was paid—that delivery was to take place on payment and as a result of it. Scott v. Parker, 1 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 809, 818.

As at the time of.

The word "on," in a will devising property to certain persons on the death of testator's son, was construed to mean at the death of the son or upon the death of the son, and not in the event of the death of the son, and therefore not to imply a contingency requiring the death of the son during testator's life in order to constitute a valid devise to the persons to take at the death of the son. Cromwell v. Cromwell, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1063, 1065, 55 App. Div. 103.

"Upon" or "on" the death of a certain party means at the time of, and such a reference to the devolution of an estate points as clearly to the time of the death as the word "after." "Upon" does not imply an estate before the death. In re Melcher, 54 Atl. 379, 380, 24 R. I. 575.

The phrase "upon her decease," as used in a will devising property in trust to a person, and in further trust to convey the same during the natural life of the said S. A., from time to time, to such persons, in such portions, and on such considerations as she may in writing bequest, and in further trust, upon her decease, to make such disposition of said property as she may, by any writing of a testamentary character, direct, is used in opposition to the expression in the preceding sentence, "during the natural life of said S. A.," and empowers her, when she comes to die, to give the property by will to whomsoever she pleases. Weed v. Knorr, 1 S. E. 167, 173, 77 Ga. 636.

"On," as used in a life insurance policy providing that the assured should be entitled to a paid-up policy after the payment of three annual premiums, on the surrender to the company on or before it shall expire by the nonpayment of the fourth or any subsequent premium, should be construed as referring to the time before and at the expiration of the policy, and not after the expiration. "Before it shall expire" includes all of the time up to the instant of the expiration of the policy by the nonpayment of the premiums, and "on" must, to have any effect, mean the instant of the nonpayment of the premium. Sheerer v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 16 Fed. 720, 723; Id., 20 Fed. 856.

The words "upon his admission" as used in 9 Geo. IV, c. 17, §§ 2, 3, requiring every person who shall be elected to the office of alderman within one calendar month next before or upon his admission into such office to make and subscribe a certain declaration, mean at the time of his admission, and not within a reasonable time thereafter, so that the authorities who admit him may prescribe the order in which the ceremony forming parts of the admission shall take place. Reg. v. Humphrey, 10 Adol. & E. 335.

Condition precedent.

Where a contract provides that a payment shall be made on the doing of some particular thing, the word "on" implies that the doing of such thing is a condition precedent to the payment. Adams v. Williams (Pa.) 2 Watts & S. 227, 228; Welch v. Matthews, 98 Mass. 131.

"On," as used in a contract which provides that on a certain payment one of the parties shall deliver to the other certain stock, means that the delivery is dependent on the payment. Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R. Co., 12 Pac. 665, 667, 14 Or. 358.

The word "upon," as used in a contract of subscription, "provided that upon such payment there shall be delivered a certificate of stock," etc., indicates a state of dependence; a tender of the stock would be prerequisite to a suit for the subscription. Courtright v. Deeds, 37 Iowa, 503, 508.

Under an order giving judgment for plaintiff on a demurrer by the defendant, with leave to the defendant to withdraw his demurrer and plead "on payment of costs," such payment was a condition precedent to the act of pleading. Sands v. McClellan (N. Y.) 6 Cow. 582.

In an order setting aside a verdict and ordering new trial "on payment of costs" by the plaintiff, such payment should be construed to be a condition precedent to any further proceeding in the case, without the performance of which, or until demand and tender, the cause could not be noticed for trial. Sloan v. Somers, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 46, 47, 35 Am. Dec. 526.

An order declaring a nonsuit to be set aside "on payment of costs" has no other effect than to impose an obligation on the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by his default, and, if he does not, may furnish a good cause for attachment. The payment of costs is not a condition precedent to be performed before the full operation of the order. Dana v. Gill, 28 Ky. (5 J. J. Marsh.) 242, 243, 20 Am. Dec. 255.

The plaintiff agreed to supply the defendant with a quantity of bricks upon the following terms: "Terms of payment, four months' account, and at the end of four months a settlement shall be made, and eight months longer will be given on your paying interest on the amount at the rate of 5 per cent; and, if a further three months is required, it will be given on your paying the current rate of interest on the amount." Held, that the payment of the interest was not a condition precedent to the defendant's having the eight-months and three-months further credit. Dodd v. Ponsford, 6 C. B. (N. S.) 824, 833.

"Upon," as used in a will in which certain property is left in trust as follows: "The same is hereby declared to be held in trust for the said R. W. during his life, and for his heirs after his decease, upon the said R. W. complying with and fulfilling certain covenants"—is equivalent to "on condition that." Little v. Wilcox, 13 Atl. 463, 474, 119 Pa. 439.

In construing a certificate of deposit payable "on return of this receipt," the court said: "These words do not make it payable upon a contingency, or constitute a condition precedent to any payment. If they did, no recovery could be had without a return of the certificate. This restriction would be implied, if not expressed. It is implied in every promissory note, and there is also an implied exception on account of mistake or accident. When this occurred, courts of equity formerly enforced the obligation upon such terms of indemnity as was deemed just, and now courts of law may enforce it upon required observance of the statutory indemnity." Frank v. Wessels, 64 N. Y. 155, 158.

The expression "upon the return of a citation," where it is used in a provision requiring an act to be done in the surrogate's court, relates to the time and place at which the citation is returnable, or to which the hearing is adjourned; includes a supplemental citation issued to bring in a party who ought to be, but has not been, cited; and implies that, before doing an act specified, due proof must be made that all persons required to be cited have been duly cited. Oode Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 2614, subd. 10.

The word "upon," in a trust declaring certain lands to be held upon fulfilling certain covenants, held to be the equivalent of "on condition that," etc. Little v. Wilcox, 13 Atl. 468, 474, 119 Pa. 439.

As contiguous or near to.

Where a statute requires certain improvements to be made on the street, the word "on" will be construed to mean at, near, adjacent to. Such is the meaning of the word "on" when used to designate a place. Hempstead v. City of Des Moines, 3 N. W. 123, 126, 52 Iowa, 303.

"On the south side of the street" is not equivalent to the expression "south of the street," but, when used as part of the description of a lot, properly refers only to a lot actually bordering on a street on its south side, so that a complaint in ejectment describing the premises sued for as "lot nine, on the south side of O street," is not supported by evidence as to a lot not bordering on the street, but south of the street. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 28 South. 948, 949, 77 Miss. 788.

"On a railroad," as used in a deed describing certain land as lying on the L. & M. Railroad, which land lay near to, but did not border on, the road, meant "near to," and hence the deed was not void for misdescription. Burnam v. Banks, 45 Mo. 349, 351.

"On" does not always mean on top of or resting upon, for sometimes, but less frequently, it means contiguous to, as when we say a house on Main street, or a man stood on either side of the house. Hence the word "on," as used in a contract of reinsurance limiting the risk to resin, turpentine, etc., in barrels while awaiting shipment in or on certain warehouses or sheds, creates an ambiguity in the meaning of the policy which the court has to settle. London Assur. Corp. v. Thompson, 62 N. E. 1066-1068, 170 N. Y. 94.

The phrase "on the side of the road," as used in a complaint in trespass against highway surveyors for breaking and entering plaintiff's closes and cutting down and destroying his hedges, the statement that the trees were "on plaintiff's farm and on the side of the road" was equivalent to a statement that he was the owner of the "land next adjoining the road." Jenney v. Brook, 6 Q. B. 823, 842.

Sess. Laws 1861, p. 67, § 1, providing that all persons having claims "on the bank, margin, or neighborhood" of any stream of water, creek, or river shall be entitled to use the water thereof, includes all lands in the

The words "on the western boundary of Iowa," as used in an act of Congress authorizing and requiring the Union Pacific Railroad Company to construct a single line of railroad and telegraph from a point on the western boundary of Iowa, are not technical words, and should be construed in their ordinary signification, which is a point in Iowa at the eastern shore of the Missouri river. It is common usage to speak of the boundary of a state or county as a river, though the legal boundary may be the middle of the river, and particularly when anything has to be constructed on such a boundary, which from its nature must be constructed on dry land, and no one would understand the place of construction as any other than the shore of the river. It is perfectly legitimate and in accordance with everyday usage to say that a house built in Illinois on the eastern shore of the Mississippi stands on the western boundary of the state, though the legal boundary of the state is the midchannel of the river. The company was therefore authorized to construct a bridge across the Missouri, to be used for the purposes of the road as a part of its line. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 346, 23 L. Ed. 428.

The word "on," in the condition on a railroad ticket stating that it is good for one continuous passage on and from the date stamped on the back, signifies that it is good for the passage on the day named. Texas & O. R. Co. v. Powell, 35 S. W. 841, 842, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 212.

"On," as used in a railroad ticket containing the statement that it is good for one continuous passage on and from the date stamped on the back, was employed for the purpose of connecting the phrase "good for one continuous passage" with the words "date stamped on the back," and the meaning of the word "on," as so used, explains the time at which the passage is to begin. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Demille (Tex.) 41 S. W. 147, 148; Demille v. Texas & N. O. R. Co., 42 S. W. 540, 91 Tex. 215.

As center of highway in boundaries.

Where a conveyance describes land as bounding on or upon the road, highway, or street, without further description, the words "on the road" will be construed to mean the center of the road. Smith v. Slocumb, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 36, 37, 39 Am. Dec. 274; Peck v. Denniston, 121 Mass. 17, 19; Hollenbeck v. Rowley, 90 Mass. (3 Allen) 473, 475; Dodd v. Witt (Mass.) 29 N. E. 476, 478; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gould (Md.) 8 Atl. 754, 756; Hunt v. Brown (Md.) 23 Atl. 1029; Trustees of Hawesville v. Lander, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 679, 680; Lee v. Lee (N. Y.) 27 Hun. 1, 4; Dunham v. Williams, 37 N. Y. 251, 252; Anderson v. James, 27 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Rob.) 85, 87; Holloway v. Southmayd, 18 N. Y. Supp. 700, 708, 64 Hun. 682; Jackson v. Hathaway (N. Y.) 15 Johns. 447, 458, 8 Am. Dec. 268; Cochran v. Smith, 26 N. Y. Supp. 103, 106, 78 Hun. 597; Fraser v. Ott, 30 Pac. 793, 794, 95 Cal. 661; Moody v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 81, 37; Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484, 489; Henderson v. Hatterman (Ill.) 34 N. E. 1041, 1043; Snider v. Snider (Pa.) 3 Phila. 158, 159 (citing Union Burial Ground Soc. v. Robinson [Pa.] 5 Whart. 18); Witter v. Harvey (S. C.) 1 McCoñd, 67, 71, 10 Am. Dec. 650. But this presumption, like all other presumptions, may be rebutted; and if it plainly appears from the language used and the nature of the property that the grantor meant to limit the grant to the line of the road, and reserve for himself the fee in the roadbed, subject to the use of it by the public as a highway, then, of course, this plainly expressed intention must prevail. Hunt v. Brown (Md.) 23 Atl. 1029; Moody v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 81, 37.

"Where land is sold bounded on a highway, or upon or along a highway, the thread or center line of the same is presumed to be the limit and boundary of such land, in strict analogy with the case of a stream of water not navigable; and the same rule applies to a private street as well in the city as in the country, opened by the grantor, upon which he sells house lots bounding upon it." Trustees of Hawesville v. Lander, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 679, 680 (citing Washb. Real Prop. p. 686). But this doctrine does not extend to a case where the courses and distances in a description of land brings it only to the north side of a road, and therefore the land does not extend in such cases to the middle of the highway. Jackson v. Hathaway (N. Y.) 15 Johns. 447, 458, 8 Am. Dec. 268.

By a general and now well established rule of construction, a boundary "on the country road" includes the fee in the land to the middle of the road, if owned by the grantor, even though the deed fixes the call as beginning on the southerly side of the road. O'Connell v. Bryant, 121 Mass. 557.

But when it appears that the road was in fact owned by another, the terms of the deed are satisfied by a title extending to the roadside. Dunham v. Williams, 37 N. Y. 251, 252.

Where a deed describes the land as bounded as follows: "Commencing on the road" at a certain point; thence west, etc.—the presumption is that the measurements commenced from the side of the road instead of the center; but the acts of the parties contemporaneous with the delivery of the deed in fixing the monument and fencing the lot as if the measurements commenced from the center of the road are admissible in evidence upon the question of construction to be given the deed. Dodd v. Witt, 29 N. E. 475, 189 Mass. 68, 52 Am. Rep. 700.

Where land is conveyed and described by a lot number as indicated on a map, and the land fronts on a road or highway, the boundary will be the center, and not the side, of the road. Lee v. Lee (N. Y.) 27 Hun. 1, 4.

So a deed conveying land by metes and bounds, where one of the boundary lines is described as extending to a post standing on the south side of the road, thence bounding the road north, 87 degrees west, establishes a boundary at the side, and not at the center of the highway. Hunt v. Brown, 23 Atl. 1029, 75 Md. 481.

As center of stream in boundaries.

A boundary "on a stream" or "by a stream" or "to a stream" includes the flats, at least to the low-water mark, and in many cases to the middle thread of the river. Thomas v. Hatch (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 948, 949.

The words "on a stream," when used to designate a boundary of land on a nonnavigable stream, will be construed to mean the thread of the stream. Indiana v. Milk (U. S.) 11 Fed. 389, 395.

In construing a deed describing certain land as bounding on a brook, Chief Justice Shaw says: "The court are of the opinion that this description 'bounding on' the brook, in the absence of other words to control and modify the natural and legal effect of such description, carried the grant to the center of the brook only, and did not include the entire bed of the brook. In some of the earlier deeds this brook is described as a stream, dividing the land from that on the other side. We say the natural construction—the construction most likely to conform to the intent of the parties—because such division would be most beneficial to both parties by affording to both a watering place for cattle, the use of the water for irrigation and other useful purposes." Newhall v. Iveson, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 262, 263.

"On the canal" may be used to designate the line of the excavation to the line of the water, or the water course generally, according to circumstances; and where, in an exchange of land between farmers, the expression was used to indicate a permanent boundary between them, it carried the boundary to the center of the canal. Agawam Canal Co. v. Edwards, 86 Conn. 476, 501.

As grant of right of way rather than title.

The word "upon," when used in a grant of a right of way "in, upon, and through lands of U.," speaks an intent to concede a mere passage, and not to convey title to the land itself. Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 840, 841, 51 W. Va. 106.

As in case of.

As used in a will providing that, upon the death of either of the testator's children leaving issue, the principal of such child's share should go to and be distributed among the issue of such deceased, "upon" is equivalent to the phrase "in case of." Appeal of Roberts, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 70, 98 Am. Dec. 312. It is intended to fix the time of the vesting of devises by deceased children of their shares. Appeal of Conrow (Pa.) 3 Atl. 13, 14.

As on surface of.

"The court in Arbens v. Wheeling & H. R. Co., 10 S. E. 14, 83 W. Va. 1, 5 L. R. A. 871, in holding that a statute giving a railroad company the right to construct its railway across, along, or upon any street, highway, road, or turnpike, but requiring such corporation to restore the street, highway, road, or turnpike to its former state, or to such state as not to have impaired its usefulness, did not preclude the railroad company from making a cut or excavation in the street in such a manner as to appropriate a portion of the street to its exclusive use, if the excavation did not occupy the entire street or such substantial portion thereof as would substantially prevent the use of the street by the public as a highway, said, in answer to the contention that by the use of the words 'across, along, or upon,' the Legislature intended to limit the road to a surface use of the street in a manner not precluding the use of the entire street by the public, that the word 'upon' in the statute does not necessarily mean upon the common grade of the street, and that the words 'upon and along' must be construed with reference to the context and the subject in controversy. They must be understood to mean along, in the street, at, above, or below the common level of the existing or changed surface of the street, according as the particular facts and circumstances may require." Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 1 Ohio Probate, 269, 278.

As over.

The word "on," as used in the compact entered into between Pennsylvania and New Jersey providing for jurisdiction over offenses committed on the Delaware river, is used in the sense of "over." Commonwealth v. Hoyt, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 414, 416.

In the case of Milburn v. City of Cedar Rapids, 12 Iowa, 248, in construing a statute authorizing railroad corporations to raise or lower any turnpike, plank road, or other way for the purpose of having their railroad pass over or under the same, it was held that in the sense of the statute the words "over and upon" are synonymous, and include the idea of crossing highways on the surface thereof, and also running upon them lengthwise. Gear v. C. C. & D. R. Co., 43 Iowa, 88, 84; City of Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 24 Iowa, 455, 472.

As within a reasonable time after.

"On," as used in Gen. St. c. 25, § 6, providing that it shall be the duty of commissioners, on receiving the report of viewers for the opening of a road, to cause the same to be read before their meeting, etc., should not be construed to mean "immediately on," but to mean "on or within a reasonable time thereafter," so that the commissioners are not compelled to take final action at their first meeting, but may postpone such action until some subsequent meeting. Masters v. McHolland, 12 Kan. 17, 25.

Crossing.

Within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 18, and Laws 1890, c. 535, §§ 90, 91, prohibiting the construction or operation of street railroads upon streets or highways without the consent of the local authorities, a street railroad crossing a street or highway is constructed upon such street or highway as well as when it follows the course thereof. A road across a railway is built upon it. In re Syracuse & S. B. Ry. Co., 63 N. Y. Supp. 881, 882, 83 Misc. Rep. 510.

The statutory authority given by Laws 1890, c. 712, authorizing the taxation of special franchises of railroads situated in, upon, under, or above any highway, includes the franchise of a railroad in a highway crossing, though the word "across" was in the original draft of the act, and omitted on its final passage, as the word "upon" had been formally construed to include a highway crossing when used in connection with it. Judge Cullen, in Osborne v. Jersey City & A. Ry. Co. (N. Y.) 27 Hun, 589, in considering the question whether an order of the Supreme Court was necessary to authorize the construction of a railroad across a highway, and in construing the act of 1864, which provided that nothing therein contained should be construed to authorize the construction upon and along any highway without an order of the Supreme Court authorizing the same, said: "We think that wherever a railroad is constructed on the surface of the highway it is along and upon so much of the highway as is occupied by it." In the case of People's Rapid Transit Co. v. Dash, 125 N. Y. 93, 26 N. E. 25, 10 L. R. A. 723, the Court of Appeals was called upon to construe an act which prohibited the building of a railroad in, upon, or along any or either of the streets or avenues of the city of New York, except under the authority and subject to such regulations as the Legislature might thereafter provide. It is urged that this act only prohibited the building of a railroad through a portion of the length of the street, but did not apply to the crossing of the street. The court refused to consent to such a construction of the statute, and Judge Peckham says: "If the road were built through the length of the street, its location might be easily described by the use of any one of the three words contained in the statute—'in,' 'upon,' or 'along' such street. But to describe a road which simply crossed a street as being built along such street would be using language neither appropriate nor exact. To say of such a road that it would be in or upon that street at the point where the road crossed it would be both appropriate and exact. There is a difference in the meaning of these three words as used in the statute, and some effect should be given to such difference. If their meaning be construed to simply prohibit a railroad along the length of the street, no effect whatever is given to this difference. The words used are certainly apt to describe a railroad which crosses the street. Such railroad is plainly for that distance both in and upon the street which it crosses. If not in or upon it at that point, where is it? No description of its whereabouts at that particular point is better than to say that it is in or upon the street where it crosses. It is sufficient, and it is true. It is not necessary that the railroad should pass along the surface of the street in order to be in or upon it." New York, L. & W. Ry. Co. v. Roll, 66 N. Y. Supp. 748, 751, 82 Misc. Rep. 321.

ON OR ABOUT.

The phrase "on or about" a certain day is not a sufficiently definite description as to time and place of the occurrence of an accident to constitute a compliance with Laws 1889, c. 440, providing that no action shall be maintained against a village unless the claim shall have been presented and notice of the time and place at which the injuries were received filed with the village clerk. Lee v. Village of Greenwich, 68 N. Y. Supp. 160, 161, 48 App. Div. 391.

"On or about," as used in a finding that a building on which a mechanic's lien was claimed was completed on or about a certain date, is a relative term, and the filing of the notice of a mechanic's lien being required to be made within a certain number of days after the completion of the building, it is uncertain and indefinite. "On or about" is sufficiently definite in certain connections, but in cases of this kind, where the right of a person depends upon his doing a particular thing within a definite number of days after a certain event, it is necessary for him to allege and prove that the acts were performed within the time required by law. Cohn v. Wright, 26 Pac. 643, 89 Cal. 86.

The use of the words "on or about" in a statement filed by the claimant of a mechanic's lien with the clerk of a district court in order to preserve his lien, that the contract under which he claims was made on or about a certain day, does not preclude the claimant, in a contest with a mortgagee of the property on which the lien is claimed, from introducing evidence showing the exact date of the contract. Mitchell v. Penfield, 8 Kan. 186, 188.

A statement for mechanic's lien that certain materials were furnished "on or about" the 1st day of July, though somewhat indefinite and uncertain as to time, will not be held to extend as far back as May 24th. Santa Monica Lumber & Mill Co. v. Hege (Cal.) 48 Pac. 69, 71.

A contract for the sale of oil provided that the same was to be sent by a vessel sailing "on or about" the 15th of March. Held, that such term, referring to the time of sailing, did not constitute a warranty, and the buyer was therefore not discharged from his obligation to pay for and receive the oil because the vessel did not sail until March 26th. Hawes v. Lawrence, 4 N. Y. 845, 846.

The expression "on or about" a certain date is held to be just as consistent with a day or two after the date as before. Paine v. State Land Office Com'r, 66 Mich. 245, 248, 33 N. W. 491.

The words "on or about," in a lease of a mill privilege, consisting of land, water power, etc., and giving the lessee the privilege of laying logs, boards, and other lumber on or about said privilege, does not operate as a permission for the lessee to occupy lands of the lessor lying outside the mill privilege. Thompson v. Banks, 43 N. H. 540, 541.

In civil pleadings.

A complaint in an action on a fire policy, alleging that plaintiff gave notice to defendant of the loss within 60 days after the fire, as required by the policy, is not rendered sufficient, as a compliance with the policy, by the fact that in alleging the date of the fire and date of the giving of notice it states that such events occurred "on or about" certain dates. National Wall Paper Co. v. Associated Manufacturers' Mut. Fire Ins. Corp., 70 N. Y. Supp. 124, 128, 60 App. Div. 222.

Where a statute required a claim for lands to be presented within six months, a bill alleging that the papers were filed "on or about" the day when the time of presentation was over should be construed as rendering the pleading defective, the words being just as consistent with a day or two after as before. Paine v. State Land Office Com'r, 33 N. W. 491, 493, 66 Mich. 245.

In indictments or informations.

Where it is necessary to define the time of the commission of an offense in an indictment, the use of the term "on or about" a certain day rendered the indictment void for uncertainty. United States v. Winslow (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 737, 738; United States v. Crittenden (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 694.

Cr. Prac. Act, § 166, declares that the precise time of the commission of an offense need not be stated in the indictment, but it is sufficient if shown to be before the finding of the indictment, and within the period of limitations, except where time is an indispensable ingredient of the offense. Held, that the use of the words "on or about" a certain day within the period of limitations, defining the time of the commission of a rape, did not render the indictment bad for uncertainty. State v. Thompson, 27 Pac. 349, 350, 10 Mont. 549.

Where an information in a prosecution for murder alleged that on or about a certain time the murder was committed, the words "or about" should be treated as without meaning and as surplusage, and hence "on or about" August 11, 1882, should be construed to mean August 11, 1882, and was sufficiently definite. State v. Harp, 8 Pac. 432, 433, 31 Kan. 496.

The term "on or about," used in a complaint for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors in the allegation of the time of the sale, renders the complaint void for uncertainty. Nor can such words be treated as surplusage and stricken out, for, if that were allowed, the complaint would allege an exact day, which the allegation appears was not the intention. State v. Baker, 84 Me. 52, 58.

The term "on or about," as used in a warrant alleging that the offense was committed on or about January 2, 1891, did not render the allegation as to time indefinite, so as to require the proceedings to be quashed, where the information based on the warrant alleged that the crime was committed on January 2, 1891. People v. Flock, 59 N. W. 237, 100 Mich. 512.

The use of the phrase "on or about" in an indictment charging defendant with committing the offense of arson on or about a specified date does not render the information fatally defective for uncertainty, since Comp. Laws, § 7245, provides that the precise time when an offense is committed need not be specified in the indictment, except when time is a material ingredient. State v. McDonald (S. D.) 91 N. W. 447.

When, with reference to a particular day, the words "on or about" are used in an indictment or information, the last two words shall be regarded as mere surplusage. Horne's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 1738.

ON OR ABOUT THE PREMISES.

See "On the Premises."

"On or about his premises," as used in Code, § 4204, providing a penalty for the sale of liquor by any person on or about his premises without first procuring a license therefor, etc., includes a sale from a jug which defendant had in a field where he was working with others, more than a mile from his house, and in the plantation of another person over which he had no control. Powell v. State, 63 Ala. 177.

"On or about," in Code 1886, § 4086, prohibiting the sale of liquor to be drunk on or about the premises of the seller, characterizes a place four or five steps from defendant's store, although in a public highway. Whaley v. State, 6 South. 880, 881, 87 Ala. 83.

ON OR BEFORE.

"On or before," as used in a contract entitling a party to a conveyance of a tract of real estate on the payment of a certain sum on or before a certain date, is to be construed as authorizing a payment on any date before the specified day. Wall v. Simpson, 29 Ky. (6 J. J. Marsh.) 155, 156, 22 Am. Dec. 72.

"On or before," as used in a notice by a comptroller requiring a bank to pay to the treasurer of the state, on or before the 1st day of January then next, one-half of 1 per cent. of its capital stock, such sum to continue payable each year until the safety fund should be reimbursed, means that the payment may be made any indefinite time, no matter how long, before January 1st, and necessarily implies that the ground or cause of payment, the consideration or indebtedness, was, prior to the time, complete. People v. Walker (N. Y.) 21 Barb. 630, 643.

"On or before," as used in a policy declaring that it shall determine if the premium is not paid on or before the day fixed, means at any time in advance of the instant of the expiration of the policy. Sheerer v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 20 Fed. 886, 888.

The term "on or before" in a teacher's contract, requiring payment on or before the end of the term, may, as a matter of strict interpretation, only require payment at the end of the term; but where the compensation is rated in the contract by the month, and it appears that it was understood between the teacher and the majority of the board that it should be paid monthly, and that such is the common and convenient usage, we are not prepared to say that the refusal of payment by the school director might not be regarded, if willful or proceeding from some motive beyond a desire to do his duty, as an abuse deserving censure. Geddes v. Town Board, 9 N. W. 481, 482, 46 Mich. 316.

A notice by a landlord to his tenant to move "on or before" the date when the lease expires means that the landlord will insist on his legal right to have the tenant move out before the last day of the term, and is not a continuing offer to accept a surrender of the existing lease whenever the tenant elects to make it. Koehler v. Scheider, 10 N. Y. Supp. 101, 102, 16 Daly, 235.

As at or before.

Within a certain period "on or before" a day named, and "at or before" a certain day, are equivalent terms, and the rules of construction apply to each alike. Leader v. Plante, 50 Atl. 54, 95 Me. 389, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415.

As between.

"On or before," as used in the return of surveyors of a public road, reciting that the road should be opened on or before the 1st day of September next, in their natural, legal, and correct construction mean that the surveyors shall open the road between the day of the return and the 1st day of September. In re Public Road in Middlesex and Monmouth Counties, 4 N. J. Law (I Southard), 290, 292.

As rendering note nonnegotiable.

"On or before the day named," as used in a note, did not render the same nonnegotiable by reason of the fact that the date of payment was uncertain, since the day of payment was certain to arrive; for, while it was true the maker might pay sooner if he chose, such option, if exercised, would be a payment in advance of the legal liability to pay, and nothing more, such provision having no effect on the negotiability of a note. Chicago Railway Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 1008, 188 U. S. 268, 84 L. Ed. 849.

As giving option as to payment of note.

Promissory notes due on or before certain dates are due and payable at any time when the holder may elect to treat them as due. Burlington Ins. Co. v. McLeod, 8 Pac. 124, 126, 84 Kan. 189; Mattison v. Marks, 81 Mich. 421, 422, 18 Am. Rep. 197.

A note payable on or before a certain day is payable on that day so far as the maker is concerned, and means that he may pay it before if he wishes to, but may put it off until the day named. The use of the words "on or before" does not render the note ambiguous as to its legal effect, or render parol testimony admissible to show that it was to be paid before the day named. James v. Benjamin, 72 Ga. 185.

ON ACCOUNT OF.

"On account of," as used in Act May 12, 1891 (P. L. 54), making moneys due for labor and services accruing within six months preceding the sale or transfer of the employer's property, on account of insolvency or death of such employer, preferred liens on such property, means by reason of; because of the one or the other. Brown v. German-American Title & Trust Co., 84 Atl. 335, 343, 174 Pa. 443.

An order directing the lessees to pay a certain sum on account of the drawer's share in certain rent, which was to become due at a subsequent date, was equivalent to a direction that the sum should be paid out of the drawer's share of the rent, and constituted a designation of the particular fund out of which the payment was to be made. Rice v. Porter's Adm'rs, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 440, 448.

"On account of," used in a receipt, "Received of Capt. E. Smith 50 barrels of provisions on account of K.," did not mean that the provisions had been sold, nor that they were received by the receiptor, on an account due from K., but rather that K. owned the property; and hence parol evidence was admissible to show that the receiptor received the provisions to sell as a commission merchant, and that he sold the same in the usual course of business. McKinstry v. Pearsall (N. Y.) 8 Johns. 819.

A policy of insurance on a vessel "on account of ——" is equivalent to a policy "for whom it may concern," and hence, in an action on such a policy, proof aliunde may be given to show the real parties in interest. Burrows v. Turner (N. Y.) 24 Wend. 276, 278, 35 Am. Dec. 622.

ON ACCOUNT OF COLOR.

Act Cong. 1868, giving certain privileges to the Alexandria & W. R. Co., provided that "no person shall be excluded from the cars on account of color." Held, that this meant that persons of color should travel in the same cars that white ones did, and along with them in such cars, and that the company's providing cars assigned exclusively to colored people, although such cars were as good as those assigned exclusively to white persons, and in fact the very cars which were at a certain time assigned exclusively to white persons, was not a compliance with the provision. Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 445, 452, 21 L. Ed. 675.

ON ACCOUNT OF FREIGHT.

Where a policy insured the owner of a ship "on account of freight" of the cargo loaded on her, such interest was thereby sufficiently described, and operated to insure the owner against liability to repay to the charterer money advanced by him in part payment of the freight which the ship was to earn for transportation of the goods loaded on her, notwithstanding the word "freight," used in its technical sense, would not include such money freight, as such does not become due until completion of the voyage and delivery of the goods. Hall v. Janson, 4 Bl. & Bl. 500, 508.

Where the owners of a brig procured plaintiffs to load the same with a home cargo at a port to which the captain had been forced, and the charterers furnished the captain with money to cover disbursements under an arrangement that such advances were furnished on account of freight which the vessel was to earn, the charterer's interest in the funds so furnished was properly described in a policy issued to them as "advance on account of freight." Wilson v. Martin, 11 Exch. 684, 685.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

See "Whom It May Concern."

ON AN EQUAL FOOTING.

See "Equal Footing."

ON ARRIVAL.

The words "on arrival," in an instruction to a consignee to sell goods on arrival, do not mean that the property consigned must be sold within one minute or five minutes after its arrival, but just as soon thereafter as it can be sold without a manifest sacrifice; and the length of time depends upon the circumstances of the case, it being for the jury to say what is a reasonable time. Burnard v. Voss, 8 Ohio Dec. 221.

An instruction to a factor to sell goods on arrival is to be construed as requiring an immediate sale on the arrival of the goods if possible, even though for less than the market price. Evans v. Root, 7 N. Y. 186, 188, 57 Am. Dec. 512.

Where an agreement was for the delivery of goods on arrival, to be delivered with all convenient speed, "but not to exceed a given day," arrival in time for delivery on the day given was a condition precedent. Alewyn v. Pryor, Ry. & M. 408.

ON BAIL.

When a defendant is said to be "on bail" or to have "given bail," it is intended to apply as well to recognizances as to bail bonds. Code Cr. Proc. Tex. 1896, art. 307.

ON BEHALF OF.

The words "on behalf of" in an affidavit for garnishment, stating that "A. B., on behalf of C. B., being duly sworn on oath, says," etc., is not a part of the affidavit which is verified by the oath of the party making it. Miller v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 17 N. W. 180, 181, 58 Wis. 810.

A contract by certain parties "on behalf of" others prima facie imports that they made the contract only as agents, and cannot be said to be ambiguous. Lewis v. Nicholson, 18 Adol. & M. 508, 512.

"On behalf of," as used in a contract stipulating that it was agreed "between J., of the first part, and C., of the other part, on behalf of the G. Ry. Co.," and signed by J. and by C., did not constitute a contract on the part of the principals alone, but the contracting party was bound notwithstanding the use of the words "on behalf of" Cooke v. Wilson, 1 C. B. (N. S.) 153, 162.

ON BOARD.

See "Take on Board."

A contract for the transportation of flour from Niles to Buffalo, by which a carrier agreed to deliver the flour from Niles "on board" at Detroit for a certain amount, cannot be construed to mean that the carrier would have the property so removed from the cars into their depot at Detroit in the capacity of forwarding merchants or warehousemen, and in process of their usual custom see that the property was put on board some suitable water craft for its transportation East, but it must be construed to mean that the carrier acted as a common carrier until the flour was delivered on board some ship, and that it did not cease to act in that capacity as soon as the property was deposited in their depot, there being a special contract to deliver the property on board. The liability of the carrier for loss of the flour by fire while stored in its warehouse at Detroit was that of a common carrier, and not a warehouseman. Moore v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 8 Mich. 23, 24.

Insurance was effected on freight of a vessel at and from Cadix to a port in Sicily, and at and from thence to her port of destination in the United States. Held, that the phrase "freight on board" meant that the insurance was one entire risk intended to cover all the freight on both voyages, and was equivalent to freight to be laden on board, so that the insurance attached when the voyage commenced, though part of the cargo had not been loaded at that port. Robinson v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 143, 148.

ON THE BOOKS.

A corporation's by-law providing that the shares of stock shall be transferable only on the books of the company, etc., means that the assignment "shall be literally made and perfected on the books." Northrop v. Curtis, 5 Conn. 246, 253.

ON BOTH SIDES OF THE ROAD.

The phrase "on both sides of the road," found in a statute providing that every railroad must maintain fences on both sides of the road, means the margin or border of the entire ground used as a roadway, and does not mean any place between the track and margin of the right of way. People v. Ohio & M. R. Co., 21 Ill. App. 23, 27.

ON CALL.

"On call," as used in an instrument payable on call, is equivalent to the expression "on demand" or "when demanded." Territory v. Hopkins, 59 Pac. 976, 982, 9 Okl. 183; Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 4 South. 346, 347, 83 Ala. 595; Meador v. Dollar Savings Bank, 56 Ga. 605, 608.

"On call," as used in a bond which by its terms is payable on call, signifies that it is payable immediately. Bowman v. McChesney (Va.) 22 Grat. 609, 612. So, also, as used in a certificate payable on call. Meador v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 56 Ga. 605, 608.

ON A DAY CERTAIN.

See "Day Certain."

ON DEMAND.

Where it appears from a contract that it was the intention of the parties thereto that the money was to be paid upon demand, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until an actual demand of payment is made. Horton v. Seymore, 85 N. W. 551, 82 Minn. 535; Portner v. Wilfahrt, 88 N. W. 418, 419, 85 Minn. 73.

"Payment of a sum of money to be made on demand, as a condition upon which a mortgage upon real estate shall be discharged, means payment by the mortgagor upon a demand made upon him, and not payment by a stranger to the deed with or without a demand." Popple v. Day, 123 Mass. 520, 522.

A contract to furnish coal "on demand" to a certain mine, but that the daily demand shall not exceed one-half the daily output of the mine, indicates that the coal shall be delivered when required by the plaintiff, and that no more than half of the daily product of the mine can be required by plaintiff. The demand required by the contract need not be made daily as the coal is mined, but may be made for the future. Watson Coal & Min. Co. v. James, 83 N. W. 622, 625, 72 Iowa, 184.

A bank deposit payable on demand is a debt payable in two years, within Laws 1890,

c. 564, § 58, providing that no stockholder of a corporation shall be personally liable for any debt of the corporation payable within two years from the time it is contracted, nor unless an action for its collection shall be brought within two years after the debt becomes due. Barnes v. Arnold, 61 N. Y. Supp. 85, 90, 45 App. Div. 314.

In notes or bonds.

A bond which by its terms is payable on demand is payable immediately. Bowman v. McChesney (Va.) 22 Grat. 609, 612.

The words "on demand," in a promissory note payable on demand, do not mean forthwith, but have several significations, and mean an actual call or demand for payment, and are not merely governed by the law controlling an ordinary negotiable instrument. Crofoot v. Thatcher, 57 Pac. 171, 174, 19 Utah, 212, 75 Am. St. Rep. 725.

The word "on demand" in a note should not make the demand a condition precedent to a right of action, but import that a debt is due and demandable immediately, or at least that the commencement of a suit therefor is a sufficient demand. Appeal of Andress, 99 Pa. 421, 424.

When a note or bill is payable on demand, the statute of limitations runs from the date of the instrument, and not from the time of demand, because the right of action accrues immediately upon giving the note, and it makes no difference whether the note is payable with interest or with interest after six months. Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 492, 494.

The words "on demand" have a precise legal meaning. They do not limit the obligation to pay presently, but are used to show that the debt is due. A note payable on demand after three months' notice is due, and the statute of limitations begins to run against it forthwith, the provision as to notice being merely a limitation of the payee's right to sue. Knapp v. Greene, 29 N. Y. Supp. 850, 851, 79 Hun, 264.

ON DEMAND AFTER DATE.

The expression "on demand after date" in a note is deemed equivalent to the words "on demand," with the exception that the note is not immediately due, but some time must elapse before demand can be made, and therefore before the note becomes due. Foley v. Emerald & Phoenix Brewing Co., 89 Atl. 650, 651, 61 N. J. Law, 428.

A note made payable on demand after date is payable immediately. Such a note is due at once without an actual demand, and the statute of limitation begins to run against it immediately. O'Neil v. Magner, 22 Pac. 876, 877, 81 Cal. 681, 15 Am. St. Rep. 88.

ON DEPOSIT.

"Money on deposit," says the Court of Appeals of New York, is, ex vi termini, money placed where the owner can command it at any time." Long v. Straus, 6 N. E. 123, 125, 7 N. E. 763, 766, 107 Ind. 94, 57 Am. Rep. 87 (citing Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9).

Where a depositary acknowledges in writing to have received a certain number of dollars "on deposit to be paid on demand," such phrase imports not a contract of bailment, but a loan of money payable presently or on demand. Wright v. Faine, 62 Ala. 840, 844, 84 Am. Rep. 24.

ON THE DOOR.

The phrase "on the door," in a statute requiring notice of a tax sale to be posted on the courthouse door, does not necessarily mean on the swinging panel which fills the opening or entrance to the building, but a conspicuous posting upon the building at the side of the opening, or upon a separate board or panel or bulletin kept there for that purpose, is sufficient, to all reasonable intents and purposes. Hoskins v. Iowa Land Co., 96 N. W. 977, 978, 121 Iowa, 299.

ON EACH ENTRY.

18 Stat. 214, providing that on the entry of any goods the decision of the collector as to the rate and amount of duties to be paid on such goods shall be final and conclusive unless the importer shall, within 10 days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties by the proper officers of the customs, give notice in writing to the collector "on each entry," means that in all cases, whether of entry in bond or for consumption, the owner shall give notice in writing on each entry to the collector, etc., not meaning on the paper or record called the entry, but in respect of each entry. Ullman v. Murphy (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 506, 508.

ON EXPENSE.

Where the selectmen of a town notified the selectmen of another town that a certain person was on the expense of the former town, the expression "on expense" was a sufficient notification that the person referred to was a pauper. Town of Hamden v. Town of Bethany, 43 Conn. 212, 216.

A notice of support furnished paupers, sent by the selectmen of a town, stating that certain persons were "on expense in this town" should be construed to fairly import that the persons named were paupers, that they were then residing in such town, were chargeable to the town, and that the town was incurring expense in their support. Town of Bethlehem v. Town of Watertown, 51 Conn. 480, 492.

ON THE EXPRESS CONDITION.

See "Express Condition."

ON FAILURE OF ISSUE.

See "Failure of Issue."

ON FILE.

Every paper once legally filed in the general land office prior to the adoption of Act Nov. 29, 1871, and not withdrawn under a law authorizing it, and by one having authority to withdraw it was in contemplation of that law, on file in that office. Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 487, 493.

The words "on file," used in a deed in reference to a plat, will be taken to mean deposited, as distinguished from a technical filing of the plat. Slosson v. Hall, 17 Minn. 95 (Gil. 71, 74).

ON THE FOLLOWING CONDITION.

The words "provided nevertheless" and "upon the following conditions," occurring in a deed, are appropriate words to create a condition, but they do not of necessity create such an estate. They will give way when the intention of the grantor, as manifested by the whole deed, is otherwise, and they have frequently been explained and applied as expressing simply a covenant or limitation in trust. Consequently, where it was recited after the habendum clause of a deed, "provided nevertheless, and upon the following conditions," that if the grantor survives the grantee he shall have the right within a specified time to buy back the estate at a price to be fixed by arbitration, such clause creates a covenant in spite of the words with which it was introduced. Woodruff v. Woodruff, 16 Atl. 4, 6, 44 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 349, 1 L. R. A. 880.

ON FOOT.

See "Pork on Foot."

ON FREIGHT.

A firm in the habit of receiving grain in store to be shipped to the New York market received plaintiff's grain, which was deposited with that of other customers in a common bin. A memorandum was given to plaintiff acknowledging the receipt of the grain on freight. Held, that the words "on freight" should be held to import a bailment, and not a sale. Dawson v. Kittle (N. Y.) 4 Hill, 107, 108.

A receipt reciting that corn was delivered to a certain person "on freight," and not to be sold, means left to be disposed of according to the usage of the place and of the parties themselves. Outwater v. Nelson (N. Y.) 20 Barb. 29, 31.

ON HAND.

See "Cash on Hand"; "Goods on Hand"; "Stock on Hand."

A will providing that all of the testator's money on hand or in bank at the time of his decease should go to his daughter includes money in the hands of an agent, though the agent had a claim on such sum for his commission, and the legacy included the entire sum, and is not to be reduced by the commission due the agent. In re Copla's Estate (Pa.) 5 Phila. 214, 215.

A lease of a sawmill provided that, on a termination thereof by the lessor on the sale of the property, the lessee should have two months' notice to "saw out" a water term, and then, if any logs remained over, he should either have the privilege to continue in possession at option of the lessor at the same rate rent until logs on hand were sawed, or should be allowed the extra cost of teaming said logs to another mill, etc. Held, that the words "logs on hand" meant those bought and provided in the regular course of business, and not simply those in the mill-yard, and that he was not precluded from recovering the extra expense of sawing at another mill those that remained over after two months' notice, which necessarily remained over as those bought in the regular course of business, but that he was not entitled to recover the extra expense for the sawing out of logs the result of neglect of use of the mill for other than ordinary purposes. Crouch v. Parker, 56 N. Y. 597, 598.

ON HER OWN ACCOUNT.

A declaration that a married woman intends to carry on business "in her own name" is not synonymous with a declaration that she intends to carry on business "on her own account," and hence the sole traders' act, requiring the filing of a declaration that she intends to carry on business in her own name and on her own account is not satisfied by a declaration stating that a married woman intends to carry on business in her own name. Manton v. Tyler, 1 Pac. 743, 744, 4 Mont. 364.

ON ITS FACE.

Rev. St. art. 2181, declaring that, when an alias or pluries execution is issued, it shall show "upon its face" the number of previous executions, means that such facts shall be shown in the execution itself, and the statute is not complied with by a mention of previous executions in a bill of costs attached to an execution. Driscoll v. Morris, 21 S. W. 629, 631, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 603.

ON A JOURNEY.

See, also, "Journey."

Gantt's Dig. § 1517, made it a misdemeanor to wear any pistol concealed as a weapon unless on a journey. Held, that the words "on a journey" contemplated a traveler bona fide going from one place to another, and that a traveler was on a journey, within the meaning of the law, while stopping at a town on his way, if he was in fact and in good faith prosecuting his journey, and only stopped for a temporary purpose, and did not stop to stay or mingle generally with the citizens of the place either for business or pleasure. Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 443, 36 Am. Rep. 15.

ON LAKES OR RIVERS.

Where a bill of lading given by a railroad company to a shipper of freight provided that the railroad should not be responsible, in the absence of negligence, for loss or damage on lakes or rivers, the phrase "on lakes or rivers" meant that the carrier was not to be responsible for loss or damage occurring in the navigation of the lakes or rivers; and hence where the goods shipped were lost while stored on a wharfboat which floated on the waters of a river awaiting the arrival of a packet on which the goods were to have been shipped, the wharfboat serving as a storehouse in the meanwhile, the navigation of the river had not commenced, and the carrier was liable. St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Smuck, 49 Ind. 302, 308.

ON THE LINE.

"On the line thereof," as used in 13 Stat. 356, granting to a railroad company every alternate section of public lands designated by odd numbers to the amount of 10 sections per mile on each side of the road "on the line thereof," do not mean contiguous to the roadbed or to the land taken for the roadbed, but that the land shall be taken along a parallel to the general direction of the road on each side of it, and within lines perpendicular to its terminus at each end. United States v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co. (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1305, 1306.

The preposition "on" has an almost inexhaustible variety of meanings. One is "conforming to or agreeing with, as on the line." Hence, in a description of a boundary, to start from the N. E. corner of the N. E. quarter of the S. E. quarter of section 8, and to run thence west on the section line to the N. W. corner of the N. W. quarter of the S. W. quarter, the words "on the section line" will be held to express relative as well as absolute position, and to mean that the line shall run parallel with the section line, since the line would have to be on the quarter-section line. Burnham v. Police Jury of Claiborne Parish, 82 South. 87, 88, 107 La. 518.

The act of 1869, authorizing residents who live upon the line of the Illinois & Michigan Canal to cut and remove ice from said canal, will be construed to include any one living so near the canal as to desire to cut and remove ice therefrom. Card v. McCaleb, 69 Ill. 814, 817.

ON THE MERITS.

See "Merits."

ON MODERATE TERMS.

See "Moderate."

ON A MOUNTAIN OR RIDGE.

The words "to," "on," "along," "with," or "by" a mountain or ridge mean summit point, or summit line, unless otherwise expressed. Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3906; Rev. St. Ark. 1901, par. 929; Pol. Code Mont. 1895, § 4106.

ON THE PART OF.

Gen. St. c. 81, § 5, providing that illegitimate children shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of or to the mother, cannot be construed as meaning transmissibility of an estate not only to, but through, the mother, and on to her collateral kindred. Croan v. Phelps' Adm'r, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 915, 916, 918, 21 S. W. 874, 94 Ky. 213, 23 L. R. A. 758.

The phrase "on the part of the mother," in a statute relative to descent of property, has a technical signification, referring not only to the mother, but to all ancestors of the mother. Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555, 593.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2916, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother, a bastard may, like a legitimate child, inherit from the brother of his mother dying after her, the words "on the part of the mother" meaning the mother's side of the genealogical tree. Moore v. Moore, 69 S. W. 278-281, 169 Mo. 482, 58 L. R. A. 451.

Rev. Code 1845, p. 442, which declares that bastards shall be capable of "inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten of such mother" is construed to mean that the bastards will have capacity to take real property by descent immediately or through their mother in the ascending line, and transmit the same to their line as descendants, in like manner as if they were legitimate. This provision is not to be so construed as to render a bastard capable of transmitting an estate by descent to his mother or to his illegitimate brothers. Bent's Adm'r v. St. Vrain, 30 Mo. 268, 271 (citing Stevenson v. Sullivan, 18 U. S. [5 Wheat.] 280, 5 L. Ed. 70).

The phrase "on the part of the father," in a statute relative to descent of property, has a technical signification, referring not only to the father, but to all ancestors of the father, both paternal and maternal. Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555, 593.

ON A PASSAGE.

The phrases "at sea" or "on a voyage" or "on a passage" are equivalent in meaning, and, when either of them is used in a marine policy to describe the time during which the liability of the insurer continues, it operates to continue the risk until the arrival of the vessel at the port of destination. Wales v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 880, 883.

A marine policy which provided that if, at the expiration of the policy, the vessel should be on a passage, the risk should continue, means after she has left her port of lading, prepared to proceed to her port of destination, with intent to do so; and hence she is on her passage, although she comes to anchor on account of head winds, there being an intention of proceeding as soon as the weather is permissive. Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co., 87 Mass. (20 Pick.) 275, 279, 82 Am. Dec. 213.

A marine policy insuring a vessel for a year, and providing that if the vessel was on a passage at the end of the term the risk could continue until arrival at port of destination, does not insure the vessel after the expiration of the year, while lying in a safe harbor, in which she had put voluntarily to obtain necessary clearance and water and crew for her further voyage. Washington Ins. Co. v. White, 103 Mass. 238, 242, 4 Am. Rep. 548.

ON THE PREMISES.

See "On or About the Premises."

A policy describing the insured property as being situated on or confined to premises occupied by the insured, locating such premises, and an application for insurance, asking for it on certain parts of the property while on the premises only, did not cover a loss of the property while on different premises, 20 miles distant, though being used for the ordinary purposes which must have been contemplated when the policy was issued. Lakings v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 94 Iowa, 476, 62 N. W. 783, 784, 28 L. R. A. 70.

Where a fire policy on a church provided that, if naphtha be kept or used on the premises by the insured, the policy should be void, the use of a naphtha torch by a painter to remove the old paint from the building, which was of wood, was a use "on the premises," within the meaning of such words as used in the policy, notwithstanding the fact that no naphtha was at any time inside the building. First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 83 N. E. 572, 573, 158 Mass. 475.

Where a statute provided that, whenever the name of the owner of the lot is stated as unknown in the assessment, then the said contractor, or his agent or assigns, shall publicly demand payment on the premises assessed, a demand near to or in the hearing of the premises does not satisfy the requirement of the statute providing for a public demand on the premises, the term "on the premises" meaning a person on the premises. Alameda Macadamizing Co. v. Williams, 12 Pac. 530, 534, 70 Cal. 534.

A will in which testator left all the furniture, household effects, etc., "in, upon, or about" the premises included articles which had been upon the property, and had been temporarily sent away for repairs, but did not include articles which had been intended for, but which were never in, the house. Brooke v. Warwick, 12 Jur. 912, 913, 12 Law T. 41.

ON PURPOSE.

"On purpose," as used in an instruction that the jury should find the defendant guilty of assault with intent to rob if he feloniously, on purpose, and of his malice aforethought, shot another with a loaded pistol, with intent to steal the moneys, goods, and chattels of such person, means intentionally, and not accidentally. State v. Tate, 56 S. W. 1099, 1100, 156 Mo. 119; State v. Musick, 14 S. W. 212, 213, 101 Mo. 260.

ON REASONABLE REQUEST.

An agreement "to pay on reasonable request" was equivalent to an agreement to pay within a reasonable time after request, and the debt could not mature until demand was made, and a reasonable time for compliance had elapsed. Illinois Land & Loan Co. v. Beem, 2 Ill. App. (2 Bradw.) 390, 393.

ON RECORD.

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 629, providing that a bill of exceptions, to be on record, must be presented to the judge for examination, and, if found correct, signed and filed by him, a bill in which the only signature of the judge that appeared was attached to the certificate of presentation, without any adjudication as to the correctness of the bill, is not on record. Harvey v. State, 81 N. E. 835, 5 Ind. App. 422.

ON SALE OR RETURN.

A contract on sale or return is defined by Judge Story as an agreement by which goods are delivered by a wholesale dealer to a retail dealer to be paid for at a certain rate if sold by the latter, and, if not sold, to be returned. And a contract between a manufacturer and retail dealer providing that the dealer should act as special agent in the sale of certain patterns which the manufacturer should furnish, to be paid for half in cash and half in interest-bearing credit; that old patterns might be returned for new ones, but not in payment for goods; and that, if the contract was terminated, the purchaser should have the right to return all patterns on hand, and receive 75 per cent. of the price paid—is not a contract of sale or return, but a contract of sale. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Bailey, 75 N. W. 189, 191, 105 Iowa, 326.

ON THE SAME STREET.

See "Same Street."

ON THE SAME VOYAGE.

See "Same Voyage."

ON SHARES.

A contract to continue business on shares means that the parties shall share equally. Crittenden v. Johnston, 40 N. Y. Supp. 87, 88, 7 App. Div. 258.

"Letting land on shares" is a phrase well understood among farmers. It means that both parties shall share equally in the products of the land, to compensate the one for his labor, and the other for the use of his land. In such cases, after the crops are harvested, and before a division is made, each party is the owner of an undivided moiety of the same, and is a tenant in common with the other, unless the contract contains some special provision taking the case out of the general rule. Connell v. Richmond, 11 Atl. 852, 853, 55 Conn. 401.

ON THE SIDE OF.

See "Side."

ON SHORE.

"On shore," as used in 24 Geo. III, Sess. 2, c. 47, § 15, giving the officers of excise authority while on shore to seize goods, meant "on land," in contradistinction to "on board a ship"; and an officer seizing goods at an inland place at any distance from the sea was within the protection of the act. The King v. Brady, 1 Bos. & P. 187, 188.

ON THE SHORE LINE.

The words "along," "with," "by," or "on" the shore line, mean on a line parallel with, and three miles from, the shore. Pol. Code Cal. 1908, § 8907.

ON STOCKS.

"In common understanding, an advance or loan of money on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes is an advance or loan where these species of property are applied as collaterals, or are hypothecated to secure the return of the advance, or the payment of the sum lent." It is used in this sense in Rev. St. § 8407, providing that every person, firm, or company having a place of business where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, etc., shall be regarded as a bank or as a banker. Selden v. Equitable Trust Co., 94 U. S. 419, 421, 24 L. Ed. 249.

ON STORE.

The words "on store," in a receipt for grain delivered at a warehouse, ordinarily mean that the grain is sold to a miller or warehouseman, and that the market price is to be demanded at such time as suits the person leaving the grain, or the actual intention of the parties may be shown by parol. Light v. Hellman (Pa.) 1 Peers. 537, 538.

ON THE TRACK.

The words "on the track," in Code, § 1699, requiring a locomotive engineer, on perceiving any obstruction on the track of the road, to use all means known to skillful engineers in order to stop the train, mean an obstruction on the track of the road, against which the locomotive or train may strike while running its proper course and direction; and an animal, though near the road, and on the company's right of way, is not an obstruction on the track of the road, within the meaning of the statute. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Bayliss, 77 Ala. 429, 434, 54 Am. Rep. 69.

An engine in a roundhouse for repairs is not upon a railroad track, within St. 1887, § 270, making the employer liable for injury to an employé from negligence of an employé in charge or control of an engine or train upon a railroad track; the words "upon a railroad track" contemplating the dangers from a locomotive engine or train as a moving body. Perry v. Old Colony R. Co., 41 N. E. 289, 164 Mass. 293.

ON THE TRIAL.

The expression "on the trial of any person," as used in Act Feb. 7 1850, enacting that "hereafter, on the trial of any person indicted for trading with a slave, it shall not be necessary for the state to aver or prove," etc., means the prosecution of any person. Hirschfelder v. State, 19 Ala. 584, 589.

On the trial of a case, after the evidence had been closed on both sides, and after the arguments of the counsel had been delivered to it and the jury, the court permitted the plaintiffs to amend their declaration. The statute provided that when, in the opinion of the court, any informality exists in the declaration which shall affect the merits of a cause, the plaintiff shall be permitted to amend on or before the trial of the cause. In construing defendant's objection that the amendment was allowed too late, the court said: "The amendment complained of here must be construed as having been allowed within the time prescribed for the act, though perhaps done near to the close of the last hour. It was after the trial had been commenced, but being before the court had charged the jury in regard to the law of the case, and before any verdict was made or ready to be delivered by the jury, it was certainly done during the trial of the cause, and must therefore have been done on the trial of it, which brings it, as to the trial, within the express terms of the act." Yohe v. Robertson (Pa.) 2 Whart. 155, 158. See, also, Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Findlay (Pa.) 6 Whart. 483, 497, 37 Am. Dec. 490.

A stipulation allowing the evidence in a certain case to be read on the trial of another case applies to any trial of the case, whether the first or second, so long as neither party is relieved from the obligation by an application to the court. Herbst v. Vacuum Oil Co., 22 N. Y. Supp. 807, 68 Hun. 222.

ON THEIR OWN RESPONSIBILITY.

A testator directed all of his estate to be sold, and the proceeds divided into six shares, to be paid to the legatees "on their own responsibility," and they to use it during their natural life, and at their decease the said principal so paid to them, to be divided among their lawful heirs, share and share alike. Held, that the words "on their own responsibility" meant that the persons entitled should receive the fund without giving security therefor, but that such construction would not be given the words without qualification, so that, where one of the sisters threatened to dispose of her share in order to defeat her son's interest therein, she could be enjoined from so doing, and required to give security for the protection of the remaindermen. Sherman v. Sherman, 36 N. J. Eq. (9 Stew.) 125, 128.

ON TRIAL.

The term "on trial," in St. 1863, c. 23, providing that, whenever any criminal case shall be on trial at the end of any term, such term shall be continued until such case is finished, is to be taken in its literal meaning, and requires that the case must be actually on trial before the court and jury at the end of the term. Commonwealth v. MacLellan, 121 Mass. 81, 82.

ON A VOYAGE.

The phrases "at sea" or "on a voyage" or "on a passage" are equivalent in meaning; and, when either of them is used in a marine policy to describe the time during which the liability of the insurer continues, it operates to continue the risk until the arrival of the vessel at the port of destination. Wales v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 380, 383.

ONCE.

See "At Once."

Act Cong. July 7, 1838 (5 Stat. 288), relating to steamboats, and providing that an examination of their boilers must be made at least "once in every six months," should be construed to mean that more than six months must not elapse after one examination before another is made. There must not at any time of the year be a period of six months within which an examination has not been made. It is not sufficient if an examination is made once in each six months of the year. Virginia & M. Steam. Nav. Co. v. United States (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 1229, 1230.

ONCE A WEEK.

1 Rev. St. N. Y. c. 767, § 24, requiring notice of dissolution of a limited partnership, previous to the time specified in the certificate of its formation, to be published once in each week for four weeks, requires one publication, and then a repetition three times after the first publication, at an interval of seven days between each of the four times. In re King (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 502.

Code, § 185, providing that publication of a summons shall not be made less than once a week for six weeks, does not limit the publication to any particular day of the week; and, where the first publication was made on Monday, it is not fatal to the publication if the next publication is not made until Tuesday or any other day of the succeeding week. Steinle v. Bell (N. Y.) 12 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 171, 176; Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 29 U. S. (4 Pet.) 849, 861, 7 L. Ed. 882.

As requiring full number of weeks.

"Once a week" means once in a week; once at any time within the week. A publication of notice once a week for a certain number of weeks may not cover a number of weeks equal to the number of times of publication. Thus, if the first day of the week should be the 1st day of the month, and if the notice should be published on the 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th, it would be once a week for four weeks successively, although it would not cover a period of four weeks. Ratliff v. Magee, 65 S. W. 718, 714, 165 Mo. 461.

Where St. 1864-65, p. 422, c. 145, § 35, provided that, to impose an additional school tax, an election should be called by posting notices for 20 days, and, if there is a newspaper in the county, by advertisement therein once a week for three weeks, the words "once a week for three weeks" do not require the call to be published 21 days before the day of election, but three insertions upon three successive weeks, and at any time in any of such weeks before the election, are sufficient. State v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co., 5 Nev. 415, 431.

Act June 16, 1836, § 83, providing that notice of a sheriff's sale by advertisement shall be inserted "once a week during three successive weeks" previous to the sale, requires the first notice to be at least 21 days before the day of the sale; and hence a notice published any time in each week for 3 weeks before the sale, in which the first was less than 21 days before the date of the sale, did not constitute a compliance with the statute. Erie Saving Fund & Building Ass'n v. Thompson (Pa.) 13 Phila. 511; Francis v. Norris (Pa.) 2 Miles, 150, 151.

Where a statute provided that public notice of the time and place of the sale of real property for taxes due to the city of Washington shall be given by advertisement inserted in some newspaper published in said city "once in each week for at least 12 successive weeks," it must be advertised for 12 full weeks, or 84 days. Early v. Homans, 57 U. S. (16 How.) 610, 613, 14 L. Ed. 1079.

St. 1864-65, p. 422, c. 145, § 35, providing that, in order to impose an additional school tax, an election should be called by advertisement in a newspaper once a week for three weeks, meant once during each week, consisting of seven days, commencing with Sunday and ending with Saturday, on any day of such week, and not that it should be published 21 days before the election. State v. Yellow Jacket Silver Min. Co., 5 Nev. 415, 430.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY.

See "Jeopardy."

The plea of once in jeopardy stands on narrower, more technical, and less substantial ground than a plea of former acquittal and conviction. It only alleges that there might have been a conviction or an acquittal if the judge trying the cause had not made a mistake in law which prevented a verdict. It is of no consequence how many mistakes he makes, if the trial results in a conviction. Mistakes can be corrected on a writ of error, and the defendant tried over again; but, if the mistake results in closing the trial without a verdict, this is remediless. Commonwealth v. Fitzpatrick, 15 Atl. 468, 468, 121 Pa. 109, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757.

ONCE IN A WHILE.

Where a will directed that a trust should be created for placing flowers on certain graves once in a while, such devise was held to be void for uncertainty. Angus v. Noble, 46 Atl. 278, 279, 73 Conn. 56.

ONE.

See "Any One."

A bequest of one carriage will be construed to be a specific legacy on proof that the testator only owned one carriage. Everitt v. Lane, 87 N. C. 548, 551.

The phrase "one set of blacksmith tools" in a bequest of one set of blacksmith tools, operates to create a specific legacy, if the testator only owns one set of such tools. Everitt v. Lane, 87 N. C. 548, 551.

ONE BUILDING.

"One building," as used in a reinsurance compact limiting the amount of insurance on any one building or risk, in the ordinary sense of that term, should be construed to include a building five stories in height, containing three stores, the outer wall of which building was common to each of the stores, the several floors being on the same level; and, while two partition walls divided the building into three rooms or compartments on each floor, there were large doors in each of these walls between the several compartments in each of the five stories, used for the purpose of the passage of persons and the removal of goods from one store to another or others on each floor, the whole structure being under one management and devoted to the same uses, the storage of non-fibrous merchandise. German-American Ins. Co. v. Commercial Fire Ins. Co., 11 South. 117, 118, 95 Ala. 469, 16 L. R. A. 291.

ONE CLASS OR KIND OF BUSINESS.

"One class or kind of business," as used in Pub. St. c. 119, § 201, providing that foreign insurance companies doing business within the state shall be confined to one class or kind of business, is equivalent to one class or kind of insurance, as used in St. 1887, c. 214, § 80; and the issuance of policies insuring against accidents to the person of the assured, and of employer's liability policies, is not the transaction of more than one class or kind of business, or one class or kind of insurance. Employer's Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 29 N. E. 529, 531, 155 Mass. 404.

ONE DAY.

St. 1877, c. 250, § 1, relating to the arrest of debtors, and providing that notice be issued by a magistrate to the debtor to appear and submit himself to an examination touching his estate, and providing further that such notice may be served by leaving the same at his last and usual place of abode not less than three days before the time fixed for the examination, and "one day additional for every 24 miles' travel," means at the rate of one day additional for every 24 miles traveled; and hence, where the distance traveled is only a fraction of a mile, the time allowed need not be more than the corresponding fraction of an hour. Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391, 392.

Notice of taxation given before 9 o'clock p. m. of any day for the day following at 12 is "one day's notice," within the rule of T. T. 1 Will. 4, § 12, requiring that, before taxation of costs, "one day's notice" shall be given to the opposite party. Edmunds v. Cates, 4 Mees. & W. 66.

Code Cr. Proc. art. 554, directs that no defendant in a capital case shall be brought to trial until he has had one day's service of a copy of the names of persons summoned under a special venire facias. Held, that "one day's service" meant that both the day of the service and the day of the trial must be excluded; that at least one entire day must intervene between the day on which the service was had and the day on which the trial begins. Speer v. State, 2 Tex. App. 246, 253.

ONE DAY AFTER.

The declaration set out a note payable "one day after date," and the note produced read, "Payable one day after," the word date being omitted. In considering the objection that this was not the note declared on, the court said: "This variance is altogether too immaterial to be regarded. The court will supply the word 'date,' and intend that the note was payable one day after its date." White v. Word, 22 Ala. 442, 445.

ONE DRINK.

Where a defendant was charged with selling intoxicating liquor at retail, without a license, in less quantities than a quart, and the evidence of the prosecuting witness was that defendant sold to him one drink of whisky, the jury were entitled to find that "one drink of whisky" meant a quantity less than a quart, without evidence of that fact; and therefore an instruction that the jury must find, before they could convict, that one drink was a less quantity than a quart, and that, if there was no evidence of that fact, they could not convict defendant, was properly refused. Feigel v. State, 85 Ind. 580; Hamilton v. State, 103 Ind. 96, 100, 2 N. E. 299, 302, 58 Am. Rep. 491.

ONE FOOT HIGH.

A contract to deliver a number of trees not less than one foot high is ambiguous, as to whether the trees should be measured in length only to the top of the ripe wood, rejecting the green, immature tops, or whether the measurement should include such green, immature tops, and hence evidence of a custom is admissible to explain such ambiguity. Barton v. McKelway, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 165, 174.

ONE-FOURTH.

The conveyance of one-fourth of a tract of land, without designating by metes and bounds or otherwise locating the part conveyed, vests in the grantee, and those claiming under him, the title to one-undivided fourth of the whole tract, as tenant in common with the grantor. McCaul v. Kilpatrick, 46 Mo. 434, 437.

ONE FULL YEAR.

Poor Act, § 1, Rev. 834, providing that a pauper must dwell in a township for one full year in order to obtain a legal settlement there, means a dwelling for a full year continuously and without any interruption. Eatontown v. Inhabitants of Shrewsbury, 6 Atl. 319, 320, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 188.

ONE GENERAL CONTRACT.

As used in Gen. Laws 1889, c. 200, § 7, providing that when a person shall furnish labor or material for buildings united together, and situated on the same or contiguous lots, or separate buildings on contiguous lots, pursuant to the purposes of one general contract with the owner or joint owners, it shall not be necessary to file a separate lien on each building, the phrase "one general contract" cannot be construed to mean an entire contract to wholly erect and complete the building, to furnish all the material, and to do all the work on it. The word "general" is used with reference to two or more separate buildings, so that, to support a claim of lien on all of them, the contract must be entire, so as to include them all, in order to connect them and make them one for the purpose of the lien. Menzel v. Tubbs, 53 N. W. 853, 654, 51 Minn. 384, 17 L. E. A. 815.

The term "one general contract," in a mechanic's lien law, providing that only one mechanic's lien shall be necessary where the separate buildings on which the lien is claimed shall be erected upon one general contract, includes a contract to roof 29 houses, more or less, at $170 each, and the fixing of the rate of compensation does not convert it into various distinct and separate contracts. Bulger v. Robertson, 50 Mo. App. 449, 503.

ONE-HORSE CART.

The term "one-horse cart," as used in Act April 1, 1890, relating to tolls, does not include a light, one-horse wagon, with a firm box, swelled sides, painted in imitation of panel work, a crooked bolster, a chair seat with wooden springs, in which were two passengers, a trunk, a box, a bag of oats, and a bottle. Pardee v. Blanchard (N. Y.) 19 Johns. 442, 444.

ONE-HORSE WAGON.

A half interest in a two-horse wagon is not "one one-horse wagon," within the meaning of the statute exempting from execution one one-horse wagon. Kirksey v. Rowe, 40 S. E. 990, 114 Ga. 893, 88 Am. St. Rep. 65.

ONE LEAGUE SQUARE.

The fact that a tract of land is described as one league square refers only to contents, and not to shape. "A tract of land of one square league" does not, as a term of description, suggest any boundary whatever. Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. (U. S.) 68 Fed. 637, 643.

ONE LOT.

The phrase "one lot," as employed in the statute exempting a homestead consisting of a quantity of land not exceeding one lot, cannot be construed as applying to an undivided half of two lots. Ward v. Huhn, 16 Minn. 159, 162 (Gil. 142, 144).

Where an act providing that a debtor's homestead should be exempt from execution stated the exemption as including one town or city lot, the word "one" should not be construed as limiting the exemption absolutely to one lot, according to the plat and survey of the town or city, but as meaning a lot or piece of ground in the town or city on which the head of the family has its dwelling place, with the appurtenances, no matter whether it contains more or less than one of such lots. Wassell v. Tunnah, 25 Ark. 101, 103.

A memorandum of sale headed, "Invoice of Articles Purchased by A. of B," with the date, and containing the item, "One icehouse and lot, $140," is void, under the statute of frauds, as to the icehouse and lot, by reason of uncertainty in the description of the property. Pipkin v. James, 20 Tenn. (1 Humph.) 825, 826, 84 Am. Dec. 652.

ONE PINT.

An allegation in an indictment for selling liquor without a license that defendant sold one pint means that he sold that particular quantity, and no more. State v. Bach, 86 Minn. 284, 80 N. W. 764.

ONE PLACE.

Const. art. 5, § 7, providing that a district judge shall hold the regular terms of court at one place in each county in the district twice a year, does not mean one town or one house, but means the place prescribed by law—the county seat. Lytle v. Half, 12 S. W. 610, 612, 75 Tex. 128.

ONE SITTING.

In the case of Bones v. Booth, 2 W. Bl. 1227, involving the construction of a statute making the winning of £10 at any one time or sitting a nullity, Justice Blackstone said that "one sitting" means a course of play where the company never parts, though the person may not be gaming the whole time; and it was held that playing from Monday evening to Tuesday night without interruption, except for an hour or two at dinner—the persons gaming never having parted company during such time—constituted one sitting. Trumbo v. Finley, 18 S. C. 805, 811.

ONE TAKING.

"One taking," within the meaning of the rule that an indictment for larceny, of a single count, must charge but one taking, has no reference to a taking at any one time, and describes such a taking, even though a number of articles were taken at such time. State v. Newton, 42 Vt. 537, 539.

"One taking," within the meaning of the rule that but one taking can be alleged in a single count of an indictment for larceny, includes the act of taking several articles of property, though owned by different persons, if they are taken at the same time. State v. Smith, 10 Ohio Dec. 682.

ONE-THIRD THE CAPITAL SUM.

Where a will provided that, when testator's son should attain the age of 21 years, his executors should pay him one-third of the capital sum "or balance then remaining," it was held that testator evidently meant that one-third of his whole residuary estate should pass. Forayth v. Forsyth, 48 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 400, 403, 19 Atl. 119, 121.

ONE-THIRD NEW FOR OLD.

The deduction of "one-third new for old," made in favor of the insurers when an injured vessel is repaired at the insurer's instance, is a deduction allowed upon the supposition that the vessel after being repaired is in better condition than she was at the commencement of the voyage, in consequence of new materials having been substituted for old. Byrnes v. National Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 1 Cow. 285, 274.

ONE THOUSAND EIGHT HUNDRED AND NINE SEVEN.

"One thousand eight hundred and nine seven," as used in an indictment charging the commission of an offense on that date, means "one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven," and the indictment is sufficient. Wood v. State (Tex.) 61 S. W. 235.

ONE WHOLE YEAR.

Where a house was hired at 20 guineas a year, to be paid weekly, and either landlord or tenant to be at liberty to determine the tenancy at three months' notice from any quarter day, this was a renting of a tenement for "one whole year," within the meaning of St. 6 Geo. IV, c. 57, relating to a gaining of settlements by paupers by such renting. The King v. Inhabitants of Herstonceux, 7 Barn. & C. 551.

"One whole year at the least," in a statute, has exactly the same effect as the phrase "one whole year," and in either case a portion of a day is, for the purpose of computation, to be reckoned a whole day. Reg. v. Inhabitants of St. Mary, Warwick, 1 Bl. & Bl. 816, 823.

ONE YEAR.

"One or more years," within Act March 21, 1772, authorizing a proceeding by a landlord where a tenant under a term of one or more years holds over, includes a lease for nine months, or any time certain less than a year. The mischief which the law intended to remedy was that where tenants unjustly held possession after the expiration of their leases. The injury was fully as great if possession was withheld after a lease for nine months as after the expiration of one for a year. In 2 Bl. Comm. 410, it is said that if the lease be but for half a year or a quarter, or any less time, the lessee is respected as a tenant for years, and is styled so in some legal proceedings, and that every estate which must expire at a period certain and prefixed, by whatever words created, is an estate for years. Shaffer v. Sutton, 5 Bin. 228, 229.

"One year from date," as used in a contract executed on the 24th of June, requiring one of the parties thereto to deliver a deed after one year from date, means the 24th day of June of the next succeeding year. Vorwerk v. Nolte (Cal.) 24 Pac. 840, 841.

"One year's rent," as used in Code 1878, c. 184, § 11, giving a landlord a lien for one year's rent on goods removed from the leased premises, denotes the amount of rent to be distrained for, and does not refer to the specific rent of any particular year or period of time. Wades v. Figgatt, 75 Va. 575, 582.

"One year," as contained in an indorsement on an insurance policy stating that, for an extra premium, permission was thereby granted to the life assured to proceed to and reside at Belize for one year, means exclusive of the time occupied in the voyage out, and did not limit the period to any particular year. Notman v. Anchor Assur. Co., 4 O. B. (N. S.) *476, 481.

ONE YEAR AND AN INDEFINITE PERIOD THEREAFTER.

Where premises are leased for "one year and an indefinite period thereafter," at an annual rent, and the lessee enters and occupies them, he is the owner of an estate as tenant from year to year. Pugsley v. Aikin, 11 N. Y. (1 Kern.) 494, 496.

ONE YEAR'S PROVISIONS.

The words "one year's provisions," in a bequest of one year's provisions, cannot be construed to create a specific legacy. Everitt v. Lane, 37 N. C. 548, 552.

ONE VOYAGE ONLY.

A vessel sailed under a license valid for "one voyage only, including the going and returning," and was authorized thereby to depart from Dantzig and proceed to the destination of London, with liberty either to come back direct and in ballast into the port of departure, or, having sold her cargo, to enter into one of the ports of Nantz or of Bourdeaux. Another clause provided that "she may load in the ports of Nantz or Bourdeaux, and to the destination of that from which she departed, silks, etc., but shall not navigate to any other destination than those presently indicated." Held, that the words "for one voyage only, including the going and returning," showed that the voyage was to commence and conclude at Dantzig, and the vessel having proceeded from Dantzig to London, and thence to Bourdeaux, she was not protected by the license on a further voyage from Bourdeaux to London. Everth v. Tunno, 1 Barn. & Ald. 142, 145.

ONEROUS TITLE.

Under the Spanish and Mexican law, property acquired by the husband and wife during the marriage, and whilst living together, whether by onerous or lucrative title, and that acquired by either of them by onerous title, belonged to the community, whilst property acquired by either of them by lucrative title solely constituted the separate property of the party making the acquisition. By "onerous title" was meant that which was created by a valuable consideration, as the payment of money, the rendition of services, and the like, or by the performance of conditions, or payment of charges to which the property was subject. Scott v. Ward, 18 Cal. 458, 471; Kircher v. Murray (U. S.) 54 Fed. 617, 624.

An onerous title is the cause in virtue of which we acquire a thing by payment of its value in money, in another thing, or in services, or by means of certain charges and conditions to which we subject ourselves, as purchase, exchange, renting, and dowry. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 597 (citing Escriche Diccionario, tit. "Oneroso"; Yates v. Houston, 8 Tex. 438, 458).

The title is said to be onerous when it is acquired for a certain price or under certain charges. It is the contrary to a lucrative title. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 8556, subd. 22.

ONLY.

See "Going Only."

"Only," as contained in the United States Constitution, providing that "treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort," was used to exclude from the criminal jurisprudence of the federal government the odious doctrines of constructive treasons, and limits the definition to plain, overt acts. Shortridge v. Macon (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 20, 21.

"Only," as used in Cr. Prac. Act, § 440, which declares what shall be grounds for new trial, and uses the words "in the following cases only," is employed literally, and excludes all other grounds than those enumerated. People v. Fair, 48 Cal. 187, 146.

"Liable only for the amount opposite his name," as used in a subscription contract providing that a subscriber shall be "liable only for the amount opposite his name," is so construed as to make the contract a several obligation. McFarland v. Lyon, 28 S. W. 554, 555, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 598.

The use of the word "only" in bank shares, which provide that they shall be transferred only at the banking house, and on the books of the bank, "carries an implication as strong as negative words can make it that there is no other mode of transfer, and therefore they cannot be effectually transferred, as against a creditor of the vendor who attaches them without notice of any transfer, by the delivery of the certificates thereof, with an assignment and blank power of attorney from the vendor to the vendee, even if notice of such transfer be given to the bank before the attachment." Fisher v. Essex Bank, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 873, 881.

On a card advertising cigars, the statement that "we use only the very best grades of Havana tobacco, and manufacture only genuine Havana cigars," the word "only" means wholly; and the statement precludes the idea of the use of any tobacco except Havana tobacco in the cigars. Hilson Co. v. Foster (U. S.) 80 Fed. 898, 900.

Code 1851, § 162, providing that, in an action or defense founded on an instrument for the payment of money only, it shall be sufficient to give a copy of the instrument, and to state that there is due thereon a specified sum, means not merely exclusive of any other promise or stipulation, but free from any condition or contingency. Alder v. Schmidt, 10 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 363.

"Only," as used in Pub. St. c. 168, § 5, providing that executions shall not run against the bodies, goods, or estates of executors or administrators, but only against the goods and estate of the deceased in their hands, does not exclude goods in the hands of a trustee, but is used allo intuitu to exclude goods belonging to the administrator. Harmon v. Osgood, 24 N. E. 401, 151 Mass. 501.

"Only," as used in an instruction in a railroad crossing accident case, in which the negligence of defendant's flagman in inviting the plaintiff to cross the tracks in front of a train is in issue, that the fact that the company employed the flagman is only evidence of the additional care exercised by the defendant, in effect renders the conduct of the flagman immaterial. Ayres v. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 50 Atl. 958, 959, 201 Pa. 124.

The word "only," in a statute providing that, in a prosecution for a certain crime, the jury may acquit the defendant of that crime, and convict of a certain allied crime only, has the same meaning as the word "merely." Commonwealth v. Lewis, 21 Atl. 501, 502, 140 Pa. 561.

The use of the word "only," as used in the charter of Superior of 1889, subc. 13, § 108, providing that the common council shall have power to issue bonds for certain purposes only (naming them), is clearly restrictive, and excludes, as clearly as language can, the idea that the council can issue bonds for purposes other than those expressed. Uncas Nat. Bank v. City of Superior, 91 N. W. 1004, 1006, 115 Wis. 340.

An indorsement on a bill of exchange to "pay to J. S. only" has been held to be a restrictive indorsement, which operates to put an end to the negotiability of the paper. Lee v. Chillicothe Branch of State Bank (U. S.) 15 Fed. Cas. 151, 153.

The word "only," in a claim made by an inventor that the main characteristics of his invention consist in the plate for secondary batteries, having cells, etc., and the active material, etc., "packed in said cells only," means exclusively, and that the active material was to be placed or packed in the cells of the plate to the entire exclusion of every other receptacle or part of the plate. Accumulator Co. v. Consolidated Electric Storage Co. (U. S.) 53 Fed. 793, 794.

In limitation in deed or lease.

In construing a deed to a railroad company, conveying one tract of land only for depot and other railroad purposes, and then granting another parcel, and stating in a subsequent clause that "both of said pieces or parcels are granted only and solely for said road purposes," it was said that the words "only and solely" are words of restriction or exclusion. As used in this deed, their effect clearly is to prohibit the grantee from using the lands for other than the specified purposes. Horner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 165, 175.

The word "only," as used in a lease providing that if the building was damaged by fire, etc., the lessee should pay rent only for such portion of the premises as he can reasonably occupy during the time required to make the necessary repairs, but, if it should be so damaged as to require it to be rebuilt, then the lease should end, does not warrant an inference that the rent should be suspended while the premises are untenable from injury by fire, without necessarily compelling rebuilding. New York Real Estate & Bldg. Imp. Co. v. Motley, 83 N. E. 103, 104, 143 N. Y. 156.

"Only," as used in a lease to the lessor's mother of a dwelling house, only for herself to occupy for a residence, does not mean that the lessee alone shall occupy the premises, but refers to the purpose for which the house was to be occupied, though not exclusively so. Schroeder v. King, 38 Conn. 78.

In limitation in devises.

The words "only proper use," as used in a deed of gift by which a father conveys a slave to a daughter, to the "only proper use" and behoof of such daughter, mean her own separate use. Caldwell v. Pickens' Adm'r, 89 Ala. 514, 520.

A bequest to a wife, stipulating that the property shall be held by her only, has the effect of excluding her husband from any rights in the property. Ozley v. Ikelheimer, 26 Ala. 332, 336.

"Only for the benefit of," as used in a will wherein testatrix bequeathed certain slaves to be held in trust only for the benefit of a certain daughter, was synonymous with "for her sole use," and secured the property to the separate use of the daughter. Nixon v. Rose (Va.) 12 Grat. 425, 428.

The word "only" in a will giving testator's property to his wife for life, and after her death to be divided equally between his heirs, only his daughters B. and M., was construed to have been used in the sense of "except," thus excluding the daughters from any interest under the will. Lott v. Thompson, 15 S. E. 278, 279, 36 S. C. 88.

Under a bequest to executors of money to be invested and the income only paid over semiannually to a certain person, he is entitled to the income only during his life, and not the principal legacy. Wynn v. Bartlett, 45 N. E. 752, 167 Mass. 292.

In limitation of insurance risk.

The word "only" in a clause in a fire policy declaring that it is issued on the express condition that the property shall not be operated as a distillery during the term of the insurance, it being intended by the policy to cover carpenter's risk only, manifestly means that the carpenter's risk is the only hazard assumed by the company. Alkan v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 10 N. W. 91, 94, 53 Wis. 188.

"Only," as used in a policy of insurance on a steamboat against loss by fire only, does not limit the liability of the assurer to losses by fire caused by any particular agency, or to exclude such liability where the fire was caused by a particular agency, but simply shows that no risk whatever was assumed except loss by fire. Germania Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 33, 46.

In limitation of jurisdiction.

The word "only," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1780, providing that an action may be maintained against a foreign corporation by a nonresident "in one of the following cases only," is inserted as a word of restriction, and implies a general jurisdiction, purposely narrowed and restrained. Chambers v. Feron & Ballou Co., 56 N. Y. Supp. 838 (citing Hopper v. Hopper, 125 N. Y. 400, 26 N. E. 457).

"Only," as used in the Constitution providing that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction only, coupled with the other words employed, plainly indicates a purpose to render the court's primary and principal powers appellate. People v. Richmond, 26 Pac. 929, 933, 16 Colo. 274.

ONROERENDE AND VAST STAAT.

The phrase "onroerende and vast staat" is by a statute of the colony of New York passed October, 1810, translated in English "Immovable and fast estate," and therefore, in Dutch wills, deeds, and antenuptial contracts, the phrase should be construed to mean land or real estate. Spraker v. Van Alstyne (N. Y.) 18 Wend. 200, 208.

ONUS PROBANDI.

See "Burden of Proof."

ONYX.

"Onyx marble" is defined in the Imperial Dictionary to be a "very beautiful, translucent limestone, of stalagmitic formation, discovered by the French in the province of Oran. * * * It is used for the manufacture of ornamental articles. Merchandise invoiced as onyx columns, vases, etc., and known by dealers in marble as onyx marble, is assessable as manufactures of marble for a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem, under Rev. St. U. S. § 2499, providing that a nonenumerated article bearing a similitude to an enumerated article shall be dutiable at the same rate as the enumerated article. Mandel v. Seeberger (U. S.) 39 Fed. 760, 761.

OONTZ.

Oonts or craps, as it is otherwise known, is a game ordinarily played with two dice. They are shaken up in the hand, and then rolled or thrown from it. The player wins if he throws the numbers seven or eleven, otherwise he loses. It can be played with any four-cornered thing or cube with numbers on it that can be thrown or rolled, and upon any surface, as the floor, the ground, a box, a hat, etc. Commonwealth v. Kammerer (Ky.) 13 S. W. 108.

OPEN.

See "Held Open."

The words "outward, open, actual, visible, substantial, and exclusive," in connection with a change of possession, mean substantially the same thing. They mean not concealed; not hidden; exposed to view; free from concealment, dissimulation, reserve, or disguise; in full existence; denoting that which not merely can be, but is, opposed to potential, apparent, constructive, and imaginary; veritable; genuine; certain; absolute; real, at present time, as a matter of fact; not merely nominal; opposed to form; actually existing; true; not including, admitting or pertaining to any others; undivided; sole; opposed to inclusive. Bass v. Pease, 79 Ill. App. 308, 318. See, also, Helleher v. City of Keokuk, 15 N. W. 280, 281, 60 Iowa, 478; State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574, 577, 578, 46 Am. Dec. 170.

The requirement of Rev. Laws 1818, c. 86, § 178, providing that lands acquired by a city for streets and public places shall be held in trust, and shall be held "open" for public places forever, is not violated by the erection of a soldiers' monument in a park 100 feet in height, and based on a platform 120 feet long, which is situated on the crest of a hill, with a broad driveway on one side, and the open river on the other. "The placing of monuments and statues in parks is a generally recognized and legitimate use of such parks, whether such monuments are purely ornamental, or include the idea of a memorial." Parsons v. Van Wyck, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1064, 1068, 56 App. Div. 329.

Judgment.

Opening a judgment is not setting it aside, annulling, or reversing it. It is but a mode of allowing the defendant a hearing on the merits, and the court may impose such terms as it may deem proper. A party has no right to a hearing after judgment, except for causes which touch the honesty and justice of the case. If a judgment is deemed erroneous, an application should be made to strike it off, and not to open it, and the ruling on such point will distinctly draw in question the power of the court to enter such judgment. Huston Tp. Co-op. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Beale, 1 Att. 928, 928, 110 Pa. 321.

Saloon.

A city ordinance making it criminal for any person to keep "open any saloon, bar-room or tippling house" between certain hours, will be construed to include a restaurant which sells liquor in connection with its other business, though there is a curtain between the bar where the liquor is sold and the eating room. "The object of the ordinance is manifestly not merely to stop drinking at that hour, but also to compel those who are inclined to collect and tarry at such places to then depart." Baldwin v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 418, 428.

Where a saloonkeeper connects his living rooms with his saloon, and occasionally serves liquor in them, they become a part of the saloon, and to open them on Sundays to others than members of his family is an opening of the saloon. People v. Cox, 88 N. W. 285, 287, 70 Mich. 247.

Street.

A public highway might be opened without anything being done by the road overseers for that purpose. The people themselves along the line of the road might open it, or the public travel might at once take possession of a road and use it. Whenever a public road is traveled it is in fact opened, although nothing may have ever been done by the road overseers for the purpose of opening it. No formal opening is ever required. It is true it may be formally opened by the several overseers along the line of the road, but it may also be informally opened by themselves or by others, or it may be opened in fact by the public travel taking possession of it and using it. Wilson v. Jones, 29 Kan. 238, 248.

An authority to a municipal corporation to open or extend streets has been held not to authorize the extension of a street across the right of way of an existing railroad, as such right of way is already devoted to a public use by express legislative grant, and the extension of the street across it is an unauthorized appropriation of it to another public use. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 80 N. E. 1044, 1045, 141 Ill. 586, 17 L. R. A. 580.

"Be open for travel," as used in a petition in relation to a highway, is insufficient as a request "that a highway be established," so as to invest the supervisors with any jurisdiction in the matter. Curtis v. Pochontas Co., 72 Iowa, 151, 88 N. W. 616.

The words "open and make the same," in St. c. 500, § 7, making it the duty of county commissioners to fix the time within which the several towns through which any highway may be laid out shall open and make the same, mean "to make the road passable, safe, and convenient for travelers and others passing with their teams, wagons, or other carriages." Lowell v. Inhabitants of Moscow, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 800, 801.

Same—Construction and improvement.

The term "opening," in a clause of the city charter authorizing the opening of a street, etc., "refers to throwing open to the public what before was appropriated to individual use, and the removing of such obstructions as exist on the surface of the earth, rather than any artificial improvement of the surface. By the term 'opening' we do not understand the improvement of a street or highway by grading, culverting, etc. The term is generally (we think always) clearly distinguishable from such kind of improvement." Reed v. City of Toledo, 18 Ohio, 161, 165.

A statutory power to open and extend a street includes the construction of the street, or the extension thereof, as well as the mere act of laying it out. Matthiessen & Wiechers Sugar Refining Co. v. Jersey City, 26 N. J. Eq. (11 O. E. Green) 247, 254.

"Opening a street" refers to throwing open to the public what before was appropriated to individual use, and the removing of such obstructions as exist on the surface of the earth, rather than any artificial improvement of the surface; and hence Act March 6, 1889, § 1, authorizing the opening, extending, or widening of any street, does not authorize the grading or graveling of a street. Wilcoxon v. City of San Luis Obispo, 35 Pac. 988, 989, 101 Cal. 508.

The act of Congress giving to the city of Washington power to open and keep in repair streets, avenues, lanes, etc., agreeably to the plan of the city, includes the power to alter the grade or change the level of the land on which the streets, by the plan of the city, are laid out. Smith v. Washington City, 61 U. S. (20 How.) 185, 147, 15 L. Ed. 858.

As used in a statute authorizing the overseers of highways to open them, the word "open" means to clear away the obstruction in the road, or the physical act of inclosing the highway for the public use, and not the mere form of giving it to the public in its finished condition. Gaines v. Hudson County Ave. Com'rs, 87 N. J. Law (3 Vroom) 12, 14.

It cannot be said with propriety that a road has been opened, as a whole, when nothing has been done to that entire portion which constitutes three-fourths of it, and the remainder was a road, opened and used before as such. State v. Inhabitants of Cornville, 43 Me. 427, 428.

A road is opened, within the statute providing that it shall be considered discontinued unless it is opened within six years from its establishment, where the trees on it have been felled and cut up for more than six years, although it was impassable except for those on foot. Baker v. Runnels, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 235, 237.

"Opened," as used in 1 Rev. St. 520, providing that every public highway laid out that shall not be opened and worked within six years from the time of its being so laid out shall cease to be a road for any purpose whatever, means that it must be opened as a highway over its entire route. Beckwith v. Whalen, 70 N. Y. 430, 435.

Same—Dedication.

Where the landowners have dedicated to the public the land of a street regularly located on the confirmed city plan, the street is "open," so as to charge adjoining owners with the cost of constructing a sewer thereon. City of Philadelphia v. Thomas Heirs, 25 Atl. 873, 874, 152 Pa. 494.

Streets cannot be said to be "laid out and opened," within the meaning of a city charter giving the city power of taxation for municipal purposes to a distance of 240 feet back from the line of such streets as the corporate authorities had "laid out and opened," until there has been a formal acceptance of them by the authorities of the town according to law, though they may have been, since an alleged dedication, used as streets by the owners of property, and may have been generally considered streets of the town. Valentine v. City of Hagerstown, 38 Atl. 931, 932, 86 Md. 493 (cited in Sindall v. City of Baltimore, 49 Atl. 645, 647, 93 Md. 526).

Same—Lay out.

"Open," as used in an application to selectmen to open a street, is equivalent in meaning to the words "lay out" as used in the statute authorizing such petition. Winoski Lumber & Water Power Co. v. Town of Colchester, 57 Vt. 538, 541.

The words "opening and laying out," as used in the road laws in reference to the laying out or opening of roads, "are constantly used as equivalent expressions." In re Twenty-Eighth St., 102 Pa. 140, 146.

The term "open and dedicated," employed with respect to a street or highway, means laid out or set apart by the owner, and imply that nothing further is necessary to make it a highway in fact. Hemphill v. City of Boston, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 195, 197, 54 Am. Dec. 749.

OPEN ACCOUNT.

"An open account is one in which some item of the contract is not settled by the parties, whether the account consists of one item or many, or where there have been running or current dealings between the parties, and the account is kept open with expectation of further dealings." Purvis v. Kroner, 23 Pac. 260, 261, 18 Or. 414; Battie v. Reid, 68 Ala. 149, 152; Sheppard v. Wilkins, 1 Ala. 62, 64; McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 363, 368. An account consisting of the price of a carriage purchased and paid for by plaintiff for defendant at his request, together with the cost of the transportation from New York to New Orleans, is not an open account, within the meaning of the statute barring actions on open accounts in three years. Caruthers v. Mardis' Adm'r, 8 Ala. 599, 601.

An open account is one in which the amount due has not been ascertained or fixed either by the act and agreement of the parties or by operation of law, Nisbit v. Lawson, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 275, 287; Anderson v. State, 2 Ga. (2 Kelly) 870, 874; Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 821, 832; and is usually raised by one party only, and is an ex parte affair, and is open until agreed to by the other; but when the debtor has acknowledged the justice of the account, and it is no longer the act of one party, but the agreement of both, the account becomes liquidated. Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 821, 832.

Whether the account consists of a single item or many items, if the terms of the contract have not been adjusted by agreement of the parties, the demand is an open account. Gayle's Adm'r v. Johnston, 72 Ala. 254, 47 Am. St. Rep. 405.

In strict legal phraseology, an open account is a debt not reduced to writing, which is subject to future adjustment, and may be reduced or modified by proof, such as accounts running between merchants, a merchant's account for the sale of goods, and all other of like character. Smith v. Ellington, 14 Ga. 379, 382.

An account is open and current when it is running, not closed, settled, or stated, so that there are reciprocal demands between the parties—something upon which either party could sustain an action. Taylor v. Parker, 17 Minn. 469, 473 (Gil. 447, 451).

An open account is one in respect to which nothing has occurred to bind either party by its statements, or an account which is yet fully open to be disputed. Abb. Law Dict. The word "open" indicates that there is something undetermined by the contract of the parties or by the application of settled rules of law, and an account cannot be said to be open when no term of the contract remains to be settled by agreement of the parties. McCamant v. Batsell, 59 Tex. 363, 368.

When an account is stated and rendered, and no objection is made to it, it is no longer an open account, but becomes liquidated. Anderson v. State, 2 Ga. (2 Kelly) 870, 874.

"The term 'open account' is used in opposition to a stated account wherein the account is closed by an assent to its correctness by a party charged." Whittlesey v. Spofford, 47 Tex. 13, 17.

An account which is signed and rendered by the debtor with the statement, in detail, of the debtor and creditor items, is not an open account, within the meaning of the statute of limitations. Dixon v. Lyons, 18 La. Ann. 160.

"There is no element of an open or unliquidated account in the indebtedness of one tenant in common to his co-tenant for rents collected. It is more in the nature of an action for money had and received by one person to the use of another, or that of an implied trust, rather than an express trust." Hairston v. Sumner, 17 South. 709, 106 Ala. 881.

Within the meaning of the statute fixing limitations to a right of action on an open account, an account of an agent with his principal is not an open account, and an action thereon is not limited by such statute. Dolhonde v. Laurans' Widow, 21 La. Ann. 406.

"Open," as used in an instruction in an action against a city for injuries from a defective sidewalk, stating that, if the defect was open and notorious, the city was chargeable with notice thereof, means not concealed; not hidden; exposed to view; apparent—a secondary signification in which the word is very frequently used—and the jury would not understand the court to refer to a defect consisting of an open hole in the sidewalk. Kelleher v. City of Keokuk, 15 N. W. 280, 281, 60 Iowa, 473.

A demand for money collected by plaintiff on a judgment in favor of himself and defendant's intestate jointly is not an open account. Bradford v. Barclay, 39 Ala. 33.

OPEN AND GROSS LEWDNESS.

The phrase "open and gross lewdness," in a statute making open and gross lewdness criminal, is not equivalent to the phrase "gross lewdness in an open place." The word "open" has no reference to place at all, nor to the number of people. It is used simply to define a quality of the act of lewdness. It is open lewdness as opposed to secret lewdness. It defines the same act, regardless of whether it is committed in the presence of one or of many. State v. Juneau, 59 N. W. 580, 581, 88 Wis. 180, 24 L. R. A. 857, 43 Am. St. Rep. 877; Commonwealth v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 53, 35 Am. Rep. 357.

"Open," as used in Rev. St. c. 99, § 8, providing a punishment for open and gross lewdness, etc., means undisguised, not concealed, and opposite to private, concealed, and unseen. State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574, 577, 578, 46 Am. Dec. 170.

St. 1784, c. 40, § 6, providing that open and gross lewdness and lascivious behavior shall be punished, etc., does not include the commission of such behavior in secret, notwithstanding the parties are observed by a third person without their knowledge. Commonwealth v. Catlin, 1 Mass. 7, 8.

OPEN AND NOTORIOUS INSOLVENCY.

The doctrine that the maker of a note must be in "open and notorious insolvency," before recourse can be had to the assignor, means not merely the want of sufficient property to pay all of one's debts, but the absence of all property, within reach of the law, applicable to the payment of any debt. Hardesty v. Kinworthy (Ind.) 8 Blackf. 304, 306; Somerby v. Brown, 73 Ind. 253, 256. Property in possession of an assignee in bankruptcy is not only within reach of the law, but in the actual custody of the law. Somerby v. Brown, 73 Ind. 253, 256.

OPEN AND PEACEABLE ENTRY.

A statute providing for the foreclosure of a mortgage by "open and peaceable entry" on the mortgaged premises, and possession thereof peaceably for three years, means an entry not opposed by the mortgagor or persons claiming the premises, and made in the presence of two witnesses, whose certificates are sworn to and recorded within 30 days in the registry of deeds as required by Gen. St. c. 140, § 182. Thompson v. Kenyon, 100 Mass. 106, 111.

OPEN BULK.

"Open bulk," as used in Acts N. C. 1891, c. 331, providing that persons selling seeds in packages unmarked by the date when such seeds were grown, except farmers selling seeds in open bulk to other farmers or gardeners, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, means in the mass; exposed to view; not tied or sealed up. Used in the connection they are in this act, they do not relate to the quantity that may be sold; nor does the statute restrict it to an ounce or less, or require a bushel or more to be sold. In re Sanders (U. S.) 52 Fed. 802, 804, 18 L. R. A. 549.

OPEN CORPORATION.

An open corporation is where all the citizens or corporators have a vote in the election of the officers of the corporation—usually applied to municipal corporations. McKin v. Odom (Md.) 8 Bland, 407, 415.

OPEN COURT.

The term "open court," within the meaning of a chancery rule declaring that the chancery court shall be deemed always open for certain purposes, signifies the time when the court can exercise its functions. Ex parte Branch, 63 Ala. 383, 387.

The phrase "in open court," as used in the statute requiring an application for certiorari to be made to the inferior court of common pleas of the county, in open court, is used to emphasize the distinction between the court in public session, and one or more judges of the court exercising the judicial functions in chambers. Where the record avers that "the application was made to the court of common pleas held at F., in and for the county of H., of the term of September, 1891, three judges being present," it sufficiently indicates that it was done in open court. Conover v. Bird, 28 Atl. 423, 429, 56 N. J. Law (27 Vroom) 228.

Code, § 2222, declaring that no divorce shall be granted on the testimony of the plaintiff, but that all such suits shall be heard in open court, means a court which is in session, organized for the transaction of official business. Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Iowa, 501, 503.

OPEN ESTATE.

"Open," as used in reference to the rule that, so long as an estate is open, the accounts of the executor and administrator in the orphans' court are subject to revision and correction as to any matter discovered to be in error, means not finally closed and settled. Martin v. Jones, 89 Atl. 102, 103, 87 Md. 43.

OPEN FOR BUSINESS.

See "Actually Open for Business."

Within the meaning of the term in an insurance policy providing that the books and inventory of a business should be kept in an iron safe when the store was not open for business, the expression "not open for business" meant such ordinary occasions as Sundays and holidays, and after the store had closed at night; and where it appears that the store had been burned during business hours, and it does not appear that the premises were ever actually closed, such store will not be held not to have been open for business, within the meaning of the policy, the requirement of the policy being rather that the books should be placed in a place of safety, than that they should be inserted in the safe in all cases of fire. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Schwartz, 41 S. E. 240, 241, 115 Ga. 113, 57 L. R. A. 752, 90 Am. St. Rep. 98.

In a statute imposing a penalty upon any one permitting his place to be open for the purpose of traffic on Sunday, it is clearly and manifestly the intention of the statute to close the places and houses therein mentioned against barter, sale, and traffic on Sunday; and it is meant that no selling should occur in these places or houses on Sunday, and that traffic shall be cut off entirely on that day. Whitcomb v. State, 17 S. W. 258, 259, 30 Tex. App. 272.

OPEN HOUSE.

An open house is defined by Rev. St. 1896, art. 3890, as one in which no screen or other device is used or placed either inside or outside of such house or place of business for the purpose of obstructing the view through the open door or entrance into such house or place of business. Where intoxicating liquors are sold in quantities less than a quart, a partial obstruction of the view in a saloon precludes it from being an open house. Componovo v. State (Tex.) 39 S. W. 14. Under this statute and definition, it is held that the statute is not violated by a partition of the room in which the liquors are sold for the purpose of renting a part of it, not to obstruct the view, and which does not in fact obstruct the view of the bar from the front door. State v. Andrews, 82 Tex. 78, 75, 18 S. W. 554. See, also, State v. Drake, 86 Tex. 329, 335, 24 S. W. 790; State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20, 25, 38 S. W. 113, 30 L. E. A. 500.

OPEN MANNER.

Act Jan. 19, 1862, providing that it shall be unlawful for any one to carry a deadly weapon about his person, not "in an open manner and fully exposed to view," does not mean that, if any part of the barrel of a pistol was stuck down in the pocket, it would constitute a violation of the statute, but must be construed as meaning that the weapon must be carried in such a manner that others who might come in contact with the person might see that he was an armed and dangerous person, who was to be avoided in consequence, and only requires that the weapon should be exposed sufficiently to view to enable any person to see and know that it was a weapon. Stockdale v. State, 32 Ga. 225, 227.

OPEN POLICY.

An open policy of insurance is one in which "the amount of liabilities is left open to be determined according to the actual loss, either by agreement of the parties, or upon proof and compliance with its terms or with the rules of evidence." Riggs v. Home Mut. Fire Protection Ass'n, 39 S. E. 614, 618, 61 S. O. 448.

An open policy is one in which the sum to be paid as indemnity in case of losses is not fixed in the contract, but is left open, to be proved by the claimant, or to be determined by the parties. This determination is called an "adjustment of the loss." Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Miller (Tex.) 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 332.

An open or running policy of insurance is defined by 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 430, as a policy on which the value is to be proved by the assured. However, by an "open policy" is sometimes meant in the United States one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time. Corporation of London Assurance v. Paterson, 32 S. E. 650, 655, 106 Ga. 538.

A valued policy is where the value of the subject insured is agreed upon by the parties. If it is not estimated at any particular amount or rate, it is an open policy. Cox v. Charleston, F. & M. Ins. Co. (S. C.) 8 Rich. Law, 331, 332, 45 Am. Dec. 771.

Where a policy for marine insurance was in the form of a valued policy, and, after a statement of the subject insured, there appeared the phrase, "Valued at $—, as indorsed," but the blank was not filled in, and there was no indorsement as to value, it was held that the failure to fill the blank or to make any indorsement as to value constituted the policy an open policy, and not a valued policy. Snowden v. Guion, 5 N. E. 322, 323, 101 N. Y. 458.

The term "open fire policy" includes any policy, unless it appears to have been the intention of the parties thereto, upon a fair and reasonable construction upon its form, to value the loss, and thereby fix by contract the amount of the recovery. A policy for a certain sum on a dwelling house, containing a stipulation that the company will pay the assured the loss or damage, not exceeding the sum assured, is an open, and not a valued, policy. Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Butler, 38 Ohio St. 123, 134.

An open policy is a personal contract, and, when made on the insured's own account, the terms are that the assured causes himself to be insured and takes insurance for a given sum for a specified voyage, for a term of time, upon the ship and goods on board her, against the perils of the sea and other risks. Such a policy is always held to be an open policy, and to entitle the insured, in case of loss, whether partial or total, to an indemnity and recompense to the amount of his actual loss by the perils from which the contract professes to protect him. Laurent v. Chatham Fire Ins. Co., 1 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Hall) 41, 43.

A fire policy issued to indemnify a contractor against loss he may sustain by reason of the building which he has contracted to build in case of its destruction, to a sum not exceeding a designated sum, is an open policy. It does not mean that as soon as the house is destroyed by fire the insured shall be entitled to recover the sum designated, but means that he is to recover that amount if that is the damage done to him by the fire. The insurance company guarantees him against any loss, to the extent of the sum designated, which he may sustain by reason of the property being destroyed by fire; and therefore, upon a total loss of the building insured, the insurer is only liable for the actual loss sustained, not exceeding the sum designated. Ulmer v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co., 39 S. E. 712, 718, 61 S. C. 459.

An open policy is one in which the value of the thing insured is not agreed upon, but is left to be ascertained in case of loss. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2595; Rev. Code, N. D. 1899, § 4496; Civ. Code S. D. 1908, § 1846.

An open policy is where the amount of the interest of the assured is not fixed by the policy, but is left to be adjusted in case of loss. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2129.

In an open policy of insurance, for which an aggregate amount is expressed, there are as many contracts for insurance as there are indorsements on the policy of separate shipments of goods. If the open policy contained all the conditions which govern the shipments of goods specially insured under the policy, and the company reserves the right to reject or accept each special insurance in each shipment, the contract must be regarded as made at the domicile of the company issuing the open policy. State v. Williams, 15 South. 290, 291, 46 La. Ann. 922.

OPEN RISK.

An open and visible risk is such as would in an instant appeal to the senses of an intelligent person. It is one so patent that a person familiar with the business would instantly recognize it. Johnston v. Oregon, S. L. & U. N. Ry. Co., 81 Pac. 283, 286, 23 Or. 94.

OPEN SEASON.

"Open season," as used in the game and fish act, means the season wherein the killing of game is permitted. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 8076.

OPEN STORE.

The term "open store," as used in Code, § 5542, imposing a penalty on any merchant or shopkeeper who "keeps open store" on Sunday, implies something more than opening the door of a shop or store or keeping the door open. It involves the keeping open of the store as such—the opening up of the business carried on in the house, and the exposition to sale of the wares stored there for sale. The words in and of themselves mean the opening up and keeping open the storehouse of goods, wares, and merchandise for the purposes of traffic. Jebeles v. State, 31 South. 377, 131 Ala. 41.

"Open store," as used in Code 1876, § 4443, prohibiting any merchant or shopkeeper from keeping open store on Sunday, is construed not to mean the mere act of keeping the door of the store open, but the keeping of a door open, and by means thereof the selling of merchandise or other articles kept there for sale. "If the parties intended a sale, whether payment was presently made or expected to be made afterward, the statute was violated." Snider v. State, 59 Ala. 64, 67.

OPEN TO OCCUPATION AND PURCHASE.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2319, declaring that mineral deposits are free and open to exploration and purchase, and the land in which they are found is open to occupation and purchase to a certain extent or amount—the land to that extent constituting a mining claim under the law when the same is properly located—means that the absolute title may be acquired in the land. This language will not bear the interpretation that the government intended thereby to sell to the purchaser of a mining claim a mining easement therein, or simply the right to occupy and possess the mining claim for the necessary use of the mineral vein. The right to occupy and to purchase means the right to acquire the full title. Silver Bow Min. & Mill. Co. v. Clark, 5 Pac. 570, 574, 5 Mont. 378.

OPEN VENIRE.

Open venire, in Dakota, is where the marshal of the United States for the territory selects and summons jurors as at common law. United States v. Beebe, 11 N. W. 505, 507, 2 Dak. 294.

OPENING.

Rev. St. art. 4427, declaring that all railway corporations which fence their right of way may be required to make openings through their fences and over their roadbeds at prescribed distances, does not require open crossings, although literally an opening in a fence may be said to mean an unobstructed way through it. But in common parlance the word does not always have such significance, beings sometimes used to indicate a way through that is capable of being used as a mode of ingress and egress to and from the inclosure. As the word is used in the statute, it does not require the construction of an open crossing. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Chenault, 60 S. W. 55, 58, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 481. See, also, Burgess v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex.) 41 S. W. 708, 704.

OPENING THE BIDDINGS.

The phrase of "opening the biddings," which in the English books occurs so frequently in relation to mortgage foreclosure sales, means no more than a further suspension of the sale, and a continuance of the property in the market. If there should be made to appear either before or after the sale has been ratified any injurious mistake, misrepresentation, or fraud, the biddings may be opened, the reported sale rejected, or the order of ratification rescinded, and the property again sent into the market and resold. Andrews v. Scotton (Md.) 2 Bland, 629, 644.

OPENLY OUTRAGE PUBLIC DECENCY.

The phrase "openly outrages public decency," in Pen. Code, § 375, making any person committing any act which seriously disturbs or injures the public peace, or who openly outrages public decency, guilty of a misdemeanor, includes the teachings of the doctrine of anarchy. To give this construction to the law in no way abridges the liberty of conscience in matters of religion, nor the freedom of speech on all questions of government or of social life, nor does it in any way trespass upon the proper freedom of the press. The point and pith of the offense of anarchists is that they teach the doctrine that the pistol, the dagger, and dynamite may be used to destroy the rulers. The teaching of such horrid methods of reaching an end is the offense. In this class of cases the courts and the public have too long overlooked the fact that crimes and offenses are committed by written or spoken words. We have been punishing offenders in other lines for words spoken or written, without waiting for an overt act of injury to the persons or property. The press is restrained by the law of libel from the too free use of words. People v. Most, 73 N. Y. Supp. 220, 222, 36 Misc. Rep. 139.

OPENNESS.

Openness and notoriety and exclusiveness of possession, as the terms are used in the law of adverse possession, are shown by such acts in respect to the land in its condition at the time as comport with ownership—such acts as would ordinarily be performed by the true owner in appropriating the land or its avails to its own use, and in preventing others from the use of it as far as reasonably practicable; and nearly akin to these are the acts evidencing the element of hostility toward all the world. Goodson v. Brothers, 20 South. 443, 445, 111 Ala. 589.

OPERA.

An opera is a composition of a dramatic kind, but set to music and sung, accompanied with musical instruments, and enriched with appropriate costumes, scenery, etc. Rowland v. Kleber (Pa.) 1 Pittsb. Rep. 68, 71.

An opera is defined to be a musical drama, consisting of airs, choruses, recitations, etc., enriched with magnificent scenery, machinery, and other decorations, and representing some passionate action. It is therefore a theatrical exhibition, within license laws. Bell v. Mahn, 15 Atl. 523, 121 Pa. 225, 1 L. R. A. 364, 6 Am. St. Rep. 786.

"What is the exact legal meaning of 'an opera' has been and is the subject of dispute, one court holding that an act to tax theaters does not include opera companies—Rowland v. Kleber (Pa.) 1 Pittsb. Rep. 68—and another, in Society for Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents v. Diers (N. Y.) 60 Barb. 152, deciding otherwise." Commonwealth v. Fox (Pa.) 10 Phila. 204.

OPERA COMPANY.

An opera company are persons who sing compositions set to music, such as the operas of Mozart, Handel, Rossini, Verdi, etc. An opera company need not be licensed under an act fixing licenses for theaters. Rowland v. Kleber (Pa.) 1 Pittsb. Rep. 68, 71.

OPERA HOUSE.

As public house, see "Public House."

A house in which operas are represented is termed an opera house. Rowland v. Kleber (Pa.) 1 Pittsb. Rep. 68, 71.

The opera house and the theater alike comprehend the stage, proscenium, boxes, orchestra, parquet, and the galleries. Bell v. Mahn, 121 Pa. 225, 229, 15 Atl. 523, 524, 1 L. R. A. 364, 6 Am. St. Rep. 786.

OPERATE.

See "Cease to be Operated."

The word "operate" means to put into or to continue in operation or activity; to work, as to operate a machine—and is distinct from maintaining or keeping in repair. McChesney v. Village of Hyde Park, 37 N. E. 858, 862, 151 Ill. 634.

The expression "used and operated," as used in a petition in an action against a railroad for personal injuries, stating that the defendant used and operated a turntable in connection with its railroad, etc., is equivalent to a charge that the defendant controlled such turntable. Nagel v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 75 Mo. 653, 660, 42 Am. Rep. 418.

The operation in the expression "upon which the will may operate" means full operation according to the whole intention of the testator, and not a partial or limited operation which would execute this intention in part, and leave it in part unexecuted. Lamar v. McLaren, 84 S. E. 116, 119, 107 Ga. 591.

Operating drawbridge.

A contract between a bridge company and another party relative to the erecting of a drawbridge, and providing that the operating and managing of the draw should be left to the bridge company, means the opening and closing of the draw. Portage Lake Bridge Co. v. Wright, 44 N. W. 498, 500, 78 Mich. 426.

Operating in grain fields.

A policy of fire insurance was issued on a harvesting machine while operating in the grain fields, and in transit from place to place in connection with harvesting, and the machine was moved the day after the policy was issued from the place where it had been stored since the previous season to a blacksmith shop to be repaired in order to fill contracts for cutting and threshing grain; and while near such shop, and about the day the harvesting season commenced, the machine was burned. Held, that it was not operating in the grain fields at the time it was destroyed, within the meaning of the policy. Mawhinney v. Southern Ins. Co., 32 Pac. 945, 946, 98 Cal. 184, 20 L. R. A. 87.

Operating railroad.

It is not erroneous in an instruction to use the verb "operate" in an active sense, in reference to operating a mill, as meaning running the mill or carrying on its business. It may be "that the etymology of the word makes it a neuter verb; but modern usage has accepted it as an active verb. In this it is in consonance with the noun 'operative,' as meaning a manufacturer or artisan who performs the manual labor necessary to cause a mill or factory to operate. The word 'operate' is frequently used by the Legislature in the statutes of this state in its active sense, when applicable to the business of railroads, as meaning running or managing a railroad. The law uses words in their accepted sense, rather than according to their strict etymology, or to the niceties of philology." Rhodes v. Matthews, 67 Ind. 181-189.

"Operate its railroad," as used in an instruction in an action against a railroad located in a public street, stating that the company had a right to operate its railroad over the street in question, means that the defendant had a right to run its cars over the street. Cumming v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 10 N. E. 855, 857, 104 N. Y. 689.

"Operating," as used in a statute relating to recovery for injuries to stock inflicted by a railroad company whether by reason of negligence or not, while operating their road, unless such road is inclosed with a legal fence, means that, whenever a railroad company run their engines and cars upon their line of road, they are operating it. If they use it for purposes of general traffic, then it may be said to be in full operation; and if, when part of the road is built, trains are being run over that portion of the road, conveying material for the extension of the line, it may be consistently said that that portion of the line built is being operated for construction purposes. In either event, the company would be operating their road, and would be required to build a fence within a reasonable time. Chicago, K. & W. Ry. Co. v. Totten, 42 Pac. 269, 272, 1 Kan. App. 558; McKnight v. Iowa & M. R. Const. Co., 43 Iowa, 406, 408.

Laws 1885, c. 155, providing that the occurrence of any fire caused in "operating a railroad" shall be prima facie evidence of the negligence of the company, is not confined to fire escaping from locomotives, but applies to all cases where the damage was caused by fire arising from any step in the operation of the road. It includes caring for a right of way. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Merrill, 40 Kan. 404, 19 Pac. 793, 794; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Cady, 24 Pac. 1088, 44 Kan. 633.

"Operating a railroad" as used in Pub. St. c. 112, § 212, providing the amount that may be recovered for the loss of the life of a passenger, or one not a passenger or in the employment of a railroad corporation, by reason of the negligence or carelessness of a corporation operating a railroad or a street railway, describes the kind of corporation intended to be subjected to the liability therein imposed, and not the work immediately in the process of performance by it. Even if they could be held to limit the liability to occasions when the railroads are being actually operated, they would not limit it to accidents occasioned by locomotives moving trains, etc., or only upon its tracks. The handling of its freight, the loading and unloading of its cars, and the transfer of freight from a vessel to its cars, are railroad operations. Daley v. Boston & A. Ry. Co., 16 N. E. 690, 695, 147 Mass. 101.

Trustees in charge of a railroad whose main track is all outside the state, but whose trains are brought into the state over the tracks of another company, are "operating a railroad in this state," within the meaning of Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 120, par. 40, requiring those owning, operating, or constructing a railroad in this state to return schedules of its taxable property. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. v. People, 41 N. E. 162, 163, 156 Ill. 437.

art. 4500f, providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable for all damages sustained by any employé while engaged in operating its cars by reason of the negligence of any other employé, etc., held that "operate," as used in the statute, signifies to perform a work or labor; to put into or continue in operation or activity; to work, as to operate a machine. It is further held that, if sectionmen upon the car were working handles in such a manner as to apply the power to the hand car for the purpose of moving it, they were engaged in the work of operating it, within the meaning of the statute. Peres v. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co., 67 S. W. 137, 138, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 255.

The term "operating any railroad," in Code 1873, § 1289, providing that, in an action for damages from a fire set out or caused by the operating of any railroad, it shall only be necessary for the plaintiff to prove injury to, or destruction of, his property, does not include the burning of grass on a railroad right of way by its sectionmen; and therefore, in case a fire is so set, the damaged person, in an action against the railroad, has the burden of showing that the fire was so set. Connors v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 82 N. W. 953, 954, 111 Iowa, 884.

The word "operation," as used in a contract referring to all works, materials, and plant in use in or about the construction or operation of a railroad, does not necessarily imply that the works, plant, or materials referred to were rolling stock. Works and plant which must be furnished in the building of a road are as necessary in the operation of the road as rolling stock. Central Trust Co. v. Condon (U. S.), 67 Fed. 84, 92.

The "use and operation of a railway," as used in Code, § 1807, declaring that railroad companies shall be liable for injuries to employes caused by, or directly connected with, the use and operation of the railway, is not limited to the actual running of trains on the railway, but includes the running of a single engine without cars attached, and also the propelling of a hand car, which, by reason of a collision with a flat car used by a section hand, caused plaintiff's injury. Larson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 58 N. W. 1076, 1077, 91 Iowa, 81.

The term "operating such railroad," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2373, relating to injuries to employes while "operating such railroad," includes all work that is directly necessary for running trains over a track, and includes section hands who are engaged in repairing and putting in shape the roadbed and bridges. Callahan v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co., 71 S. W. 208, 215, 170 Mo. 473, 60 L. R. A. 249, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746.

The term "land not used in operating the road," in a statute exempting from taxation all the land of a railroad company except land not used in operating the road, does not include a lot on which a section house and other improvements are situated. Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Bradley, 6 South. 321, 66 Miss. 518.

Operating street railway.

"Operation," as used in St. 1872, c. 11, § 1, being the charter of a street railway corporation, which provides that "said city [New Bedford] or town [Fairhaven] is hereby authorized and empowered to contract with said railway corporation concerning the construction, maintenance, and operation of said railway, upon such terms as it may agree with said railway corporation," etc., cannot be construed so as to extend the power to make a contract excluding the use of such railway by another railway company, which use is either previously or subsequently authorized by the Legislature. New Bedford & F. St. R. Co. v. Achushnet St. R. Co., 9 N. E. 536, 538, 143 Mass. 200.

Operating on timber land.

The term "operate," as used in a bond allowing a party the right to rescind a certain bargain for the purchase of land by giving notice thereof at a certain time, unless a majority of the owners of the tract should sooner determine to operate on the said land, etc., includes the selling of stumpage; that is, selling off the timber growing or to be cut by the purchaser, as well as the cutting of the timber by the owner at his own expense. Eaton v. Smith, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 150, 151.

Operating tollroad.

A charter incorporating a company for the purpose of operating a tollroad between designated points does not authorize the company to establish a stage line upon their road, nor to contract to carry United States mail. Winwall v. Greenville & R. Plankroad Co., 56 N. C. 183, 186.

Operating trains or cars.

The word "operate," in a contract by a railroad company employing a contractor to build its road, and agreeing to furnish the motive power and operate the construction train, was construed not to have been used in the restricted sense that the necessary force was to be furnished to move the train over the road at such times as directed by the contractor, and not to preclude the trainmen or the railroad from determining how fast or how slow the train should be run, but to have been used in its natural sense, as giving the contractor the right to control the movements and speed of such train. Miller v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co., 89 N. W. 188, 190, 76 Iowa, 655, 14 Am. St. Rep. 258.

Under Laws 1893, c. 220, making railroad companies liable for injuries to any employé occurring through the negligence of another employé while he is engaged in "operating, running, riding upon, or switching" cars, such a company is liable to a freight handler who was negligently run into by an engine while he was pushing a car to the freighthouse by direction of his superior. Egan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 69 N. W. 997, 998, 95 Wis. 69.

The term "operation," as used in Rev. St. art. 4560f, providing that a corporation operating a railroad shall be liable for damages sustained to its employés while operating its cars and locomotives, evidently comprehends something more than the mere running of its cars, locomotives and trains. We find the following among other definitions in the Standard Dictionary: "To effect any result; exert agency; act; to bring about a specified result; to produce the proper or intended effect; operation; the act or process of operating; a mode of action; a single, specific act or transaction; a course or series of acts to effect a certain purpose." The Supreme Court of Iowa, in Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 86 Iowa, 52, in discussing a similar statute, said that, while it was true that an employé was not injured while operating a train, neither the act nor the constitutional limitation "requires us to put this very narrow construction upon it. The plaintiff was employed in the discharge of a duty which exposed him to the perils and hazards of the business of railroads, and, though the injuries did not arise from such hazards, they cannot be separated from the employment." In Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Artery, 187 U. S. 507, 11 Sup. Ct. 129, 34 L. Ed. 747, the statutes of Iowa are held to apply to those only who are in some manner engaged in labor connected with the use and operation of the railway, and cases are cited to show the construction given by the Iowa courts to the terms "use" and "operation," and the general view which should obtain in the construction of such statutes; and, where one was engaged in moving a push car, he was at work within the zone of the damages to be provided against. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Webb, 72 S. W. 1044, 1046, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 498.

OPERATING EXPENSES.

Compensation for the use of equipment which is hired, and not owned, by a railroad company, is most certainly part of the expense of producing the business which is transacted, and is therefore a part of the operating expenses of such road. Commonwealth v. Philadelphia & R. R. R., 30 Atl. 145, 146, 164 Pa. 252.

The operating expenses of a railroad company should be construed to include a claim for damage done to property by the railroad company in negligently running a train at a highway crossing. Smith v. Eastern R. Co., 124 Mass. 154, 155.

The terms "rentals" and "operating expenses," in an agreement by the lessee of a railroad to pay certain dividends to the stockholders of the leased road and operating expenses, was construed not to include money borrowed by the lessor from the lessee to complete the leased road, and secured by bonds of the lessor. Eastern R. Co. v. Rogers, 124 Mass. 527, 532.

OPERATING SUPPLIES.

Within the doctrine laid down in Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235, 25 L. Ed. 839, which declares that, for the purpose of keeping works of a public character in operation, those who have given the company operating the same credit for supplies necessary to keep the works in operation are to have a lien extending back not to exceed six months, under extraordinary circumstances, does not include gas meters furnished for a gas company, though such company would come within the meaning of works of a public character as used in the above decision. Reyburn v. Consumers' Gas, Fuel & Light Co. (U. S.) 29 Fed. 561, 563.

OPERATION.

See "Criminal Operation"; "In Operation."

Keep in operation, see "Keep."

Other operation, see "Other."

"Operation" means exertion of power; method of working; process of operating; mode of action. City of Little Rock v. Parish, 36 Ark. 166, 174 (citing Webst.).

In an action against a surgeon for malpractice, in failing to remove certain sponges placed in the body for the absorption of blood and pus, it was contended that an operation begins when the opening is made in the body, and continues while the sponges or pads are being placed in the body, but when the affected portion of the body, whether it be an unnatural growth or a part of the human system, has been removed, and all precautions taken to prevent hemorrhage, and the moment arrives for the sponges to be removed, the operation is at an end, and no longer is the surgeon in a position where the knowledge or information which makes him a man of skill is required to be exercised. It was held that the operation begins when the opening is made into the body, and ends when this opening has been closed in the proper way, after all appliances necessary to the successful operation have been removed from the body; that from the time the surgeon opens with his knife the body of the patient until he closes the wound thus made, in a proper way, the law imposes on him the duty of exercising not only due care, but due skill as well; and that the removal of the sponges required some degree of skill, and at least required a surgeon to perform this service. Akridge v. Noble, 41 S. E. 78, 81, 114 Ga. 949.

Under a lease of land for oil and gas purposes, which provided that the lessee covenants to commence operations for a test well within one year from the date hereof, where such lessee procured timber with which to construct a derrick, and ordered the machinery, and located a well within the year, he had complied with this condition of the lease. Webster defines the word "operation" as an effect brought about in accordance with a definite plan, and in giving the interpretation ordinarily ascribed to the words "to commence operations"—that is, applying to the words their common acceptance—the expression means the performance of some act which has a tendency to produce an intended result. Fleming Oil & Gas Co. v. South Penn Oil Co., 17 S. E. 203, 205, 87 W. Va. 653.

"Operation," as used in Act April 9, 1872, giving a priority of liens for labor and services performed in the operation of works, mines, manufactories, or other business, etc., means such as in the course of a regular employment contributes directly or indirectly to the particular, permanent, and continuous use of such business, whether skilled or unskilled in the particular art or craft, but does not include labor or services contributed to the construction and equipment of such businesses; it being only temporary and preliminary to their operation. Appeal of Llewellyn, 108 Pa. 453.

OPERATION OF LAW.

See "Surrender by Operation of Law."

"Operation," as used in Const. art. 1, § 4, providing that all acts of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, means the practical working and effect of a law. Gebrick v. State, 5 Iowa, 491, 496.

In construing the acceptance by the United States of the grant of the District of Columbia, which provided that the operation of the laws of the state within such District should not be affected by the acceptance until the time fixed for the removal of the government thereto, and until Congress should otherwise by law provide, the court said: "A law is always in operation as long as it is the rule of conduct of the subject upon which it is intended to operate; that is, as long as the subject is bound to obey it, or conform his condition to its provisions. The operation of a law can be nothing more than the obligation of a law. The law ceases to operate when it is no longer obligatory, and as long as it is obligatory it is in full operation. The laws would not cease to operate upon citizens of a state, although it should happen that there was neither a court, a judge, nor an officer of justice to punish a breach of such laws. There is a great difference between the operation of the laws, and the execution of the laws. A law may be in operation, and yet, from a defect of courts or officers of justice, it may not be possible to carry it into execution. The operation of a law is a part of its very existence. It ceases to be a law when it is no longer operative." United States v. Hammond (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 96, 98.

In consideration of the performance of certain agreements on the part of plaintiff, defendant, a street car company, agreed to construct and operate for 10 years a certain extension of its road, and, in default thereof, forfeit the extension to plaintiff. Plaintiff performed the agreement on his part, but, before the 10 years had expired, the receiver appointed at the suit of defendant's mortgagee to take charge of all of defendant's property refused to operate the extension. Held, that the appointment of the receiver was not such a prevention "by operation of law," within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1511, as would excuse performance on the part of defendant, and plaintiff was entitled to specific performance. Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co., 30 Pac. 555, 95 Cal. 353.

OPERATIVE.

The noun "operative" is used to designate a manufacturer or artisan who performs the manual labor necessary to cause a mill or factory to operate. Rhodes v. Matthews, 67 Ind. 131-139.

"Operative" is synonymous with "workman." A closer definition would be "a workman who performs manual labor in and about machinery." Cooking v. Ward (Tenn.) 48 S. W. 287, 289.

An operative is one who obtains his living by coarse manual labor, as distinct from professional services. Ericsson v. Brown (N. Y.) 38 Barb. 390, 392.

"Operative," as used in Rev. St. § 355, giving a preference in favor of operatives in the service of an insolvent debtor, includes all classes of labor, except that which might be properly distinguished as professional or scientific labor. Akron Iron Co. v. Whitley Co., 11 Ohio Dec. 203.

All laborers are not operatives. Generally speaking, an operative is a person employed as a workman in a mill or factory; a skilled workman; an artisan; especially one who operates a machine in a factory—and is so used in Rev. St. Ohio 1890, § 6355, giving preference to those who shall perform labor as operatives in the service of an insolvent. In re City Trust Co. (U. S.) 121 Fed. 706, 708, 58 C. C. A. 126.

Farm laborer.

In construing the provision of the statute relating to assignments for the benefit of creditors that "every person who shall have performed any labor as an operative in the services of the assignor shall be paid by the assignee or trustee of the proceeds of the property assigned in preference to any other claims against the assignor," the court said: "The usual definition given to the word 'operative' is: A workman; one employed to perform work for another; an artisan, etc. 'Workman' means a person who performs work for another, be it skilled or unskilled, manual or mental labor. It seems that, as used in the statute, it was not meant to exclude any kind of laborers, but as a broad term, including every person who performs labor in the operation of his employer's business. The man who follows the plow is just as much an operative to the farmer in the tillage of his land as the man who wields the hammer in a large manufacturing establishment, and in either case they are just as necessary to the operation of their employers' business as if their labor was what is known as 'skilled labor.' They are operatives just as much as if they were skilled laborers." The court held that a person who performs labor on a farm by the month or by the day, under the control and direction of the farmer in the operation and management of the farm, was an operative. In re Assignment of Lowry, 7 Ohio Dec. 282, 284.

Laborer distinguished.

The words "operative" and "laborer" are ordinarily applied to a class of men who obtain their living by coarse manual labor, as distinct from professional men. "Operative," though very nearly of the same significance, is somewhat more comprehensive than "laborer." Ericsson v. Brown (N. Y.) 38 Barb. 890, 892.

Officer of railroad.

"Operatives," as used in an instruction providing that if a railroad accident was due to the neglect of other operatives of the road, whose duty it was to have inspected a certain brake, defendant would not be liable, etc., does not include the officers and agents of the road, but means employes of a like class who are fellow servants of brakemen. Little Miami R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 42 Ohio St. 318, 324.

Subcontractor.

Rev. Civ. St. art. 817a, giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and operatives" performing labor or working with tools or teams in the construction of a railroad, does not include one who has undertaken and performed a subcontract for the construction of several miles, at a specified sum per mile. Kra-kauer v. Locke, 25 S. W. 700, 701, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 446; Parks v. Locke (Tex.) 25 S. W. 702, 708.

Superintendent or foreman.

The superintendent of a mine is not a laborer, servant, clerk, or operative of a company, within the meaning of a provision of its charter making the stockholders individually liable for the wages of such persons in case the company becomes insolvent. Cocking v. Ward (Tenn.) 48 S. W. 287, 289.

The term "operative," in a statute providing that all mechanics, laborers, and operatives who may have performed labor in the construction or repair of any railroad, locomotive, car, or other equipment, or may have performed labor in the operating of a railroad, or to whom wages may be due or owing, shall hereafter have a lien prior to all others upon such railroad or its equipment for such wages as are unpaid, does not include the foreman or superintendent of laborers of a subcontractor engaged in the construction of appellant's road, who furnishes certain tools and teams to carry on the work of construction, and sometimes uses the tools himself, and at other times directs their use by the laborers. Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Allen & Humphries (Tex.) 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. §§ 568, 569.

Traveling agent or salesman.

One who is employed by the publisher of a legal directory as traveling agent in obtaining subscriptions and in selling the directory to attorneys and others, and collecting accounts, is not an operative, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 6355, giving operatives a preference out of the trust funds in case of assignment for the benefit of creditors by his employer. In re Sloan, 54 N. E. 516, 517, 60 Ohio St. 472.

"Operatives," as used in General Incorporation Act 1875, § 11, providing that the stockholders in mining, quarrying, and manufacturing companies shall be jointly and severally liable individually for all moneys due and owing to the laborers, servants, clerks, and operatives of the company, in case the corporation becomes insolvent, cannot be construed to include a traveling salesman on a salary of $100 per month. Hand v. Cole, 12 S. W. 922, 88 Tenn. 400, 7 L. R. A. 96, 97.

Workman in his own shop.

"Operatives," as used in St. 1888, c. 163, § 24, giving a preference to operatives in the service of any insolvent for their services, includes a creditor of an insolvent debtor who received materials from the shop of the insolvent, and took them to his own shop, and there manufactured such materials into boots at certain agreed prices, and delivered the manufactured articles to the debtor. Thayer v. Mann, 66 Mass. (2 Cush.) 871, 873.

A blacksmith who follows an independent calling, shoeing horses, sharpening plows, etc., for others, is not an operative. In re Assignment of Lowry, 7 Ohio Dec. 282, 284.

OPERATIVE WORDS.

The operative words of a release, according to Littleton (section 455), are "remit, release, and quitclaim," to which Lord Coke has added "renounce and acquit," intimating at the same time that some others may have the same effect, as where the lessor grants to the lessee for life, that he shall be discharged of the rent. Agnew v. Door (Pa.) 5 Whart. 181, 186, 84 Am. Dec. 589 (citing 1 Co. Inst. 754).

OPERATOR.

The term "owner, lessee, or operators of passenger terminals, and the person or company operating the same," in Laws 1890, c. 4700, § 6, relating to the power of railroad commissioners to compel admission into certain passenger terminals of railroad companies desired or required by the commissioners to enter, and to fixing reasonable rates, etc., for the use and privileges conferred, cannot be limited to corporations only, but also includes associations and individuals. State v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 27 South. 221, 287, 41 Fla. 363.

The term "laborer," in Act April 11, 1849, § 10, incorporating a steamship, and providing that the stockholders shall be individually liable for all debts due and owing to their laborers and operators, does not include the consulting engineer. "If we should attempt to define the plaintiff in reference to the services he rendered, we should scarcely describe him as a laborer or an operator. The services of plaintiff were very like those rendered by the lawyer. Each may involve some manual labor, but that is the incident rather than the principle of the services. The plaintiff, in my opinion, correctly described his services as professional, as distinguished from those of a laborer or operator. Ericsson v. Brown (N. Y.) 88 Barb. 300-302.

The terms "owner," "owners," "lessee," "agent," or "operator," as used in the act relating to mines and mining, shall include the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of any coal mine, or any person having on behalf of any owner or owners or lessee as aforesaid the care and management of any coal mine, or any part thereof. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 4141.

The term "operator," as used in the chapter relating to mines and mining, means any firm, corporation, or individual operating any coal mine or part thereof. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, vol. 2, col. 8150, § 849; P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1897, vol. 4, col. 1249, § 88.

The term "owners and operators," as used in the act relating to mines and mining, means any person or body corporate who is the immediate proprietor or lessee or occupier of any coal mine or colliery, or any part thereof. The term "owner" does not include a person or body corporate who merely receives a royalty, rent, or fine from a coal mine or colliery, or part thereof, or is merely the proprietor of the mine, subject to any lease, grant, or license for the working or operating thereof, or is merely the owner of the soil, and not interested in the minerals of the mine, or any part thereof. But any contractor for the working of a mine or colliery, or any part or district thereof, shall be subject to this act, as an operator or owner, in like manner as if he were the owner. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, vol. 2, col. 8110, § 193.

See "Disqualifying Opinion"; "Fixed Opinion."

Unqualified opinion, see "Unqualified."

"Opinion," as used in Rev. Laws, §§ 2975, 2976, providing that if commissioners appointed for the apportionment of expenses in repairing a highway and bridge among the towns to be benefited, before an examination is made, shall be of the opinion that a town would be excessively burdened by defraying all the expenses, they should give notices, etc., is not a conclusive opinion or judgment, but is simply a preliminary opinion to which they have arrived on an ex parte examination, and upon which they are to notify the towns they deem especially benefited of a time and place for the hearing in the premises. Town of Weybridge v. Town of Addison, 57 Vt. 569, 574.

The opinion which a witness is not allowed to give instead of a statement of fact is defined to be an inference of fact from observed facts. Lipscomb v. State, 28 South. 210, 220, 75 Miss. 559.

As disqualifying a juror.

Opinion is a conviction which is based, and must be based, on testimony (citing State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288, 41 Pac. 126), and such is its use in regard to the competency of jurors. State v. Royse, 64 Pac. 742, 744, 24 Wash. 440.

An opinion which will disqualify a juror in a criminal case implies a settled judgment or conviction of the mind. Stout v. People (N. Y.) 4 Parker, Cr. R. 71, 110; Greenfield v. People (N. Y.) 6 Abb. N. C. 1, 7.

An opinion which will disqualify a juror must be an abiding bias of mind, based upon the substantial facts in the case, in the existence of which he believes. State v. Meyer, 8 Atl. 195, 198, 58 Vt. 457.

"Opinion," within the rule that an opinion formed and expressed by a venireman as to the prisoner's guilt is a ground of challenge, means an unqualified expression of opinion on the point of guilt, and not a general expression merely. State v. Windsor (Del.) 5 Har. 512-514.

An opinion, such as to disqualify a juror, does not exist where there is a mere suspicion in the mind of the juror that the defendant is guilty; it is only an unqualified opinion that disqualifies. State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 400, 439.

This court has often had occasion to define the character of the opinion that disqualifies the juror. Whatever the answers of the juror on his voir dire to the questions of the accused, if it appear on the juror's whole examination, especially by his answers to the presiding judge, that he has no fixed opinion, and can render a verdict according to the law and the testimony produced, he is a good juror. State v. LeDuff, 15 South. 397, 46 La. Ann. 546.

The fixedness or strength of the existing opinion is the essential test of a juror's competency, and the court should look specially to such state of mind in passing on the question of competency. "If such impressions become fixed and ripen into decided opinions, they will influence a man's conduct, and will create necessarily a prejudice for or against the party towards whom they are directed, and should disqualify him as a juror. But if, in obedience to the laws of his organization, his mind receives impressions from the reports he hears, which have not become opinions, fixed and decided, he would not be disqualified." Olive v. State, 15 South. 925, 926, 34 Fla. 203 (citing O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215).

It is a good ground for a challenge for principal cause that a juror has formed an opinion as to the issue to be tried. The courts are not agreed as to the knowledge on which the opinion must rest in order to render the juror incompetent, or whether the opinion must be accompanied by malice or ill will. But all unite in holding that it must be founded on some evidence, and be more than a mere impression. Some say it must be positive; others, that it must be decided and substantial; others, fixed; and still others, deliberate and settled. All concede, however, that, if hypothetical only, the partiality is not so manifest as to necessarily set the juror aside. The theory of the law is that a juror who has formed an opinion cannot be impartial. Every opinion which he may entertain need not necessarily have that effect. In these days of newspaper enterprise and universal education every case of public interest is, as a matter of necessity, brought to the attention of the intelligent people in the vicinity, and scarcely any one can be found among those best fitted for jurors who has not read or heard of it, and who has not some impression or opinion in respect thereto. On the trial of the issue of fact raised by a challenge for such cause the court will practically be called on to determine whether the nature and strength of the opinion formed are such as in law necessary to raise the presumption of partiality. Therefore, where a petit juror in a criminal case testified on his voir dire that he believed that he had formed an opinion, though not upon evidence produced in court as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, but that he had not expressed it and did not think that it would influence his verdict, the court properly overruled the prisoner's challenge for cause. Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 155, 25 L. Ed. 244.

Belief synonymous.

See "Belief."

Impression.

The word "opinion" means a mere impression, as used in Code, § 468, providing that it shall be good cause for challenge to any person called as a juror in the trial of an indictment that he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. Palmer v. People, 4 Neb. 68, 75; Carroll v. State, 5 Neb. 31, 33.

An impression is not an "opinion," and therefore a mere impression as to the guilt of defendant is not a ground of challenge under a statute making a formed opinion a ground of challenge. State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 257, 259. The court in the latter case remarking that a mental condition so indefinite and unsettled as is usually indicated by the term impression scarcely deserves the name of an opinion. State v. Allen, 46 Conn. 531, 547.

An opinion as to the guilt of a defendant is different from a mere impression. The former disqualifies for jury service, while the latter does not. Traviss v. Commonwealth, 106 Pa. 597, 605.

On the examination of a juror in answer to the question, "Now, on the presumption that the facts were true as you read them in the paper, you formed an opinion did you not," he answered, "Well, I think not; I formed an impression." Commenting on this, the court said: "The word 'impression,' if it can properly be applied to a mental operation, does not reach the strength of an opinion. An opinion is a conviction which is based, and must be based, upon testimony. An impression is a mere fancy or lodgment in the mind, which is not based upon testimony, and the existence of which cannot be traced to proof, and in this case the juror himself distinguished between an opinion and an impression by insisting that he had not formed an opinion, and did not entertain any at the time, but that it was a mere impression." State v. Krug, 41 Pac. 126, 180, 181, 12 Wash. 288; State v. Royse, 64 Pac. 742, 744, 24 Wash. 440.

As the average juror is not usually versed in the niceties of language, and frequently uses the word "opinion" to mean an "impression," the mere statement of a juror that he has formed an opinion is not sufficient as a ground of challenge, where it appears from the examination that it is a mere impression formed from reading newspapers. State v. Taylor, 35 S. W. 92, 99, 184 Mo. 109.

OPINION (Of Court).

See "Judicial Opinion"; "Written Opinion."

The "opinion" of a court is the reasons given for its judgment. Adams v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 24 South. 817, 818, 77 Miss. 194, 60 L. R. A. 88.

An opinion is the view of judges in relation to a given subject. In re Winslow's Estate, 84 N. Y. Supp. 687, 688, 12 Misc. Rep. 264.

The term "opinion," as used in a statute providing that the losing party in the Appellate Court might apply to the Supreme Court for the transfer of a cause from the former court to the latter, on the ground that the opinion of said division of the Appellate Court contravenes a ruling precedent of the Supreme Court, or that a new question of law is directly involved and was decided erroneously, should be construed in a technical or legal sense, and is not employed therein in the sense of or in place of the terms "decision" or "judgment." The term "opinion," in a legal sense, so far as it applies to judges and courts, has a well-defined meaning. In law, Webster's International Dictionary defines the word to mean the expression of views of the judges, etc. Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines the word "opinion" in practice to be a statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. Black's Law Dictionary defines the term to mean the statement by a judge or court of the decision reached in regard to a cause tried or argued before them, expounding the law as applied to the case, and detailing the reasons upon which the judgment is based. In the sense and meaning as above defined and well understood in legal parlance, the term

"opinion" is used in the statute in question. Craig v. Bennett, 62 N. E. 278, 274, 158 Ind. 9.

Decision and judgment distinguished.

There is a manifest difference between a mere opinion and a decision; the former is a statement given by the court for its conclusions, while the latter is the judgment or conclusion of the court. Coffey v. Gamble, 91 N. W. 818, 814, 117 Iowa, 545.

The terms "opinion" and "decision" are sometimes used interchangeably in statutes. The provision in section 1846 is that the prosecuting attorney may except to any opinion of the court and reserve a point of law for the decision of the Supreme Court; and in section 1845 it is provided that a defendant may take an exception to any decision of the court, so that an exception to the opinion of the court overruling a motion for a new trial is sufficient as an exception to the decision as required by statute. Pierce v. State, 10 N. E. 802, 303, 109 Ind. 535.

An opinion of a judge, in which he states that a bill in equity cannot be sustained, and must be dismissed, with costs, is not a final decree or decretal order from which an appeal can be taken. It is merely an incomplete act, announcing the intention of the judge, which he may or may not subsequently change. Phillips v. Pearson, 27 Md. 242, 258.

The terms "opinions" and "decisions" are often confounded, yet there is a wide difference between them, and, in ignorance of this, what has been a mere correction of an opinion has been sometimes regarded as a mutilation of the record. A decision of the court is its judgment; an opinion is the reasons given for that judgment. The former is entered of record immediately on its rendition, and only subject to change through regular application through the court on a petition for a rehearing or a modification. The latter is the property of the judges, subject to their revision, correction, and modification in any particular deemed advisable, until, with the approbation of the writer, it is transcribed in the records. Houston v. Williams, 18 Cal. 24, 27, 78 Am. Dec. 585; Craig v. Bennett, 62 N. E. 278, 274, 158 Ind. 9.

"The opinion of the judge," says the court in State v. Ramsburg, 43 Md. 325, 383, "is the expression of the reasons by which he reaches his conclusions. These may be sustained or contradictory, clear or confused. The judgment or decree is the fiat or sentence of the law determining the matter in controversy in concise technical terms, which must be interpreted in their own proper sense. It would, we think, be of dangerous tendency to make the force and effect of the most solemn official acts depend upon the various interpretations which ingenuity might suggest to the most carefully considered language introducing them." In the case of Durant v. Essex Co., 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 107, 19 L. Ed. 154, it was said the reason for the signing of a decree "is no part of the judgment itself." The decree, and not the opinion, is the instrument through which the court acts. Where an opinion, after stating that the judge has examined the case on the merits, and that he would dismiss the bill without regard to technicalities, continues: "But it seems to me to be clear that this proceeding could not be sustained at any rate, as, at best, it would be simply a conversion of plaintiff's property, for which she had an ample remedy at law"—such language cannot qualify the decree dismissing the bill, without showing the cause of the dismissal, so as to make it a dismissal for want of jurisdiction. Martin v. Evans, 88 Atl. 258, 260, 85 Md. 8, 86 L. R. A. 218, 60 Am. St. Rep. 292.

OPHTHALMOSCOPE

An ophthalmoscope is a practical instrument used by oculists for examining the interior of the eye and other parts of the body. The principle on which it works is as follows: The light is reflected from a burner in front of the examiner, who holds this object to his eye, into the eye of the patient, without penetrating the observer's eye, as there is only a very small hole through which it can enter, and in that way protects the observer's eye from the direct rays of the light. It is peculiarly adapted for physician's and oculist's work. It is an instrument intended for practical use in the profession of an oculist. It is an instrument; a tool, not used for the discovery or contemplation of natural objects for the purpose of attaining or communicating general instruction, but as an instrument for carrying on a profession or an art. It is a philosophical apparatus, within the meaning of the tariff laws. Robertson v. Oelschlaeger, 11 Sup. Ct. 148, 149, 187 U. S. 436, 34 L. Ed. 744.

OPIUM.

Opium, as used in a life policy providing that the same should be void in case the insured should come to his "death by opium," meant, not the accidental or involuntary, but the rational and voluntary, use of opium. St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Grave, 69 Ky. (6 Bush) 268, 271.

OPIUM DEN OR JOINT.

An "opium joint" is a house or place kept for the purpose of smoking opium therein, and this is what is meant by an ordinance to prevent and suppress opium smoking and houses or places kept therefor. Ex parte Ah Lit (U. S.) 26 Fed. 512, 518.

Any building where opium is sold for the purpose of being smoked on or about the premises where the same is smoked shall be considered an "opium den." Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1993.

OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD.

"Opportunity" means a fit or convenient time; a time or place favorable for executing a purpose; a suitable occasion. In re Hause, 19 N. W. 973, 974, 32 Minn. 155; In re Brown, 39 Pac. 469, 471, 2 Okl. 590.

"Opportunity," as used in St. 1893, § 825, providing that no attorney shall be suspended until a copy of the charges have been delivered to him and an opportunity shall have been given to him to be heard in his defense, is opposed to the idea that a fixed and arbitrary time must be given in each case which might arise, but means a time sufficient to prepare his defense, so that an attorney need not necessarily have 20 days in which to answer an action under all circumstances, and 8 days will be sufficient under the circumstances. In re Brown, 39 Pac. 469, 471, 2 Okl. 590.

"Opportunity to be heard," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 49, § 14, providing that where a party has not appeared in probate court he can only appeal when he had not due notice or "opportunity to be heard," means such opportunity as the party is entitled to by law. The fact that the party had no actual notice of the hearing, the published notice not having come to his personal knowledge until after the order was granted, does not amount to a want of opportunity to be heard. If a fit and proper time and place has been fixed, and notice thereof given, which the law declares sufficient—in short, if all the opportunity is given which the law provides for—it cannot be said in any legal sense that a party had no opportunity to be heard. It seems to us that the want of opportunity to be heard, like the want of due notice, refers only to some act or omission in the proceedings which has deprived the party of his full legal rights in the premises. In re Hause, 19 N. W. 973, 974, 32 Minn. 155; In re Brown's Will, 21 N. W. 474, 32 Minn. 443.

OPPOSE.

"Oppose," as used in Code, § 4476, providing for the punishment of any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer or person duly authorized in serving or attempting to serve or execute any lawful process, means "force." The words "obstruct," "resist," or "oppose" mean the same thing, and the word "oppose" would cover the meaning of the words "re-sist or obstruct." It does not mean to oppose or impede the process with which the officer is armed, or to defeat its execution, but that the officer himself shall be obstructed. Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 721, 722.

"Opposing," as used in a statute making a person knowingly obstructing and opposing a sheriff in selling personal property on execution liable to fine and imprisonment, includes the ordering away of bidders, giving notice to bidders that the title is not good and that the sheriff has no right to sell, and various things of that sort, or resisting an officer in the execution of the writ. State v. Morrison, 27 Pac. 183, 187, 46 Kan. 679.

OPPOSING INTEREST.

Rev. St. § 5084, provides that at the meeting of creditors of a bankrupt for election of an assignee, if no choice be made, the judge, or, if there be no "opposing interest," the register, shall appoint one or more assignees. By "opposing interest" is meant not merely an interest contending by a vote for the election of particular persons, but an interest opposed to the exercise of the power of appointment by the register. In re Jackson (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 191, 193.

OPPOSITE.

"Opposite," as used in a deed describing one of the lines as ending at a point on one side of the street opposite a point on the other side, means that a straight line between the two points must cross the street at a right angle. Bradley v. Wilson, 58 Me. 357, 360.

"Opposite the town," as used in Act 1870, incorporating a ferryboat company, and prohibiting all others from rowing or towing any boat, etc., for hire or reward over a certain river to or from any point "opposite the town" named, means that portion of the river and its banks which the town would come in contact with if it were moved straight across the river. Sunbury Steam & Tow Boat Co. v. Grant (Pa.) 15 Atl. 706, 707.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

In the provision of the statute that, in actions against executors, administrators, or guardians, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, the "opposite party" meant is that party against whom the evidence is sought to be used, and an intervenor whose interests are the same as that of the plaintiff is not an "opposite party" who may require the plaintiff to testify. Es-lava v. Mazange's Adm'r (U. S.) 8 Fed. Cas. 780, 781. Under a like statute (Rice's Code, § 8818d) it was held that it is not necessary that a witness shall be the "opposite party" on the record in a case in order to be incompetent as a witness against a personal representative, but he will be incompetent if his interests are antagonistic to those of the personal representative against whom he is called. Hill v. McLean, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 107, 114; Trabue v. Turner, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 447, 454. And under a like provision (Code, § 2785) it was held that "opposite party" means the party to the transaction whose rights would be affected by the testimony offered. The fact that parties as to the general issues of insolvency are adversary parties does not necessarily constitute them "opposite parties," in the meaning of the statute, as to special issues which may be made and tried. Dolan v. Dolan, 7 South. 425, 426, 89 Ala. 253.

Pub. Acts, pp. 156, 157, provide that "when a suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness on his own behalf, shall not be permitted to testify at all to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person, provided, that whenever the words 'opposite party' occur in this section, it shall be deemed to include the assignors or assignees of the claim, or any part thereof in controversy." In construing this statute, the court said: "It is evident that this statute is intended to reach the real party in interest, and not a mere nominal party who is not interested in the result of the allowance or disallowance of the claim against the estate of a deceased person except as it becomes his duty as executor or administrator to prosecute or defend a suit in which the estate is interested. The Legislature intended not only that the party owning the claims should not be permitted to testify to the matters equally within the knowledge of the deceased person, but also to prevent any evasion of the statute by an assignment so as to permit the assignor to testify." Penny v. Oroul, 49 N. W. 811, 812, 87 Mich. 15, 18 L. R. A. 88.

The words "opposite party," in a statute providing that an assignor of a chose in action shall not be examined in favor of his assignee unless the opposite party be living, must be intended to embrace the debtor, otherwise they would to a great extent defeat its evident object. White v. Heavner, 7 W. Va. 324, 327.

In a suit by an administrator of one estate against the administrator of another, the administrator of either estate is not an "opposite party" within the meaning of a statute relating to transactions with decedent, unless such person was the legatee under the will or had any interest in the estate, except the fact that she was the widow of the deceased. Duryea v. Granger's Estate, 83 N. W. 780, 783, 66 Mich. 593.

Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, excluding evidence of the "opposite party" as to facts equally within the knowledge of a decedent in a suit prosecuted or defended by his "heirs, assigns, devisees or personal representatives," a daughter who seeks to enforce against the widow and other heirs a parol contract made by her deceased father is incompetent to testify as to the terms of the contract. Lloyd v. Hollenback, 96 Mich. 208, 206, 57 N. W. 110, 111.

OPPOSITE POLITICS.

"Opposite politics," as used in Act 1870, requiring the publication of the Session Laws in two newspapers which are of "opposite politics," and fairly represent the two political parties into which the people of the county are divided, is not the exact equivalent of "fairly represent the two political parties." That papers are of opposite politics is not implied of necessity in the requirements that they fairly represent the two principal parties. People v. Sullivan County Sup'rs, 56 N. Y. 249, 254.

OPPOSITION.

See "Third Opposition."

"Opposition to the discharge," as used in Bankr. Act 1867 (14 Stat. 521), providing that no appeal shall be made to the court until there is an "opposition to the discharge" of the bankrupts, applies only to an opposition to a discharge made after the bankrupt applies, under section 29 of the act, for his discharge. In re Hill (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 144, 145.

OPPRESSION.

The word "oppression" has not acquired a strictly technical meaning, and may be taken in its ordinary sense, which is an act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, domination, or excessive use of authority. When a revenue officer, under color of law, willfully and unlawfully takes the property of another, or subjects him to greater hardships than are necessary for the proper enforcement of the law, he is guilty of oppression. It is not essential that an unlawful act should be a serious injury to a person to make it oppressive. The exercise of unlawful power, or other means, in depriving an individual of his liberty or property against his will, is generally an act of oppression. United States v. Deaver (U. S.) 14 Fed. 595, 597.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENT.

Certain slightly made magic lanterns, not sufficiently substantial to be used by a mature person, but rather by children, as toys, are not dutiable as "optical instruments," under paragraph 321, Schedule N, § 1, c. 849, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, 28 Stat. 514. Borgfeldt v. United States (U. S.) 124 Fed. 457, 458.

OPTION.

See "Buyer's Option"; "Local Option Law"; "Time Option."

Contract of sale distinguished, see "Contract of Sale."

Purchase of option as a bet, see "Bet."

"Option" means a privilege. Ilges v. Dexter, 77 Ga. 83, 88.

The word "option," as used in a contract by which a seller agreed to deliver at a certain place, between the 15th of May and the 15th of June, at "buyer's option," meant a privilege to the buyer of demanding fulfillment of the contract on any day within the specified limits. Dodge v. Klene, 44 N. W. 191, 193, 28 Neb. 216.

The word "option" is a synonym for "choice" or "preference," and, as used in a contract giving a real estate broker an option solely to sell, is evidence of an intention to confer a right which he was to possess or enjoy above all other persons, and hence secured him against the interference of the owner of the premises, as well as other persons. Levy v. Rothe, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1057, 1058, 17 Misc. Rep. 402.

An option is not an actual or existing contract, but merely a right reserved in a subsisting agreement. In a certain sense an option is a mere solicitation, a promise without mutuality, not yet ripened into a perfect agreement. It is a proposition by one party to a contract, which must be accepted in precise terms by the other in order that it may be binding upon both parties. Rivers v. Oak Lawn Sugar Co., 27 South. 118, 122, 52 La. Ann. 762 (citing Schleider v. Dielman, 10 South. 934, 44 La. Ann. 462).

An option is an unaccepted offer. It states the terms and conditions on which the owner is willing to sell or lease his land, if the holder elects to accept them within the time limited. If the holder does so elect, he must give notice to the other party, and the accepted offer thereupon becomes a valid and binding contract. If an acceptance is not made within the time fixed, the owner is no longer bound by his offer, and the option is at an end. McMillan v. Philadelphia Co., 28 Atl. 220, 159 Pa. 142.

An option is, in a sense, a continuing offer of a contract; and if the offeree decides to exercise his right to demand the conveyance, or other act contemplated, he must signify that fact to the offeror. Sizer v. Clark, 98 N. W. 539, 541, 118 Wis. 534.

An option is not a sale. It is not even an agreement for a sale. At best, it is but a right of election in the party receiving the same to exercise a privilege, and only when that privilege has become exercised by acceptance does it become a contract to sell. Hopwood v. McCausland, 94 N. W. 469, 470, 120 Iowa, 218.

An option is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have a right to buy the property at a fixed price within a certain time. Hanly v. Watterson, 89 W. Va. 214, 220, 19 S. E. 536, 538 (citing Litz v. Goosling, 19 S. W. 527, 98 Ky. 185, 21 L. R. A. 127).

An option is nothing more than a continuing offer to sell; but until it is accepted it does not become a contract of sale, for it lacks the element of an agreement between the minds of the parties. It is only when there has been an acceptance of a proposal to sell that the vendee becomes in any sense the equitable owner of the subject-matter of the option. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. B. S. Shea & Son, 123 Fed. 2, 11, 60 C. O. A. 108.

An agreement in writing to give a person the "option" to purchase lands within a given time at a named price is neither a sale nor an agreement to sell. It is simply a contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have the right to buy his property at a fixed price within a certain time. He does not sell his land; he does not then agree to sell it; but he does sell something; that is, the right or privilege to buy at the election or option of the other party. The second party gets in present, not lands, nor an agreement that he shall have lands, but he does get something of value; that is, the right to call for and receive lands if he elects. The owner parts with his right to sell his lands, except to the second party, for a limited period. The second party receives this right, or, rather, from his point of view, he receives the right to elect to buy. Ide v. Leiser, 24 Pac. 695, 10 Mont. 5, 24 Am. St. Rep. 17.

A contract by which the owner of property agrees with another person that he shall have a right to buy the property at a fixed price within a certain time is an "option," and, if based upon a valid consideration, such contract is binding and may be enforced. Johnston v. Trippe (U. S.) 33 Fed. 530; Watts v. Kellar, 56 Fed. 1, 5 C. C. A. 394; Williams v. Graves, 26 S. W. 334, 338, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 356.

The use of the word "option," in a contract relating to corporate stock, negatives the claim that the agreement to purchase was omitted from such contract. This was expression, not omission. The use of the word "option" necessarily and affirmatively excludes another absolute agreement to purchase. By its use the parties assert a fact entirely inconsistent with the existence of an agreement to purchase. They did not omit to express a contract of purchase where they expressed an option. Wescott v. Mitchell, 50 Atl. 21, 24, 95 Me. 377.

"An option in the purchase of stock is a privilege to be exercised within a stated time. Time is of the essence of contracts of this nature." A certificate that a person, having paid the sum of $200, was entitled to 20 shares of the capital stock of a bank on payment of the balance due thereon and surrender of the certificate properly indorsed, was a purchase of the stock, and not an option in the purchase, and made the party a stockholder. Ross v. Bank of Gold Hill, 19 Pac. 243, 244, 20 Nev. 191.

The option in a will giving a certain sum in notes or in Confederate state bonds at the "option of testator's executors" is not such an option as will enable the executors to defeat the gift. Harper v. Bibb, 47 Ala. 547.

Code Civ. Proc. § 297, providing that motions for new trial in certain cases may be made, at the option of the moving party, either on the minutes of the court, or a bill of exceptions, or a statement of the case, is not to be construed as confining the moving party to one only of these grounds, but he may include one or more than one at his option. Gamer v. Glenn, 20 Pac. 654, 8 Mont. 371.

There is a decided distinction between an "option" to purchase, which may be exercised or not by the prospective purchaser, and an absolute contract of sale, wherein one of the parties agrees to sell and the other to buy certain property, the sale to be completed within an agreed time. In the latter case the mere lapse of time with a contract unperformed does not entitle either party to refuse to complete it, and therefore time is not of the essence of the contract; but where the contract is merely an option generally, without consideration, and especially as applied to mining property, of course time is of the essence. Clark v. American Developing & Mining Co., 72 Pac. 978, 981, 28 Mont. 468 (citing Snyder, Mines, § 1378).

In futures.

Dealing in options as gaming, see "Gaming."

In construing a statute making it criminal for any person to have or give to himself or another the option to sell or buy at a future time any grain or other commodity, stock of any railroad company or other company, the court quotes with approval Webster's definition of "option" as being a stipulated privilege to a party in a time contract of demanding its fulfillment on any day within the specified limit, and says that the word "option" as used in the statute, taken with a context, means a mere choice, right, or privilege of selling or buying, and it is a contract for such choice, right, or privilege of selling or buying at a future time any commodity which the statute was intended to prohibit, as contradistinguished from an actual sale or purchase with the intention of delivering and accepting the commodities specified. Tenney v. Foote, 95 Ill. 99; Id., 4 Ill. App. (4 Bradw.) 594, 599; Schneider v. Turner, 22 N. E. 497, 499, 180 Ill. 28, 6 L. R. A. 164; Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 48 N. E. 774, 778, 160 Ill. 85, 31 L. R. A. 529.

The words "dealing in options, futures, or margins" are well understood to mean a mere speculative contract in which the parties speculate in the rise or fall of prices, and imply a contract in relation to the price of the contract, and not the article itself. A contract for the sale and purchase of grain to be delivered at a future time, if entered into without an intention of having any grain pass from one party to another, but with an understanding that at the appointed time the purchaser is merely to receive or pay the difference between the contract and the market price, is a transaction which the law will not sustain. Plank v. Jackson, 26 N. E. 568, 569, 128 Ind. 424.

A contract of sale in which the seller is bound to deliver at a future time, within certain limits, is not an "option" to buy or sell at a future time, within the meaning of a statute declaring such option contracts illegal. Jackson v. Foote (U. S.) 12 Fed. 87, 41; White v. Barber, 8 Sup. Ct. 221, 230, 123 U. S. 392, 31 L. Ed. 248.

The term "option," as used in a statute, providing that a contract to have or give an option to sell or buy any grain or other commodity at a future time shall be void, refers to optional contracts, or the mode adopted of speculating in differences in market values on grain or other commodities. Such a contract is fictitious, and has none of the elements of good faith, and is defined as a "gambling contract." The word "option" as so used means a mere choice, right, or privilege of buying or selling. Osgood v. Bauder, 39 N. W. 887, 890, 75 Iowa, 550, 1 L. R. A. 655.

There are two elements in an option contract: First, the offer to sell, which does not become a contract until accepted; and, second, the completed contract to leave the offer open for a specified time. These elements are wholly independent, and cannot be treated together without great liability to confusion and error. Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 220, 19 S. E. 536, 538.

OPTION ACCOUNT.

The expression "option account," as used in a letter by a customer to a broker, who had been dealing in wheat on margins, in which the customer stated, "I now see that you have my actual wheat account mixed with my option account," meant an account of transactions in which it was not intended by either party that the actual commodity should be received or delivered, but which transactions consisted of mere wagers on the rise and fall of the price of wheat. Dows v. Glaspel, 60 N. W. 60, 64, 4 N. D. 251.

OPTION DEAL.

An option deal is not a gaming or "gambling device," within the meaning of the Missouri statutes providing that all judgments by confession, conveyances, bonds, bills, notes, and securities, when the consideration is money or property won at any game or gambling device, shall be void. Third Nat. Bank v. Harrison (U. S.) 10 Fed. 243, 248.

OPTIONAL CONTRACTS.

"Optional contracts," as used with reference to transactions on the board of trade, are contracts which are usually settled by adjusting market values as the party having the option may elect. It is simply "a mode adopted for speculating in differences in the market value of grain or other commodities." Such a contract is obviously fictitious, having none of the elements of good faith, as in a contract where both parties are bound. Pearce v. Foote, 118 Ill. 228, 234, 55 Am. Rep. 414; Osgood v. Bauder, 39 N. W. 887, 890, 75 Iowa, 550, 1 L. R. A. 655.

OR.

Construed as and.

And construed as or, see "And."

"Or" and "and" are sometimes synonymous. People v. Van Rensselaer (N. Y.) 8 Barb. 189, 200; Hope v. Clifford, 6 Ves. 499, 508.

The popular use of "or" and "and" is so loose and so frequently inaccurate that, while they are not treated as interchangeable, and their strict meaning should be followed when their accurate reading does not render the sense dubious, their strict meaning is more readily departed from than that of other words, and one may be read in place of the other in deference to the meaning of the context. Witherspoon v. Jernigan (Tex.) 76 S. W. 445-447.

The construing of "or" as "and," or the converse, both in wills and deeds, is freely admitted by courts whenever it is held to be unequivocally clear that the true general intent will thereby be given effect. Slingluff v. Johns, 89 Atl. 872, 875, 87 Md. 273; Harris v. Parker, 41 Ala. 604, 616.

"Or" will be stricken out, and the word "and" inserted, where the intent of the parties require it, even if the whole thought and sense of the instrument is thereby changed. Richmond v. Woodard, 82 Vt. 833, 838.

"It is not uncommon to construe 'or' to mean 'and' when necessary to carry into effect the intention of the parties." Litchfield v. Cudworth, 82 Mass. (15 Pick.) 23, 27.

In a by-law of a corporation providing that the directors shall serve for the term of one year "or" until their successors shall be elected, "or" must be read as "and," as the intention evidently is that the directors should serve for one year, and thereafter until their successors should be elected. Chemical Nat. Bank v. Colwell (N. Y.) 14 Daly, 861.

The word "or," in a city charter, declaring that no suit shall be brought against the city for personal injuries caused by its negligence unless the claim shall have been presented to the common council, and until 30 days after such presentation shall have been made, "or" unless claim has been made within 60 days, was construed to mean "and," and therefore the statute requires such claim to be presented within 60 days from the injury, and prohibits action to be brought thereon till the expiration of 80 days from such presentation. Jewell v. City of Ithaca, 78 N. Y. Supp. 953, 954, 86 Misc. Rep. 499.

Same—In bonds and notes.

In a note by which the maker promised to pay "W. or J. on demand," the word "or" must be understood to mean "and," and, such payees being joint owners of the note, an action thereon by one of them only could not be maintained. Willoughby v. Willoughby, 5 N. H. 244, 245; Quinby v. Merritt, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 439, 440.

A bond was executed by B. and others to S., administrator, "or" L., administratrix, of M., deceased. The word "or," used in the instrument, must be taken to mean "and," so that because the writing describes the money owing as payable to either one or the other will not vitiate it. Brittin v. Mitchell, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 92-94.

The word "or," in a bond for land, payable to S. or T., who were the joint owners of the land, means "and." Parker v. Carson, 64 N. C. 563, 564.

"Or," as used in appeal bond conditioned that if the appellant should prosecute his suit with effect in the Supreme Court, "or" perform the judgment, sentence, or decree of the Supreme Court, the bond shall be void, is equivalent to "and," as used in the statute prescribing that the bond should be conditioned that the appellant should prosecute his suit with effect in the Supreme Court and perform the judgment. The obligation or bond is alternative to do one or the other, therefore, though the statute uses the word "and" in conditioning the two alternative obligations, the meaning is more appropriately expressed by the word "or." Robinson v. Brinson, 20 Tex. 438, 439.

Same—In deeds and conveyances.

The word "or" is often used in deeds, conveyances, and elsewhere in the place of the word "and," and will be construed to mean "and" where that meaning is apparent from the context. Town of Easthampton v. Vail, 45 N. H. 1030, 1032, 151 N. Y. 463.

In deeds, agreements, wills, and other private papers the word "or," said to be one of the most equivocal in the language, should be construed in a copulative, and not in a disjunctive sense, when necessary to the spirit and intent of the document. In such papers "and" and "or" are readily convertible words, according to the sense required by the context. Attorney General v. West Wisconsin Ry. Co., 36 Wis. 466, 486.

"Or," as used in a deed stipulating that the grantor "or" his heirs should have the privilege of a road to pass and repass from the highway, should be construed to mean "and." To effectuate the intentions of the parties it is not unusual to construe "or" as "and." White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183, 187.

As used in a lease providing that the lessee should continue the renewing "of such lease or leases," "or" is to be construed "and," as it comprehends new leases. Furnival v. Crew, 3 Atk. 83, 86.

As used in a deed wherein a grantor reserved to himself all minerals "or" magnesias of any kind, "or" meant "and," and hence there was reservation of all the minerals. Gibson v. Tyson (Pa.) 5 Watts, 34, 38.

In a surrender of copyhold premises, which provides that if the grantee shall die during the lifetime of the surrenderer "or" without issue of his body, "or" was construed to mean "and." "Where sense requires it, there are many cases to show that we may construe the word 'or' into 'and,' and 'and' into 'or,' in order to effectuate the intention of the parties. Here, therefore, in order to give effect to the intention of the surrenderer, we must say that when he used the word 'or' he meant 'and.' I would say with Lord Hardwicke that there is no magic in particular words, further than as they show the intention of the parties." Wright v. Kemp, 8 Term R. 470, 478.

The word "or," in a deed to one and the heirs of her body, providing that if she "will have no heirs, 'or' dying intestate," the land shall revert to the grantor, construed to mean "and," the clear construction of the reservation being that it was to take effect only upon the grantee's "dying intestate and without issue." Shoofstall v. Powell (Pa.) 1 Grant, Cas. 19, 21.

Same—in civil statutes.

The word "or" is frequently used as having the same meaning as "and," particularly in permissive, affirmative sentences, so that the change of the word "or" to "and" in the Constitution in such a use will not change its meaning. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Goodenough, 32 South. 404, 411, 108 La. 442.

In the construction of statutes it is the duty of the court to ascertain the clear intention of the Legislature. In order to do this the courts are often compelled to construe "or" as meaning "and," and again "and" as meaning "or." United States v. Fisk, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 445, 447, 18 L. Ed. 248.

It is within common knowledge that the words "or" and "and" are frequently used interchangeably, not only by those unskilled in the use of language, but by those who are acquainted with the shades of difference in the two conjunctions, for oftentimes the idea of the user is as correctly expressed by the use of one as the other. So it is held that under an act concerning distributions and descents, and providing that the wife shall not be entitled to any interest, under the provisions of the section, in any land to which the husband has made a conveyance, when the wife, at the time of the conveyance, is not "or" never has been a resident of this state, the word "or" should be read "and," with the effect that a wife who had ever been a resident of this state is entitled to the benefits of the act. Kennedy v. Haskell, 78 Pac. 918, 914, 67 Kan. 612.

As used in Act April 11, 1848, § 8, providing that a married woman living with her husband may incur debts for necessities for the maintenance of herself and family, but that no judgment shall be rendered against the wife unless it shall appear that the debt was contracted by the wife "or" incurred for articles necessary for the support of the husband and wife, "or" must be read "and." Murray v. Keyes, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 384, 391.

As used in the inheritance tax law of 1895, § 2, providing that when a bequest of property is made to father, mother, husband, wife, brother, and sister, widow of a son, or a lineal descendant, during life or for a term of years, "or" remainder to the collateral heir of the decedent, it shall not be subject to any tax, "or" means "and." It is well settled that the words "or" and "and" will not have their literal meaning when to give them their literal meaning renders the sense of a statutory enactment dubious. Ayers v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 58 N. E. 818, 828, 187 Ill. 42.

As used in Act April 21, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 287), providing for the incorporation and governing of casualty insurance companies, section 2, subd. 6, providing that it may include such kinds of business as are specified under subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 1, hereof, "or" under subdivisions 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of section 1 hereof, "or" must be construed to mean "and." Sutherland, in his work on Statutory Construction (section 252) says: "The popular use of 'or' and 'and' is so loose and so frequently inaccurate that it has infected statutory enactments. While they are not treated as interchangeable, and should be followed when their accurate reading does not render the sense dubious, their strict meaning is more readily departed from than that of other words, and one read in place of the other in deference to the meaning of the context." People v. Van Cleave, 58 N. E. 422, 424, 187 Ill. 125.

As used in Act 1836, § 2627, prohibiting any publication out of the court respecting the conduct of judges, officers of the court, jurors, witnesses and parties on a question before such court, and providing that the party aggrieved may proceed against the author, printer, and publisher by indictment, "or" may bring an action at law for damages, "or" is not to be construed as used disjunctively, and hence the statute authorizes both a criminal prosecution and an action for damages. Foster v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 8 Watts & S. 77, 79.

As used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 34, § 33, providing that the owner of land across which a railroad has been constructed may recover his land and damages where no proceedings under the law have been instituted "or" are pending to ascertain and assess compensation, "or" should be construed in a conjunctive sense. Kanne v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 23 N. W. 854, 856, 33 Minn. 419.

As used in Pol. Code, § 3780, providing that redemption from a tax sale may be made within 12 months from the date of the purchase, "or" at any time before the filing of certain affidavits and the application for a deed, "or" may be read "and." California & N. R. Co. v. McCartney, 38 Pac. 448, 104 Cal. 616.

Where a statute chartering a railroad authorized it to build a road to run from a point in a town "or" on the track of any railroad running out of it, the word "or" will be construed as "and." Attorney General v. West Wisconsin Ry. Co., 36 Wis. 466, 487.

It is well settled that, when either the "or" or "and" has been mistakenly used for the other, the one intended will be substituted for the one mistakenly used, so as to carry out the legislative intention; hence in Code 1892, § 293, providing that the board of supervisors shall have power, in its discretion, to employ counsel by the year, or to employ counsel in all civil cases in which the county is interested, the word "or" will be read "and," in view of the course of legislation previous thereto. Warren County v. Booth, 82 South. 1000, 1001, 81 Miss. 287.

As used in Civ. Code, § 3828, providing that a mother, or, if no mother, a father, may recover for the homicide of a child, minor of sui juris, upon whom she or he is dependent "or who contributes to his or her support, unless said child leave a wife, husband, or child," "or" should be construed to mean "and"; hence, in order to entitle a parent to recover, it must appear that he or she is dependent on the child, and that the latter contributes to the parent's support. Smith v. Hatcher, 29 S. E. 162, 163, 102 Ga. 158 (citing Clay v. Central Railroad & Banking Co., 84 Ga. 345, 10 S. E. 967).

As used in the act relating to forcible entry and detainer, authorizing a remedy for an unlawful "or" forcible entry, "or" must be read "and," as it would be unreasonable to give such a construction to the word "or" as would create a new kind of action, all former acts in relation to the matter having used the language "unlawful and forcible entry," Ferrell v. Lamar, 1 Wis. 8, 15; and it would include every unlawful withholding of possession from the person entitled to it, whether defendant's entry was lawful or unlawful. Winterfield v. Stauss, 24 Wis. 894, 406. See, also, O'Connell v. Gillespie, 17 Ind. 459, 460; Burgett v. Bothwell, 86 Ind. 149, 151.

When necessary to carry out the intention of the Legislature in a statute, "or" may be read as "and," and is so used in an act authorizing a city to purchase or erect waterworks "or" to authorize the erection of the same, so that the grant to a corporation of a franchise does not prevent the city from afterwards erecting its own system. North Springs Water Co. v. City of Tacoma, 58 Pac. 773, 777, 21 Wash. 517, 47 L. R. A. 214 (citing Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. City of Newton [U. S.] 42 Fed. 723); Thomas v. City of Grand Junction, 56 Pac. 665, 667, 13 Colo. App. 80.

The word "or," in Code Civ. Proc. § 978, providing that an appeal from a justice is not effectual unless an undertaking be filed for the payment of costs on appeal, "or" if a stay of proceedings be claimed in a sum equal to twice the amount of the judgment, is to be read "and." McConky v. Superior Court of Alameda County, 58 Cal. 83.

Under Rev. St. 1879, § 1878, providing for applications for change of venue and for the election of a special judge "for the trial of a particular case pending 'or' to decide defendant's application for the change of venue," the word "or" will be construed to mean "and," and the election of the special judge merely to decide the defendant's application for the change of venue is unauthorized. State v. Bulling, 100 Mo. 87, 93, 12 S. W. 356.

As used in Gen. Laws 1881, c. 148, § 2, providing that a receiver may be appointed when it shall appear that a debtor is insolvent "or" has been giving or is about to give a preference to any creditor, "or" should be construed "and." Weston v. Loyhed, 14 N. W. 892, 893, 30 Minn. 221.

The word "or," in Act June 13, 1826, § 4, requiring an affidavit for a capias ad respondendum that to the best of deponent's knowledge "or" belief the defendant was not an inhabitant of the commonwealth, etc., should be construed to signify "and," for the spirit of the act confines the use of the capias to cases in which the plaintiff has reason to know and fully believes that defendant is about to quit the commonwealth. Diehl v. Perie (Pa.) 2 Miles, 47, 49.

Under Act April 18, 1884, § 4, providing that "this act shall not apply to railway, canal, or banking corporations, * * * or manufacturing companies or mining companies carrying on business in this state," it was held that the word "or" was used in its copulative and not in its disjunctive sense, in that the qualifying words "carrying on business in this state" related to all the corporations designated in the act, and not merely to mining companies. Standard Underground Cable Co. v. Attorney General, 46 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 270, 277, 19 Atl. 733, 735, 19 Am. St. Rep. 894.

"Or," as used in a statute, construed to mean "and." Sparrow v. Davidson College, 77 N. C. 35, 36; State v. Bulling, 12 S. W. 356, 100 Mo. 88; Toomey v. Hughes (Pa.) 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 66, 67.

The word "or" will be construed to mean "and" in order to give effect to the intention of the Legislature. Price v. Forrest, 35 Atl. 1075, 1080, 54 N. J. Eq. 669.

The word "or" in a statute read "and," because evidently a misprint. Sparrow v. Davidson College, 77 N. C. 35, 36.

"Or" may be read "and" if the sense requires it. Bates' Ann St. Ohio 1904, § 6794;

Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 23; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 4947.

"Or" may be read "and." Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2724.

Same—In penal statutes.

The doctrine is elementary that the word "and" may be interpreted as a disjunctive, and the word "or" as a conjunctive, when the sense absolutely requires it. State v. Brandt, 41 Iowa, 593, 614. In Code, § 8870, providing that "if the father and mother of any child under the age of 6 years . . . exposes, etc., the same," etc., with intent to abandon it, etc., the word "and" may be construed to mean "or," and the offense charged therein may be committed by either parent. State v. Smith, 48 Iowa, 670, 673.

"Or," as used in Revision, § 243, providing that certain acts of a state officer charged with the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of public money should be deemed an embezzlement of so much of such money as is taken, converted, invested, used, loaned, "or" unaccounted for, should be construed to mean "and." State v. Brandt, 41 Iowa, 593, 606.

"Or," as used in Act March 31, 1860, § 135, providing that the defendant must break "or" enter in order to constitute the common-law offense of burglary, is to be construed to mean "and." Rolland v. Commonwealth, 82 Pa. 306, 326, 22 Am. Rep. 758.

As used in Battle's Revisal, c. 32, § 154, providing for the punishment of any person who willfully puts any obstruction, except for the purpose of utilizing water as a motive power, in any natural passage for water, whereby the natural flow of water is lessened or retarded, "or" whereby the navigation of such course by any raft or flat may be impeded, "or" means "and," so that the section will read "whereby the natural flow of the water is retarded, 'and' whereby the navigation of such course may be impeded." State v. Pool, 74 N. C. 402, 404.

Act 1729 provided a penalty to be imposed on any justice of the peace who shall marry the minor daughter of any person, or who shall subscribe his name to the publication of any intended marriage of a minor, without having produced to him a certificate of the consent of the parent, guardian, or master, "if such parent, guardian, or master or mistress live within this province 'or' can be consulted with." Held, that the word "or" in the last clause should be construed to mean "and," since it was not the intention of the Legislature to send a justice or other person on a voyage of discovery out of the state to consult with the parent or guardian, and hence no penalty was recoverable against a justice for marrying the minor daughter of a citizen of another state, not resident in Pennsylvania, without the consent of her parents. Bollin v. Shiner, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 205, 206.

As used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2638], imposing a penalty for knowingly mailing any obscene, lewd, "or" lascivious book, "or" is construed as meaning "and," so that a publication, to be within the prohibition, must be not only obscene, but also lewd and lascivious. United States v. Moore (U. S.) 104 Fed. 73.

Under Act 1866, c. 42, providing that a person who may be able to labor, "or" who neglects to employ himself, and have some honest occupation for the support of himself or his family, "or" if any person shall be found spending his time in dissipation, etc., the word "or" must be construed "and," otherwise it will follow that any person whatever sauntering about without employment, though he might have ample means of subsistence, would be a vagrant. State v. Custer, 65 N. C. 339, 342.

Laws 1890, c. 110, § 1, declares that any person, association, or incorporation which shall manufacture any spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor, or shall import any of the same for sale or gift, as a beverage, or shall keep for sale, or sell, or offer for sale or gift, barter, or trade, any of such intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, shall be punished. Held, that the disjunctive conjunction "or," used in such statute, might be construed to mean "and," and therefore an indictment charging that defendant sold "and" gave was not objectionable for duplicity, since the pleader may allege in a single complaint that the vendor did as many of the forbidden things as he chose, employing the conjunction "and," and will be able to secure conviction at the trial by proof of any one of the alleged acts. State v. Kerr, 58 N. W. 27, 28, 8 N. D. 523.

"Or," as used in 1 Jac. I, c. 15, enumerating acts of creditors constituting acts of bankruptcy, and specifying acts "to the intent 'or' whereby his creditor may be defeated," the word "or" must be construed "and," as the intent and the act must both concur to constitute the crime. Fowler v. Padget, 7 Term R. 509, 514.

Where a statute uses the words "willfully or maliciously" to qualify the act therein declared an offense, the indictment may charge the act as willfully "and" maliciously done. State v. Philbin, 35 La. Anl. 964, 966.

"Or," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 3294 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3607], authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, on application therefor, to remit "or" mitigate any fine or penalty relating to steam vessels, or discontinue any prosecution to recover penalties, denotes that the power granted is to do either—that is, to do both—of the two things mentioned, which is the use of the word “or” quite as frequently as it is used in a sense indicating that the power is to do one only of two things. Pollock v. The Laura (U. S.), 5 Fed. 133, 135.

As used in that part of the statutes relating to crimes and criminal procedure “or” may be read “and.” Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 5190.

Same—in pleading.

“Or,” when used not to connect two distinct facts of different natures, but to characterize and include two or more phases of the same fact attended with the same result, as assigning, disposing, or of secreting property as a ground for attachment, states but a single ground, and not in the alternative. Sturz v. Fischer, 86 N. Y. Supp. 893, 894, 15 Misc. Rep. 410.

In the last clause of an equity rule, providing for an affidavit that the amendment is not made for delay “or” that the matter is material, “or” should be read “and.” Toohey v. Hughes (Pa.) 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 66, 67.

“Or,” as used in an indictment for selling liquor “without having obtained a license therefor as a tavern keeper ‘or’ without being in any way authorized to sell the same as aforesaid,” should be construed to mean “and,” the use of “or” instead of “and” being fatal only where it renders the statement of the offense uncertain. People v. Gilkinson (N. Y.) 4 Parker, Cr. R. 26.

Where a warrant of attachment recites as a ground therefor that the defendant has disposed “or” is about to dispose of property, etc., the use of the disjunctive “or” instead of the conjunction “and” will be construed as a mere irregularity, and the word “or” held to mean “and.” Rothschild v. Mooney, 13 N. Y. Supp. 125, 59 Hun, 622.

“Or” will be construed “and,” and “and” will be construed “or,” as the necessities of the case may require, so that a complaint for surety of the peace is not bad because using “or” instead of “and.” Conklin v. State, 3 Ind. 453.

Same—in wills.

Whenever it is necessary in order to ascertain the intent with which words are used, and to give them effect when their meaning is ascertained, the disjunctive “or” will be read conjunctively, and vice versa. Noble v. Teeple, 49 Pac. 593, 599, 53 Kan. 396 (citing Janney v. Sprigg [Md.] 7 Gill, 197, 48 Am. Dec. 557); Brown v. Mugway, 15 N. J. Law

C.) 2 Speers, 786, 798; Massie v. Jordan, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 646, 648.

Courts of justice will transpose the clauses of a will, and construe “or” to be “and,” and “and” to be “or,” in such cases when it is absolutely necessary so to do to support the evident meaning of the testator. Griffith's Lessee v. Woodward (Pa.) 1 Yeates, 316, 318. But where a testator's will gives his wife a life estate, property to be divided on her death between “his children ‘or’ their heirs as the law directs,” a construction of “or” as “and” would render the clause meaningless, and therefore the will means that the heirs of a child dying before the life tenant should take under the will, and not by descent. Taylor v. Taylor, 92 N. W. 71, 118 Iowa, 407.

The word “or,” in a will, will be construed to mean “and,” only where such a construction is necessary to prevent absurdity, or to prevent a destruction of the devise for uncertainty. Robb v. Belt, 51 Ky. (12 B. Mon.) 643, 647; Harrison v. Bowe, 56 N. C. 478, 481.

The word “or” in a bequest is never changed to “and” except in cases where it is absolutely necessary to carry into effect the manifest intention of the testator, and where, without such alteration, the plain intention of the testator would be defeated. McGraw v. Davenport (Ala.) 6 Port. 319, 332.

The word “or” is ordinarily disjunctive in its office, but not always so. In the expression “You may ride or walk,” an alternative is presented to the person addressed, and he is assured that he may choose whether he will ride or walk. In the clause of a will giving all testator's residuary estate to his spinster “or” unmarried nieces, six of his nieces never having been married, and two being widows at the time of his death, it was held that the word “or” was not used disjunctively, and that testator did not mean to present an alternative to his executor, and authorize him to pay to either class of nieces at his own election, but under the will the widows took equally with the spinsters. In re Conway's Estate (Pa.) 40 Wkly. Notes Cas. 193, 194, 37 Atl. 204.

The word “or,” in a power in a will to sell or dispose of land, is to be construed to have the meaning of “and.” Ellie v. Young, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 478, 483.

As used in a will providing that in case testator's son-in-law should marry, "or" should for any cause become unable properly to maintain and educate his children, they should receive one-third of the income of the property, "or" should be construed to mean "and." The disjunctive conjunction "or" is not a technical word, and the courts substitute the copulative conjunction "and" when it is necessary to carry out an evident intention. In re Boyd's Estate (Pa.) 9 Phila. 337, 338 (citing Kelso v. Dickey [Pa.] 7 Watts & S. 279).

Where a will gives an estate to a devisee "or" his heirs or legal heirs, or issue, the word "or" will be construed as "and." Noble v. Teeple, 49 Pac. 598, 599, 58 Kan. 398; Parkin v. Knight, 15 Sim. 83, 87; Penny v. Turner, Id. 363, 371; Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare, 796, 798; Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 642; Harris v. Davis, 1 Colly. 416, 423; Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. W. 361, 363, 91 Ky. 547.

In a will devising certain realty, and providing that, on the death of the devisee "before maturity 'or' without issue," the estate should go to another named, the word "or" will be construed to mean "and," so that the limitation over cannot take effect except upon the happening of both contingencies, this construction being necessary to effectuate the intention of the testator to provide for the issue of the first taker in any event. Carpenter v. Boulden, 48 Md. 122, 129; Raborg's Adm'r v. Hammond's Adm'r (Md.) 2 Har. & G. 42, 53; Watkins v. Sears (Md.) 3 Gill, 492, 496; Walsh v. Peterson, 3 Atk. 193, 194; Soule v. Gerrard, Cro. As used in a will directing that at the majority "or" marriage of all the children named, the property should be sold and equally divided among the children, "or" should be construed to mean "and," it being employed in a conjunctive, and not a disjunctive, sense. Massey v. Davenport, 23 S. C. 453, 455.

Where testator gave his premises to a devisee, his heirs and assigns, but, in case he dies before he attains the age of 21 years "or" marriage, then the premises should go to another, the word "or" should be construed "and." Barker v. Suretees, 2 Strange, 1175; Framlingham v. Brand, 3 Atk. 390, 391; Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 643, 645; Grimshawe v. Pickup, 9 Sim. 591, 595; Boatick v. Lawton (S. Mundy*, 6 Ves. 341, 343. Contra, see Lindsey v. Burfoot, 5 N. C. 494, 495.

The word "or," in a will in which the testator gave the income of his estate to his grandson and his granddaughter, and the survivor of them, neither to receive more than one-half thereof, and which provided that in case of the death of the grandson "or" the daughter, without leaving children, the property should be divided among testator's heirs, was construed to mean "and." "Uncertainty is sometimes the result of the improper use of 'or' for 'and,' or vice versa. The general rule in such cases is that the one word will be construed to have been used for the other where the plain intent of the testator will be defeated without such substitution, but such construction is not admissible unless it be necessary to carry out the manifest design of the will." "Unless 'or' is read 'and,' the proceeds of the entire estate of the decedent are to be divided among his heirs at law upon the death of either grandchild, leaving no child to survive him or her, whereas the manifest intention was that only upon the death of both of them, leaving no children surviving, his estate was to be distributed among his heirs at law." In re Tripp's Estate, 61 Atl. 983, 985, 202 Pa. 260.

As used in a will providing that in case of the death of any of the legatees previous to the probating "or" execution of the will, the share of the decedent should go to his or her surviving children, the word "or" will be construed to mean "and," the words "probating" and "executing" not being synonyms. In re Lamb's Estate, 30 N. W. 1081, 1082, 122 Mich. 239.

In a devise to A. for life, remainder to B. and her heirs, but if B. die before A., "or" if she die without heirs of her body, then to C. and his heirs, the word "or" will be read as "and." Wilkins v. Kemerys, 9 East, 866, 876. See, also, Miles v. Dyer, 5 Sim. 485; Id., 8 Sim. 330, 332.

Not construed as and.

"Or," in its ordinary and proper sense, is a disjunctive particle, and it will be so construed, unless there be something in the context to give it a different meaning. Oxshier v. Watt, 44 S. W. 67, 68, 91 Tex. 402.

The word "or" is said to be a disjunctive particle that marks an alternative, generally corresponding to "either," as "either this or that." It is said by Webster to be a connective that marks an alternative, as, "You may read or may write"; that is, you may do one of the things, but not both. Austin v. Oakes, 48 Hun, 492, 498, 1 N. Y. Supp. 807, 310. See, also, Third Nat. Bank v. Bond, 67 Pac. 818, 819, 64 Kan. 846; Elliott v. Turner, 2 Man., G. & S. 446, 461.

The word "or" in a contract will not be construed to mean "and," where it connects propositions reasonably in the alternative. Thus, the word in a contract which binds the contractor to supply so many pounds, more or less, of oats, "or" such other quantity, more or less, as may be required for the wants of certain government stations between a certain time, cannot be construed to mean "and," and does not entitle the contractor to furnish all the oats which may be needed at the station. Merriam v. United States (U. S.) 14 Ct. Cl. 289-300.

"Or" is a conjunction, marking distribution, an alternative, or opposition, and the conjunction "nor" performs the same office in negative propositions. The first is properly used in connection with "either," and the latter with "neither." Coxson v. Doland (N. Y.) 2 Daly, 66, 67.

The conjunction "or" is not always disjunctive in signification. There are familiar instances given in lawbooks in which the conjunction "or" is held to be equivalent in meaning to the copulative conjunction "and," and such meaning is often given to the word "or" in deeds and in wills for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the party. There are also cases in which the word "or" may be permitted to retain its primary signification as a disjunctive conjunction, and yet the use of it will not vitiate an affidavit for attachment. There are cases where the word "or" is used in the statement of two or more phases of the same general fact, and not to connect two distinct facts. For illustration, where the statute says that, if the debtor "absconds or secretes himself" so that process cannot be served on him, an attachment may issue, here the general fact, so to speak, is that the party cannot be found by the officer so that process may be served. This may be either because he has absconded, or because he secretes himself. Hopkins v. Nichols, 22 Tex. 206, 208.

The word "or" is often used to express an alternative of terms, definitions, or explanations of the same thing in different words. The word "or," as used in a judgment against parties named therein, "or such of them as are now survivors," was used to explain the meaning of the preceding clause, and the same persons were meant by both, and therefore the judgment was valid against the survivors. Downs v. Allen (U. S.) 22 Fed. 806, 809.

A bond given at the port of New York, where certain goods were imported, was conditioned that the importer should pay $425, that being the estimated duty based on the invoice, "or" the amount that should be subsequently ascertained to be due, or that he should within three years withdraw and export them or transport them to the Pacific port. Held, that the word "or," in the phrase "or the amount which should be subsequently ascertained," was implied literally, and not as synonymously with "and." Dumont v. United States, 98 U. S. 142, 148, 25 L. Ed. 65.

A city ordinance provided that no person to whom a license to sell liquor should be granted should, after the hour of 8 o'clock p. m. from the 20th of September to the 20th of March, admit into his or her premises any person of color, "or" in any manner sell or retail to the same, or any of them, any liquor whatsoever, should not be construed to mean "and," so that the statute would read "admit into his or her premises," etc., "and in any manner," etc. City Council v. Van Roven (S. C.) 2 McCord, 466, 468.

As used in Act April 11, 1779, § 2, providing that the indenture of apprenticeship extended to assigns, and providing the apprentice "or" his or her parent or parents, guardian or guardians, should give his or her consent to such assignment, "or" will not be construed as meaning "and." Commonwealth v. Vanlear (Pa.) 1 Serg. & R. 248, 250.

"Or their treasurer," as used in a note by the maker promising to pay a certain sum to an association "or their treasurer," does not make it payable to one of two persons, but are either surplusage, or declarative of the agent by whom the payee will receive payment. Wells v. Monihan, 13 N. Y. Supp. 156, 158, 59 Hun, 617.

Where a bequest is made to a class of persons or their heirs, it is held that the word "or" is tantamount to the words "in the case of the death." Brent v. Washington's Adm'r (Va.) 18 Grat. 526, 538.

Same—In civil statutes.

As used in St. c. 36, art. 17, § 1, providing that no execution shall issue to any other county than that in which the judgment is rendered, "or" that in which the defendant resides, until execution has been issued to one of the counties named and been returned by the proper officer "no property found," "or" should be construed in its alternative sense. Vance's Adm'r v. Gray, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 656, 658.

As used in General Corporation Act, art. 9, § 21, conferring power on the corporate authorities of cities and villages to make local improvements by special assessment or by special taxation, or both, on contiguous property, or by general taxation "or" otherwise as they shall by ordinance prescribe, "or" is used in its ordinary and disjunctive sense, and corresponds with "either," meaning one or the other of two, but not both. Kuehner v. City of Freeport, 32 N. E. 372, 374, 143 Ill. 92, 17 L. R. A. 774.

In a statute providing that, if any school land be not sold on the day of sale, it may be offered at the next "or" any succeeding term, "or" means "either," and will not be construed "and." Brown v. Rushing (Ark.) 66 S. W. 442, 443.

The word "or" is ordinarily employed to indicate an alternative, as one or the other, but not both of two or more persons or things. The courts have sometimes, in the construction of a statute, declared that "or" was used in the sense of "and," and vice versa, but that is only done in cases where the context or other provisions of the statute, or from former laws relating to the same subject, and indicating the policy of the state thereon, such clearly appears to have been the legislative intent. As used in Greater New York Charter, § 41, requiring the owner "or" general contractor engaged in the construction or erection of any building over five stories in height, to build a temporary roof from the sidewalk in front of the building, and to secure permission for such construction from the commissioner of public works, the word cannot be construed as meaning "and," but rather in the sense of "either." Koch v. Fox, 75 N. Y. Supp. 913, 916, 71 App. Div. 283.

"Or" generally indicates an alternative, corresponding to "either," as "either this or that"; that is to say, either one thing or another thing. Thus, in a city charter authorizing the granting of licenses to barrooms on written consent of the bona fide householders "or" property holders within 300 feet, "or" means "either." Shepard v. City of New Orleans, 25 South. 542, 544, 51 La. Ann. 847.

As used in Rev. St. art. 153, providing that an affidavit in attachment shall state that it is not sued out for the purpose of "injuring 'or' harassing the defendant," the word "or" is not to be construed as "and," the words "injuring" and "harassing," as used in the statute, relating to distinct and independent subjects. Moody v. Levy, 58 Tex. 532, 534.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 39, §§ 21, 22, as amended by Laws 1883, c. 33, provide that a seed-grain contract, or a copy thereof, in order to constitute a lien, shall be filed in the office of the "town clerk of the town, or the clerk or recorder of the city or village in which the borrower resides, 'or' in which land on which the grain to be sown is situated." Held that the word "or" cannot be construed as meaning "and," so as to require the contract to be filed both where the borrower resides and where the land is situated. Minnesota Agricultural Co. v. Northwestern Elevator Company, 60 N. W. 671, 58 Minn. 536.

The word "or," occurring in a provision that "if any person shall recover by verdict 'or' judgment less than fifty pounds, he shall not recover costs," is disjunctive, and the phrase "verdict 'or' judgment" equally embraces verdicts on trial and judgments by default. White v. Hunt, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 415, 418.

The word "or," in section 4201, subsec. 4, Shannon's Code, providing that willful "or" malicious desertion of either party without reasonable cause for two whole years is a ground for divorce, will not be construed as "and," the Legislature, in revising the law, having deliberately changed the word to "or." McBride v. McBride (Tenn.) 69 S. W. 781, 782.

The word "or," in Sess. Laws 1890, c. 80, § 130, providing that in the canvass of the votes any ballot which is not indorsed by the official stamp, "or" has not the name or initials of the judge of election, as provided in the act, shall be void and shall not be counted, cannot be construed to mean "and," and therefore both the official stamp and the name or initial of the judge must appear on the ballot. Slaymaker v. Phillips, 42 Pac. 1049, 5 Wyo. 453, 47 L. R. A. 842.

Under section 31 of the charter of the city of Niles, providing that the amount that may be voted "or" raised in any year under the provisions of that section shall not exceed 2 per cent. of the assessed valuation of the property, the word "or" will not be construed to mean "and," so as to authorize the levy of taxes in excess of the 2 per cent. by allowing the council to levy 1½ per cent. and the freeholders 2 per cent. additional. Schneewind v. City of Niles, 61 N. W. 498, 499, 103 Mich. 301.

The use of the word "or," in a statute imposing a tax upon persons keeping or exhibiting for use a billiard table or tables, must be taken distributively, and renders any one subject to the tax who either keeps a billiard table for use or exhibits it for use. Germania v. State, 7 Md. 1, 6.

Same—In penal statutes.

"Or," as used in the penal statutes, can never be construed to mean "and." Buck v. Dansenbacker, 37 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 859, 861.

"Or" cannot in penal statutes be interpreted to mean "and," when the effect is to aggregate the offense or increase the punishment. If there be reasonable doubt, the accused party is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. This is the rule of justice as well as mercy. State v. Walters, 2 S. E. 539, 540, 97 N. C. 489, 2 Am. St. Rep. 810; State v. Kearney, 8 N. C. 53, 55.

If "or" could at any time be construed "and" in a penal law, it must be to lessen, not to aggravate, the evil of the punishment; and under a statute adjudging a "public whipping 'or' to pay" a moderate pecuniary fine in the discretion of the court, both punishments cannot be inflicted. State v. Kearney, 8 N. C. 53, 55.

The word "or," being used in a statute providing that if any free person shall be aiding or assisting, or in any wise concerned with any slave or slaves, in any actual or meditated rebellion, or conspiracy, or shall in any manner, devise, plot or consult with any slave or slaves, for the purpose of inciting insurrection, shall be punished, etc. The statute is to be construed as creating separate offenses, and therefore to "advise" is one offense, to "plot" another, to "consult" a third, if done for the purpose of encouraging or exciting, or aiding or assisting. State v. McDonald (Ala.) 4 Port. 449-460.

The use of the word "or," in a statute providing a penalty against any one who shall cut down, carry away, "or" destroy trees, prevents a construction of the act as precluding the imposition of a penalty for merely cutting down the trees. Givens v. Kendrick, 15 Ala. 648, 651.

"Or," as used in St. 38 Ellis, c. 4, making sheriffs liable to a penalty for taking more than a certain sum on executions "upon the body, lands, goods or chattels," does not mean "and," and a declaration stating that defendant had taken more than such sum on an execution against "body, lands, goods and chattels" was defective. King v. Marsack, 6 Term R. 771.

As used in Rev. Code 1898, p. 944, providing that it shall be unlawful, without first having obtained the consent of the owner or legal proprietor, to take possession of, use, ride off, "or" drive off a horse, "or" is disjunctive, and distinguishes between riding off and driving off. State v. Nicholson (Del.) 48 Atl. 251, 252, 2 Marv. 448.

As used in Act March 2, 1880, making it an offense to sell liquor to a minor "without the written consent or request" of father or mother "or" guardian of the minor, "or" does not mean "and," and an indictment charging the sale of such liquor to a minor without the "written consent and request of the father, mother 'and' guardian" is defective. Commonwealth v. Hadcraft, 69 Ky. (6 Bush) 91, 93.

"Or," as used in Rev. St. § 854, providing for the punishment of any one who, with intent to kill, rob, or steal, shall in the daytime break "or" enter any shop, excludes the idea that both entry and breaking are essential ingredients of the offense. State v. Allen (La. Ann.) 5 South. 531.

Same—In pleading.

Where a statute makes it a crime to do a certain thing "or" another thing, mentioning several things disjunctively, an indictment or information, as a general rule, may charge a doing of all the things prohibited in a single count, but, in doing so, the different acts must be joined by the conjunctive conjunction and not the disjunctive, otherwise the indictment will be rendered uncertain as to the elements of the offenses intended to be charged. Tompkins v. State, 4 Tex. App. 161.

The use of the disjunctive "or" in charging a criminal offense is fatal, but is proper in enumerating the negative averments required to exclude the exceptions of a statute. State v. Carver, 12 R. I. 285, 286.

The use of the word "or" in a devise to A. or B., without more, renders the devise void for uncertainty, but if the devise is to A. or B., at the discretion of C., the devise is good. Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124, 128.

"Or," as used in a plea in abatement to an indictment of arson that one of the jurors was not duly "or" legally elected, qualified, impaneled, sworn, or charged, makes the plea defective in presenting several issuable facts disjunctively. State v. Ward, 14 Atl. 187, 192, 60 Vt. 142.

"Or," as used in a complaint alleging that the defendant abandoned his wife and failed to maintain "or" provide for her, should be construed to mean that the husband neither maintained nor provided for the wife. State v. Larger, 45 Mo. 510, 511.

A declaration recited a statute as providing that the sheriff should not take above the sum limited in the act for the serving or executing of any extent or execution on the bond, lands, goods, "and" chattels of any person, but the words of the statute were "body, lands, goods 'or' chattels." Held, that the natural and obvious sense of the words, as recited in the declaration, was to confine the provisions of the statute to executions against all, which was materially different from the words in the statute, which spoke distributively of writs against either of the objects of execution, and inflicted a penalty on the sheriff for taking more than was allowed for executing any execution against either body, lands, "or" chattels, and the variance was material. King v. Mar-sack, 6 Term R. 771, 775.

The use of the word "or," in an indictment for retailing ardent spirits without a license, in speaking of the various kinds of spirituous liquors charged to have been sold, is not erroneous. Morgan v. Commonwealth (Va.) 7 Grat. 592.

Same.—In wills.

As used in a will devising real estate to testator's son charged with the support of his wife, and directing that the son should, at the expiration of a certain time from the testator's decease "or" the decease of his wife, pay certain sums, the word "or" should not be construed "and." Miller v. Philip (N. Y.) 5 Paige, 573, 574.

As used in a will providing that if a certain person should decease previous to the death of another, "or" fail to discharge recited payments, land should be sold, the word "or" cannot be construed to mean "and." The courts have interpreted "or" to mean "and" when such interpretation was necessary to reconcile it to conflicting clauses in a will. Toothman v. Barrett, 14 W. Va. 301, 319.

As used in a will providing that after the termination of his wife's life estate the whole should be equally divided among testator's surviving children "or" the heirs of their body, "or" must have its common and natural signification, which is alternative. Anderson v. Smoot (S. C.) Speers, Eq. 312, 319.

As used in a will directing, on the death of testator's wife, the share to go to J. and C. to be held by trustees during the lives of the cestuis que trust, and at their death the principal to go to their issue, if any, and, if none, the same to fall into the general estate, "or" as my said wife by her will shall direct, "or" was used in the alternative. Austin v. Oakes, 1 N. Y. Supp. 307, 48 Hun, 492.

In holding that the word "or," in a devise of the rents and profits of lands to M. until his youngest child should become of age, and providing that at such time the property shall vest absolutely in M. and his heirs and could be disposed of by him or them, as he or they should judge best for his or their interests, was not to be construed as meaning "and," it was said "that it is unquestionably true that the word 'or' may often be assigned a conjunctive instead of a disjunctive effect. But changes of this nature are only made where it is clearly necessary to effectuate the intention of the testator, or give meaning and force to the will. We know of no case that the word 'or' will be read 'and' for the purpose of defeating the effect of words accurately and clearly devising an estate of that nature." Shimer v. Mann, 90 Ind. 190, 195, 50 Am. Rep. 82.

Where a devise was to a class "or" their heirs, the word "or" was held to be in the alternative, so as to vest an estate in the children of a deceased legatee. In re Shade's Estate, 15 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 195, 198.

As being or consisting of.

Where a contract for public work provided that 15 per cent. of the amount earned each month should be reserved until the whole was completed, and within 90 days thereafter a final estimate should be made showing what remained due, and the contractor assigned "all of the reserved money 'or' 15 per cent. held by the state on monthly or all estimates," the word "or" should be construed as equivalent to the word "being," making the phrase of the assignment read "all of the reserved money being 15 per cent." etc. People v. Third Nat. Bank, 54 N. E. 35, 37, 159 N. Y. 382.

Testatrix bequeathed one-tenth of all she possessed to charitable objects, and the rest, "or" nine-tenths of my available stock, to a certain person. Held, that "or," as so used, was not equivalent to "consisting of," and the will did not therefore specify the articles of property to be understood as alone embraced in the preceding word. Its object was to express the quantum or extent of the property given. In re Sweitzer's Estate, 21 Atl. 886, 142 Pa. 541.

"Or," as used in a judgment against the parties named therein, "or" such of them/as are now surviving, should be construed to have been used to explain the meaning of the preceding clause, and both expressions to mean the same persons. Downs v. Allen (U. S.) 22 Fed. 805, 809.

As indicating difference.

The use of the word "or" in the tariff act of 1872, fixing a duty on all oilcloth foundations "or" floorcloth canvas made of flax, etc., was construed not to show that the articles so designated were different, but they were held, in view of commercial usage, to be synonymous, and to have been used by the Legislature for the purpose of leaving no doubt upon the subject. Arthur v. Cuming, 91 U. S. 362, 23 L. Ed. 438.

The use of the word "and" to unite the words "assessments" and "taxes," in Comp. St. c. 12a, § 91, providing for the listing of "assessments and taxes" by the proper city officer and the subsequent sale of the land affected thereby, show that the words were not synonymous; but had the disjunctive word "or" been used, then there would have been some ground upon which to base such a construction. State v. Irey, 60 N. W. 601, 606, 42 Neb. 186.

As conferring discretionary power.

"Or," as used in a statute requiring tenement houses to have a supply of water on each floor occupied, and providing that the water shall be furnished in sufficient quantity in one "or" more places on each floor, should not be construed so as to leave the number of places of supply entirely to the discretion of the board of health, but the word simply authorized them to require on each floor one such place, fairly accessible to all the occupants of the floor. Health Department v. Trinity Church, 89 N. E. 833, 840, 145 N. Y. 82, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579.

The word "or," as used in a will giving the executors authority to pay taxes and assessments on the property until the sale "or" division of it, and to lease or rent any of the real estate until such sale or division, declares an intention that the direction for sale is not absolute. The executors are either to sell or to divide, as in their judgment may appear to be the best interest of their cestui que trust. Story v. Palmer, 18 Atl. 363, 366, 46 N. J. Eq. (1 Dick.) 1.

Where a will directs the executors to sell all or any of the residuary estate, the words "or any" necessarily imply the power or option of selling or not selling some of the land, in their discretion. Condit v. Bigalow, 54 Atl. 160, 162, 64 N. J. Eq. 504.

The word "or," as used in a will which gives an estate to certain devisees for life, and, upon the survivor's death, one-tenth of the estate to a certain city in trust, the income to be applied for the purchase of books for the Young Men's Institute "or" any public library which may from time to time exist in the city, should be construed as an alternative, vesting in the city a discretion to use the income for either the institute or the libraries. New Haven Young Men's Institute v. City of New Haven, 22 Atl. 447, 448, 60 Conn. 32.

As used in a power given to a donee in a will to appoint the property to any or either of three sisters, "or" to all or any or either of their lawful issue, "or" is to be construed as being used in a discretionary rather than a substitutional sense, and to authorize the donee to pass the property to the children, though the sisters may still be living. Drake v. Drake, 32 N. E. 114, 118, 184 N. Y. 220, 17 L. R. A. 664.

Act March 2, 1863, §§ 1, 2, provided that for certain offenses committed by any one in the military service the punishment should be fine "and" imprisonment, or such other punishment as the court-martial should adjudge, etc., while a person in civil life guilty of the offense was punishable by imprisonment "or" by fine, etc., when the military offense was transferred to the Military Code, as it appears in the sixtieth article of war, the word "and" was changed to "or." Held, that it does not necessarily follow from this that it was intended to confine the punishment of the Military Code to either fine or imprisonment, but it would rather seem that the word was used to give play to discretion, so as to authorize a punishment by either fine or imprisonment, or both. The decision of the case does not, however, rest upon this holding, but upon the fact that the prisoner at bar had been convicted of two offenses, and that the punishment of both fine and imprisonment was thereby justified. Carter v. McLaughry, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 192, 183 U. S. 385, 46 L. Ed. 238.

A city charter which requires street improvements to be made by "or" under the direction of a superintendent of streets makes either method allowable. City of Schenectady v. Trustees of Union College, 21 N. Y. Supp. 147, 151, 66 Hun, 179.

As limiting or extending.

The words "or triable therein," in Rev. St. Wis. § 3477, relating to the power of courts of record to punish misconduct, etc., in an action or proceeding depending, "or triable therein," are intended to cover cases which are not covered by the word "depending," and must be interpreted, not as limiting, but extending, the statute to cases not covered by the word "depending." Heymann v. Cunningham, 8 N. W. 401, 402, 51 Wis. 506.

As nor.

In Const. art. 3, § 11, providing that no county containing a city of over 100,000 inhabitants, or any such city, "shall be allowed to become indebted, for any purpose 'or' in any manner, to an amount which, including existing indebtedness, shall exceed ten per centum of the assessed valuation of its real estate," "or" is a disjunctive conjunction connecting the two clauses, and expressing at the same time a separation, and has the same effect, where it stands, as the word "nor." Adams v. East River Sav. Inst., 20 N. Y. Supp. 16, 64 Hun, 635.

"Or," as used in Sp. Laws 1885, c. 7, § 19, providing that no action shall be maintained against the city of St. Paul on account of any injuries from a defect in a bridge or highway unless such action shall be commenced within one year from the happening of the injury, "or" unless notice shall first have been given in writing to the mayor or the city clerk within 30 days of the injury, should be read as "nor." Maylone v. City of St. Paul, 42 N. W. 88, 89, 40 Minn. 406.

In the charter of the city of Amsterdam, providing that "when the grade of a street has been established and the street graded accordingly, the grade shall not be changed and the street graded according to the changed grade except upon petition of the owners of the majority of the lineal feet fronting on a part of the street to be graded, "or" unless compensation be made to the owners of the property injured by the regrading," the word "or" should be "and" or "nor," to effect the plain purpose of the statute. Folmsbee v. City of Amsterdam, 86 N. E. 821, 822, 142 N. Y. 118.

As on.

In Act 1831, § 15, providing that on the confirmation of the report of arbitrators, or upon final judgment "or" appeal therefrom, etc., the title of the property involved shall invest in a certain railroad, "or" should be construed to mean "on." Levering v. Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co. (Pa.) 8 Watts & S. 459, 463.

Const. art. 6, § 4, reads: "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds $200, when the legality of any tax, toll or impost or municipal fine is in question and in criminal cases amounting to felony on questions of law alone." The word "or" is substituted for "on" in the printed copy of the Constitution, and, by reference to the engrossed copy on file in the office of the Secretary of State, it is apparent that this is a misprint which alters the whole scope of the section. People v. Appelgate, 5 Cal. 295.

As to.

The word "or," in Rev. St. U. S. § 5480 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3696], providing that any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, "or" be effected by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any other person, etc., shall be punishable, etc., is to be construed to mean "to," the word "or" having been inserted by reason of a clerical mistake. Brand v. United States (U. S.) 4 Fed. 394, 395.

As to wit.

The word "or" is not always disjunctive. It is sometimes interpretative or expository of the preceding word. So, it is often used in the sense of "to wit" (that is to say), and it is held to be so used in a question in an application for insurance as to whether applicant had ever had chronic "or" persistent hoarseness. Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. (Mich.) 96 N. W. 17, 18.

Anderson, in his Dictionary of Law, p. 737, says: "Or" may be used in the sense of "to wit"—explaining what precedes. The word "or" in the statute is often used in the sense of "to wit"—that is, in explanation of what precedes—and gives to that which precedes the same signification which follows it." People v. Latham, 67 N. E. 403, 407, 203 Ill. 9 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 262; Commonwealth v. Grey, 68 Mass. [2 Gray] 501, 502, 61 Am. Dec. 476; Brown v. Commonwealth, 8 Mass. 59).

Pub. St. c. 57, § 5, provides that no person shall sell, or have in his possession with intent to sell, adulterated milk, "or" to which water or any foreign substance has been added. Held, that the word "or" should not be construed in the sense of "to wit," but that the section describes several offenses, its purpose being to prohibit the sale of impure milk and of milk of an inferior quality. Commonwealth v. Keenan, 29 N. E. 477, 139 Mass. 193.

The word "or" in Township Organization Act, art. 7, § 7, requiring the judges of an election to make a written statement "or" certificate of the number of votes cast, is to be construed in the sense of "to wit," or "that is to say," and operates to make the words "written statement" of the same meaning as the term "certificate." People v. Nordheim, 99 Ill. 553, 560.

As used in a complaint charging a person with selling spirituous "or" intoxicating liquor without authority or license, "or" cannot be construed in the sense of "to wit"—that is, in explanation of what precedes, and making it signify the same thing—for "spirituous" and "intoxicating" are not synonymous. Commonwealth v. Grey, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 501, 502, 61 Am. Dec. 476.

In a complaint charging the sale of intoxicating "or" malt liquors, "or" is used to explain the kind of intoxicating liquor sold, to wit, malt, as distinguished from ardent or spirituous liquors. State v. Boncher, 13 N. W. 335, 336, 59 Wis. 477.

In Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, div. 1, § 100, providing that whoever, by the game of "three-card monte," so called, "or" any other game, device, sleight-of-hand pretensions to fortune telling, trick, or other means whatever by the use of cards or other implements or instruments, fraudulently obtain from another person property of any description, "or" is used in the sense of "to wit"—that is, in explanation of what precedes—and makes it signify the same thing. Blemer v. People, 76 Ill. 265, 271.

As word of substitution.

The strong tendency of modern cases is to construe the word "or" as introducing a substituted gift in the event of the first legatee dying in the lifetime of the testator, and to prevent a lapse. 1 Jarm. Wills, 453. But this is not conclusive, and the intent must be ascertained from the whole will. Staples v. D'Wolf, 3 R. I. 74, 122; Williams v. Williams, 18 S. W. 361, 363, 91 Ky. 547.

The word "or," as used in a will giving property to a certain person "or" his legal representatives, generally speaking, implies substitution so as to prevent a lapse. Phyfe v. Phyfe (N. Y.), 8 Bradf. Sur. 45, 52; Gittings v. McDermott, 2 Mylne & K. 69, 73; Kerrigan v. Tabb (N. J.) 39 Atl. 701, 702.

A gift in a will to certain children "or" their issue will be construed a gift to the issue by way of substitution. Lee v. Welch, 39 N. E. 1112, 1113, 163 Mass. 312.

The word "or," as used in a will providing for the distribution of testator's property equally among the children, and if any of such children, "or" any person or persons who might succeed to the interest of them, should interfere with the execution of the will, such child or person should forfeit his share in the estate, implies a substitution in case of the predecease of sons or daughters of their surviving children. By the force of the provision the issue of the deceased child of testator are substituted for the child, and his share in the estate would be distributed among such issue per stirpes. In re Paton, 13 N. E. 625, 627, 111 N. Y. 480.

Laws 1897, c. 212, providing that a life insurance policy shall not be forfeited within a year after nonpayment of a premium, when due, unless a prescribed notice shall have been given to "the person whose life is insured or the assignee of the policy," if notice of the assignment has been given to the corporation, is to be construed, not as giving the company option to give the notice to either the insured or the assignee, or requiring notice to both; the statute must, according to an established rule of construction, be construed with a view to its object; that is, to require notice to be given to the person in interest for his protection, i. e., to the insured, unless he has assigned the policy, in which case the assignee is the person in interest. Strauss v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. Supp. 509, 510, 33 Misc. Rep. 333.

In construing a will by which testator left certain property to her daughter "or" to her children then living, the court said: "To her 'or' her children necessarily excludes the one or the other. The disjunctive 'or' has unusual force and significance, and cannot be converted into 'and,' but upon clear evidence that the testator's intention requires it." Sawyer v. Baldwin, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 373, 385.

"Or," as used in a bequest to persons "or" their heirs, is a word of substitution. Bartine v. Davis, 46 Atl. 577, 578, 60 N. J. Eq. 202 (citing Congreve v. Palmer, 16 Beav. 435); Reiff v. Strite, 54 Md. 298, 304; O'Rourke v. Beard, 23 N. E. 576, 151 Mass. 9; McCormick v. Burke (N. Y.), 2 Dem. Sur. 137, 139; Girdlestone v. Doe, 2 Sim. 225, 226.

By the charter of a beneficiary association, persons whom the insured could designate as beneficiaries were limited to his widow, his orphan children, and other persons dependent upon him, and the by-laws of the association provided that if the insured made no designation the amount should be paid to his widow, or, if he left no widow, to a guardian or trustee of his minor children. The insured, at the time of making his designation, had a wife and two daughters, and in his application for membership, in answer to the question, "To whom will you have your death loss paid?" answered, "To my heirs," and, in a reply to a request to state the relationship of any of the persons to whom payable, answered "Wife or daughters." Held, that the word "or" should not be construed to mean "and," but that it meant that the payment should be to his widow, or, if he left no widow, to his surviving daughters; that hence upon his death the money was to be paid to the widow. Addison v. New England Commercial Travelers' Ass'n, 12 N. E. 407, 409, 144 Mass. 591.

ORAL CONTRACT.

An oral contract is a contract which is partly in writing and partly oral, or none of which is in writing. Railway Passenger & Freight Conductors' Mutual Aid & Benefit Ass'n v. Loomis, 32 N. E. 424, 426, 142 Ill. 560 (citing Bish. Cont. § 163); Snow v. Nelson (U. S.) 113 Fed. 353, 357. "It occurs where an incomplete writing, or one expressing only a part of what is meant, is by oral words rounded into the full contract; or where there is first a written contract, and afterward it is changed orally." Snow v. Nelson (U. S.) 113 Fed. 353, 357.

ORAL EXAMINATION.

An oral examination is an examination in presence of the jury or tribunal which is to decide the fact or act upon it, the testimony being heard by the jury or tribunal from the lips of the witness. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 2005; Ann. St. Ind. T. 1899, § 2028; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 4791; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5668; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 4530; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 517.

ORAL TESTIMONY.

Oral testimony is that delivered from the lips of the witness. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, 1904, § 5262; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 3704.

ORANGE LEAD.

Orange or red lead is made by roasting dry white lead in a furnace, and exposing it to the air which is admitted into the heated receptacle. By this process the white lead loses a portion of its carbonic acid, and absorbs oxygen from the air. Orange or red lead is used by paper stainers, manufacturers of wall paper, and for highly colored cards. Meyer v. Arthur, 91 U. S. 570, 571, 23 L. Ed. 455.

ORCHARD.

The term "orchard" signifies an inclosure or assemblage of fruit or nut-bearing trees, and would not be applicable to land planted to mulberry trees. Attorney General v. Judges, 38 Cal. 291, 295.

"Orchard," as used in Gen. St. c. 94, art. 1, § 19, providing that no road shall be opened through any "orchard" without the owner's consent, means a collection of fruit trees set out for the use of the farm, or for any other purpose, the number of trees being immaterial. Nischen v. Hawes (Ky.) 21 S. W. 1049.

An old field in which, forty years ago, there was an orchard, but nearly all the trees in which are dead, not more than six or eight being living, none of which bear any fruit, is not an "orchard," within the meaning of a statute providing that "no road shall be ordered to be opened through any orchard without the consent of the owner." Wilson v. Creekmore (Ky.) 27 S. W. 809.

ORCHITIS.

Orchitis is inflammation of the secretory structure of the testicle. It occurs sometimes spontaneously in an acute way. It is apt to result from local injury. The pain in orchitis is intense, and often of a peculiar, sickening character. A chill may precede its outbreak. The natural terminations are in resolution, atrophy, or abscess. The first two occur in the spontaneous variety of orchitis, and in that seen with mumps. Abscess is not often seen except after local violence. See The Wanderer (U. S.) 20 Fed. 140, 142 (citing Wood, Household Practice).

ORDAIN—ORDINATION.

The terms "make," "ordain," "constitute," "establish," and "pass," as used with relation to a grant of legislative authority to a municipal corporation to enact ordinances, mean the same thing. Kepner v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 124, 129.

"Ordain and establish," as used in the Constitution, providing that the judicial power shall be vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time "ordain and establish," means instituted; formed; modeled; set in office; settled firmly. United States v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law (1 South.) 33, 38.

To "ordain," according to the etymology and general use of the term, signifies to appoint, to institute, to clothe with authority. When the word is applied to a clergyman, it means that he has been invested with ministerial functions or sacerdotal power. Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 124, 139.

As used in a will by which the testator devised all his property to his wife for life, and after her death to the Roman Catholic Church, under the following "ordination," that in each year after the death of himself and wife a high mass should be celebrated for their souls respectively, and a part of the estate should be used in aiding poor students intending to become Catholic priests, and a part to establish a Catholic newspaper, the word "ordination" had no specific legal meaning, and did not create a trust, but the intention must have been that the church should take absolutely, trusting to its gratitude and generosity to say the masses, and do something for the students named, and something towards establishing the newspaper. Ruppel v. Schlegel, 7 N. Y. Supp. 936, 937, 55 Hun, 183.

Of a minister.

"Ordination," is the putting a man into his place and office in the church, whereunto he had a right before by election, being like the installation of a magistrate in the commonwealth, which is therefore not to go before, but to follow, election. Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 487, 512.

When the word "ordain," which, according to its etymology and general use, signifies to appoint, to institute, to clothe with authority, is applied to a clergyman, it means that he has been invested with ministerial functions or sacerdotal power. "Ordination," properly speaking, is restrained to the investiture of authority. In a state where the person ordained is invested with spiritual authority, and at the same time receives the charge of a particular church and congregation, it is not wonderful that all the rights of the clergyman, on the visible exercise of which he contemporaneously enters, should be inaccurately referred to his ordination, but in reality they are derived from different sources. His authority to preach the Gospel and celebrate its ordinances results from the ordination of the clergy, but the right to perform his ministerial functions in a particular church depends on compact, and implies the assent of the persons over whom they are exercised. Hence it follows that the ordination of a clergyman remains after his separation from a church of which he once had the charge, and his spiritual authority continues, although he is not settled over a particular congregation. Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 134, 139.

ORDAINED MINISTER.

The term "ordained minister" in Rev. St. § 6386, authorizing the licensing, to solemnize marriages, of any ordained minister of any religious sect or society, has no regard to any particular form of administering the rite or any special form of ceremony. The moment an attempt is made to limit or restrict ordination to some special form of ceremony we begin to discriminate between the diverse modes and forms of ordination practiced by the various religious societies. The laws of Ohio make no discrimination in any respect between Catholic or Protestant, Greek, Gentile, Jewish, or any other religious societies or denominations; much less do they attempt to prescribe any mode or form of ministerial ordination, which is defined in the Standard Dictionary as "the act or rite of admitting and setting apart to the Christian ministry or to holy orders, especially in the Roman Catholic, Anglican, and Greek churches; consecration to the ministry by the laying on of hands of a bishop or bishops; in other churches, consecration by a presbytery, synod, or council of ministers." It has been the practice of this court, therefore, to grant the license to authorize the solemnization of marriages to duly commissioned officers in the Salvation Army who were engaged under such authority in ministering in religious affairs to all Protestant ministers, Catholic priests, Jewish rabbis, teachers and ministers of spiritualistic philosophy, and in fact all persons who can prove to the satisfaction of the court that they have been duly appointed or recognized in the manner required by the regulations of their respective denominations, and are devoting themselves generally to the work of officiating and ministering in the religious interest and affairs of such societies or bodies. The term includes an ordained minister of the Disciples of Christ. In re Reinhart, 9 Ohio S. & O. P. Dec. 441, 445.

"Ordained minister," within the meaning of the statute exempting ordained ministers from certain taxes, is to be construed as meaning a minister who is ordained over some particular society, either incorporated or unincorporated, which is entitled to his services and obligated to him for his support in some form or other. The term does not include a minister who is merely authorized to preach. Ruggles v. Kimball, 12 Mass. 337, 338.

"Ordained ministers," within the meaning of Act Dec. 19, 1906, exempting ordained ministers from taxation, does not include an ordained minister not settled over a corporate society. Kidder v. French (N. H.) Smith, 155, 156.

"Ordained," as used in the statute which provides that "every ordained minister of the gospel in the county where he is settled or hath his permanent residence, and in no other place, shall be and is hereby authorized and empowered to solemnize marriages," means ordained in conformity to the customs of any denomination of Christians who demean themselves quietly as good subjects of the state. Town of Londonderry v. Town of Chester, 2 N. H. 268, 271, 9 Am. Dec. 61.

Code, § 1312, authorizing the solemnization of marriage by an ordained minister of any denomination includes a colored preacher who is the elder of the Colored M. E. Church, it appearing from the Book of Discipline that such elders are always ordained. State v. Parker, 11 S. E. 517, 518, 106 N. C. 711.

A statute authorizing the solemnization of marriage by "stated and ordained ministers of the gospel" should be construed to include a person ordained as minister of the gospel according to the form observed in Baptist churches, and afterwards engaged by two public societies, in the town where he lives, to preach to them alternately. Commonwealth v. Spooner, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 235.

ORDER.

See "General Order"; "Good Order and Condition"; "In Order to"; "Perfect Order"; "Shipping Order"; "Sound Order."

Rev. St. pp. 573, 605, which provide that where, in a will, lands are ordered to be sold by the executors in case of the death or removal of one, the power shall be executed by the remaining executor, includes a power of sale in a will which declared that the testator's wish was that the executors should sell the land when they deemed it advisable, since the word "ordered" is not to be restrained to the signification of peremptory command, but comprehends the wider meaning of the word "authorized." Welman v. Fath, 48 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 1, 3, 7.

"Ordered," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1705, providing that, when any publication is ordered, the judge or court may order a publication for a less number of times than each issue of the paper, means "required." In re Cunningham's Estate, 15 Pac. 186, 187, 73 Cal. 553.

An "order," within the meaning of Act Cong. Feb. 28, 1795, which provides that the President may issue an order for the purpose of calling out the militia, is a mandatory act of the president, who is commander in chief of the militia of the United States, to officers of the militia, for the purpose of calling forth the militia. Mills v. Martin (N. Y.) 19 Johns. 7, 23.

A will executed in the usual form is not an order such as is required by a stipulation of a contract of life insurance, which makes the insurance payable to a person therein designated unless a different payee is appointed by an order acknowledged before a justice of the peace. Mellows v. Mellows, 61 N. H. 187.

As the public peace.

"Order," as used in a New York statute entitled "An act to preserve the public peace and order on Sunday," means proper state or condition, or established or settled mode of proceeding, and is practically synonymous with "public peace," which means that quiet, order, and freedom from agitation or disturbance guaranteed by the laws. Neuendorff v. Duryea (N. Y.) 6 Daly, 276, 280.

Ordinance distinguished.

See "Ordinance."

ORDER (In Commercial Law).

See "County Order"; "Money Order"; "To the Order of"; "Town Order."
All orders, see "All."

Pen. Code (7th Div.) § 1, enacting that, if any person falsely makes an order for money or goods or other thing of value with intent to defraud, he shall be punished, means a mere request, and nothing more. We send orders to tradesmen by our children, servants, and neighbors, and through the mails for merchandise, without supposing that we possess the power to compel their compliance. The "order" in the statute does not mean one imparting a right on the part of the person who is supposed to have it made, and a duty on the part of the person on whom it is made. Hoskins v. State, 11 Ga. 92, 102.

An order is a brief note, resembling a single bill of exchange, requesting the payment of money or the delivery of personalty to the bearer of the note. Carr v. Summerfield, 84 S. E. 804, 812, 47 W. Va. 155.

The word "order" in a bill of exchange has a positive, fixed meaning, and means an order indorsed on or accompanying the bill. Buckner v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 536, 41 Am. Dec. 105.

An "order for money" has a well-understood meaning, and usually contains a request or direction to a third party, who is indebted to the maker of the order, to pay such money to the person named. People v. Smith, 112 Mich. 192, 70 N. W. 466, 67 Am. St. Rep. 892; Lealie v. State, 69 Pac. 2, 3, 10 Wyo. 10.

The word "order," as used in Rev. St. c. 14, § 3, enacting that the protest of any bill of exchange, note, or order duly certified by any notary public shall be evidence of the facts stated in such protest, was meant to include a class of instruments not comprised under the preceding term of "bill of exchange," and would therefore include other than written orders or requests by one person to another for the payment of money at a specified time, absolutely and at all events. Dakin v. Graves, 48 N. H. 45, 47.

As commonly understood, an order is something in the nature of a bill payable in money or something else, but in a more extensive sense it includes a direction or request to pay over money or other things upon the credit of the drawer, although to be carried by the payee as the mere servant of the drawer to him, or to be applied to his use. State v. Nevins, 23 Vt. 519, 521.

An instrument, otherwise negotiable in form, payable to a person named, but with the words added "or to his order" or "to bearer," or words equivalent thereto, is in the former case payable to the written order of such person, and in the latter case payable to the bearer. Civ. Code Idaho 1901, § 2867.

Bills of exchange distinguished.

An order for the payment of a certain sum in merchandise is not a bill of exchange. "It does not come within the provisions of the law merchant, and none of its doctrines can apply to it. It is too well settled to need the citation of authority that it is essential to a bill of exchange that it should be drawn for money, and all drafts or orders drawn for other commodities operate only as an authority to receive the contents, and the holders of them are not bound to apply either the speed or the formalities required in conducting a bill of exchange, and, when they sue, must resort to the original cause of action." Coyle's Ex'r's v. Satterwhite's Adm'r, 20 Ky. (4 T. B. Mon.) 124; Auerbach v. Pritchett, 58 Ala. 451, 457.

Orders are not put upon the footing of bills of exchange, but differ from bills and notes in that they are not negotiable, and are only prima facie evidence of a debt, of themselves not sufficient to sustain a recovery without proving a consideration. It is not an extinguishment of a precedent demand, and, if an action be brought on the original liability, evidence of the demand, protest, and notice is not necessary. Johnson v. Warden, 1 Tenn. Cas. 670, 671.

An order payable in lumber is not a bill of exchange. An order for the payment of a certain sum in chattels does not legally import an undertaking by the drawer that the payee shall obtain the chattels, nor that the drawer will be answerable to him for the value of them on the drawee's refusal to accept or pay the order. The law and incidents of a bill of exchange do not attach to such an instrument. Sears v. Lawrence, 51 Mass. (15 Gray) 267, 269; Hyland v. Blodgett, 9 Or. 166, 167, 42 Am. Rep. 799.

Check.

The word "orders," as used in Act III, Nov. 5, 1849, § 2, providing that "all actions founded upon * * * bills of exchange, orders," etc., shall be commenced within five years after the cause of action shall have accrued, means informal bills of exchange, and includes a check. Rogers v. Durant, 11 Sup. Ct. 754, 755, 140 U. S. 298, 85 L. Ed. 481.

As equitable assignment.

See "Equitable Assignment."

As evidence of debt.

It has been declared by this court that, by the common law, orders were not such evidences of debt as could be sued upon, and that the drawer, in the event of nonpayment, could only be sued upon his original liability. Lancaster v. Arendell, 49 Tenn. (2 Heisk.) 484, 489.

An order is only prima facie evidence of a debt, of itself not sufficient to make a recovery without proving a consideration according to the principles of the common law. The giving of a bill of exchange, and much less an order, is not of itself an extinguishment of a precedent debt. It may eventually be so in relation to a bill of exchange by receiving payments, or negligence in keeping it too long without presenting it, by which means the holder makes it his own; and this may be the case with an order where it appears the drawer had funds in the hands of the drawee, and, owing to the negligence of the payee for a long time, the money was lost. Harwell v. McCulloch, 2 Tenn. (2 Overt.) 275, 277.

As good order.

"Order," as used in a contract to canvass for subscriptions or orders for serial publications, and for the payment of a certain sum of money for each and every order obtained, means good orders. Newhall v. Appleton, 9 N. Y. Supp. 806, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. (25 Jones & S.) 843.

As instrument in writing.

"Order," as used in Acts 1861-62 (58 Ohio Laws, 7), providing that the compensation of the auditor is "to be paid out of the county treasury on the order of the county commissioners," means a written order, the original or an authenticated copy of which will constitute a warrant and a voucher to the treasurer for the money paid in pursuance of it. Cricket v. State, 18 Ohio St. 9, 23.

"Order," as contained in a writing acknowledging the receipt by a third person of legacies from an executor, to be held in trust, which such person agreed to retain until the legatees should become of full age, and to pay the same, with interest, to them, by an order from the executor, did not mean a written instrument, but any express direction for such payment. Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445.

As rendering instrument negotiable.

"Order" or "bearer," when used in a note or bill, are words of negotiability, without which, or other equivalent words, the instrument will not possess that quality; and the use of either of these expressions by the drawer of a bill or the maker of a note must be regarded as indicating his intention that the papers should be negotiable. Mechanics' Bank v. Straiton, *42 N. Y. 865, 866; United States v. White (N. Y.) 2 Hill, 59, 62, 37 Am. Dec. 374; Porter v. City of Janesville (U. S.) 3 Fed. 617, 619.

The words "order" or "bearer," or some word of similar import, are essential to the negotiability of a bill of exchange, but are not essential to its validity as a bill. Salamon v. Pioneer Co-operative Co., 21 Fla. 374, 381, 58 Am. Rep. 667 (citing Daniel, Neg. Inst. 104).

The terms "order" or "bearer" are convenient and expressive to be used in negotiating instruments, to communicate the quality of negotiability, but they are not the only words that can be so used, but there are some equivalent words which will answer the same purpose. Whitney Nat. Bank v. Cannon, 27 South. 948, 950, 52 La. Ann. 1484.

So commonly are the terms "or order" and "or bearer" employed in commercial instruments that we are apt to suppose them essential to negotiability. It is otherwise. Words are but the signs; thought is chiefly valuable. "Order" or "bearer" are convenient and expressive, but clearly not the only words that will communicate the quality of negotiability. Raymond v. Middleton, 29 Pa. (5 Casey), 529, 530.

Particular instruments.

The following written request: "Mr. Campbell, please give John Kepper $10.00. Frank Neff"—is an "order for the payment of money," within Gen. St. c. 162, § 1, relating to the crime of forgery, though the person to whom it is addressed is not indebted to the drawer or bound to comply with the request. Commonwealth v. Kepper, 114 Mass. 278, 280.

A forged instrument of writing in the following terms: "Mr. Davis, please let the boy have 6 dollars for me. B. W. Earl"—is an "order for the payment of money," within the statute relating to forgery. Evans v. State, 8 Ohio St. 193, 199, 70 Am. Dec. 98.

A paper purporting to authorize the bearer to solicit subscriptions for a labor organization is not an "order for money," within the statute making such an instrument the subject of forgery. An "order for money" has a well-understood meaning, and would hardly include the case of one who requests or directs another to solicit and receive subscriptions. People v. Smith, 70 N. W. 466, 112 Mich. 192, 67 Am. St. Rep. 392.

An "order" for the delivery of goods, within the meaning of a statute making it criminal to forge an order for the delivery of goods, does not include the element that the person whose name is forged should have goods in the hands of the drawee. Commonwealth v. Fisher, 17 Mass. 46, 47.

An instrument reading: "Mr. Seward, Sir, Let the bearer trade $13.25 and you will oblige, yours, etc. August 16, 1808, Samuel Layton"—is an "order for the delivery of goods," the forging of which will justify a conviction under a statute affixing a penalty for forging an order for the delivery of goods. People v. Shaw (N. Y.) 5 Johns. 236.

An order as follows: "D., let A. have the amount of $5 in goods, and I will settle with you next week," signed "D."—is not an "order for the delivery of goods," within the meaning of section 3702 of the Revised Code, providing that the false making, etc., of an order for the delivery of goods, shall constitute forgery. Horton v. State, 53 Ala. 438, 494.

An order for the delivery of goods is given when the party has a right to have the goods delivered; a warrant is when the person has a right and warrants the person who has the goods to deliver them as far as he is concerned. Reg. v. Illidge, 2 Car. & K. 871, 874.

ORDER (In Parliamentary Law).

A resolution or order is not a law, but merely the form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion. An ordinance cannot be repealed or sustained by an order or resolution. Chicago & N. P. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 51 N. E. 596, 598, 174 Ill. 439.

An order of a municipality is not a law, but merely the form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion, while an ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of government. An order is of a special temporary character. Village of Altamont v. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co., 56 N. E. 840, 841, 184 Ill. 47.

"Ordered," as used in Act April 17, 1874, c. 45, repealing Acts 13th. Gen. Assem. c. 65, relating to the empowering of cities to provide for the improvements of their streets and to assess the cost thereof upon adjacent lots, section 7 providing that the repeal should not prevent the completion of any public improvement "now ordered or in progress," means something more than a resolution of the council of the city, which simply authorizes the proper committee to advertise for bids for the work of improving a street, indicating that payment would be made therefor by special assessments upon the abutting property, and which did not authorize the letting of the contract. No one was or was to be, by the terms of the resolution, employed to make the improvement, and no committee directed to contract therefor. The resolution was but a preliminary step to the ordering or contracting for the work, simply containing directions whereby the committee might ascertain the cost at which it could be done; hence the work was not "ordered" and was not within the proviso of the repealing act. Christ Church v. City of Burlington, 89 Iowa, 224, 225.

Pub. St., providing that every way shall be deemed to be laid out under the provisions of that chapter unless an "order laying out the way" declares the same to be laid out under the law authorizing the assessment of betterments, will be construed to refer to the whole proceedings by which the way is laid out, rather than meaning some particular step or stage in the proceedings; and hence, where two orders which are connected by reference are adopted for the purpose of laying out the way, such orders, though passed at different times, should be taken together and regarded as one order constituting the order laying out the way within the meaning of the statute. Masonic Bldg. Ass'n v. Brownell, 41 N. E. 306, 309, 164 Mass. 306.

ORDER (In Practice).

See "Agreed Order"; "Common Order"; "Final Order"; "Interlocutory Order"; "Intermediate Order"; "Lawful Orders"; "Restraining Order"; "Speaking Order"; "Special Order."

Every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment or decree, is denominated an "order." Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 534; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 4730; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5714; Comp. Laws N. D. § 5323; In re Weber, 59 N. W. 523, 524; § N. D. 119, 28 L. E. A. 621; Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 548; Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2812; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 3751; Code Civ. Proc. S. O. 1902, § 401; Clark's Code N. C. 1900, § 594; Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. 1897, § 5080a; Spokane & I. Lumber Co. v. Stanley, 66 Pac. 92, 93, 25 Wash. 653; Code Iowa 1897, § 8842; Smith v. Shawhan, 87 Iowa, 533, 535; Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 5015; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1008; In re Smith's Estate, 33 Pac.

744, 745, 98 Cal. 686; Ann. St. Ind. T. 1890, § 8408; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 8293; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 5810; Bentley v. Jones (N. Y.) 4 How. Prac. 335; Wesley v. Bennett (N. Y.) 6 Abb. Prac. 12, 13.

A direction of a court or judge made as prescribed by law in an action or special proceeding, unless it is contained in a judgment, is an order. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 767; In re Lima & H. F. Ry. Co., 22 N. Y. Supp. 967, 909, 68 Hun. 252; Meyers v. Becker (N. Y.) 29 Hun. 567, 578.

The word "order" refers to an order made in a civil action or special proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1899, § 8343, subd. 20.

Every direction of a court or judge is an order, whether merely made in writing or entered in the minutes. Von Schmidt v. Wilder, 99 Cal. 511, 34 Pac. 109, 110 (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1008).

An "order" is defined by Code, § 2922, as a direction of a court entered in writing. Berryhill v. Smith, 50 N. W. 496, 498, 51 Iowa, 127.

As used in the Probate Code, an order is every direction entered of record or given in writing by a county court, and not included in a decree. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 6236.

An order is interlocutory, and made on motion or petition. An "order" has been defined to be "any direction of a court other than a judgment or decree made in a cause." People v. Circuit Court of Cook County, 48 N. E. 717, 722, 169 Ill. 201 (citing And. Law Dict. p. 738).

An "order" or judgment is the decision of the court. It may be formulated in writing by the judge or declared by him orally. Allen v. Voje, 89 N. W. 924, 926, 114 Wis. 1.

Under the Code the word "order" means a written direction of a court or judge, other than a judgment, and not included in it; so that where the notice of motion asked to strike out the answer on the ground of the frivolousness thereof, or for such other or further order as should be deemed proper, judgment on account of the frivolousness of the answer could not be given. Darrow v. Miller (N. Y.) 5 How. Prac. 247.

In considering whether a certain order was appealable under a statute giving an appeal from "any special order made after judgment," the court said: "The question is, what is an order? It may be defined to be the judgment or conclusion of the court upon any motion or proceeding. It means cases where a court or judge grants affirmative relief and cases where relief is denied. This is apparent from the language of the statute itself, which gives an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial, etc."—and held that an appeal would lie from an order refusing to quash an execution. Gillman v. Contra Costa Co. 8 Cal. 52, 57, 68 Am. Dec. 290.

The order from which an appeal is allowed when "it involves the merits of the action or some part thereof, or affects a substantial right," must be something different from a decision during the actual progress of the trial, disposing of some claim made by either party, affecting the relief to be granted, and something other than a conclusion of law included in the decision on which the judgment, in whole or in part, is to be entered. But by the definition of an "order," as given by the Legislature and written in the Code, no direction of a court or judge, made and entered in writing and included in a judgment, is an order. So, when an action is tried before the court without a jury, and a decision is made disposing of the case, except that a reference is directed to take an account, and an order is entered in conformity to the decision, an appeal from such order will be dismissed. The decision can only be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment. Until the account has been taken, and all questions arising upon it have been disposed of at Special Term, the order entered on the final decision does not become a "judgment," within the meaning of that word as defined by the Code. Lawrence v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (N. Y.) 15 How. Prac. 57, 60, 61.

A direction of a court not contained in a judgment is an order. Phipps v. Carman (N. Y.) 26 Hun. 518, 519.

A bill of exceptions reciting the doing of a certain act without any order of court is to be construed as meaning without a special order for that purpose, and not as meaning without authority from the court or sanctioned by it. Blanchard v. Ferdinand, 132 Mass. 389, 391.

As judgment.

An order of court "as distinguished from a final judgment, is the judgment or conclusion of the court upon any motion or proceeding." In re Rose's Estate, 22 Pac. 86, 87, 80 Cal. 166.

The distinction between an order and a judgment is clearly made in the Code. An order is the decision of a motion; a judgment is the decision of a trial. Bentley v. Jones (N. Y.) 8 Code Rep. 37, 38. A decision of the court upon demurrer is not an order, but a judgment. Bentley v. Jones (N. Y.) 4 How. Prac. 335.

An order can in no sense be considered a judgment. People v. Logan, 1 Nev. 110, 114.

A judgment is a final determination of the rights of the parties to an action, while every direction of a court made or entered in writing, but not included in the judgment, is denominated an "order." Sellers v. Union Lumbering Co., 86 Wis. 398, 400.

By Code, § 400, an order is a decision on a motion, and is expressly distinguished from a judgment. Rae v. Hartean (N. Y.) 7 Daly, 95, 99.

The distinction between an order and a final judgment is that the former is a decision made during the progress of the cause, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings, and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment. The latter is the determination of the court upon the issues presented by the pleadings, which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit in relation to the subject-matter in litigation, and puts an end to the suit. Loring v. Illsley, 1 Cal. 24, 27, 28.

The terms "judgment," "decree," "decision," and "order" are more or less cognate as applied in legal proceedings, and closely allied in meaning, especially under our system of practice, where we do not distinguish between forms of actions at law or suits in chancery. The term "order" is not infrequently used in a more restricted sense than the word "judgment." It may be defined to be a command, direction, or decision of the court or judge on some intermediate point or issue in the case, but without finally disposing of the main issue or issues in the cause. Then it is a mere interlocutor. But the term is sometimes given a more extensive signification, even in legal controversies, and is occasionally used as a synonym of "judgment" or "decree." Halbert v. Alford (Tex.) 16 S. W. 814, 815.

Under a notice that plaintiff would move for an order that the answer to the complaint be stricken out on the ground of the frivolousness thereof, with costs, or for such other or further order as the justice shall deem proper to grant, the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment. Under the Code, defenses may be stricken out on motion, and, if the answer be frivolous, the plaintiff may move for judgment. In the notice of motion for an order, had the word "judgment" or "relief" been used in its stead, the objection might possibly have been disregarded, but in the Code the word "order" is made to exclude the idea of the judgment. It means a written direction of a court or judge other than a judgment and not contained in it. Under the Code the words "rule" and "order" in no case mean a judgment. Darrow v. Miller (N. Y.) 8 Code Rep. 241, 243.

As order as entered by clerk.

The term "order," as used in Code, § 332, authorizing an appeal from an order within 30 days after written notice of the order shall have been given to the party appealing, means the order as entered with the clerk, and not the mere decision of the judge. Gallit v. Finch (N. Y.) 24 How. Prac. 193, 194.

Under the definition in Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, it is held that an instrument signed by the court, adjudging an injunction no longer in force, and not filed with the clerk or entered in the minutes of the court, was not an order dissolving the injunction. Devlin v. Rydberg, 64 Pac. 396, 397, 132 Cal. 324.

Order on motion for new trial.

In Nevada it was held that the word "order," in section 332 of the Practice Act, providing for a statement on appeal from a judgment or order, does not refer to an ordinary order upon a motion for a new trial. Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245.

Peremptory mandamus.

Within the contemplation of a statute providing for the punishment, as for a contempt, of disobedience of any lawful order, decree, or process of any court of record, a peremptory mandamus is an order, and the violation of such writ may be punished as a contempt of court. Peopla v. Rochester & S. L. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 294, 300.

Rule distinguished.

The words "rule" and "order," when used in a statute, have a definite signification. They are different in their nature and extent. A rule, to be valid, must be general in scope and indiscriminating in its application; an order is specific and limited in its application. The function of an order relates more particularly to the execution or enforcement of a rule previously made. Thus, a provision that a board of pilot commissioners may make rules for the government of pilots does not authorize the commissioners to order pilots who own and operate their boats, and have the same fully manned, to allow another pilot to cruise on the boat. Morris v. Board of Pilot Com'rs, 30 Atl. 667, 669, 7 Del. Ch. 136.

Ruling on appeal from an order.

A decision of the general term upon appeal for an order is also an order. Phipps v. Carman (N. Y.) 26 Hun, 518, 519; Ford v. David (N. Y.) 13 How. Prac. 193, 195.

Ruling on demurrer.

The distinguishing characteristic of a judgment is that it is final, while that of an order, where it relates to proceedings in an action, is that it is interlocutory. The decision upon an issue of law either sustaining or overruling a demurrer is final in its character, since, unless reversed on appeal, judgment must be entered in conformity to the decision; but it is very much a matter of course, when a demurrer is allowed, to permit the party whose pleading is found defective to amend, or when the demurrer is overruled, and it appears to have been interposed in good faith, to allow the party to plead over upon payment of costs. That part of the decision which allows further pleading in the action cannot, of course, be regarded as final in its character. The most that can be said of such a decision is that it is a conditional judgment. It is analogous to the old rule for judgment interlocutory. It is therefore no very great misnomer to call such a decision an "order." Nilton v. Western R. Corp. (N. Y.) 10 How. Prac. 97, 99.

The adjudication of a demurrer is the trial of an issue of law, and the decision thereon is a judgment, and not an order. Bentley v. Jones (N. Y.) 8 Code Rep. 37, 38.

An appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer is sufficient, and in effect an appeal from a judgment on the demurrer. People v. Jordan, 4 Pac. 683, 684, 65 Cal. 644.

Under Code, § 400, providing that a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action, a decision overruling a demurrer to the complaint and giving leave to answer is, while the privilege to answer continues, an order, and not a judgment. Ford v. David (N. Y.) 8 Abb. Prac. 885, 887; Id. (N. Y.) 13 How. Prac. 193, 195.

Under Code, § 245, providing that a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the party in the action, the decision of the Special Term sustaining a demurrer, and ordering judgment for defendant unless the plaintiff shall amend within a specified time, is not a judgment, but is an order. Phipps v. Van Cott (N. Y.) 4 Abb. Prac. 90, 92.

Ruling on evidence.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, defining an order as every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment, a rule made during the progress of a trial, excluding or admitting evidence, is not an order. McGuire v. Drew, 23 Pac. 312, 314, 33 Cal. 225.

Unwritten order.

In judicial proceedings an order, as contradistinguished from a judgment, is often defined as one reduced to writing and entered in the records of the court, but that is by no means saying that such only is an order. There must, in the nature of things, be an order of the court before it is or can be written out in the records of the court by the clerk. The natural ordinary meaning of the word includes written as well as unwritten orders, and there is no reason in the policy of the law or in the nature of things for excluding unwritten orders when the term "order" is used in the statute providing that every person who necessarily or willfully abstracts any rule or order of any court of the United States shall be imprisoned not more than 12 months and fined not more than $300. United States v. Terry (U. S.) 41 Fed. 771, 773.

ORDER AFFECTING PUBLIC RIGHT.

ORDER AFFECTING SUBSTANTIAL RIGHT.

See "Substantial Right."

ORDER INVOLVING THE MERITS.

See "Merits."

ORDER OF APPEAL.

An appeal is a method of revising a defective judgment. Code Prac. art. 556. An order of appeal, which is absolutely necessary, is the first step in the process by which the cause is brought within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Gagneaux v. Desonier, 29 South. 282, 284, 104 La. 648.

ORDER OF CONDEMNATION.

The order of condemnation made by the circuit court of the county on return of the execution and the justice's judgment and the papers in the case, after a levy of the execution from the justice's court on land, is not a judgment for money such as awards execution, but is merely an action of the court of record in aid of the magistrate's judgment and execution. It gives no lien, but merely continues a lien of the levy. Courtland Wagon Co. v. Shields (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 275, 277 (citing Mann v. Roberts [Tenn.] 11 Lea, 57; Ashworth v. Demler [Tenn.] 1 Baxt. 323).

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

An order of publication is a mode of service as a requisite to jurisdiction. A person may know that an action is pending against him, and he may know that notice by an order of publication was intended for him, yet such knowledge will not supply the place of a proper order published with substantial correctness. Green v. Meyers, 72 S. W. 123, 129, 98 Mo. App. 433.

ORDER OF SALE.

A writ issued under Code Civ. Proc. § 684, rectifying the judgment, and directing the officer to execute the judgment by making a sale required for its enforcement, in analogy to the former equity practice, is usually termed an "order of sale." Tregear v. Etiwanda Water Co., 18 Pac. 658, 660, 76 Cal. 587, 9 Am. St. Rep. 245.

The terms "order of sale," and "execution" are used interchangeably. Whether the writ which the officer holds be called an execution or an order of sale, it is but a written command, under the seal of the court, authorizing and directing him to execute its judgment. Burkett v. Clark, 64 N. W. 1113, 1115, 46 Neb. 406 (citing Kelley v. Vincent, 8 Ohio St. 415).

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

An order to show cause why a party should not be punished for contempt is a "paper to bring a party into contempt," within the meaning of Code, § 1016, providing that service of any paper to bring a party into contempt cannot be made on an attorney instead of on the party. Golden Gate Consol. Hydraulic Min. Co. v. Superior Court of Yuba, 3 Pac. 628, 631, 65 Cal. 187.

ORDERLY.

Ky. St. § 4203, provides for the granting of licenses to merchants to sell liquor, and declares that no such licenses shall be granted to any person of bad character, or who does not keep an orderly, law-abiding house. The term "orderly, law-abiding house" is not defined in the statute, and it was contended that the phrase meant a house where no brawls or fights take place, where the citizen, gentleman, or lady may deal undisturbed by violence or fear of violence and insult, where everything is done peaceably and orderly, and that, though a person may have engaged in the illegal sale of liquor prior to his application for a license, he may keep an orderly, law-abiding house. It was held, however, that the county court, within whose discretion the granting of such licenses is placed, did not abuse that discretion by refusing to grant to one who had sold liquor without a license, and who had further violated the law by selling to minors. Appeal of Caudill (Ky.) 65 S. W. 723.

ORDINANCE.

See "Proper Ordinance."

All ordinances, see "All."

All other ordinances, see "All Other."

In Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 307, it is said that in this country the word "ordinance" is limited in its application to the acts or regulations in the nature of local laws, passed by the proper assembly or governing body of the corporation. An "ordinance" means a local law prescribing a general and permanent rule. Citizens' Gas & Mining Co. v. Town of Elwood, 16 N. E. 624, 626, 114 Ind. 332; Shattuck v. Smith, 69 N. W. 5, 11, 6 N. D. 156.

Webster defines an ordinance to be a rule established by authority. Dillon says: "Under the general term of 'ordinance' has sometimes been included all the regulations by which a corporation is governed. * * * Indeed, in general and professional use the term 'ordinance' is almost, though not quite, equivalent in meaning to the term 'by-law.'" State v. Swindell, 45 N. E. 700, 701, 146 Ind. 527, 58 Am. St. Rep. 375.

"Ordinances," as defined in Horr & B. Mun. Ord. § 1, are laws passed by the governing body of a municipal corporation for the regulation of the affairs of the corporation. The term "ordinance" is now the usual denomination of such acts, though in England and in some of the states the technically more correct term of "by-law" or "bye-law" is in common or more approved use. Bills v. City of Goshen, 20 N. E. 115, 117, 117 Ind. 221, 3 L. R. A. 261.

The terms "ordinance," "by-law," and "municipal regulation" have substantially the same meaning, and are defined to be the laws of the corporate district made by the authorized body, in distinction from the general laws of the state. They are local regulations for the government of the inhabitants of the particular place, and, though given the force of law by the charter for the purposes of the municipal government, yet relate to that solely, and prosecutions for their violation have no reference, as a general rule, to the administration of criminal justice by the state. State v. Lee, 13 N. W. 913, 29 Minn. 445.

An ordinance is in the nature of a local statute, and whether it is reasonable or unreasonable is a question of law for the court. Evison v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 45 Minn. 370, 375, 48 N. W. 6, 11 L. R. A. 434.

The word "ordinance," as applicable to the action of a municipal corporation, should be deemed to mean local laws passed by the governing body. The Legislature of the state passes laws and makes rules for the government of its procedure. So, a municipal corporation passes laws, called "ordinances," and enacts rules. The same distinction that exists between laws and rules made by the Legislature should be held to exist between rules and ordinances enacted by a municipal corporation. Laws 1883, c. 293, § 24, providing that no ordinances shall be adopted except by a two-thirds vote, does not apply to rules of order of a city council. Armatage v. Fisher, 26 N. Y. Supp. 364, 367, 74 Hun. 167.

The word "ordinance" means something more than a verbal motion subsequently reduced to writing by a clerk or secretary of the local board. Its use in a statute providing that, when any grade is to be established, it shall be the duty of the township committee to establish it by ordinance, which ordinance shall be entered on file in the township book, intended to prescribe a certain formality which would perpetuate the action of the committee, and leave no doubt as to its true character. Maps, however, may be annexed to and filed with the ordinance in order to make it intelligible. Vanderbeck v. Ridge-wood Tp., 14 Atl. 598, 599, 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom) 514.

An ordinance passed by the common council of a municipality is a species of legislation as much as an act passed by the Legislature, though the body passing it is subordinate in its character and created by the Legislature itself; hence the rule which makes void a contract for a contingent compensation for obtaining legislation applies as well as to the common council of a city as the Legislature of the state. Orchfield v. Bermudes Asphalt Paving Co., 51 N. E. 552, 556, 174 Ill. 466, 42 L. R. A. 847.

An "ordinance" authorizing an electric light company to use the streets, when passed, was a mere license or offer to grant a license to the company, and only became a binding contract between the city and the company when the latter accepted it. McWethy v. Aurora Electric Light & Power Co., 67 N. E. 9, 12, 202 Ill. 218 (citing People v. Central Union Tel. Co., 61 N. E. 428, 192 Ill. 807, 85 Am. St. Rep. 838).

Writing essential.

An ordinance must of necessity be in writing before it can be acted on by a city council. Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 Mich. 44, 47.

As public record.

The ordinances of municipal corporations are public records. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Seymour (Fla.) 88 South. 424, 426.

By-laws, rules, and regulations synonymous.

A by-law is a law made by a municipality for the regulation of affairs within its authority; an ordinance. Cent. Dict. In general and professional use the term "ordinance" is almost, if not quite, equivalent in meaning to the term "by-law," and is the word most generally used to denote the by-laws adopted by municipal corporations; so that an ordinance granting a franchise is a by-law of general or permanent nature, within Code 1873, § 492, requiring publication of such by-laws, and providing that they shall take effect and be in force at the expiration of five days after they have been published. State v. Omaha & C. B. Railway & Bridge Co., 84 N. W. 963, 964, 118 Iowa, 30, 52 L. R. A. 315, 86 Am. St. Rep. 357.

Where a city charter authorizes the council to ordain by-laws, resolutions, and regulations, those passed are ordinances, for ordinances are regulations ordained. Kepler v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. 124, 129.

The terms "by-law" and "ordinance" may be used interchangeably, being synonymous. Horr & B. Mun. Ord. § 1, defining "ordinances," says: "Municipal ordinances are laws passed by the governing body of a municipal corporation for the regulation of the affairs of the corporation." The term "ordinance" is the usual denomination of such acts, though in England and in some of the states the technically more correct term "by-law" or "bye-law" is in common and approved use. The main feature of such enactment is their local, as distinguished from their general, applicability of the state laws; hence the word "law," with the prefix "by" or "bye," should in strictness be preferred to the word "ordinance." Bills v. City of Goshen, 20 N. E. 115, 117, 117 Ind. 221, 8 L. R. A. 261.

"By-laws," as used in Gen. St. § 3323, providing that all by-laws of a general or permanent nature, and those imposing any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, shall be published, and that such by-laws and ordinances shall not take effect and be in force until the expiration of five days after they have been published, is used in its ordinary sense, and is synonymous with "ordinances." The terms imply one and the same thing. National Bank of Commerce v. Town of Grenada (U. S.) 44 Fed. 262, 263.

The terms "ordinances, rules, regulations and by-laws" in a charter providing that the common council shall have power to establish, publish, modify, amend, or repeal ordinances, rules, regulations, and by-laws, etc., are all equivalent to the term "ordinances," so that, in order to validly exercise a power given, the passage of an ordinance is necessary. Taylor v. City of Lambertville, 10 Atl. 809, 811, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 107; Hunt v. Common Council of City of Lambertville, 45 N. J. Law (16 Vroom) 279, 282.

The term "ordinances," as used in Gen. St. Colo. § 3323, providing that by-laws and ordinances shall not take effect and be in force until the expiration of five days after they have been published, is used in its ordinary sense, and is synonymous with "by-laws," the terms implying one and the same thing. National Bank of Commerce v. Town of Grenada (U. S.) 44 Fed. 262, 263.

The word "ordinance," as applied to cities, shall be synonymous with the word "by-law." Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 89, c. 9, § 5, subd. 15.

Law distinguished.

See, also, "Law."

As state law, see "State Law."

As statute, see "Statute."

Mill. & V. Code, § 47, providing that the repeal of a statute does not affect any penalty incurred, nor any proceedings commenced, under and by virtue of the statute repealed, does not apply to the repeal of a city ordinance, which is defined to be "a rule or regulation adopted by a municipal corporation." Quoting And. Law Dict. 738. The terms "by-laws," "ordinances," and "municipal regulations" have substantially the same meaning, and are the laws of the corporate district made by the authorized body, in distinction from the general laws of the state. They are local regulations for the government of the inhabitants of the particular place. They are not laws in the legal sense, though binding on the community affected. They are not prescribed by the supreme power of the state, from which alone a law can emanate, and therefore cannot be statutes, which are the written will of the Legislature, expressed in the form necessary to constitute parts of the law. Rutherford v. Swink, 35 S. W. 554, 555, 96 Tenn. (12 Pickle) 564.

An ordinance is not, in the constitutional sense, a public law. It is a mere local rule or by-law, a police or domestic regulation, devoid in many respects of the characteristics of the public or general laws. State v. Fourcade, 13 South. 187, 191, 45 La. Ann. 717, 40 Am. St. Rep. 249; McInerney v. City of Denver, 29 Pac. 516, 519, 17 Colo. 802.

An ordinance is not a public or general law, but a local rule or by-law. A police regulation for the city, and proceedings thereunder, are penal actions for the enforcement of local domestic regulations. City of Greeley v. Hamman, 20 Pac. 1, 2, 12 Colo. 94.

Order distinguished.

An order of a municipality is not a law, but merely the form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion, while an ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of government. An order is of a special and temporary character. Village of Altamont v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 56 N. E. 340, 341, 184 Ill. 47.

Resolution included.

"Ordinance" is the generic term for acts of council affecting the affairs of corporations, and a resolution is only a less solemn or less usual form of an ordinance. Fuller v. City of Scranton, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 405, 407.

"Ordinance" is the generic term for acts of council affecting the affairs of the corporation, and we can make no distinction between them, founded on a difference of degree in which they affect those affairs. "Resolution" is only a less solemn and less usual form of an ordinance. It is an ordinance still if it is anything intended to regulate any of the affairs of the corporation. Kepner v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. 124, 130.

The term "ordinance," as used in a city charter requiring the board of mayor and aldermen at its first meeting after the election and qualification to fix the salaries of officers by ordinance, should be construed as synonymous with "resolution," so that an officer is bound by a resolution passed by the board fixing his salary. Chandler v. Town of Johnson City, 59 S. W. 142, 143, 105 Tenn. 638.

"A distinction is sometimes drawn between an ordinance and a resolution, by which the one prescribes a permanent rule of conduct or government, while the other is of a temporary character and prescribes no permanent rule of government." But it is apparent that such distinction between the words does not exist in Rev. St. § 1694, providing that by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances of a general or permanent nature shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, except, etc., as the resolution there referred to is made of a general or permanent nature by the express terms of the statute. Campbell v. City of Cincinnati, 81 N. E. 606, 607, 49 Ohio St. 463, 470.

Where the powers conferred on a town are to be exercised by "ordinances" to be passed by the town council, an order or resolution adopted by the council and entered on its records held, in point of form, a valid exercise of the power. Town of Tipton v. Norman, 72 Mo. 380, 338.

Under an act requiring the annual appropriations of cities and towns to be first ascertained, and that the levy and assessment should then be made by ordinance, the term "ordinance" is not limited in its meaning to by-laws or permanent local regulations which must be published in order to be valid, but any resolution or other proceeding of the board of trustees entered upon their journal or record, declaring the ascertained amount of all appropriations, and indicating their determination that such an amount shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property within the town, is an "ordinance," within the meaning of the statute. People v. Lee, 1 N. E. 471, 112 Ill. 113.

A resolution or order is not a law, but merely the form in which the legislative body expresses an opinion. An ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of conduct or government, while a resolution is of special and temporary character. Acts of legislation by a municipal corporation which are to have continuing force and effect must be embodied in ordinances, while mere ministerial acts may be in the form of resolutions. Chicago & N. P. R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 51 N. E. 596, 598, 174 Ill. 439; People v. Mount, 58 N. E. 360, 364, 186 Ill. 560; City of Paxton v. Bogardus, 68 N. E. 853, 858, 201 Ill. 623; McDowell v. People, 68 N. E. 379, 381, 204 Ill. 499.

Election of city officer.

The word "ordinance," as used in a city charter providing that ordinances and regulations shall be approved by the mayor, is not appropriate to the appointment of a city officer. An election is usually ordered by motion, and may be by ballot, not by ordinance or resolution, and the word is inapt to signify the election of an officer; and a provision in the charter that a city charter may by ordinance regulate the manner in which a city council shall remove police officers and appoint their successors does not confer power to appoint police officers by ordinance. Volk v. City of Newark, 47 N. J. Law (18 Vroom) 117, 122.

Grant of land.

The word "ordinance," in its usual and primary sense, means a local law—a rule of conduct prospective in its operation, and applying generally to the persons and things subject to the local jurisdiction. It does not, in its ordinary use or signification, include a grant of lands. Conceding it to be true that a grant of lands may be made by municipal ordinance, it is equally true that the idea of such a grant is not suggested by the use of the word, and this because it is a very unusual mode of granting lands. It is to be presumed, therefore, that the legislative use of the word "ordinance" is used in its ordinary and restricted sense. Therefore, Act May 15, 1861, amending the charter of the city of Oakland, the successor of the town of Oakland, and providing that "the ordinances of the board of trustees of the town are hereby ratified and confirmed," did not thereby ratify and confirm an ordinance that had been made by the trustees of the town, conveying the entire water front of the town, contrary to the provisions of its charter. City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 50 Pac. 277, 289, 118 Cal. 160.

Rule of city council.

See "Rule."

Tax levy.

A tax levy comes within none of the definitions of an ordinance. It is not a law; not a rule of action. It has no permanency. Once acted upon, it is functus officio. It carries no command to the public generally. It is not a thing that can be violated. It has no single element of what is generally understood to be an ordinance. It never properly, and seldom in fact, assumes the form or name of an ordinance. It is generally made by a resolution of the proper body. Shuttuck v. Smith, 60 N. W. 5, 11, 6 N. D. 56.

ORDINARY.

See "Courts of Ordinary."

"Ordinary" is a civil-law term for any judge who hath authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right and not by deputation. By the common law, it is taken for him who hath ordinary or exempt and immediate jurisdiction in cases ecclesiastical." Murden v. Beath (S. C.) 1 Mill, Const. 244, 269 (citing Jac. Law Dict. [4th Ed.] 446; Co. Litt. 844).

An ordinary is a place of eating where the prices are settled. Werner v. Washington (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 705, 707.

ORDINARY (ADJ.).

The word "ordinary," a synonym of "regular," is defined by Webster as methodical, regular, according to established order. Zulich v. Bowman, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 83, 87. See, also, State v. O'Conner, 49 Me. 594, 599.

The word "ordinary" is defined as common, usual, often recurring. Chicago & A. R. R. v. House, 50 N. E. 151, 153, 172 Ill. 601.

Johnson assigns to the word "ordinary" the meaning of established, regular, common, usual. Crenshaw v. Slate River Co. (Va.) 6 Rand. 245, 263.

In construing an instruction in an action against a surgeon for malpractice, which stated that it was his duty to use fair or ordinary knowledge and skill, it was said that the court used the words "fair" and "ordinary" as synonymous. The instruction was held to be proper for the reason that the word "fair" was synonymous with "reasonable." Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 376, 382.

ORDINARY AND YEARLY TAXES.

A condition in a lease providing that the lessee should pay the ordinary and yearly taxes includes the annual water rent charged on the premises according to the rates established by the Croton department of the city of New York, though such department was not established until after the execution of the lease. Garner v. Hannah, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 262, 269.

ORDINARY BAGGAGE.

See, also, "Baggage."

Ordinary baggage is made up of two elements: First, certain things which may become such; second, bags, trunks, valises, satchels, packages, or other receptacles in which these things are to be put before they can be deemed baggage; in other words, the bag and other receptacle and the contents are both necessary components of the legal idea conveyed by the term "baggage." As to the things which may become baggage when properly contained, or as to what may be called the subjects of baggage, the definitions given in the decisions and by the text writers, though necessarily wanting in explicitness from the difficulty of enumerating all the articles which may become baggage, are yet full, comprehensive, and in perfect accord in their statements of the rules of law. Probably the best definition is as follows: "Whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to the habits of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or the ultimate purpose of the journey, must be considered as personal luggage." All other things can only be taken as baggage when accepted as such by the carrier. Bicycles are held not to be baggage, within the meaning of the law. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 71 Mo. App. 885, 890.

ORDINARY BANK DEPOSIT.

An ordinary bank deposit is where a voluntary credit is taken with a bank for which no bond, no bill, or similar evidence of debt is given, and for which there exists a right to draw unconditionally. Such a deposit carries no interest; no action lies with it until demand and refusal. Catlin v. Savings Bank, 7 Conn. 487, 495.

ORDINARY BUSINESS.

"Ordinary business," as used in a declaration alleging that plaintiff had been injured so as to be prevented from attending to his ordinary business, should only be construed as characterizing the injury and indicating its extent in a general way, and is not sufficient to lay the foundation for proof of special damage. Tomlinson v. Town of Derby, 43 Conn. 562, 567.

A by-law enacting that a certain number of directors shall form a quorum for the transaction of the ordinary business of the company embraces such business which is not within the usual and daily range of duties performed by clerks and agents engaged in the conduct and management of the details of such business. It contemplates the performance of business which, but for the by-law, would have required the action of the board at a meeting at which a legal quorum of the whole number of directors were present. Hoyt v. Sheldon, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 287, 290.

"Ordinary business," as used in defining the duties of the cashier of a bank, mean only such things as are done by cashiers in general in the customary everyday routine of banking, and does not include the making of a contract by the cashier without express delegation of authority from the board of directors, which involves the payment of money, unless it shall be such as has been loaned in the usual and customary way. A cashier under power to perform the ordinary business of the bank has no power to purchase or sell property or create an agency of any kind for the bank, which he had not been authorized to make by others to whom has been confided the power to manage its business, both ordinary and extraordinary. Bank of Commerce v. Hart, 55 N. W. 681, 682, 87 Neb. 197, 20 L. R. A. 780, 40 Am. St. Rep. 479.

On the trial of an indictment against a person as a common seller of intoxicating liquor, an instruction that the jury must be satisfied from the evidence that selling intoxicating liquor was defendant's common and ordinary business, and they might be so authorized to find her guilty without proof of any particular number of sales, held sufficiently favorable to defendant. State v. O'Connor, 49 Me. 594, 599.

ORDINARY CALLING.

The words "ordinary calling" do not include a contract of hiring made on a Sunday between a farmer and a laborer for a year, within the meaning of 29 Car. 2, c. 7, § 5, enacting that no tradesmen, etc., shall do or exercise any worldly labor or work of their ordinary calling on the Lord's day. Rex v. Inhabitants of Whitnash, 7 Barn. & C. 596.

The purchase of a horse by a horse dealer is an exercise of the person's "ordinary calling," within the meaning of the Sunday law. Fennell v. Ridler, 5 Barn. & C. 406.

A marriage contract is not one which falls within the ordinary calling of the parties to the same, and is not invalidated by the Code, providing that "no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or any person whatsoever shall do or exercise any worldly labor, work or business of their ordinary calling upon the Lord's day, works of charity and necessity excepted." Hayden v. Mitchell, 30 S. E. 287, 103 Ga. 481.

Enlisting is not the ordinary calling of a soldier. His ordinary calling is to attend drill and fight the battles of his country. The enlisting of recruits is an extraordinary employment. Wolton v. Garvin, 16 Q. B. 48, 62.

The term "ordinary calling," in Pen. Code, § 422, providing that any person who shall pursue his ordinary calling on the Lord's day shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, does not include the execution of a contract, unless made in the prosecution of the ordinary business or calling of the party making the same, and hence a deed of gift is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that it is executed on Sunday. Dorough v. Equitable Mortg. Co., 45 S. E. 22, 118 Ga. 178.

ORDINARY CARE.

In Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co., 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 804, it is held that "negligence" and "ordinary care" are correlative terms. Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co., 32 S. E. 327, 331, 45 W. Va. 634, 44 L. R. A. 92.

There can be no partial exercise of ordinary care. It exists as a degree in completeness or it is totally wanting in any given case. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Shuford, 10 S. W. 408, 411, 72 Tex. 165.

The term "ordinary care," like the term "reasonable care," is an apt term to use in an instruction to describe the care required by a contractor in keeping a street in a safe condition. Tompert v. Hastings Pavement Co., 55 N. Y. Supp. 177-179, 85 App. Div. 578.

As care exercised by one accustomed or skilled.

Ordinary care is the care usually bestowed on the matter in hand by persons accustomed to deal with such matters, and having the prudence of the general class of society to which the person whose conduct is in question belongs. Spokane Truck & Dray Co. v. Hofer, 25 Pac. 1072, 1073, 2 Wash. St. 45, 11 L. R. A. 689, 26 Am. St. Rep. 842.

"Ordinary care" means that degree of care which prudent men skilled in the business would be likely to exercise under the circumstances. Kelley v. Cable Co., 14 Pac. 638, 635, 7 Mont. 70.

"Ordinary care," as used with relation to the degree of care required of railways in the management of their locomotives, means that degree of care which prudent men skilled in the particular business would be likely to exercise under the circumstances. Diamond v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 13 Pac. 367, 372, 6 Mont. 530.

Ordinary care is such care as a prudent man of requisite skill will take under the circumstances of the particular case. In the practical application of the doctrine and principles of the law of negligence to the affairs of the present time, the old method of classification is sometimes found to be inconvenient, because we need a measure with more than three marks on it—an instrument with more gradations and capable of more accurate adjustment to the facts of the particular case; hence the present tendency, in a large class of cases, is to take ordinary care as a quantity, variable as the occasion may require, to measure the duty, sliding it up and down so as to adjust it as near as may be to the reasonable requirements of the particular case, so that, instead of using the measure with three marks on it made beforehand, we go on the ground to make a special measure for the occasion, by surrounding a prudent man of requisite skill with the facts of the case, and determining what he ought to do under the circumstances. That is the measure of ordinary care; the ordinary care measures the duty, and the violation of the duty is the negligence complained of. Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co., 14 S. E. 465, 467, 36 W. Va. 165, 32 Am. St. Rep. 842.

As care exercised in person's own affairs.

Ordinary care is such care as is usually exercised under like circumstances by men of ordinary prudence in their own affairs. Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Parker, 50 Tex. 330, 345; Dallas Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Dunlap, 26 S. W. 877, 878, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 471; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Thillman, 32 N. E. 529, 532, 143 Ill. 127, 36 Am. St. Rep. 359; Duthie v. Town of Washburn, 58 N. W. 330, 37 Wis. 231; Madden v. Port Royal & W. O. Ry. Co., 19 S. E. 951, 959, 41 S. O. 440; Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 180, 184.

"Ordinary care" means such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in the management of their own concerns. Sullivan v. Scripture, 35 Mass. (3 Allen) 564, 566.

Ordinary care is such care as an ordinarily prudent man would use under similar circumstances involving his own interests. Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 76 S. W. 29-31.

Ordinary care is such care as a reasonable, prudent man would use under similar circumstances involving his own interests. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Coleman (Ky.) 59 S. W. 13, 14.

Ordinary care is such care as men of ordinary prudence would exercise with reference to their own property. Cooper v. Lee, 21 S. W. 993, 1002, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 9.

Ordinary care is such care and caution as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances if all the property to be affected was his own. Osborn v. Woodford Bros., 1 Pac. 543, 549, 31 Kan. 290.

Ordinary care is that care which a person of common prudence takes of his own concerns, or that degree of care which men of common prudence exercise about their own affairs in the age and country in which they live; and, in determining what would be ordinary care in a particular case, reference must be had to the actual state of society, the business habits, and general usages peculiar to the time and country. Derosia v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 18 Minn. 133 (Gil. 118, 133).

Ordinary care means that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence, similarly situated, would give to his own property or affairs. Mason v. St. Louis Union Stockyards Co., 60 Mo. App. 38, 99.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of ordinary prudence are accustomed to employ under the same circumstances in order to conduct their enterprises to a successful termination. Moberly v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. Ry. Co., 17 Mo. App. 513, 547; having due regard to the rights of others, and the objects to be accomplished. Cleveland, C. & C. Ry. Co. v. Terry, 8 Ohio St. 570, 581.

One is bound to observe ordinary care, that is to say, such care as a reasonably prudent man, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, would exercise to preserve himself and his property from injury; and this, of course, imports such a man entirely sober at the time, and in full possession of his faculties of observation, attention, and reflection. McCoy v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 5 Houst. 599, 603.

Ordinary care, as required of a railroad company holding freight in its capacity as a warehouseman after the termination of the carriage, is such care as every prudent man takes of his own goods. Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Scott, 42 Ill. 132, 143.

"Ordinary care," as to the liability of a vessel for cargo stowed on deck, means such a degree of care as a prudent owner would exercise. The Hettie Ellis (U. S.) 20 Fed. 393.

Ordinary care or diligence is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of ordinary importance. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5109; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2782.

An instruction that ordinary care and prudence is such care and prudence as is exercised by the mass of mankind in their daily affairs was erroneous. Rhyner v. City of Menasha, 83 N. W. 303, 306, 107 Wis. 201.

As care of generality or majority of people.

Ordinary care is such care as the great majority of men would use under like or similar circumstances. Owll v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co., 66 N. W. 362, 92 Wis. 330; Jung v. City of Stevens Point, 43 N. W. 513, 515, 74 Wis. 547.

Ordinary care must be such care as the great mass of mankind, or the majority, observe in the transactions of human life. Duthie v. Town of Washburn, 58 N. W. 380, 87 Wis. 281.

"Ordinary care is that diligence which the generality of mankind use in their own concerns." McGrath v. Hudson River R. Co. (N. Y.) 19 How. Prac. 211, 220.

Ordinary care is such care as people in general would exercise under the special circumstances of each particular case. State v. Manchester & L. R. R., 52 N. H. 523; Driscoll v. Market St. Cable Ry. Co., 32 Pac. 591, 592, 97 Cal. 553, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203.

Ordinary care is such care as people in general are accustomed to exercise. Sleeper v. Town of Sandown, 52 N. H. 244, 253.

In its general sense, ordinary care means such care as is commonly exercised by the majority of the community, or by persons of ordinarily prudent habits, placed under similar circumstances. And when used in reference to the duty of those conducting railroads, it is that degree of care which the majority of men of prudent and careful habits would exercise under the same or like circumstances to avoid injury to their own persons, in the same risks which others undergo in their services or in obedience to their orders, or by reason of the conduct of their hazardous business. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 403-409.

By ordinary care is meant that degree of care which a majority of men of ordinary prudence would exercise under like or similar circumstances to protect their persons or property from injury. Canton, C. & H. Turnpike Co. v. McIntire, 48 S. W. 980, 982, 105 Ky. 135.

As care of observed by person of common or average prudence.

Ordinary care is generally defined as such care as men of common prudence would use in like position and circumstances. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 2 South. 337, 342, 80 Ala. 600, 607; Groom v. Kavanagh, 71 S. W. 362, 365, 97 Mo. App. 362.

Ordinary care is that care which every prudent man observes; and to describe it as synonymous with, or about equivalent to, "common prudence," is not misleading, especially when this exposition is applied alike to the conduct of both parties. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Howard, 3 S. E. 423, 427, 79 Ga. 44.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which constitutes the average of common prudence, and would have been employed by most persons under the same circumstances. The failure of a boarding house keeper to rid her house of a boarder who had twice failed to securely close the front door after entering late at night does not show a want of ordinary care to protect her boarders' effects. Siegman v. Keeler, 24 N. Y. Supp. 821, 822, 4 Misc. Rep. 523.

Ordinary care is such care as is fairly proportionate to the danger to be avoided or risk to be incurred, judging by the standard of common prudence and experience. Casper v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 48 N. Y. Supp. 352, 354, 23 App. Div. 451.

Ordinary care is such care as is usually exercised by persons of average prudence. Sleeper v. Town of Sandown, 52 N. H. 244, 253; City of Junction City v. Blades, 41 Pac. 677, 680, 1 Kan. App. 85; City of Boulder v. Fowler, 18 Pac. 337, 11 Colo. 396.

Ordinary care is that measure of prudence and carefulness which an average prudent man might be expected to exercise under the circumstances of the situation. Thackston v. Port Royal & W. C. Ry. Co., 18 S. E. 177, 178, 40 S. C. 80.

The ordinary care which a person must exercise, to entitle him to recover for injuries, means such care as men of common prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger. Walsh v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., 10 Or. 250, 255.

As care of ordinarily prudent person.

The words "ordinary care" are not susceptible of exact definition, applicable to every possible case, for the reason that there is no absolute standard to which the conduct of individuals in each particular case can be brought, and to which it can be compared and tested. For want of a more perfect standard, the courts have set up that somewhat shadowy personage, "the man of ordinary prudence," by defining ordinary care as such care as ought reasonably to be expected of an ordinarily prudent person in the same situation as the person whose conduct is in question. Paden v. Van Blarcom, 74 S. W. 124, 126, 100 Mo. App. 185.

Ordinary care is that care which ordinarily prudent persons would exercise under the same, like, or similar circumstances, and the want of such care is negligence. Osborn v. Woodford Bros., 1 Pac. 548, 549, 31 Kan. 290; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plaskett, 26 Pac. 401, 408, 47 Kan. 107; Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 24 Pac. 497, 499, 44 Kan. 334; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 30 Pac. 462, 467, 49 Kan. 460; Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. v. Reveley, 58 S. W. 845, 846, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 298; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Milam (Tex.) 58 S. W. 735, 736; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Milam, 50 S. W. 417, 418, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 688; Austin Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Cullen (Tex.) 29 S. W. 256, 257; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Berling, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 544, 548, 37 S. W. 1068; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Buckalew (Tex.) 84 S. W. 165, 166; San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Manning, 50 S. W. 177, 178, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 504; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry.

Co. v. Shieder (Tex.) 26 S. W. 509, 510; St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. Finley, 15 S. W. 266, 267, 79 Tex. 85; Texas M. R. R. v. Taylor (Tex.) 44 S. W. 892; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Bohan (Tex.) 47 S. W. 1050, 1054; Waco Artesian Water Co. v. Cauble, 47 S. W. 538, 542, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 417; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Gillum (Tex.) 80 S. W. 697, 699; Paris, M. & S. P. Ry. Co. v. Nesbitt (Tex.) 88 S. W. 243, 244; St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Rice, 29 S. W. 525, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 509; Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Saunders (Tex.) 26 S. W. 123, 129; Citizens' Ry. Co. v. Gifford, 47 S. W. 1041, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 631; Poling v. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. (Tex.) 75 S. W. 69, 71; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Semonis (Ky.) 51 S. W. 612, 613; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McCoy, 81 Ky. 403, 409; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Chism, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 584, 587, 47 S. W. 251; Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Chandler's Adm'r (Ky.) 70 S. W. 668, 667; Scott v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 9 N. Y. Supp. 189, 191, 56 Hun. 640; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 35 N. Y. 9, 23, 27, 90 Am. Dec. 761; Holwerson v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 770, 778, 157 Mo. 216, 50 L. R. A. 850; Helfenstein v. Medart, 36 S. W. 863, 866, 136 Mo. 596; Quirk v. St. Louis United Elevator Co., 28 S. W. 1080, 1083, 126 Mo. 279; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Webb, 49 S. W. 526, 529, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 481; Sanders v. Southern Electric Ry. Co., 147 Mo. 411, 421, 422, 48 S. W. 855, 860; Cook v. Southern Ry. Co., 38 S. E. 925, 926, 128 N. C. 333; Chapin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry., 44 N. W. 820, 821, 79 Iowa, 582; Rhyner v. City of Menasha, 83 N. W. 306, 305, 107 Wis. 201; McGrath v. Village of Bloomer, 40 N. W. 585, 73 Wis. 29; Hanlon v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 95 N. W. 100, 104, 118 Wis. 210; Swift v. Rutkowski, 67 Ill. App. 209, 210; Brown v. Lynn, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 510, 512, 72 Am. Dec. 763; Borough of Nanticoke v. Warne, 106 Pa. 373, 374; Stanfield v. Anderson (Ariz.) 43 Pac. 221, 222; Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 33 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869 (cited in Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Steven's Adm'r, 84 S. E. 525, 526, 97 Va. 631, 46 L. R. A. 867).

Ordinary care is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. Receivers of Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Pfleger (Tex.) 25 S. W. 792; Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co., 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304; Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co., 32 S. E. 827, 331, 45 W. Va. 634, 44 L. R. A. 92.

Ordinary care is such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise in the place of, and under the same circumstances as, the party charged with negligence. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dodd, 27 S. W. 227, 229, 59 Ark. 317.

"What constitutes ordinary care depends on the circumstances of each particular case, and is such care as a person of ordinary prudence might exercise under the circumstances." Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co., 27 W. Va. 285, 294, 55 Am. Rep. 304.

Ordinary care is such care as a man of ordinary prudence might reasonably be expected to exercise under like circumstances. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Logsdon (Ky.) 71 S. W. 905, 906.

The words "or ought to" should be omitted from the definition of ordinary care as that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would or ought to use in regard to a similar matter under similar circumstances. Chicago, R. I. & T. Ry. Co. v. James (Tex.) 75 S. W. 980.

It is not what might be reasonably expected of persons, but what might be expected of ordinarily prudent persons. Paria, M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Nesbitt (Tex.) 88 S. W. 243, 244.

Ordinary care, prudence, and caution mean that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence and caution is accustomed to exercise under the same or like circumstances. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. of Texas v. Smith, 70 S. W. 789, 790, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 386.

Ordinary care means that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent and careful person would exercise under like circumstances. Winters v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 12 S. W. 652, 655, 99 Mo. 509, 6 L. R. A. 536, 17 Am. St. Rep. 591.

Ordinary care means that degree of care which ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually observe under the same or similar circumstances. McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 18 Ky. Law Rep. 693, 699, 37 S. W. 851, 100 Ky. 173, 34 L. R. A. 812; Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Kelley, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 7, 34 S. W. 809, 811.

Ordinary care is such care as a person of ordinary prudence and caution would exercise under the same or like circumstances. Lloyd v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 29 S. W. 153, 155, 128 Mo. 595; Martin v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 26 S. W. 1052, 1053, 87 Tex. 117.

Ordinary care means such care as persons of ordinary prudence and caution would exercise in the same situation and under the same circumstances. Lamb v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 48 S. W. 659, 662, 147 Mo. 171; Stanley v. Union Depot R. Co., 21 S. W. 832, 834, 114 Mo. 606; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Russell, 28 S. W. 1042, 1043, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 578.

Ordinary care means just what the words say. It is defined by our courts all over the civilized world in very plain terms, and is this: Just such care as a reasonably careful and prudent man—not a cautious man, not an extraordinarily cautious man, but a reasonably careful and prudent man—would exercise under the circumstances then existing and surrounding him. That is a very simple and plain definition. It is not the highest care, it is not extraordinary watchfulness, but such reasonable care as a man, under the circumstances, being reasonably prudent and careful, would exercise and ought to exercise. Kestner v. Pittsburgh & B. Traction Co., 27 Atl. 1048, 158 Pa. 422.

A good test of ordinary care is: "Where a person in the observance or performance of a duty to another has neither done nor omitted to do anything which an ordinarily careful and prudent person in the same relation, and under the same conditions and circumstances, would not have done or omitted to do, he has not failed to use ordinary care, and therefore is not guilty of negligence, even though damages may have resulted from his action or want of action." Carter v. Cape Fear Lumber Co., 39 S. E. 828, 831, 129 N. C. 203; Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co., 27 Atl. 450, 453, 18 R. I. 860.

As care ordinarily or usually used.

It is very plain that ordinary diligence or care is that measure of care and diligence ordinarily employed in a given business. Zell v. Dunkle, 27 Atl. 38, 39, 156 Pa. 353.

"Ordinary care" means the usual care of an ordinarily prudent man. Reynolds v. City of Burlington, 52 Vt. 300, 308.

Ordinary care is such a degree of care, skill, and diligence as men of ordinary prudence, under similar circumstances, usually employ. Gerlach v. Edelmeier, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 292, 296; Brown v. Lynn, 81 Pa. (7 Casey) 510, 512, 72 Am. Dec. 768.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which prudent persons usually exercise under similar circumstances. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Mooney (Fla.) 83 South. 1010, 1012.

Ordinary care is such care as would be ordinarily used by prudent persons performing a like service under similar circumstances. Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. P. R. Co., 75 Mo. 595, 609.

By ordinary care is understood that degree of caution, attention, activity, or skill which are habitually employed by persons in the situation of the respective parties under all circumstances surrounding them at the time. United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Beidelman, 52 Atl. 913, 915, 95 Me. 480 (citing Central Ry. Co. v. Smith, 74 Md. 212, 21 Atl. 706).

A definition of "ordinary care" as that degree of care and caution that a person of ordinary prudence is accustomed to use under like or similar circumstances was not objectionable on the ground that it should have been such care as a person of ordinary prudence would ordinarily use under similar circumstances. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Texas v. Brown, 69 S. W. 1010, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 57. See, also, McCoy v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 5 Houst. 599, 606.

Ordinary care on the part of an employer, as respects his duty toward the servant as to the furnishing of a safe place to work, implies not simply the degree of diligence which is customary among those intrusted with the management of the machinery and appliances used, but such as, having respect to the exigencies of the particular service, is reasonable to be observed. Bean v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. (U. S.) 24 Fed. 124, 125.

Ordinary care is such care as persons of ordinary prudence would have exercised under like circumstances. It does not depend on custom. It would be no excuse for want of care that carelessness was universal about the matter involved, or at the place of the accident, or in business generally. Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 833, 835, 90 Me. 869 (citing Mayhew v. Sullivan Min. Co., 76 Me. 100).

As care of ordinary man.

Ordinary care is what the ordinary run of men would do under similar circumstances. Stokes v. Ralpho Tp., 40 Atl. 958, 961, 187 Pa. 338.

In a charge as to ordinary care, it is erroneous to define the requisite degree of care as that exercised by an ordinary man. In this connection the court says: "A man may be ordinary in stature, in personal appearance, or otherwise, and yet be utterly reckless and have no sense of prudence or caution, or he may be extraordinarily careful and prudent. Whether applied to the negligence of a defendant, or the contributory negligence of a plaintiff, we believe the correct definition of the degree of care to be exercised by either, in determining whose negligence occasioned the injury, is expressed in these words: 'Such care and caution as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under similar circumstances.'" Austin & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Beatty, 11 S. W. 858, 859, 860, 73 Tex. 592.

As care of prudent, careful, or cautious man.

An instruction in an action against a railway company for injury resulting in the death of an employe, caused by a defective car, that "ordinary care and caution is such as a prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances," is not objectionable because the word "ordinarily" is omitted before the words "prudent person," or because of the use of the words "in similar circumstances." Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Black (Tex.) 44 S. W. 673, 675.

Ordinary care is such care and caution as a prudent man would exercise under like or similar circumstances. Houston & T. R. Co. v. Oram, 49 Tex. 341, 346; Fassett v. Town of Roxbury, 55 Vt. 552, 556. Ordinary care and caution is such as a prudent man would exercise in similar circumstances. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gorman, 21 S. W. 158, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 144; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 17 Sup. Ct. 707, 708, 168 U. S. 617, 41 L. Ed. 1136.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which a prudent man would exercise in view of the circumstances that surround him at a given time. Grant v. Union Pac. R. Co. (U. S.) 45 Fed. 673, 674.

Ordinary care is that care which a prudent person ordinarily uses under like circumstances, which is another and different thing from such care as persons ordinarily use under like circumstances. Johnson v. City of St. Joseph, 71 S. W. 106, 108, 96 Mo. App. 663 (citing Cohn v. City of Kansas, 108 Mo. 387, 392, 18 S. W. 973).

By ordinary care is meant such care as would be ordinarily used by prudent persons performing like services under similar circumstances. So, when a brewer invites a customer to visit a dangerous part of his brewery, he must give such visitor warning of the danger, to enable him by the use of ordinary care to avoid the same, or he will be liable for any injury resulting; and this, too, whether the customer's visit is with or without benefit to the brewer. Hartman v. Muehlebach, 64 Mo. App. 565, 579.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of prudence are accustomed to use under the same or similar circumstances. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pearson, 82 Ill. App. 605, 616.

Ordinary care is such care as a prudent, careful man would take under like circumstances. Meredith v. Reed, 26 Ind. 334, 336.

Ordinary care is such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. Adams v. Wilmington & N. C. Electric R. Co. (Del.) 52 Atl. 264, 265, 3 Pennewill, 512. "Negligence" has been variously defined in the courts of this state, but, after all, the different definitions means substantially one and the same thing. It has been termed the want of ordinary care; that is, the want of such care as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under similar circumstances. Murphy v. Hughes (Del.) 1 Pennewill, 250, 40 Atl. 187, 188; Mills v. Wilmington City Ry. Co. (Del.) 1 Marr. 269, 40 Atl. 1114; Knopf v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 2 Pennewill, 392, 46 Atl. 747; Tully v. Philadel phia, W. & B. R. Co., 50 Atl. 95, 96, 3 Pennwill, 455.

Ordinary care is that care which a prudent person ordinarily uses under similar circumstances, and it is held that an instruction defining ordinary care as such care as a person should ordinarily exercise under like circumstances is erroneous. Cohn v. City of Kansas, 18 S. W. 973, 974, 108 Mo. 387.

Ordinary care is defined to be that degree of care which a prudent person would be likely to exercise under given circumstances. McGrath v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 468, 471, 17 Am. Rep. 359.

"Ordinary care," as applicable to cases where negligence is to be determined as a question of fact, means such care as a prudent and cautious man would exercise under like circumstances. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 11 N. E. 855, 858, 120 Ill. 587; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Adler, 21 N. E. 846, 848, 129 Ill. 835.

Ordinary care is such care and prudence as a careful and prudent man would exercise under the circumstances. Fassett v. Town of Roxbury, 55 Vt. 552, 556; Cronk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 52 N. W. 420, 422, 3 S. D. 93.

As care of reasonable and intelligent man.

"Ordinary care means simply that degree of vigilance which a reasonable and prudent person would exercise under like circumstances." Carter v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 37, 38; Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534, 538, 124 U. S. 405, 81 L. Ed. 497; Cayzer v. Taylor, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 274, 280, 69 Am. Dec. 317; City of Terre Haute v. Mack, 38 N. E. 476, 479, 189 Ind. 99.

Ordinary care is the care which reasonable men of ordinary prudence, having reasonable and proper regard for the rights and interests of those whom their acts may affect, use under like circumstances. Inhabitants of Topsham v. Inhabitants of Lisbon, 65 Me. 449, 455.

The phrase "ordinary care" necessarily involves the idea that such care was to be used as a reasonable person under like circumstances would adopt to avoid an accident. Fallon v. City of Boston, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 33, 39.

Ordinary care is such care as a man of ordinary judgment, intelligence, and prudence would exercise under like circumstances. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mackey, 6 Pac. 291, 296, 33 Kan. 298.

"Ordinary diligence, care and skill are such care and diligence as are usually bestowed by ordinary persons of ordinary common sense under like circumstances." Brady v. Jefferson (Del.) 5 Houst. 60, 79.

Ordinary care is such as any man of average intelligence would employ under like circumstances. City of Boulder v. Fowler, 18 Pac. 337, 11 Colo. 393.

Ordinary care is that degree of caution which a reasonably prudent person would exercise under the existing condition. Whisteen v. Brengal, 37 N. Y. Supp. 813, 814, 16 Misc. Rep. 37.

The term "ordinary care" is defined in varying language, but generally means such care as the ordinarily prudent man in the particular occupation, with ordinary experience and intelligence, would use to protect himself. Crooker v. Pacific Lounge & Matress Co., 69 Pac. 359, 361, 29 Wash. 80.

As care reasonably to be expected.

Ordinary care means that degree of care which may reasonably be expected of a person in the situation of the person required to exercise such care. Buesching v. St. Louis Gaslight Co., 73 Mo. 219, 234, 39 Am. Rep. 503; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 4 Atl. 106, 111, 53 Conn. 461; Nesbit v. Crosby, 51 Atl. 550, 553, 74 Conn. 554; Central R. Co. v. Moore, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 824, 832; Central Ry. Co. v. Smith, 21 Atl. 706, 707, 74 Md. 212; United Railways & Electric Co. v. Beidelman, 52 Atl. 913, 915, 95 Md. 480; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sadler, 16 Pac. 46, 48, 38 Kan. 123, 5 Am. St. Rep. 729; Town of Norman v. Teet, 69 Pac. 791, 792, 12 Okl. 69.

Ordinary care means that degree of care which might reasonably be expected of an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances. Georgia Cotton Oil Co. v. Jackson, 37 S. E. 873, 874, 112 Ga. 620; Driscoll v. Market St. Cable Ry. Co., 32 Pac. 591, 592, 97 Cal. 553, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203.

Ordinary care means the care that would be expected of a reasonable, careful, prudent, and competent person in a like business under all the circumstances. Matthews v. Freker, 57 S. W. 262, 265, 68 Ark. 190.

In a suit for injuries received while riding with other passengers on top of a caboose, a charge that "by ordinary care is meant that degree of care which may be reasonably expected of a person in the situation of the plaintiff at the time the injury was received, and negligence is the absence of ordinary care," was error. Under the law, ordinary care is that care that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same circumstances. The charge fixes no criterion or measure to guide the jury in determining what degree of care was necessary to be used under the circumstances. From the charge the jury were unable to decide whether the care necessary was such as an ordinarily prudent person would use under similar circumstances, or whether it was such as might be reasonably expected of an imprudent person. An imprudent or reckless person would reasonably be expected to take more risk than one of ordinary prudence. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Rice, 29 S. W. 525, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 508.

As due care.

"The term 'ordinary care,' when used in a general sense, without reference to the facts of any particular case, comes nearer expressing, perhaps, a definite measure of responsibility than the expression 'due care,' yet the degree of diligence which it implies greatly varies according to the character of the circumstances to which it relates. A slight examination of the precedents, as found in Chitty and other standard authors, will show that in actions for personal injuries the expressions 'due care' and 'due and proper care' are uniformly used in charging the degree of diligence or care alleged to have been exercised by the plaintiff at the time of receiving the injury complained of." Schmidt v. Sinnott, 108 Ill. 160, 165.

"Ordinary care," in the law of negligence, is synonymous with "due care." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Yorty, 42 N. E. 64, 65, 158 Ill. 321.

The expressions "due care" and "ordinary care" are convertible terms, and therefore it is not erroneous to substitute one for the other in instructions. Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Faith, 51 N. E. 807, 808, 175 Ill. 58.

As reasonable care.

"Ordinary care" is synonymous with "reasonable care," and the terms may be used interchangeably. Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 46 N. W. 428, 430, 30 Neb. 197; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 4 Atl. 106, 111, 53 Conn. 461; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Yorty, 42 N. E. 64, 65, 158 Ill. 321; Baltimore & O. S. W. Ry. Co. v. Faith, 51 N. E. 807, 808, 175 Ill. 58; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Moore, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 824, 832; Fallon v. City of Boston, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 88.

"Ordinary care" means the reasonable care which anybody ought to exercise in the use of machinery. Harmer v. Reed Apartment & Investment Co., 53 Atl. 402, 403, 68 N. J. Law, 332.

Ordinary care is such reasonable care to avoid injury as ordinary prudence would suggest; that is, such a degree of care and attention as experience has found reasonable and necessary to prevent injury to others in like cases. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Kerr, 25 Md. 521, 530.

6 Wds. & P.—11

The words "ordinary" and "reasonable," used in defining the nature of the care and skill expected of a physician or surgeon in his employment, have been interchangeably used. Ritchey v. West, 23 Ill. 385. Perhaps the word "ordinary" would indicate more clearly to the common mind the degree of care and skill which he is bound to exercise in his professional engagements, or answer any damage for the want of it. Kendall v. Brown, 74 Ill. 232, 237.

"Ordinary care" is reasonable care; that care which a person of ordinary prudence and capacity would take under like circumstances. Carter v. Cape Fear Lumber Co., 39 S. E. 828, 831, 129 N. C. 203.

As a relative term.

Ordinary care depends on the circumstances of each particular case. Chapin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 44 N. W. 820, 821, 79 Iowa, 582; Gerlach v. Edmeyer, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 292, 296; Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co., 32 S. E. 327, 331, 45 W. Va. 634, 44 L. E. A. 92; Berna v. Gaston Coal Co., 27 W. Va. 235, 55 Am. Rep. 804; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Webb, 49 S. W. 523, 529, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 431; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 35 N. Y. 9, 28, 27, 90 Am. Dec. 761.

The Supreme Court of the United States has said that "there is no fixed standard in the law by which a court is enabled to arbitrarily say in every case what conduct shall be considered reasonable and prudent, and what shall constitute ordinary care, under any and all circumstances. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may under different circumstances be gross negligence." Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 683, 36 L. Ed. 485 (cited in Omaha St. Ry. Co. v. Craig, 58 N. W. 209, 212, 213, 39 Neb. 601).

"Ordinary care" is altogether a relative term, and means the use of those precautions which under the circumstances of each particular case a just regard to the persons and property of others demands. But there is no inflexible rule, either of the river or of the road, the neglect of which by one party will dispense with the exercise of common caution by the other. The Farmer (Ala.) 4 Am. Law Reg. 249.

"Ordinary care" means that degree of care usually exercised by ordinarily careful and prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances. Ordinarily careful and prudent persons regulate their conduct by the differences in circumstances surrounding the act. This is generally known and recognized by all people. That is what makes it ordinary care. Gorman's Adm'r v. Louisville R. Co., 72 S. W. 760, 761, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 1383.

The terms "ordinary care," "reasonable prudence," and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may under different surroundings and circumstances be gross negligence. Kinyon v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 92 N. W. 40, 44, 118 Iowa, 349, 96 Am. St. Rep. 382.

Ordinary care is altogether a relative term, and means the use of those precautions which under the circumstances of each particular case a just regard to the persons and property of others demands. The Farmer (Ala.) 4 Am. Law Reg. 249.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the particular circumstances of the case. Cronk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 52 N. W. 420, 8 S. D. 93; Lago v. Walsh, 74 N. W. 212, 214, 98 Wis. 343; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Gunter, 56 S. W. 527, 528, 108 Ky. 362. The ordinary care which it is the duty of a railroad engineer to exercise in his work is that care which persons of ordinary care and prudence would exercise under the circumstances. Hall v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co., 49 N. W. 239, 243, 46 Minn. 439; Norfolk & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby (Va.) 27 Gratt. 455, 17 Am. Ry. Rep. 321; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Shuford, 10 S. W. 408, 411, 72 Tex. 165.

Ordinary care is not such care as people in general would exercise, but such care as they would exercise under the special circumstances of each particular case. State v. Manchester & L. R. Co., 52 N. H. 523, 557.

"Ordinary care" is not an absolute, but a relative, term, the standard of which is necessarily variable, and is influenced and controlled by the extraneous circumstances surrounding the particular transaction. City of Winchester v. Carroll, 40 S. E. 37, 39, 99 Va. 727.

What is the precise legal intent of the term "ordinary care" must, in the nature of things, depend upon the circumstances of each individual case. It is a relative, and not an absolute, term. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 S. W. 772, 783, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 160.

The terms "ordinary care," "reasonable prudence," and such like terms as are applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may under different surroundings and circumstances be gross negligence. Crane Elevator Co. v. Lipfert (U. S.) 63 Fed. 942, 947, 11 O. C. A. 521; Consumers' Electric Light & St. R. Co. v. Pryor (Fla.) 32 South. 797, 805; Tacoma Ry. & Power Co. v. Hays (U. S.) 110 Fed.

496, 499, 49 O. C. A. 115; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Gunter (Ky.) 56 S. W. 527, 528; Cayser v. Taylor, 78 Mass. (10 Gray) 274, 280, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Crooker v. Pacific Lounge & Mattress Co., 69 Pac. 359, 361, 29 Wash. 30.

Want of ordinary care cannot be defined, for the degree of care and vigilance required varies according to the exigencies which require attention, and vigilance conforms in amount and degree to the particular circumstances under which they are to be exercised, and there is no fixed standard by which a court is enabled to arbitrarily say what conduct shall be considered reasonable and prudent, and what shall constitute ordinary care. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Com. Co., 58 Pac. 358, 360, 22 Mont. 312, 44 L. R. A. 508, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602; Consumers' Electric Light & St. R. Co. v. Pryor (Fla.) 32 South. 797, 805.

That degree of care which a man of average prudence and diligence would use under the like circumstances is denominated "ordinary care." Higman v. Camody, 112 Ala. 267, 272, 20 South. 490, 57 Am. St. Rep. 33.

In deciding whether a party has exercised ordinary care, consideration must be given to the position of the party, and his duties, business, and responsibilities; and the same act or omission which under some circumstances would not show any degree of negligence might under others show want of ordinary care, and under still different circumstances might show gross negligence. State v. Manchester & L. R. R., 52 N. H. 523.

What is ordinary care depends on the circumstances of the particular instance. When the circumstances are such that an ordinarily careful and prudent person would deem it essential to exercise a greater degree of care and caution than under less threatening circumstances, such greater degree of care would be but ordinary care. The test always is not that the highest possible care and caution shall be exercised, but such degree of care only as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise in like situation. West Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Manning, 48 N. E. 958, 960, 170 Ill. 417.

Ordinary care is not always the same degree of care. A reasonable man in some situations will exercise extraordinary care, and he should do it, and it is yet ordinary care in reference to the circumstances or exigencies of the case. We sometimes say that, the greater the danger, the greater the necessity of care. Neabit v. Crosby, 51 Atl. 550, 553, 74 Conn. 554.

"Ordinary care" has not only an absolute, but also a relative signification. It is such care as prudent persons are accustomed to exercise under the peculiar circumstances of each case. If called into exercise under circumstances of peculiar peril, a greater amount of care is required than where the circumstances are less perilous, because prudent and careful persons, having in view the object to be attained and the just rights of others, are in such cases accustomed to exercise more care than in cases less perilous. The amount of care is, indeed, increased, but the standard is still the same. It is still nothing more than ordinary care under the circumstances of that particular case. Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Terry, 8 Ohio St. 570, 581.

What is ordinary care cannot be determined abstractly. It is necessarily a relative term. It must be measured by the nature of the work to be done, the instruments to be used, and the hazard and peril of the situation. The law, by "ordinary care," means simply the caution and vigilance which reasonable and prudent men exercise under like circumstances. Flynn v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 78 Mo. 195, 202, 47 Am. Rep. 99.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, always dependent on relationship and circumstances. "Want of ordinary care" means nothing more than the failure to use those precautions which a just regard to the persons or property of others demand should be used under the circumstances of the particular case. Ordinary care depends upon the performance of a duty which one of the parties owes to the other, and this duty arises out of the various relationships of life, and varies in obligation under different circumstances. In one case the duty is high and imperative; in another it is the imperfect obligation, thus it may be dependent on a mere license to enter upon land or the bare obligation to avoid inflicting a willful injury upon a trespasser; while, upon the other hand, it may be a duty to care for the safety of an invited guest or of a passenger for hire." Smith v. Day (U. S.) 86 Fed. 62, 64.

What may constitute ordinary care under some circumstances may not under others. This varies, and is materially affected by the nature, situation, bulk, and value of the article or thing to be cared for. Ward v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 29 Wis. 144, 149.

The exigencies of the particular occasion fix the amount of care that should be exercised. Receivers of Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Pfinger (Tex.) 25 S. W. 792, 798; Quirk v. St. Louis United Elevator Co., 28 S. W. 1080, 1083, 126 Mo. 279. This principle is well illustrated, in regard to the care to be taken of different articles of personal property, thus: "A man would not be expected to take the same care of a bag of oats as a bag of gold; a bale of cotton as a bag of diamonds." Story, Bailm. §§ 15, 186. A similar variation in the degree of care to be exercised of one's person must prevail, in order that such care may rise to the standard and equal the measure of ordinary care. Quirk v. St. Louis United Elevator Co., 28 S. W. 1080, 1083, 126 Mo. 279.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which may reasonably be expected of one in the same situation, and would evidently be very small in a very young child. City of St. Paul v. Kuby, 8 Minn. 154, 168 (Gil. 125, 140); (citing Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67).

"Ordinary care" is a relative term. What would be ordinary care under one set of circumstances might be gross negligence under a different set of circumstances. Ho-bert v. City of Seattle, 73 Pac. 383, 385, 32 Wash. 330.

Ordinary care generally depends on the facts of the particular case, except in those instances where the law, by express terms or otherwise, establishes some more exact rule. Ordinary care is such as a person of ordinary care and caution, according to the standard of the usual and general experience of mankind, would exercise in the same situation and circumstances as those of the person whose conduct in that regard is in question in the given case. Tetherow v. St. Joseph & D. M. R. Co., 11 S. W. 310, 313, 98 Mo. 74, 14 Am. St. Rep. 617.

"There is no fixed standard in the law by which a court is enabled to arbitrarily say in every case what conduct shall be considered reasonable and prudent, and what shall constitute ordinary care, under any and all circumstances. The terms 'ordinary care,' 'reasonably prudent,' and such like terms as apply to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may under different surroundings and circumstances be gross negligence." Hall v. Ogden City St. Ry. Co., 44 Pac. 1048, 1047, 13 Utah, 243, 57 Am. St. Rep. 726 (quoting Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 455).

The term "ordinary care" is a difficult one to define, as it is relative, and always dependent on relationship and circumstances. In some relations a slight want of care is a want of ordinary care, because of the high duty that is owing; in other relations only a great failure of care is a want of ordinary care, because there is only a duty of imperfect obligation owing; while in some other relations only a degree of care between the two extremes would constitute ordinary care. Therefore, where the circumstances require great care, then great care is only ordinary care; when they require only slight care, then only slight care becomes ordinary care; and so on between the two extremes on the same principle, according to the circumstances of each case. Prue v. New York, P. & B. R. Co., 27 Atl. 450, 453, 18 R. I. 360.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. v. Hodges, 13 S. W. 64, 65, 76 Tex. 90, the court said: "What is ordinary care will vary with the surrounding circumstances and conditions." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Webb (Mo.) 49 S. W. 526, 529.

No fixed, arbitrary rule can be laid down in defining ordinary care. The degree of care and vigilance required varies according to the exigencies which require attention and vigilance, conforming in amount and degree to the particular circumstances under which they are to be exercised. The care and attention necessary on an employer's part in furnishing a steam boiler is relative to the work to be done by the boiler, and the capacity of such an instrument for harm, as well as good. The employer is in duty bound to see that the machinery is fit and safe for the work only so far as due and reasonable care and diligence and prudence will go towards having it and keeping it safe and fit. He is not a warrantor of the safety of the machinery, and, when he has exercised the degree of care hereinbefore discussed, as ordinary or reasonable, his duty is done. Mulligan v. Montana Union Ry. Co., 47 Pac. 795, 797, 19 Mont. 135 (citing Whart. Neg. § 211; Johnson v. Boston Min. Co., 16 Mont. 164, 40 Pac. 298).

Under Acts 1891, c. 4071, § 1, providing that "a railroad company shall be liable for any damage done to persons, stock or other property by the running of the locomotives or cars or other machinery of such company, or for damage done by any person in the employment and service of such company, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents had exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company," such companies, in every case falling within the purview of this statute, are bound to exercise all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence strictly commensurate with the exigencies of the occasion and demanded by the relationship that they bear for the time being to the party in question. Morris v. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co., 29 South. 541, 546, 43 Fla. 10.

One who is a trespasser on a train is only required to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to himself. But this requisite can only be complied with by the exercise of that degree of caution which persons of his age and intelligence, and of ordinary prudence, will use under the same conditions of danger, and with like knowledge of the situation. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 14 Pac. 172, 175, 36 Kan. 655, 59 Am. Rep. 596.

The ordinary care or due care which a railroad company is required to exercise in the employment of its servants is not merely such care as other railroad companies exercise under like circumstances, for other railroad companies may be careless. "Ordinary care in the selection or retention of servants in such cases implies that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably require; that is, such care, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of the employé, as is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered." Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Mares, 8 Sup. Ct. 321, 326, 123 U. S. 710, 31 L. Ed. 296.

By "ordinary and proper care and diligence" is meant such care and diligence as a person of ordinary prudence and caution would commonly exercise under like circumstances, and the degree of care and diligence required in a case is proportioned to the amount of danger probably consequent on a failure to exercise care and diligence. Martin v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 26 S. W. 1052, 1053, 87 Tex. 117.

Same—Character of business affecting.

What is "ordinary care" must be measured by the character of the business, and the risks attending its prosecution. Houston v. Brush, 29 Atl. 380, 386, 66 Vt. 331; Heckman v. Evenson, 73 N. W. 427, 429, 7 N. D. 178; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Barrett, 17 Sup. Ct. 707, 708, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. Ed. 1136.

Ordinary care has relation to the business in which the party is engaged. Lamline v. Houston W. St. & P. Ferry R. Co. (N. Y.) 14 Daly, 144.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and what is ordinary care is to be measured by the nature of the case, the hazard, and the situation. Rutledge v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 78 Mo. 286, 292.

What is ordinary care cannot be determined abstractly. It has relation to, and must be measured by, the work or thing done, and the instrumentalities used, and their capacity for evil as well as good. Oayzer v. Taylor, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 274, 280, 69 Am. Dec. 317.

The term "ordinary care," within the rule that a physician or surgeon is only responsible for his failure to exercise ordinary care, is used in its ordinary acceptance or meaning. Heath v. Glisan, 3 Or. 64, 65.

"Ordinary care" may mean very slight care in one state of circumstances, and comparatively very great care in another. The ordinary care which is exacted from one person in the custody of a valuable jewel is the same in legal principle, though different in degree, from the ordinary care required from another as the custodian of a grindstone. In the one case it is the care usually taken by prudent custodians of jewels, and in the other that usually taken by prudent custodians of grindstones. In each case it is the care which the nature of the subject and surrounding circumstances reasonably demand. Blythe v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Exch. 781 (citing Cooley, Torts, 680; Shear. & R. Neg. § 7).

The ordinary care which the hirer of a slave is required to exercise with regard to such slave is that degree of it which in the same circumstances a person of ordinary prudence would take of the particular thing, were it his own. It is manifest that it may differ very much, according to the nature of the thing, the purpose for which it was hired, and the particular circumstances of risk under which a loss occurred. A coach, for example, is not kept like a casket of jewels. So a slave, being a moral and intelligent being, is usually as capable of self-preservation as other persons. Hence the same constant oversight and control are not required for his preservation as for that of a lifeless thing or of an irrational animal. Again, if an owner let his slave for a particular purpose, it is to be understood that he is fit for it, and therefore he may be set to that service, and kept at it in the way that is usual. Heathcock v. Pennington, 33 N. C. 640, 648.

The ordinary care which a railroad company must use in providing station platforms is that which a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances to accomplish the end in view, namely, the safety of the passengers. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Barnett, 45 S. W. 550, 551, 65 Ark. 255.

"Ordinary care and diligence," when applied to the management of railroad engines and cars in motion, imports all the care and circumspection, prudence and discretion, which the peculiar circumstances of the place or occasion reasonably require, and this will be increased or diminished accordingly as the ordinary liability of danger to others is increased or diminished in the movement and operation of them. Parvis v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 17 Atl. 702, 705, 8 Houst. 436; Knopf v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 46 Atl. 747, 748, 2 Pennewill, 392; Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 50 Atl. 95, 97, 3 Pennewill, 455; Patterson v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 4 Houst. 103.

"Ordinary care towards its employes," as used with reference to a railroad, imposes a high degree of diligence for keeping the road and its appliances in perfect repair, but neither warrants nor insures against defects. Wilson v. Denver, S. P. & P. Ry. Co., 2 Pac. 1, 3, 7 Colo. 1.

Ordinary care which a man is required to exercise in the selection and retention of servants and agents implies that degree of diligence and precaution which exigencies of the particular services reasonably require, or it is such care as, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of employes, is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered. Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 2 Sup. Ct. 982, 987, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. Ed. 605. See, also, Lindvall v. Woods (U. S.) 44 Fed. 855, 857.

Ordinary care in driving a horse or vehicle means such care as prudent men ordinarily use in like circumstances, taking into consideration the time, the place, the condition of the highway, the possible dangers, the known obstructions, and the damage likely to result from driving carelessly at that particular time and place. Ford v. Whitman (Del.) 45 Atl. 543, 544, 2 Pennewill, 355. See, also, Ammerman v. Coal Tp., 40 Atl. 1005, 1007, 187 Pa. 826.

In discussing the question whether or not directors of a bank were negligent in failing sooner to detect the shortage of the president, the court says that the ordinary care of a business man in his own affairs means one thing, and the ordinary care of a gratuitous mandatory is quite another matter. One implies an oversight and knowledge of every detail of the business. The other suggests such care only as a man can give in a short space of time to the business of other persons, from whom he receives no compensation. Swentzel v. Penn Bank, 147 Pa. 140, 150, 23 Atl. 405, 15 L. R. A. 305, 80 Am. St. Rep. 718.

The law exacts from mechanics, such as masons, carpenters, etc., ordinary skill and care. It does not require the highest degree of these qualities, such as the most skillful and careful mechanics use, nor is it satisfied with the lowest degree, or such as the most ignorant and most careless exercise, but it takes the medium as the rule; that is, the average of skill and the average of care. Fletcher v. Seekell, 1 R. I. 267.

Same—In crossing railroads.

The law precisely defines what the term "ordinary care" means, with respect to passing over railway crossings. In the progress of the law in this respect, the question of care at railway crossings, as affecting a traveler, is no longer a rule and question for the jury. The quantum of care is exactly prescribed as a matter of law. In attempting to cross, the traveler must listen for signals, notice signs put up as warnings, and look attentively up and down the track. If a traveler, by looking, could have seen an approaching train in time to escape, it will be presumed, in case he is injured by collision, either that he did not look, or, if he did look, that he did not heed what he saw. Lamport v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 41 N. E. 583, 587, 142 Ind. 209; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Hoffbauer, 56 N. E. 54, 57, 23 Ind. App. 614; Smith v. Wabash R. Co., 40 N. E. 270, 272, 141 Ind. 92; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Boyts, 45 N. E. 812, 816, 16 Ind. App. 640; Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 42 N. E. 736, 738, 143 Ind. 405, 82 L. R. A. 149; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hill, 18 N. E. 461, 463, 117 Ind. 56, 60; Durbin v. Oregon Railroad & Navigation Co. (Cal.) 17 Pac. 5, 7, 11 Am. St. Rep. 778.

The rule that the failure of a person to stop, look, and listen before driving on a railroad track constitutes negligence, as a matter of law, is not inflexible, even in the case of steam railroads, and is only applicable to street railroads on a public street where the attending conditions are such that reasonable care and prudence would require such precautions. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co. v. Hays (U. S.) 110 Fed. 496, 499, 49 O. C. A. 115.

At a crossing in a level stretch of country, where an uninterrupted view could be had for a long distance in either direction, it might not be necessary to either stop or listen, in order to exercise ordinary care; but at an exceptionally dangerous crossing a much greater degree of care would be expected, to constitute ordinary care. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Gunter, 56 S. W. 527, 528, 108 Ky. 362. In proportion as the danger increases must the vigilance of the person attempting to cross increase. He is rigidly required to do all that care and prudence would suggest to avoid injury; and when, from physical infirmity, darkness, snow, fog, smoke, steam, the inclemency of the weather, and noise of any kind, large buildings, or other obstructions and hindrances, it is more difficult to see or hear, greater precautions must be taken to avoid injury than would otherwise be necessary, and under such circumstances there can be no excuse for a failure to use such reasonable precautions as would probably have prevented the injury. If the traveler by looking could have seen an approaching train, or by listening could have heard it, in time to have avoided injury, it would be presumed, if he is injured by a collision, that he did not look and listen, or, if he did look and listen, that he did not heed what he saw or heard. Such conduct is negligence per se. Oleson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 42 N. E. 736, 738, 143 Ind. 405, 82 L. R. A. 149.

More care and vigilance are required at a railway crossing of extremely dangerous character by all parties, trainmen, and travelers on the highway than at a place where there are no obstructions to interfere with the sight and the hearing; the difference between the parties being that the trainmen are presumed to know all about the peculiarities of the intersection, while the travelers on the highway are not presumed to have the same knowledge. That they are acquainted with the crossing may be shown. Hendrickson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 49 Minn. 245, 51 N. W. 1044, 16 L. R. A. 261. 32 Am. St. Rep. 540.

Ordinary care is such care as reasonably prudent and cautious persons exercise under like circumstances. Reasonably prudent people do frequently and habitually cross railroad tracks to go to a passenger train waiting at a station to receive passengers. The ordinarily prudent person does, perhaps, look ere he crosses any railroad track to see that no train is approaching upon it. Chicago, St. P. & K. O. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 46 N. E. 208, 210, 165 Ill. 83.

Same—Danger as affecting.

The degree of care is always in proportion to the danger to be apprehended—as, for instance, greater care should be exercised in the management of a steam engine than the use of a plow. Meredith v. Reed, 26 Ind. 834, 836. See, also, Martin v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 26 S. W. 1052, 1053, 87 Tex. 117; Diamond v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 13 Pac. 367, 372, 6 Mont. 580; Kelley v. Cable Co., 14 Pac. 633, 635, 7 Mont. 70; City of Terre Haute v. Mack, 38 N. E. 476, 479, 139 Ind. 99; Moore v. Central R. Co., 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 263, 286; Kelsey v. Barney, 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 425.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence is presumed to use under particular circumstances to avoid injury to others, and is in proportion to the danger to be avoided. Lamline v. Houston, West St. & P. Ferry Co. (N. Y.) 14 Daly, 144; Toledo & W. Ry. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185, 197.

In determining the question of ordinary care, the degree of care does not vary with the increase or diminution of the danger. It continues to be ordinary in degree, but the quantum of diligence to be used differs under different conditions. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Gormley, 91 Tex. 393, 399, 43 S. W. 877, 879, 66 Am. St. Rep. 894.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence is presumed to use, under the particular circumstances, to avoid injury. It must be in proportion to the danger to be avoided, and the fatal consequences involved in its neglect. Hurley v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. (Ind.) Wils. 295, 299 (citing Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185, 186).

Ordinary care is such care as a person of ordinary prudence exercises under the circumstances, and the dangers to be apprehended. The greater the danger, the higher the degree of care required to constitute ordinary care, the absence of which is negligence, and which is a question of degree only. The kind of care is precisely the same. Young v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 44 N. E. 927, 929, 148 Ind. 54; Citizens' Ry. Co. v. Gifford, 47 S. W. 1041, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 681.

If the danger be great and threatening, then a high degree of skill is requisite in order to avoid or prevent it; and, in case of great danger, great care and caution will be but ordinary care. But if the circumstances are such that but little risk or danger may be reasonably apprehended, then a much less degree of care will be ordinary care. Brown v. Lynn, 81 Pa. 510, 512, 72 Am. Dec. 768.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term. What is ordinary care in a case of extraordinary danger would be extraordinary care in a case of ordinary danger, and what would be ordinary care in a case of little danger would be much below this in a case of great danger. Kelley v. Cable Co., 14 Pac. 633, 635, 7 Mont. 70.

The expression "ordinary care," without qualification, suggests merely the care that should be bestowed in cases of ordinary danger. It is an inappropriate expression where the danger is extraordinary, unless explained and applied to the subject. The ordinary care of an engineer on a railroad locomotive is a very high degree of care, and the skill required is a very high degree of skill. Diamond v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 13 Pac. 367, 371, 6 Mont. 580.

The amount of diligence to be exercised must be proportioned to the necessities and exigencies of the occasion, but the standard or degree of care required of the master towards the servant is the same, however great the peril to which the servant is exposed. Texas Midland R. R. v. Taylor (Tex.) 44 S. W. 892.

In dangerous situations "ordinary care" means great care. The greater the danger, the greater care required, and the want of the degree of care required may amount to culpable negligence. Farrell v. Waterbury H. R. Co., 21 Atl. 675, 677, 60 Conn. 239.

Same—Knowledge as affecting.

"Ordinary care and due diligence" is a relative term, and the question must be determined with reference to the peculiar conditions existing in all cases, and the degree of knowledge had by the party charged with such care and diligence. Palmer v. Penobscot Lumbering Ass'n, 88 Atl. 108, 109, 90 Me. 193.

"Ordinary care and skill" is a relative term, exacting a degree of vigilance and technical knowledge in proportion to the dangerous character of the substance dealt with, and requiring that a person shall take for the safety of others whatever precautions the nature of his employment suggests. Kinney v. Koopman, 22 South. 583, 594, 116 Ala. 810, 87 L. R. A. 497, 67 Am. St. Rep. 119.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term. What would be ordinary care under one set of circumstances might be gross negligence under another set of circumstances. Therefore what will constitute ordinary care to avoid injury in passing from a defective and unsafe sidewalk by one ignorant of its defective and unsafe condition would not constitute ordinary care in one thus passing who had knowledge of its condition. Town of Boswell v. Wakley, 48 N. E. 637, 640, 149 Ind. 64. See, also, Junction City v. Blades, 41 Pac. 677, 680, 1 Kan. App. 85.

Ordinary care requires that a person should act not only in view of the facts of which he has actual knowledge, but in view of facts which he may learn in the exercise of ordinary diligence; ordinary care being that degree of care required by the dangers reasonably to be expected. Davis v. Concord & M. R. R., 44 Atl. 388, 391, 68 N. H. 247. See, also, Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co., 56 Pac. 358, 360, 22 Mont. 312, 44 L. R. A. 508, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602.

The term "ordinary care and prudence" expresses the degree of care and prudence which a person is bound to exercise in a given case. Therefore, to entitle one to recover for injuries sustained by reason of a defective bridge, his conduct must have been that of a prudent and careful man; and, if he had reasonable ground to apprehend that the bridge was unsafe, the driving on the bridge under such circumstances was such an act of imprudence and want of care as would preclude his recovering damages. Folsom v. Town of Underhill, 86 Vt. 580, 592.

Same—Means of prevention as affecting.

The degree of vigilance which the law exacts by the requirement of ordinary care varies with the command of means to avoid injuring others possessed by the person on whom the obligation is imposed. Under some circumstances a very high degree of vigilance is required by the requirement of ordinary care. Where the consequence of negligence will probably be a serious injury to others, and where the means of avoiding the infliction of injuries upon others are completely out of the party's power, ordinary care requires almost the utmost degree of human vigilance and foresight. Kelsey v. Barney, 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 425.

What may be considered ordinary care in one case may under the circumstances of another amount to culpable negligence. So an act which would have been viewed with indifference when the street cars were drawn by horses at such a low rate of speed as to be easily controlled might be gross negligence when the car is propelled by electric power at a much higher rate of speed. Hall v. Ogden City St. Ry. Co., 44 Pac. 1046, 1047, 18 Utah, 243, 57 Am. St. Rep. 728.

Same—Nature and magnitude of injury as affecting.

The degree of care and foresight which it is necessary to use in order to constitute ordinary care must always be in proportion to the nature and magnitude of the injury that will be likely to result from the occurrence which is anticipated and to be guarded against. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Rice, 11 S. W. 689, 700, 51 Ark. 467, 4 L. R. A. 173; Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Ryles, 11 S. E. 499, 84 Ga. 420; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Barnett, 45 S. W. 550, 551, 65 Ark. 255. See, also, Kelsey v. Barney, 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 425, 429. It will thus be seen that even the ordinary care which requires a degree of prudence and vigilance commensurate with the perils to be apprehended and the injuries to be avoided may require a high degree of care. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Barnett, 45 S. W. 550, 551, 65 Ark. 255 (quoting Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Ryles, 11 S. E. 499, 84 Ga. 420).

Slight negligence distinguished.

"Slight negligence" and "slight want of ordinary care" are not convertible terms. A man may be slightly negligent in a given case, and still be in the exercise of that ordinary care which most men would exercise under the circumstances; and, if he is guilty of slight want of ordinary care, then he did not act as most men of ordinary care would act under the same circumstances. It is only the extremely cautious man who does not commit slightly negligent acts, but the law does not defeat the damages caused by the negligence of another unless the complaining party has himself been guilty of some neglect or want of care which contributed to the injury, which men of ordinary caution would not have committed under like circumstances. Jung v. City of Stevens Point, 43 N. W. 513, 515, 74 Wis. 547.

ORDINARY CATTLE.

See "Ordinary Stock."

ORDINARY CAUTION.

"Ordinary caution," means such ordinary caution as may naturally and reasonably be expected to exist under the circumstances of the particular case. Bowen v. State, 68 Tenn. (9 Bart.) 46, 50, 40 Am. Rep. 71.

Ordinary caution within the meaning of the rule that a coin is counterfeit if its resemblance to a genuine one is sufficient to deceive a person of ordinary caution is such caution as is usually exercised by prudent men in the particular transaction in which they are engaged. More careful observation is expected of an expert banker, who in regular hours daily receives money at his counter, than of a railroad agent, who in the hurry of business in the day and night sells tickets at his window to eager and impatient travelers. United States v. Hopkins (U. S.) 28 Fed. 443, 444.

The expression "ordinary prudence and caution" is but a synonym for "ordinary care." Blythe v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Exch. 781.

ORDINARY CIRCUMSTANCES.

Where a court instructed that ordinary care is the care which reasonable men exercise under ordinary circumstances, the term "ordinary circumstances" would not convey to the minds of the jurors the necessity of comparing the conduct of the deceased under the circumstances shown by the evidence with what would be the conduct of prudent men under the same or similar circumstances, and its use was therefore erroneous. Overman Wheel Co. v. Griffin (U. S.) 67 Fed. 659, 662, 14 C. C. A. 609.

ORDINARY COURSE OF BUSINESS.

"In determining whether a given transaction is made in the ordinary and usual course of business of a party, the question is not whether such transactions are usual in the general conduct of business throughout the community, but whether they are according to the usual course of business of the particular person whose conveyance is subject to investigation." Rison v. Knapp (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 835, 837.

The question whether a note or bill of exchange was received by the holder in the ordinary course of business is a question of fact, and is to be determined as such. It means that the security was transferred before maturity, and for value, without the transferee's knowledge of any defect in his title thereto. National Bank of Chelsea v. Isham, 48 Vt. 590, 592.

The phrase "ordinary course of business," as employed in Rev. Code, § 4884, declaring that an indorsee in due course is one who in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, means according to the usages and customs of commercial transactions, and includes a case where a note is purchased for value before maturity. Christianson v. Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n, 67 N. W. 300, 303, 5 N. D. 438, 82 L. R. A. 730; First Nat. Bank v. Flath, 86 N. W. 867, 869, 10 N. D. 281. The surrender of an antecedent debt as consideration for the purchase of a negotiable note is sufficient to constitute it in ordinary course of business. First Nat. Bank v. Flath, 86 N. W. 867, 869, 10 N. D. 281.

"The ordinary course of business," as the term is used in the statement that an inability to pay debts in the ordinary course of business constitutes insolvency, does not mean an ability to turn out goods or other property to pay one debt, without leaving in the debtor's hands assets to provide for other debts as they become due.—In re Dibble (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 651, 654.

ORDINARY COURSE OF LAW.

A remedy by injunction is included in the expression the "ordinary course of law," in a statute which provides that mandamus will not lie where there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Harrington v. St. Paul & S. C. R., 17 Minn. 215, 226 (Gil. 188, 202).

The courts, in attempting to define the due diligence which must be exercised by the creditor against the principal debtor before he can hold the guarantor, have said that it constituted a resort to the ordinary course of the law, which, in turn, they have defined as obtaining judgment, issuing an execution, and its return unsatisfied. Stone v. Rockefeller, 29 Ohio St. 625; Dewey v. W. B. Clark Invest. Co., 50 N. W. 1032, 48 Minn. 180, 81 Am. St. Rep. 623.

ORDINARY COURSE OF PRACTICE.

The words "ordinary course of practice," when used in speaking of the practice of the courts, means the course which is positively commanded by the law to be pursued. Hart v. Nixon, 25 La. Ann. 186, 187.

ORDINARY COURTS OF LAW.

A statute providing for the recovery of the value of lands taken for railroad purposes in "ordinary courts of law" does not mean courts only where legal, as distinguished from equitable, remedies are administered, but includes courts of equity, which, in a general sense, are courts of law. Austin v. Rutland R. Co. (U. S.) 17 Fed. 468, 469.

ORDINARY CURRENT EXPENSES.

Act 1874, passed for the regulation and assessment of municipal taxes, provides (section 1) that "it shall not be lawful for the authorities of any municipal corporation in the state to levy or collect for ordinary current expenses of such corporation, except as hereinafter provided, an ad valorem tax on the property within said corporation exceeding one-half of one per cent.," etc. Held, that while the term "ordinary current expenses" had generally been accepted to mean those annual expenses attending the administration of the city government, expended in payment of salaries, and those temporary expenditures in the way of repairs, etc., that appertain to the city, its streets, bridges, culverts, etc., such could not be held to be its meaning in the act of 1874, but all the expenses and disbursements of the city, of every kind, except for paying the streets and education, were ordinary current expenses, and were to be paid from the taxes levied for that purpose. City of Rome v. McWilliam, 67 Ga. 106, 114.

The term "ordinary current expenses" shall be construed to include all current expenses, excepting only expenditures for education, for paving and macadamizing streets, and for payment of principal and interest of public debt, which shall be known as "extraordinary expenses." Code Ga. 1895, § 720.

ORDINARY DILIGENCE.

"Ordinary diligence is such diligence as men of common prudence usually exercise about their own affairs." Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Scott, 42 Ill. 132, 143; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274, 297; Mechanics' Bank at Baltimore v. Merchants' Bank at Boston, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 13, 26; Wallace v. Lincoln Sav. Bank, 15 S. W. 448, 454, 89 Tenn. (5 Pickle) 630, 24 Am. St. Rep. 625; Ennis v. Eden Mills Paper Co., 48 Atl. 610, 613, 65 N. J. Law, 577.

"Ordinary diligence" means such diligence as men in general exert in respect to their own affairs, Briggs v. Taylor, 28 Vt. 180, 184; City of Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155; and not any one man in particular, City of Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155; Hale v. Rawallie, 8 Kan. 186, 189 (citing Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. 167, 180, 188).

Ordinary diligence is such diligence as men of ordinary prudence exercise with reference to their own property. Cooper v. Lee, 21 S. W. 998, 1002, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 9.

Ordinary diligence is "that degree of diligence which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances." Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 30 Pac. 462, 467, 49 Kan. 460; Brady v. Jefferson (Del.) 5 Houst. 60, 79.

Ordinary diligence is that care which every prudent man exercises under the same or similar circumstances. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 18 S. E. 290, 291, 92 Ga. 77.

It is very plain that ordinary diligence or care is that measure of care and diligence ordinarily employed in a given business. Zell v. Dunkle, 27 Atl. 38, 39, 156 Pa. 353.

"Ordinary diligence" means that degree of care or attention or exertion which under the actual circumstances a man of ordinary prudence and discretion would use in reference to the particular thing, were it his own property, or in doing a particular thing, were it his own concern. And where skill is required for the undertaking, "ordinary diligence" implies the possession and use of competent skill. Swigert v. Graham, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 661, 663.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their affairs in the country and the age in which they live. Erie Bank v. Smith (Pa.) 8 Brewst. 9, 14, 17. These last words are quite material, quite important, in this case. Thus, what might be ordinary diligence in one country and one age may at another age and in another country be negligence—even gross negligence—as, for instance,—to give a homely illustration,—in many parts of the interior of the country, where thefts are rare, it is quite usual for people to leave their barns and even their dwelling houses unlocked at night. In cities it would be deemed a great want of ordinary care to do that. So, where bonds placed in a bank in New York City as collateral security to a loan were stolen at some time between Saturday and Monday, and there was no watchman kept in the bank at that time, and there was evidence that many banks in that city did not have a watchman over Sunday, the question whether the failure of this bank to have a watchman was a want of ordinary diligence was for the jury. Erie Bank v. Smith (Pa.) 8 Brewst. 9, 14, 17.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care and prudence which a discreet and cautious person would use in his own affairs, where the whole loss or risk would be his own. Howard County Com'rs v. Legg, 93 Ind. 523, 47 Am. Rep. 390; Porter County Com'rs v. Dombke, 94 Ind. 72, 75.

Ordinary diligence is that care which every prudent man takes of his own property of a similar nature. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2898.

Ordinary diligence is that degree of care in the preservation of a thing which a prudent father of a family would use for the safe-keeping of it if it was his own. Halvard v. Dechelman, 29 Mo. 459, 460, 77 Am. Dec. 585.

"Ordinary diligence" means such diligence as the mass of mankind or as men in general use in managing their own affairs. Under the statute requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks, and which makes them absolutely liable for injuries to domestic animals straying thereon in case of their neglect so to do, a railroad company does not perform its duty under the statute by merely exercising ordinary diligence in keeping its fences in a safe condition, but the company is bound to exercise a high degree of diligence. Antidel v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 26 Wis. 145, 150, 7 Am. Rep. 44.

Common or ordinary diligence is that which men in general exert with respect to their own concerns. It is distinguished from high or great diligence, which is that with which prudent persons take care of their concerns, and very slight diligence, which is that with which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of any prudence at all, take care of their own concerns. Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 438, 442, 57 Am. Dec. 534.

In matters of administration, where the duty of performing certain functions devolves upon directors of a bank, they are justly held liable either for their nonperformance, nonfeasance, or for their lack of ordinary diligence in their attempted performance, whereby loss is incurred. By "ordinary diligence" is meant such as is exercised by other prudent and diligent officers under like circumstances. Campbell v. Watson, 50 Atl. 120, 126, 62 N. J. Eq. 396.

Chief Justice Gilpin, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Patterson v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 4 Houst. 103, said: "The term 'ordinary care and diligence,' when applied to the management of railroad engines and cars in motion, must be understood, however, to import all the care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion which the peculiar circumstances of the place or occasion require of the servants of the defendant company, and this will be increased or diminished according as the ordinary liability to danger and accident and to do injury to others is increased or diminished in the movement and operation of them." Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 50 Atl. 95, 97, 3 Pennewill, 455.

ORDINARY DOMESTIC BUSINESS.

The act incorporating a turnpike company exempted from toll all persons traveling on the ordinary domestic business of family concerns. Held, that the phrase "ordinary domestic business of family concerns" meant the common and ordinary business pertaining primarily and directly to the maintenance and support of the family of the person claiming the exemption, and hence it did not extend to a case of a physician on his way to visit his patients. Centre Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 212, 216.

ORDINARY EXPENDITURE.

In construing an act for the incorporation of villages passed April 20, 1870, which provided that the expenditures of the village should be denominated "ordinary expenditures" and "extraordinary expenditures," and that ordinary expenditures should be those necessarily incurred to carry out and enforce the rules, by-laws, and ordinances which the trustees are authorized to adopt, and to give force to the powers therein conferred, except as such expenditures may be specifically enlarged or diminished or controlled by other provisions of the act, and providing that no ordinary expenditure for any specific act, object, purpose, or thing, except the lighting of streets, should exceed the sum of $500, and providing also that the trustees should have power to raise money for an extraordinary expenditure for any village purposes by assessment and tax, by submitting a resolution stating the amount to be raised, etc., to the annual election or to a special election, it was held that the difference between the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures was not in their nature, but in their amount, and that upon a vote of the electors of a village, duly taken, bonds might be issued under such act for any expenditure for village purposes exceeding $500 in amount. Village of Arverne-by-the-Sea v. Shepard, 46 N. Y. Supp. 653, 654, 20 App. Div. 12.

ORDINARY EXPENSES.

Of municipality.

Where the charter of a corporation authorizes the levy of a tax sufficient to defray the ordinary expenses of the corporation, such phrase meant expenditures necessary to carry into effect the ordinary powers of the corporation, and the term was used in contradistinction to "extraordinary expenses." Intendant and Town Council of City of Livingston v. Pippin, 31 Ala. 542, 550.

Any expense that recurs with regularity and certainty, and is necessary for the existence of the municipality, or for the health, comfort, and perhaps convenience of the inhabitants, may well be called an ordinary expense of the municipality. Brown v. City of Corry, 34 Atl. 854, 855, 175 Pa. 523.

The "ordinary expenses of a township," within the meaning of How. St. §§ 671, 750, authorizing the township board to vote taxes for the necessary sums to defray the ordinary township expenses, has never been very satisfactorily defined; but it may well be said that such expenses cannot include less than the necessary expenses incurred in administering the government of the township under the statutes creating it and relating thereto, in such manner as will best promote the convenience, peace, health, prosperity, and happiness of the people residing therein. The term does not include the expense of establishing lost section corners, nor the expense of building a town hall. Mills v. Richland Tp., 40 N. W. 183, 186, 72 Mich. 100.

The ordinary expenses of a state include the current expenses of the government, and debts to mature during the current fiscal year. State v. Leaphart, 11 S. O. 458, 469.

Const. art. 11, § 1, provides that the Legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the ordinary expenses of the state. Held, that the term "ordinary expenses" was practically defined in article 12, § 2, to be the ordinary current expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the state, the current expenses of state institutions, interest on the public debt, and for the common schools, such section providing that the general appropriation bill shall embrace nothing but appropriations for ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the state, the current expenses of state institutions, interest on the public debt and for common schools; and that all other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing one object, etc. In re Limitation of Taxation, 54 N. W. 417, 419, 8 S. D. 456.

An item for the salary of a clerk in the offices of the Supreme Court prothonotary is intended to pay for part of the regular and ordinary work of such offices, and therefore is for their ordinary expenses, within the meaning of the Constitution, limiting general appropriation bills to the ordinary expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments. Commonwealth v. Gregg, 29 Atl. 297, 298, 161 Pa. 582.

ORDINARY FENCES.

In a statute relating to unruly cattle, that will not be restrained by ordinary fences, the term "ordinary fences" does not mean lawful fences. "Ordinary," in such a connection, means common, and the meaning of the word as there used is different from that of the word lawful as used in the statute providing for lawful fences, inasmuch as fences which are lawful when made are constantly, by settling and otherwise, becoming unlawful. There is therefore a class of common fences to which the term "ordinary," in contradistinction to "lawful," can properly apply. Hine v. Wooding, 37 Conn. 123, 126.

ORDINARY FLOODS.

Ordinary floods, within the rule that a railroad company constructing an embankment is liable for failing to provide means to prevent damages by the collection of waters caused by ordinary floods, means floods, the occurrence of which may be reasonably anticipated from the general experience of men residing in the regions where such floods happen. They are distinguished from extraordinary floods, which are floods of such unusual occurrence that they cannot be foreseen by men of ordinary experience and ordinary prudence. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Pool, 8 S. W. 535, 537, 70 Tex. 712.

ORDINARY FORM.

An allegation in the petition in an action on notes that they were "drawn in the ordinary form" is to be understood as meaning that they were payable in dollars. Sessions v. Peay, 21 Ark. 100, 105.

ORDINARY GRANT.

By an ordinary grant there is a transfer of title or estate or ownership from one to another, and the grantor, having parted with what he had, can give nothing by a second deed. Western Electric Co. v. Sperry Electric Co. (U. S.) 59 Fed. 295, 298, 8 C. C. A. 129.

ORDINARY INSPECTION.

The rule that a railroad company is bound to make a "reasonable and ordinary inspection" of foreign cars received for transportation means such an inspection as the time, place, means, and opportunity, and the requirements and exigencies of commerce, will permit. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Bates, 45 N. E. 108, 111, 146 Ind. 564.

ORDINARY JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of a court of equity is termed ordinary where a person holding the legal title of property for the use of another refuses to discharge the obligation, or forfeits his right to do so, and the court appoints another trustee. This jurisdiction is confined to the selection of the instrument to apply the property to the object. The ordinary jurisdiction is here limited to the mode. United States v. Late Corporation Church Jesus Christ, 31 Pac. 436, 441, 8 Utah, 810.

ORDINARY LANGUAGE.

Code, § 149, requiring that answers that set up no denial must contain a statement of new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, in "ordinary and concise language," without repetition, means the established and customary form when the Code was enacted. "Ordinary" means that which has been established and is customary. Bell v. Yates (N. Y.) 33 Barb. 627, 629.

ORDINARY LOW WATER.

In construing an instruction that "the boundary line described in the treaty of cession from Georgia to the United States as running up the said river and along the banks thereof, was a line impressed upon the land by ordinary low water," the court said: "'Ordinary low water,' like 'low water,' is a relative term, and in the abstract, and without practical application, has no definite meaning, and furnishes no satisfactory guide by which to ascertain or determine the line in question." Howard v. Ingersoll, 54 U. S. (13 How.) 381, 425, 14 L. Ed. 189.

Ordinary low water of a river is not the water line in an extremely dry time. Hamilton v. Pittock, 27 Atl. 1079, 1080, 158 Pa. 457.

ORDINARY MAN OR PERSON.

The use of the expression "such care as an ordinary man," or "an ordinary business man," would use, in an instruction defining the degree of diligence and care required of a railroad company to avoid liability on a charge of negligence, and in determining the question of contributory negligence, is improper. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 13 S. W. 972, 973, 77 Tex. 179.

The expression "ordinary persons," in common parlance, means men of ordinary care and diligence in relation to any particular thing. City of Kinaley v. Morse, 20 Pac. 217, 220, 40 Kan. 577.

ORDINARY METHOD.

The fact that the usual, customary, and ordinary method of handling a locomotive was being pursued at the time a fire was set by it does not necessarily show that the prudent and careful way was being pursued, especially if the wind was blowing hard at the time, and the land adjacent to the roadway was covered with very combustible material. It might well be contended that more than ordinary care and caution was required. Solum v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 443, 444, 63 Minn. 233.

ORDINARY NAVIGATION.

See "Ordinary Navigation."

Ordinary navigation is established or regular navigation. Johnson assigns to the word "ordinary" the meaning of "established, regular, common, usual." Crenshaw v. Slate River Co. (Va.) 6 Rand. 245, 263.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE.

By "ordinary neglect" is meant the want of that care and diligence which prudent men usually bestow on their own concerns. Baltimore & O. R. R. v. Rathbone, 1 W. Va. 87, 107, 88 Am. Dec. 684.

"Ordinary neglect" is said to be such neglect as would not be suffered by men of common prudence and discretion. Where a bank receives from a customer bonds and other securities as collateral security for loans and discounts, the bank is not a gratuitous bailee, but is liable for the want of ordinary and reasonable care in the custody of such securities. Ouderkick v. Central Nat. Bank, 119 N. Y. 268, 271, 23 N. E. 875.

"Ordinary neglect" is understood to be the omission of care which every man of good prudence takes for his own concerns. The directors of a corporation are bound to exercise such care in regard to the corporation property. Scott v. Depeyster (N. Y.) 1 Edw. Ch. 513, 543.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE.

Ordinary negligence is the want of such care and diligence as reasonably prudent men generally exercise. Fordyce v. Culver, 22 S. W. 237, 239, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 569.

Ordinary negligence is that absence or want of that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their own affairs. Sweeney v. Merrill, 16 Pac. 454, 38 Kan. 216, 5 Am. St. Rep. 734; Dreher v. Town of Fitchburg, 22 Wis. 675, 677, 99 Am. Dec. 91. It is the want of such care as the great mass or the majority of mankind observe in the transactions of human life. Dreher v. Town of Fitchburg, 22 Wis. 675, 677, 99 Am. Dec. 91.

Ordinary negligence is the want of that diligence which the generality of mankind use in their own concerns. McGrath v. Hudson River R. Co., 19 How. Prac. 211, 220 (quoting Jones, Ballm. 22); Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288, 291.

Ordinary or common negligence is the want of that degree of care which ordinarily prudent men would ordinarily exercise under like circumstances. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Henry, 14 Pac. 1, 3, 36 Kan. 535; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 30 Pac. 462, 467, 49 Kan. 460.

Ordinary negligence is a disregard of those rules of conduct that a man of ordinary prudence would have followed. Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 87, 43, 66 N. W. 671, 673.

Ordinary negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care, or, in other words, that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances, although the party has exercised some care, and it may be only slightly less than ordinary care. Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 24 Pac. 497, 499, 44 Kan. 384.

Ordinary negligence is the want of such care and diligence as reasonably prudent men generally, in regard to the subject-matter of inquiry, under similar circumstances, would use to prevent or avoid the injury complained of. Toncray v. Dodge County, 51 N. W. 235, 237, 33 Neb. 802.

Ordinary negligence, as used in an action for a negligent destruction of the property of another, is want of such care and diligence as reasonably prudent men generally, in regard to the subject-matter of inquiry, under such circumstances as those under consideration, would have used to prevent or avoid the injury complained of. Toncray v. Dodge County, 51 N. W. 235, 237, 33 Neb. 802.

Where there is a want of such care as persons of ordinary prudence observe in the performance of duty, the same has been designated by this court as "ordinary negligence"; and that includes not only mere inadvertence or inattention to duty, resulting in an injury to another, but also a want of the means or capacity to prevent such injury when the same is known to be imminent. Lockwood v. Belle City St. Ry. Co., 65 N. W. 866, 871, 92 Wis. 97.

"Ordinary negligence" is the want of ordinary care or of the degree of diligence which men in general exert in respect to their own concerns. What constitutes ordinary care in respect to property depends upon the value, character, and situation of the property in question; the question in each case being what care would usually be exercised by men of ordinary prudence in respect to property of the same kind, and similarly situated. Ward v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 29 Wis. 144, 148.

Ordinary care is the opposite of ordinary negligence. There can be negligence less than ordinary negligence. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Bridges, 17 S. E. 645, 647, 92 Ga. 399.

It was not improper to use the term "ordinary negligence" in an instruction that plaintiff, suing for personal injuries, must establish negligence on the part of the defendant, and that he did not contribute to the negligence by his own ordinary negligence. In 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 86, the term "ordinary negligence" is treated as equivalent of "want of ordinary care," and, when used in that sense, it is not improper, although perhaps not the best means of expressing the thought intended to be conveyed. Kerns v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 62 N. W. 692, 693, 94 Iowa, 121.

Ordinary negligence is the absence of ordinary care. The attempt to distinguish different degrees of negligence has been much criticised, but it is said that the expression "ordinary negligence" in a charge is not misleading. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 33 N. E. 408, 405, 50 Ohio St. 135.

Ordinary negligence consists in the want of ordinary care and diligence. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 2784; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5111; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 80 Pac. 462, 467, 49 Kan. 460; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Bollins, 5 Kan. 167, 180; Whiting v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 37 N. W. 222, 224, 5 Dak. 90; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Johnson, 103 Ill. 512; Thackston v. Port Royal & W. C. Ry. Co., 18 S. E. 177, 178, 40 S. C. 80. Ordinary negligence is a want of ordinary care. Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 24 Pac. 497, 499, 44 Kan. 384.

Gross and slight negligence distinguished.

"Sir Wm. Jones distinguishes between ordinary negligence, gross negligence, and slight negligence thus: 'Ordinary neglect is the omission of that care which every man of common prudence and capable of governing a family takes of his own concerns. Gross neglect is the want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever, takes of his own property. And slight neglect is the omission of that diligence which all circumspect and thoughtful persons use in securing their own goods and chattels.' And Mr. Justice Story gives, in substance, the same definition of these terms: 'Ordinary negligence may be defined to be the want of ordinary diligence; gross negligence, to be the want of slight diligence; and slight negligence, to be the want of great diligence.' Story, Merchants, § 17." French v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co., *43 N. Y. (4 Keyes) 108, 113. See, also, Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 438, 442, 57 Am. Dec. 534.

Strictly speaking, the expressions "gross negligence" and "ordinary negligence" are indicative rather of the degree of care and diligence which is due from a party, and which he fails to perform, than the amount of inattention, carelessness, or stupidity which he exhibits. If very little care is due from him, and he fails to perform that little, it is called "gross negligence." If very great care is required, and he fails to come up to the mark, it is called "slight negligence." And if ordinary care is due, such as a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs, failure to bestow that amount of care is called "ordinary negligence." In each case the negligence, whatever epithet we give it, is failure to give and bestow the care which the situation demands; and hence it is more strictly accurate, perhaps, to call it simply "negligence," and this seems to be the tendency of modern authority. Briggs v. Spaulding, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 931, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. Ed. 662.

In speaking of an alleged legal distinction between gross and ordinary negligence, the court observes that, strictly speaking, these expressions are indicative rather of the degree of care and diligence which is due from a party, and which he fails to perform, than of the amount of inattention, carelessness, and stupidity which he exhibits, and therefore, by whatever name it may be called, it is under such name a failure to bestow the care and skill which the situation demands, and hence it is more strictly accurate, perhaps, to call it simply negligence. Atchison N. R. Co. v. Washburn, 5 Neb. 117, 120.

ORDINARY OBSERVATION.

"Ordinary observation," as used in the statement that the statute prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons is violated by the carrying of such a weapon where it cannot be seen by ordinary observation, is hardly capable of an exact definition, meaning all the varying conditions under which a pistol may be carried, but it may be said that the meaning generally is that the weapon must be open to the ordinary observation of those who come in contact with the person carrying it. In the usual and ordinary associations of life, if a person with a pistol on his person approach another, or pass him on the street or public highway, or is otherwise thrown with the other in social contact, and has the pistol on his person, so that it may be seen without inspection or examination of his person for that purpose, and from ordinary observation, as persons usually observe each other, then the pistol is not concealed; but if, on the other hand, the pistol is carried on the person under such conditions that it is hidden from view and from the observation of persons coming in contact with the person carrying it, casually observing his person, there is concealment. Driggers v. State, 26 South. 512, 513, 123 Ala. 46.

ORDINARY PLACE.

The words "ordinary place," in a statute prohibiting gambling in an ordinary race field or any other public place, described a tavern. Wortham v. Commonwealth (Va.) 5 Rand. 669-675.

ORDINARY PRECAUTIONS.

The term "ordinary precautions," in the meaning of a covenant in a coal lease by which the lessor agrees to protect the lessee from damages resulting from mining, providing the lessee takes all ordinary precautions usually taken in mining and removing coal, includes the requirement that the lessee give proper support to the overlying surface. Youghiogheny River Coal Co. v. Hopkins, 48 Atl. 19, 20, 198 Pa. 343.

ORDINARY PROCEEDING.

An attachment is not an ordinary proceeding in the action, but an extraordinary and collateral proceeding, within the meaning of a statute requiring notice of all ordinary proceedings in the action. Schundt v. Calm, 8 Alb. Law J. 889.

ORDINARY PROCESS OF LAW.

The phrase "ordinary process of law," found in the statute providing that the cost of street work shall be assessed, and the bill be delivered to the contractor, who shall proceed to collect the same by ordinary process of law, does not mean ordinary personal judgment and execution, but such process as is adapted to enforce a lien or specific charge on the property specially assessed. Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525, 529.

ORDINARY PRUDENCE.

"Ordinary prudence" means such care and prudence as the average prudent man would exercise under like surroundings and in the like situation. Fassett v. Town of Roxburg, 55 Vt. 552, 556.

The expression "ordinary prudence and caution," as used in an instruction that the degree of care required under certain circumstances is such care as men of ordinary prudence and caution would have exercised under similar circumstances, is but a synonym for "ordinary care." Blyth v. Proprietors of Birmingham Waterworks Co., 11 Exch. 781.

In marine insurance it is held that a ship is a total loss when she has sustained such extensive damage that it would not be reasonably practicable to repair her. The ordinary measure of prudence which the courts have adopted is this: If the ship, when repaired, will not be worth the sum which it would be necessary to expend upon her, the repairs are, practically speaking, impossible, and it is a case of total loss. The above doctrine applied to a case of fire insurance on a building, in order to determine whether or not there was a total loss thereof. Corbett v. Spring Garden Ins. Co., 50 N. E. 282, 283, 155 N. Y. 889, 41 L. R. A. 818.

ORDINARY PURCHASER.

The term "ordinary purchaser," within the rule that the test of infringement of a patent is whether ordinary purchasers would be likely to mistake the one design for the other, does not mean a dealer who is presumably informed as to the various designs, and their resemblances and differences, but is applicable to the general purchasing public who buy the article under the ordinary conditions under which such purchases are ordinarily made. Britton v. White Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 61 Fed. 93, 98.

ORDINARY PURPOSES.

In a contract to furnish all gas for, ordinary purposes connected with the house, "ordinary purposes" will be held to include the use of gas for gas range, fireplace, and street lamps in front of the house. Graves v. Key City Gas Co., 61 N. W. 937, 938, 93 Iowa, 470.

ORDINARY RAINFALL.

In an action against a railroad company for damages occasioned by water claimed to have been caused by the negligence of the company in failing to provide sufficient culverts, the court submitted to the jury the question whether the defendant maintained the tracks or embankments of its railway in such condition as to prevent the passage of such amount of surface water as is caused by the ordinary rainfall of this country, and said: "By the 'ordinary rainfall' and the 'ordinary flow of surface water' I mean such fall of rain as is liable to occur in the ordinary course of nature in this climate and country, and such flow of surface water as would be caused thereby." This instruction was held to be correct. Cornish v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 49 Iowa, 378, 380.

Ordinary rainfalls are such as are not unprecedented and extraordinary, and hence floods and freshets which habitually occur, though at irregular and infrequent intervals, are not extraordinary or unprecedented. Cairo, V. & C. R. Co. v. Brevoort (U. S.) 62 Fed. 129, 133, 25 L. R. A. 527.

ORDINARY REPAIRS.

All buildings are subject, more or less, to natural and unavoidable decay; and "ordinary repairs," when used in reference to buildings, means expenses reasonably incurred in keeping the property in good condition and order. Abell v. Brady, 28 Atl. 817, 820, 79 Md. 94.

The term "ordinary repairs," in the charter of a city providing that the expense of all new street work or improvements or alterations not in the nature of ordinary repairs shall be assessed and be a lien upon the property benefited, naturally suggests to the mind the idea that only such work as would be necessary to preserve the highway in its usual condition, with no material change in its grade, was intended. It does not apply to the grading of an avenue. Brenn v. City of Troy (N. Y.) 60 Barb. 417, 421.

The difference between work upon highways, which is spoken of as ordinary and extraordinary in Rev. St. 1881, § 5069, providing that road superintendents shall "in certain months put all the roads in their respective townships in good, ordinary repair, and then, with such other means as may be in their hands, proceed to do work denominated extraordinary, and, by judicious ditching, draining, and making embankments, and grading, construct smooth roads, etc., is more in degree than in character; and hence work upon a highway is not of an extraordinary character simply because, in doing it, drains, etc., may be constructed. Clark Civil Tp. v. Brookshire, 16 N. E. 132, 135, 114 Ind. 437.

ORDINARY RISKS.

The ordinary risks of a particular business are those which are a part of the ordinary method of conducting that business, even though they may be fairly called extraordinary with reference to a different business, or a different department of the same business. If the business is essentially attended with extraordinary dangers, these are among the risks assumed. Southern Pac. Co. v. Winton (Tex.) 66 S. W. 447, 482, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 503 (citing Joyce v. Worcester, 140 Mass. 245, 4 N. E. 565); Tucker v. Northern Terminal Co., 68 Pac. 428, 429, 41 Or. 52. The general rule is that risks of a service shall not be increased or caused by the employer's negligence, but risks not increased or caused by the employer's negligence are risks of service which the employé assumes. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cochrane (Tex.) 71 S. W. 41, 42 (citing Misouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hamilton [Tex.] 30 S. W. 679).

ORDINARY SERVICE.

"Ordinary service" is defined by the mechanics' lien law of New Jersey as service to be made by the sheriff of any county, in case the defendant can be found in the state, in the manner that other writs of summons are served. Smith v. Collopy, 55 Atl. 805, 807, 69 N. J. Law, 385.

ORDINARY SKILL.

The ordinary skill which a person contracting to play baseball contracts to be possessed of is that degree which men engaged in that particular art usually employ, not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities. Baltimore Baseball Club & Exhibition Co. v. Pickett, 23 Atl. 279, 280, 78 Md. 375, 22 L. R. A. 690, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304 (citing Waugh v. Shunk, 20 Pa. 180, 133).

"Ordinary skill" means that degree which men engaged in that particular art usually employ, not that which belongs to a few men only, of extraordinary endowments and capacities. 1 Bell, Comm. 453. The degree of skill which is required rises in proportion to the value, the delicacy, and the difficulty of the operation. The want of ordinary skill is ordinary negligence. Vaugh v. Shunk, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 180, 132.

As required of physician.

The ordinary skill required of a physician and surgeon is the ordinary skill which a surgeon would, under the circumstances of the case, reasonably use in treating the case. Boon v. Murphy, 12 S. E. 1032, 1034, 108 N. O. 187.

Physicians and surgeons are required to use "ordinary skill and diligence"—only the average of that possessed by the profession as a body, and not by the thoroughly educated only, having regard to the improvements and the advanced state of the profession at time of the treatment. Peck v. Hutchinson, 55 N. W. 511, 513, 83 Iowa, 320.

"Ordinary skill," within the meaning of the rule that a physician or surgeon is only required to exercise ordinary care and skill, means such degree of skill as is commonly possessed by men engaged in the same profession. He is not accountable for a want of the highest degree of skill. And determining whether he possesses ordinary skill, regard must be had to the advanced state of the profession at the time. Heath v. Glisan, 3 Or. 64, 65.

ORDINARY STAGE OF WATER.

The term "ordinary stage of water" in a stream includes its stage or level in such rises or high water as are usual, ordinary, and reasonably to be anticipated, but does not include its stage or level in such extraordinary freshets as cannot reasonably be anticipated at particular periods of the year. Ames v. Cannon River Mfg. Co., 6 N. W. 787, 788, 27 Minn. 245.

A distinction is taken between the ordinary stage of water and its ordinary stage at particular periods. The former is without meaning, unless it means the average stage, for there is no ordinary stage of any stream in this country for the year around. A man may make his dam according to the ordinary, but not according to the average stage of the stream. But what is the ordinary stage depends upon the seasons and weather. The ordinary stage in ordinary rainy seasons is one thing, and in ordinary dry seasons is another. The ordinary stage in March is high; in August, low. The ordinary rise of streams is a matter which every one is expected to provide against, because with ordinary care he can calculate upon them. McCoy v. Danley, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 85-91, 57 Am. Dec. 680.

ORDINARY STOCK.

"Ordinary stock," as used in a contract requiring the defendant to cultivate and maintain a hedge in a skillful manner until the same shall be sufficient to turn ordinary stock, means such stock as is permitted by law to run at large. Usher v. Hiatt, 21 Kan. 548, 550.

Stock that is ordinary in respect to fences must be such as is not extraordinarily unruly or breachy, and vice versa. Albright v. Bruner, 14 Ill. App. (14 Bradw.) 819, 822.

In an action to recover damages occasioned by defendant's cattle breaking into plaintiff's pasture, the plaintiff alleged that his pasture was inclosed "with a good and sufficient fence, capable of preventing the entry of all ordinary cattle, of whatever class, age, or kind." In answer to the objection that the court should have explained to the jury what was meant by "ordinary cattle," in the charge, the court said: "We think any attempted definition of this term would have had a greater tendency to confuse than enlighten an ordinary jury. At any rate, appellee should have requested a proper definition, if it desired one given, and this it failed to do in its requested special charge, in which this term was said to mean cattle not known to the owner to be diseased, vicious, or breachy. Knowledge on the part of the owner of his cow's condition or breachy nature is not necessary to take her out of the ordinary, and to put into the extraordinary, class. Clarendon Land, Investment & Agency Co. v. McClelland (Tex.) 81 N. W. 1088, 1089.

ORDINARY TIDES.

A rule that the right of the crown to the seashore is limited by the ordinary tides limits the seashore to the line reached by the average of medium high tides between the spring and neap tides in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the whole year. In one sense the highest spring tides are ordinary—that is, they occur in the natural order of things; but it is not the sense in which the word "ordinary" is used when designating the extent of the crown right to the shore. Attorney General v. Chambers, 27 Eng. Law & Eq. 242, 248.

ORDINARY USE.

A diversion of water for irrigation is not an ordinary use by a riparian owner, and so can only be exercised reasonably and with proper regard to the right of other proprietors to apply water to the same purposes. Low v. Schaffer, 33 Pac. 678, 680, 24 Or. 239.

The ordinary uses of the streets to which the authority of municipal corporations is limited when a general control of the streets is vested in them includes such modes and means of passage upon and over the streets as are usual in cities, and such additional uses as the health and convenience of the city, in view of the extent of its population, may require, as the construction of sewers, the laying down of gas and water pipes, the grading and paving of streets, and the like. Denver Circle R. Co. v. Nestor, 15 Pac. 714, 722, 10 Colo. 408.

While one riparian proprietor cannot wholly abstract or divert a water course, and thereby deprive a lower proprietor of a quality of his property, he has a right to the reasonable and beneficial use of a running stream, but what is a reasonable use depends upon the nature of each case. So, for instance, it will not be an unreasonable use to take a quantity of water from a large running stream for agricultural or manufacturing purposes, where such taking will cause no sensible or practical diminution of the water in a stream, while the taking of the same quantity from a small running brook will amount to an unreasonable use. Elliot v. Fitchburg R. Co., 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 191, 194, 57 Am. Dec. 88.

ORDINARY WEAR AND TEAR.

"Ordinary wear and tear," as used in a stipulation that a lessor shall not be liable for ordinary wear and tear, includes any usual deterioration from the use of the premises during the term. Waddell v. De Jet, 28 South. 487, 488, 76 Miss. 104.

Under a lease by which the lessee agreed to deliver up the premises in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear excepted, it is held that barking and plowing up young apple trees by cultivating a crop among them is not within the term "ordinary wear and tear." Thompson v. Cummings, 89 Mo. App. 537, 539.

ORDINARY WORK.

In construing an Alabama statute prohibiting ordinary or servile work on Sunday, it was said in O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 467, 468, 39 Am. Dec. 886, that the term "ordinary" is equivalent to common or usual work or employment, and, beyond all doubt, embraces within its ample range the sale of a horse or any other chattel, whether the sale be public or private; whether the parties engaged in it, or either of them, were in the prosecution of their ordinary employment or not. Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386-390.

ORDINARY YEARLY TAXES.

The phrase "ordinary yearly taxes," as used in a lease executed in 1848, before the establishment of the Croton department under the Croton water acts, but after the passage of the act for supplying the city of New York with pure and wholesome water, providing that the lessee should pay the ordinary yearly taxes, includes the annual water rent charged on the premises, according to the rates established by the Croton department. Garner v. Hannah, 18 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 262, 266.

ORDINARILY.

"Ordinarily," as used in a statute providing that intention to kill will be punished whenever the means used are such as would ordinarily result in the commission of the crime, means according to established order; methodical; regular; customary, as the ordinary forms of law or justice; common; usual. Shaw v. State, 81 S. W. 861-864, 84 Tex. Cr. R. 435 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The word "ordinarily" means specific sums paid annually or at other state periods for the right to use a patented device, whether it is used much or little, or not at all. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. American Bell Telephone Co. (U. S.) 125 Fed. 342, 348, 60 C. O. A. 220.

ORDINARILY CAUTIOUS PERSON.

The words "reasonable person" and the words "ordinarily cautious person" are used synonymously in describing the degree of care that should be exercised in instituting criminal proceedings, to avoid the charge of malicious prosecution. Billingsley v. Maas, 67 N. W. 49, 50, 98 Wis. 176.

ORDINARILY PRUDENT MAN.

The expression "ordinarily prudent man," without qualification, suggests merely the care that should be bestowed in cases of ordinary danger. It is an inappropriate expression where the danger is extraordinary, unless explained and applied to the subject. Diamond v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 18 Pac. 367, 371, 6 Mont. 580.

ORDONNANCE.

"Ordonnance" is understood to be, in general, a compilation of prize law, as recognized among civilized nations. Ooolidge v. Inglee, 18 Mass. 26, 43.

ORE.

See "Iron Ore."
Mineral distinguished, see "Mineral."

Webster defines the noun "ore" as the compound of a metal and some other substance, as oxygen, sulphur, or arsenic, called its "mineralizer," by which its properties are disguised or lost. Marvel v. Merritt, 6 Sup. Ct. 207, 208, 116 U. S. 11, 29 L. Ed. 550.

Granite.

The word "ore" has a definite signification, and designates a compound of metal and other substances. Granite, neither in a popular nor scientific sense, is a mineral ore. Armstrong v. Lake Champlain Granite Co., 42 N. E. 186, 187, 147 N. Y. 495, 49 Am. St. Rep. 683.

Waste from zinc mine.

Ore is a compound of metal and some other substance, but the term will not apply to waste from a zinc mine containing only about 7 per cent. of zinc ore, which could not be extracted profitably, though the waste was valuable for roads and making artificial stone. Doster v. Friedensville Zinc Co., 21 Atl. 251, 252, 140 Pa. 147.

ORE LEAVE.

"Ore leave" is a term used to designate the right to dig and take ore." Ege v. Kille, 84 Pa. 383, 340; Appeal of Fulmer, 18 Atl. 493, 494, 128 Pa. 24, 15 Am. St. Rep. 682.

OREGON.

As Indian Country, see "Indian Country."

ORGAN.

"An organ is defined to be an instrument or medium by which an action is performed or an object accomplished." Commonwealth v. Mann Co., 24 Atl. 601, 602, 150 Pa. 64.

ORGANIC.

When examining a body of systematic law in order to determine whether certain characteristics are substantial or merely accidental, language is used according to the subject-matter; and in such a connection the word "organic" does not import a physical, moral, or mathematical necessity, but rather a scientific fitness and congruity, having regard to inveterate usage, historical development, and the nature of legal things. Flanigan v. Guggenheim Smelting Co., 44 Atl. 762, 764, 68 N. J. Law, 647.

ORGANIC ACT.

The term "organic acts" is used to designate acts of Congress conferring powers of government upon the territories. In re Lane, 10 Sup. Ct. 760, 761, 135 U. S. 443, 34 L. Ed. 219.

ORGANIC LAW.

"Organic law" is a term usually applied to constitutional law only, and it imports a high degree of authority. City of St. Louis v. Dorr, 46 S. W. 976, 978, 145 Mo. 466, 42 L. R. A. 686, 68 Am. St. Rep. 575.

The organic law of a territory takes the place of a Constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the territorial authorities, but Congress is supreme, and, for the purposes of this department of its governmental authority, has all the powers of the people of the United States, except such as have been expressly or by implication reserved by the prohibitions of the Constitution. First Nat. Bank v. Yankton County, 101 U. S. 129-133, 25 L. Ed. 1049.

The organic law is the Constitution of the United States and of this state, and is altogether written. Other written laws are denominated "statutes." Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 784.

ORGANIZE.

See "Duly Organized."

Gen. St. 1878, c. 86, § 1, providing that every school district shall be presumed to have been legally organized when it shall have exercised the franchises and privileges of the district for the term of one year, relates to the establishment or formation of the district, and not merely to the action of the voters in electing school officers. The words "establish," "create," "form" and "organize" are used interchangeably, and are practically synonymous. The word "organization" is clearly used in the sense of formation, and includes everything necessary to the creation of a district or bringing it into existence. State v. School Dist. No. 152 of Blue Earth County, 55 N. W. 1122, 54 Minn. 218.

"Organize" means to form with suitable organs. The word, in some of its forms, is frequently used in the constitution and laws of the state, and as so used has no doubtful or ambiguous meaning. To organize a certain territory into a municipal corporation is a very different thing from that of extending the limits of an organized city over new territory, and a statute which provides that "no city, town, or village shall be organized within this state, adjacent to or within two miles of the limits of any city of the first, second, or third class, unless such city be in a different county," does not apply to or prevent the extension of the limits of a city of the fourth class to within less than two miles of the limits of a city of the first class. Warren v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co., 115 Mo. 572, 577, 22 S. W. 490, 491.

A charitable bequest to an institution of learning to be organized at the end of a certain number of years contemplates that the institution is to be incorporated. Dodge v. Williams, 50 N. W. 1103, 1107, 46 Wis. 70.

The term "organized," as used in the South Dakota school law, providing for the organization of school districts and school boards, means the same as the word "incorporated," in the South Dakota incorporation act (Laws 1890, c. 87, art. 1), providing that "any city now existing in the state under a special charter may become incorporated in the manner following." State v. Power, 59 N. W. 1090, 1091, 5 S. D. 627.

Organizing a county is the vesting the people of such territory with corporate rights and powers. First Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Board of Beltrami County Com'rs, 79 N. W. 591, 77 Minn. 43.

Corporations.

The word "organize," as used in railroad and other charters, ordinarily signifies the choice and qualification of all necessary officers for the transaction of the business of the corporation. New Haven & D. R. Co. v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 56, 66.

"Organize" or "organization," as used in reference to corporations, has a well-understood meaning, which is the election of officers, providing for the subscription and payment of the capital stock, the adoption of by-laws, and such other steps as are necessary to endow the legal entity with the capacity to transact the legitimate business for which it was created. Walton v. Oliver, 30 Pac. 172, 173, 49 Kan. 107, 33 Am. St. Rep. 355; Topeka Bridge Co. v. Cummings, 3 Kan. 55, 77; Hunt v. Kansas & M. Bridge Co., 11 Kan. 412, 439; Aspen Water & Light Co. v. City of Aspen, 37 Pac. 723, 730, 5 Colo. App. 12; Nemaha Coal & Mining Co. v. Settle, 38 Pac. 483, 484, 54 Kan. 424.

The word "organized," in Comp. St. c. 147, § 85, providing that any act of incorporation for a dividend paying corporation "shall become null, and taken to be wholly void, at the expiration of three years from and after the passage of such act, unless the grantees or corporators in the act named, * * * shall have, within said time, organized as a company under it, and entered in good faith upon the proper business of the corporation," means organized under color of a charter, with a bona fide purpose of acting under and according to the charter. Ossipee Hosiery & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Canney, 54 N. H. 295, 313.

"Organized," as used in a contract for the sale of corporate shares, payable "when the corporation shall be organized," should be construed to mean that the subscribers promised to become stockholders and pay their subscriptions in and to a corporation de jure, and not a mere corporation de facto; and therefore, where the corporation was never legally organized by a filing of the articles in the office of the county clerk as required, no liability on the subscription accrued. Capps v. Hastings Prospecting Co.,

Under a statute providing that, until articles of incorporation should be recorded, the corporation should transact no business except its own organization, it is held that the term "organization" means simply the process of forming and arranging into suitable disposition the parties who are to act together in, and defining the objects of, the compound body, and that this process, even when complete in all its parts, does not confer a franchise either valid or defective, but, on the contrary, it is only the act of the individuals, and something else must be done to secure the corporate franchise. Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Refining Co., 4 Neb. 416, 421.

The term "organized," when used in reference to the organization of an incorporation, applies to the act of the officers in being appointed and taking upon themselves the burden of their offices. It is then furnished with organs endowed with capacity for the functions of life, and qualified for the exercise of its appropriate functions. This is the sense in which the word "organized" is used in statutes providing for the incorporation of companies for various purposes. Commonwealth v. Wm. Mann Co., 24 Atl. 601, 602, 150 Pa. 64.

Insurance company.

Under Laws 1881, p. 279, requiring insurance companies, as a condition of doing business in the state, to make a certain deposit with the Michigan State Treasurer, or with certain named officers of the state where the company is organized, a British or other foreign company cannot be considered as organized in another state, where it is merely licensed to do business, so as to meet the requirements of the statute by a deposit made in such other state. Employers' Liability Assur. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 81 N. W. 542, 543, 64 Mich. 614.

Railroads.

Under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, granting the right of way over public lands to any duly organized railroad company which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation and due proof of its organization, when a railroad company organized under a territorial statute requiring its route to be set out in some detail in its articles of incorporation subsequently changes its route, by filing supplemental articles, so as to cross certain public lands, it is "organized" for the purpose of building a road over such lands only from the date of the supplemental articles, and can only acquire a right of way on furnishing due proof, in the manner specified, of such organization. Washington & I. R. Co. v. Coeur D'Alene R. & Nav. Co. (U. S.) 52 Fed. 765, 766.

Schools.

"Organization" is defined as an arrangement of parties—the act of organizing, as the organization of a government, or of a railroad or other corporation—and as used in reference to the organization of a school, signifies the bringing together, the collecting, the placing in, the committing of boys or other inmates to, a school; and hence, the purpose of Gen. St. 1889, par. 6516, providing for the committing of boys under the age of 16 to a reform school by courts of record, is sufficiently expressed in its title, as "an act for the organization and management of the State Reform School." In re Sanders, 36 Pac. 343, 349, 53 Kan. 191, 23 L. R. A. 608.

ORGANIZATION.

Organization implies a recognition of order and an obedience to duly constituted authority. Thus members of a political organization will be held to be bound by the action of the convention. In re Redmond, 25 N. Y. Supp. 881, 884, 5 Misc. Rep. 369.

ORGANIZATION TAX.

A corporation organization tax is in the nature of a license fee for the right to become a corporation. People v. Knight, 67 N. E. 65, 68, 174 N. Y. 476, 63 L. R. A. 87.

ORGANIZED COUNTY.

Const. art. 11, § 1, providing that all laws changing county lines in a county already organized shall be submitted to the electors of the county, means a county which is organized in fact, and has its lawful officers, legal machinery, and means for carrying out the powers and performing the duties pertaining to it as a quasi municipal corporation. In re Section No. 6, 68 N. W. 823, 825, 66 Minn. 32.

Established county distinguished.

The distinction between organized counties and established counties recognized, under the Constitution, in the statutes of Minnesota, is that the establishing of a county is the setting apart of territory to be in future organized as political community or quasi corporation for political purposes, while the organizing is vesting the people of such territory with such corporate rights and powers. State v. Parker, 25 Minn. 215, 219.

ORGANIZED LABOR.

Organized labor is organized capital. It is capital consisting of brains and muscle. Ames v. Union Pac. R. Co. (U. S.) 62 Fed. 7, 14.

ORGANIZED SCHOOL DISTRICT.

"Organized," as used in Laws 1898, c. 216, § 1, abolishing organized school districts, implies a school district organized and specially created by legislative act, with special powers made a part of its organization, or at least special powers coeval with its organization, and not one organized by the town. School Dist. No. 1 in Gorham v. Deering, 40 Atl. 541, 542, 91 Me. 516.

ORGANIZED VILLAGE.

The words "organized or incorporated," in Laws 1885, c. 185, § 2, providing that "any village which has been or shall be organized or incorporated under the general statutes shall be governed according to the provisions of this chapter, and to the end that uniformity of village government and equal privileges to all may be secured," should be liberally construed, so as to include all villages governed by the provisions of the general law, without regard to how they were first incorporated or brought into being. Flynn v. Little Falls Electric & Water Co., 78 N. W. 106, 74 Minn. 180.

ORIGINAL.

"Original" means pertaining to the beginning or origin; the first or primitive form of a thing." Commonwealth v. Schollenberger, 27 Atl. 80, 83, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L. R. A. 155, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32; Haley v. State, 60 N. W. 962, 968, 42 Neb. 556, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718; State v. Southard, 29 S. W. 751, 60 Ark. 247.

The term "original," as used in the chapters relating to railroads and street railways, as applied to a street railway location in a city or town, means the first location granted to the company in such city or town. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 978, c. 111, § 1.

ORIGINAL AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

Const. art. 4, § 4, provides that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall not extend to civil actions at law for the recovery of money, when the original amount in controversy does not exceed $200. Held, that the word "original" is a word of plain import, meaning the amount originally in controversy or the amount sued for, and hence the appellate jurisdiction is governed by such amount, and not by that recovered. Bleeker v. Satsop R. Co., 27 Pac. 1078, 1074, 8 Wash. 77.

ORIGINAL ATTACHMENT.

An original attachment is a process given by statute to compel a defendant to appear. It is a continuation of a distringas—a common-law process, and a garnishment, according to the custom of London. Under the statutes of North Carolina, carpenters' tools may be seized under an original attachment. Martindale v. Whitehead, 46 N. C. 64.

ORIGINAL BILL.

An original bill is one which relates to some matter not before litigated in the court by the same persons, and standing in the same interests. Longworth v. Sturges, 4 Ohio St. 690, 707; Butler v. Cunningham (N. Y.) 1 Barb. 85, 87.

A bill brought for the purpose of cross-litigation, or of suspending or reversing the same decree or order of court, or of obtaining the benefit of the former decree, is in the nature of an original bill. Longworth v. Sturges, 4 Ohio St. 690, 708.

Where a bill does not relate to some matter already litigated in the same court by the same persons, and which is not either in addition to, or a continuance of, the original suit, it is an original bill, and not an ancillary one, and, in order to confer jurisdiction on the federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, the parties must be citizens of different states. Christmas v. Russell, 81 U. S. (14 Wall.) 69, 20 L. Ed. 762.

The terms "original bill" and "bills in the nature of an original bill" are used by the judges and text-writers in a restricted sense, and refer to the character of the plea, rather than that of the action or proceeding to which they apply. There is considerable contrariety of opinion on the question whether bills of review and bills of impeachment on the ground of fraud are or are not original bills. In Willard, Eq. Jur. 163, such bills are treated as strictly original bills, while in Story, Eq. Pl., they are classed with those bills which are for the purpose of cross-litigation, or for the purpose of securing a reversal of some decree or order of the court, or carrying it into effect, and therefore are not original bills. Smithson v. Smithson, 56 N. W. 300, 302, 37 Neb. 535, 40 Am. St. Rep. 504.

ORIGINAL BILL IN THE NATURE OF A BILL OF REVIEW.

Where the object of a bill is to impeach a final decree of an equity court, rendered at a former term, for alleged fraud, it is commonly called an "original bill in the nature of a bill of review." McDonald v. Pearson, 21 South. 584, 586, 114 Ala. 680.

ORIGINAL BILL IN THE NATURE OF A SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

"An original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill is properly applicable when new parties with new interests arising from events since the institution of the suit are to be brought before the court, the latter being to all intents and purposes the commencement of a new suit, which, nevertheless, may in its consequences draw to itself the advantage of the proceedings on the former bill." Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 406, 411.

An original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill "embraces in some degree the qualities of an original bill and a supplemental bill. The foundation of a bill of this description is an event occurring after the commencement of a suit in a court of equity, which event is of such a nature that the suit cannot be continued as to all the parties by a mere supplemental bill, and therefore, in regard to those parties, it partakes of the character of an original bill. If the event determines the interest of one of several defendants, and his interest becomes vested in another by a title not derived from the former, as in the case of a determination of an estate for life and the vesting of a subsequent remainder, the remainderman must be brought in by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill, which, as to him, is an original bill, while as to the other defendants it is supplemental." Butler v. Cunningham (N. Y.) 1 Barb. 85, 87.

ORIGINAL CAPITAL STOCK.

The term "original capital stock," as used in Act Feb. 10, 1869, providing, in section 4, that, whenever it is ascertained that a toll road or turnpike pays a greater dividend than 10 per cent. per annum upon the original capital stock, the tolls are to be reduced until it meets 10 per cent. only upon its stock, means the amount of stock subscribed, or issued and sold, which has been actually expended for the accomplishment of the object of the road's charter; that is, the construction of the road. Bank Lick Turnpike Co. v. Phelps, 81 Ky. 613, 615.

ORIGINAL CONSTRUCTION.

"Original construction," as used with regard to railroads, has, as distinguished from "repairs," a technical meaning. It is that construction of bridges, grades, culverts, rails, ties, docks, etc., that is necessary to be done before the road can be open, or before they can be occupied or used; not such structures as are intended to replace old and worn-out counterparts. Cleveland, C. & S. Ry. Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co. (U. S.) 86 Fed. 73, 76.

Paving a street with fire-clay brick in place of a macadamized road laid some 30 years before was an "original construction," within St. § 3572, providing that an original construction of any street shall be made at the cost of the abutting owners. City of Catlettsburg v. Self (Ky.) 74 S. W. 1064, 1065.

ORIGINAL CONTRACTOR.

"Original contractor," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that every "original contractor" claiming the benefit of the mechanic's lien must file his claim within 60 days after the completion of the work, includes a person who has contracted to paper and decorate several rooms in a dwelling house, and to furnish the labor and material therefor, and to receive what the labor and material are reasonably worth, though no set price was agreed. La Grill v. Mallard, 27 Pac. 294, 90 Cal. 373.

Materialman.

The term "original contractors," as used in the law relative to mechanics' liens, includes a person furnishing material, particularly to the owner. J. H. Baxter Lumber Co. v. Nickell, 60 S. W. 450, 451, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 519; Colorado Iron Works v. Riekenberg, 88 Pac. 651, 652, 4 Idaho, 262; Lane & Bodley Co. v. Jones, 79 Ala. 156, 160; Hearne v. Chillicothe & B. R. Co., 53 Mo. 324, 325.

The term "original contractor," within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law, giving original contractors four months to file their lien, includes any person contracting with the owner to furnish materials for the building or improvement of premises, if there is no contractor intervening between them. Whiteselle v. Texas Loan Agency (Tex.) 27 S. W. 300, 312; Matthews v. Wagenhaeuser Brewing Ass'n, 19 S. W. 150, 151, 83 Tex. 604.

An "original contractor," within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law, means one contracting with the owner to labor or to furnish material. The term cannot be limited to those doing service by way of work, labor, or superintendence upon the building in question. Ambrose Mfg. Co. v. Gaper, 22 Mo. App. 397, 401.

Materialmen furnishing materials directly to an owner, to be used in the construction of a building, are not "original contractors" within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law. Should every person who furnishes materials to an owner be regarded as an original contractor, it would follow that every mechanic working on the building for the owner should be regarded as an original contractor, and this, as will be readily seen, would result in very serious complications in determining who are original contractors and who are subcontractors. Sparks v. Butte County Gravel Min. Co., 55 Cal. 389, 392; Innen v. Henderson, 45 Pac. 300, 301, 29 Or. 116.

Owner of tools.

Where the owner of certain tools rented them to the owners of a building, by whom they were used for the purpose of moving a house from elsewhere onto the lots belonging to him, the owner of such tools was an "original contractor" within the meaning of the statute, providing that an original contractor may file a statement for lien within four months. Burke v. Brown, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 80 S. W. 938.

ORIGINAL COST.

In a contract whereby A. agreed to deliver stock in a mining claim to B. at its "original cost," the amount of the stock to be of the value of a certain sum, the term "original cost" was intended by the parties to mean its cost to A. Magan v. Glasbey, 13 Pac. 480, 484, 5 Utah, 154.

The terms "original cost" and "present value" are not equivalent. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City (U. S.) 62 Fed. 853, 865, 10 C. C. A. 653, 27 L. R. A. 827. There are other elements beside cost of reproduction or replacement which affect present value, and, as applied to a waterworks about to be condemned, it is proper to consider what the existing system can be reproduced or replaced for, as having some tendency to show the present value. But there are two additional elements—one that it is a completed structure connected with buildings prepared for use, and the other that the company is a going concern. Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 54 Atl. 6, 18, 97 Me. 185, 60 L. R. A. 856.

"Original," as used in a contract of dissolution of a partnership, providing for an inventory of part of the stock at the original or wholesale cost thereof, does not mean the cost the firm paid for it. The use of the word "original" seems to mean something more, and requires a going behind the price paid by the firm to an earlier or original price. Prima facie, therefore, it would seem to mean the price when the goods were first, i. e., originally, bought for the purpose of being made part of the stock of the store, whether by the firm or by their predecessors in the business. This would seem to be the "original price" of the goods, considered as part of the stock to be inventoried, in reference to which the words were used in the writing. Holloway v. Frick, 24 Atl. 201, 202, 149 Pa. 178.

ORIGINAL DESIGNATION OF BENEFICIARIES.

The by-laws of a mutual benefit society, whose expressed object was "to aid and assist the widows and orphans of deceased members," provided that every applicant for membership should designate in his application the person or persons to whom, in the event of his death, the benefit should be paid; also that any member might change his beneficiary by sending to the secretary a written application, acknowledged before a notary, and surrendering his certificate; that, if such change was approved by the board of managers, the secretary should issue him a new certificate; and that no change of beneficiaries should be made in any other way. The by-laws also provided that the benefit should be paid to such person or persons as the deceased member may have designated, as the same shall appear on the books of the association, and, if no designation had been made, then to his legal heirs or devisees. A certificate of membership was issued to the deceased without his having designated any beneficiary. Subsequently he went to the office of the association and verbally designated to the secretary four of his children as beneficiaries, and requested the secretary to make or enter such designation. Thereupon the secretary, in his presence, entered or recorded, in the book of the association kept for that purpose, the names of the four children as the beneficiaries, and assured the member that this was all that was necessary to be done. This entry remained in the records of the association, without objection, until the death of the member, six years afterwards. In a controversy between the four children and the other heirs of the deceased as to who were entitled to the benefit, it was held that the act of the member was an "original designation" as distinguished from a "change" of beneficiaries. Hanson v. Minnesota Scandinavian Relief Ass'n, 60 N. W. 1001, 59 Minn. 123.

ORIGINAL ENTRIES.

See "Book of Original Entries."

ORIGINAL EVIDENCE.

Original evidence is an original writing or material object introduced in evidence. Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 682.

ORIGINAL GIFT.

A gift to the issue is substitutional if the share which the issue are to take is by a prior clause expressed to be given to the parent of such issue, and a gift to the issue is an original gift when the share which the issue are to take is not by a prior clause expressed to be given to the parent of such issue. Acken v. Osborn, 17 Atl. 767, 769, 45 N. J. Eq. 377.

ORIGINAL INDEBTEDNESS.

The term "original indebtedness," in a written receipt reciting the payment of certain money to apply on a contract if the balance due on such contract should be paid as therein provided, otherwise to be applied on the original indebtedness of the party making the payment, held to refer to claims existing before the making of the receipt. Foster v. McGraw, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 484, 469.

ORIGINAL INVENTOR.

"The term 'original inventor,' in patent law, is used to designate a pioneer in the art; one who evolves the original idea, and brings it to some successful, useful, and tangible result. Such a person is, by the law of patents, entitled to a broad and liberal construction of his claims, whereas an improver is only entitled to what he claims, and nothing more." Norton v. Jensen (U. S.) 90 Fed. 415, 422, 33 C. C. A. 141.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

The phrase "original jurisdiction," as used in Rev. St. art. 2, c. 69, § 3, as amended, limiting the jurisdiction of the district court, and conferring upon it original jurisdiction in certain cases, means jurisdiction to entertain cases in the first instance, as distinguished from appellate jurisdiction. Castner v. Chandler, 2 Minn. 86, 88 (Gil. 68, 71).

Const. art. 6, § 6, declares: "The district courts shall have 'original' jurisdiction in law and equity in all civil cases where the amount in dispute exceeds $200; in all criminal cases not otherwise provided for, and in all issues of fact joined in the probate courts their jurisdiction shall be 'unlimited.'" In considering the question whether the word "unlimited" qualifies the character of the jurisdiction fixed by the term "original," or whether it qualifies the specified limitation as to the amount in value fixed in the first paragraph of the section, the court said: "We are compelled to decide in favor of the latter proposition. The term 'original' is a general term of limitation, contradistinguished from the term 'appellate,' which latter defines the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. If, therefore, a change in the general character of the jurisdiction was intended to take place in a certain class of cases, that change would have been designated by the use of the general term, which in all other parts is used for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction. It is also strictly in consonance with the proper use of language that where a limitation is removed, and there is an immediately prior specific limitation, the removal shall apply to the latter, and not be allowed to qualify a general term of limitation which is more remote in its position in the sentence." Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. 342, 343.

As exclusive.

The constitutional grant of original jurisdiction to the federal Supreme Court in all cases affecting consuls is held not to prevent Congress from conferring original jurisdiction in such cases also upon the subordinate courts of the Union, the term "original" not having the force of "exclusive." Bors v. Preston, 4 Sup. Ct. 407, 408, 111 U. S. 252, 28 L. Ed. 419; Pooley v. Luco (U. S.) 78 Fed. 146, 147.

Laws 1862, c. 18, providing that the several district courts of the state shall have original jurisdiction in all cases of mandamus, does not mean that such courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction thereof. Crowell v. Lambert, 10 Minn. 369, 372 (Gil. 295, 296).

ORIGINAL LOCATION.

Within the statute regulating the rights of street railways, the term "original location" is defined to mean the first location granted to the company in such city or town, so that an extension of an original location is not an original location. City of Springfield v. Springfield St. Ry. Co., 64 N. E. 577, 580, 182 Mass. 41.

ORIGINAL MACHINE.

Wherever the patent law speaks of "improvement," it is on some machine of manufacturing, and not on manual labor. Consequently, an improvement of an article manufactured by manual labor is not, strictly speaking, an "invention," but an original machine. Evans v. Eaton (U. S.) 8 Fed. Cas. 856, 859.

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT.

By express provision of Rev. St. 1881, § 1410 (Rev. St. 1894, § 1476), the longhand manuscript of the evidence taken by a stenographer is an "original manuscript or document" incorporated in the bill of exceptions, and hence may be treated as embraced within and constituting part of it, and cannot be construed to be a mere transcription of the evidence introduced at the trial. Zels v. Passwater, 41 N. E. 796, 799, 142 Ind. 375.

ORIGINAL MEETING.

According to parliamentary law, strictly speaking, an "original meeting" and an "adjourned meeting" constitute the same meeting; but it is held that in Gen. St. 1878, c. 13, §§ 49-53, relative to meetings of the board of county commissioners, and providing that, when a petition is made for the establishment, change, or vacation of a county road, the county auditor shall lay it before the board at their next session, and after the lapse of 30 days at the next meeting of the board they shall proceed to determine the prayer of the petition, the words "session" and "meeting" are not used in any strictly technical sense, but have reference merely to a time when the board is lawfully convened and in session for the transaction of business. Burkleo v. County of Washington, 88 Minn. 441, 442, 443, 88 N. W. 108.

ORIGINAL NOMINATION.

Laws 1896, § 66, provides that, when no nomination shall have been originally made by a political party or by an independent body for an office, no committee of such party or independent body can nominate or substitute the name of another party or independent body for such office. By the use of the phrase "original nominations" in such section, the Legislature clearly meant the first nominations, as distinguished from those made to fill vacancies caused by death, resignation, or otherwise after the original first or primary nomination. Gillespie v. McDonough, 79 N. Y. Supp. 182, 185, 89 Misc. Rep. 147.

ORIGINAL NOTICE.

"Original notice," as used in Code, § 2582, providing that the delivery of the original notice to the sheriff of the proper county with intent that it is to be served immediately is a commencement of the action, does not include a notice with the appearance day left blank, with the intention that the sheriff shall file the same as soon as convenient. Phinney v. Donohue, 25 N. W. 126, 127, 87 Iowa, 192.

ORIGINAL OUTFIT.

Converting a ship from her original destination with intent to commit hostilities, or, in other words, converting a merchant ship into a vessel of war, must be deemed an "original outfit" within the meaning of Act June 5, 1794 (1 Stat. 381), § 3, providing for the punishment of any person who shall within the waters of the United States fit out and arm, or attempt to fit out and arm, or procure to be fitted out and armed, any ship or vessel to be employed, in the service of any foreign prince or state, to cruise or commit hostilities upon the subjects, citizens, or property of another foreign prince or state with whom the United States are at peace. United States v. Guinet (Pa.) 2 Dall. 321, 328, 26 Fed. Cas. 53, 1 L. Ed. 398.

ORIGINAL OWNERS.

In an action by a corporation against the promoters thereof, who had induced the corporation to purchase from them oil lands by false representations that they had bought the lands for the company from original owners, and that the prices paid by the company were those paid to the original owners, and were low, when in fact the prices paid by them were about $75,000 less than the prices represented, and the amount received by them from the company, the court said: "The words 'original owners' in the prospectus were not terms of art, science, or trade which required the aid of experts to explain. Nobody could well mistake their meaning. They simply imported that no profits were added to the prices paid by the company for their lands on account of any intermediate party or agent between it and the precedent owners of the soil. It excluded the idea of a purchase at a speculative price." Simons v. Vulcan Oil & Mining Co., 61 Pa. (11 P. F. Smith) 202, 220, 100 Am. Dec. 628.

ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

Original package or otherwise, see "Otherwise."

The character of the article shipped as an original package is determined by the condition of the package when delivered for shipment by the importer to and received by the railway company or transporter, and not by the acts of the latter after receipt of package by it without knowledge of the former. Tinker v. State, 11 South. 383, 384, 96 Ala. 115.

The definition of "original package" commonly accepted and believed to be correct is that it is a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling, and usually consists of a number of things bound together convenient for handling and conveyance. In the case of State v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 25 Pac. 237, 10 L. R. A. 616, it is said: "The 'original package' was and is the package as it existed at the time of its transportation from one state to another. It is quite apparent that the words 'original package' have reference to the unit which the carrier receives, transports, and delivers as an article of commerce. The importer decides for himself the size of the package which he desires to import, and when he delivers it to the carrier for transportation he gives it the initial step; and from that time until sold in that form, or broken and transferred, it is the subject of interstate commerce; but when sold or broken, or when it changes form, it ceases to be an article of interstate commerce, and no longer enjoys this protection. The original package, then, is that package which is delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial point of shipment in the exact condition in which it was shipped. If sold, it must be in the form as shipped or received; for, if the package be broken after such delivery, it by that act alone becomes a part of the common mass of property within the state, and is subject to the laws of that state passed in virtue of its police power." McGregor v. Cone, 73 W. 1041, 1043, 104 Iowa, 465, 39 L. R. A. 494, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522.

The term "original package" does not seem to have received, and, perhaps, is not capable of, a precise definition that may be applied to it in all cases. The idea for which it stands is, however, definitely known. The method adopted by manufacturers and importers for packing and transportation of goods by sea or land differs with the character, bulk, and material of the merchandise itself. The general purpose is to adopt that size and form of package best adapted to the safe and convenient transportation and delivery of the particular class of goods to be moved, because the convenience of trade will be best subserved thereby. Such packages, being put up with a view to the convenience and security of transportation and handling in the regular course of trade, are the "original packages" of commerce. If we look at the meaning of the words employed, we are brought to the same conclusion. "Original" pertains to the first or primitive form of a thing; "package" means a bundle or parcel made up of several small packages bound up in a bale, package, or crate, or other form of package. An original form of package is such form or size of package as is used by shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience of handling and security in transportation of merchandise in the ordinary course of actual commerce. In this case it is specifically held that where bottles of intoxicating liquor were each inclosed in a paper wrapper or box, which was sealed with sealing wax, and a number of paper boxes, each containing a flask of such liquor, were packed in a wooden box and shipped to an agent, who sold the flasks of liquor separately, the wooden box was the "original package," and not the sealed paper box or wrapper and bottle therein contained. Haley v. State, 60 N. W. 962, 42 Neb. 556, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718.

The term "original package," as employed by law, admits of no precise definition applicable to all cases. Generally, it is said to be a parcel, bundle, bale, box, or case made up of or "packed" with some commodity with a view to its safety and convenient handling and transportation. It does not necessarily mean that goods shall be inclosed in a tight or sealed receptacle. It relates wholly to goods as prepared for transportation, and has no necessary reference whatever to the package originally prepared or put up by the manufacturer. Indeed, the idea of the "original package" may well be made to cover certain forms of property which do not ordinarily admit of being packed or encased in any other manner than in the car or vessel in which they are transported, such, for instance, as steel beams, threshing machines, and other bulky articles. Cook v. Marshall County, 93 N. W. 372, 373, 119 Iowa, 384.

The term "original package," as applied to liquors within the interstate commerce act, so as to authorize their importation into the state, prohibiting the sale of liquors, is a term which has not received, and, perhaps, is not capable of, precise definition that may be applied to all cases. The idea for which it stands is a package of convenient form and size, best adapted to safe and convenient transportation and delivery of a particular class of goods to be moved. Such packages, put up with a view to the convenience and security of transportation and handling in the regular course of trade, are the "original packages" of Congress. Haley v. State, 60 N. W. 962, 42 Neb. 556, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718.

"An original package is such form and size of package as is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Such packages are not always made up by putting smaller packages or bundles together, but may include any form or receptacle that shall hold a fixed quantity." Commonwealth v. Shollenberger, 27 Atl. 30, 33, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L. R. A. 155, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32.

The term "original package," in Act Cong. May 8, 1890, providing that intoxicating liquors transported into any state, or remaining therein for sale, etc., shall be subject to the laws of such state, enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent as though such liquors had been produced in the state, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise, "had, at the time of the passage of the act, by the decisions of this court, acquired, with reference to the construction of the Constitution, a technical meaning, signifying that the merchandise in such packages was entitled to be sold within a state by the receiver thereof, although state laws might forbid the sale of merchandise of like character not in such packages." Rhodes v. State of Iowa, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 668, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. Ed. 1068.

No importer is guaranteed the right of opening original packages which he may be allowed to import, and selling the contents of such packages either in gross or piecemeal. His right extends only to sales in the original packages, and a contract for the sale of liquors in original packages, giving the purchaser 10 days in which to ascertain whether they were satisfactory or not, and, if not, to return them, as it gave the purchaser the right of breaking and examining the packages, was not a sale in original packages. Wasserboehr v. Bonlier, 24 Atl. 808, 809, 84 Me. 165, 30 Am. St. Rep. 344.

As package of shipment.

In the commercial sense, the case or box or bale in which separate articles are placed together for transportation constitutes the "original package." Keith v. State, 8 South. 353, 354, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430.

Where whisky in bottles, sealed and labeled, which bottles were for convenience of shipment packed in barrels, the separate bottles were in "original packages;" that is, in the form in which they were put up by the shipper for sale. At least, such has been the holding of the courts in Iowa. Collins v. Hills, 77 Iowa, 181, 41 N. W. 571, 8 L. R. A. 110. See, also, In re Beine, 42 Fed. 545. It is proper to observe that this case was determined before the act of Congress relating to the laws of the several states pertaining to the regulation of traffic in intoxicating liquors. State v. Coonan, 48 N. W. 921, 922, 82 Iowa, 400.

Where bottles of liquor are placed in a wooden box and shipped into the state to be sold on commission, the box is the "original package." Harrison v. State, 10 South. 30, 31, 91 Ala. 62.

Where bottles of whisky or beer are each sealed up in a paper wrapper, and closely packed together in uncovered wooden boxes furnished by the importer, and said wooden boxes are marked to the address of the agents and shipped from one state to another, the wooden boxes, and not the bottles, constitute the "original package." State v. Chapman, 47 N. W. 411, 415, 1 S. D. 414, 10 L. R. A. 432.

Where bottles of whisky which are sealed up in a paper wrapper, and closely packed together in uncovered wooden boxes furnished by an express company, and marked "To be returned," are shipped from one state to another, the boxes, and not the bottles, constitute the "original packages" within the meaning of decisions of the Supreme Court upon the interstate commerce provisions of the national Constitution. In re Harmon (U. S.) 43 Fed. 372, 373.

An "original package," within the meaning of the interstate commerce law, is the package delivered by the importer to the carrier at a designated point in exactly the same condition in which it was shipped. In the case of liquids in bottles, if the bottles are shipped singly, each is an original package; if a number are fastened together and marked, or checked in a box, crate, or other receptacle, such box, crate, or receptacle constitutes the original package. Guckenheimer v. Sellers (U. S.) 81 Fed. 997, 999.

An "original package," as applied to interstate and international commerce, is a package, bundle, or aggregation of goods put up, in whatever form, covering, or receptacle, for transportation, and as a unit transported from one state or nation to another. After a sale of cigarettes they were placed by the seller on the floor of the factory in packages conforming to the United States revenue laws. A common carrier was notified, who piled them into a basket and brought them into the state in the basket, where he delivered them to the buyer, retaining possession of the basket. Under such circumstances the basket full of packages, and not each individual package, must be deemed the original package, even though the basket was not closed during the transportation, and though the basket was owned by the carrier. Austin v. State, 48 S. W. 308, 308, 101 Tenn. 563, 50 L. R. A. 473, 70 Am. St. Rep. 703.

An "original package" is defined to be such form and size of package as is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Where a mode of putting up a package does not meet the requirements of interstate commerce, but the requirements of an unlawful domestic retail trade, the dealer will not be protected on the ground that he is selling an original package. Pursuant to this definition, it is held that paper packages of cigarettes, each 8 inches in length and 1½ inches in width, containing 10 cigarettes, without any shipping address on such packages, when they are taken from a loose pile at the factory by an express company in a basket which it furnished, in which it carries them, and from which it empties them on the counter of the consignee in another state, do not constitute original packages of interstate commerce, but if there is any original package in the shipment it is the basket. Austin v. State of Tennessee, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 137, 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. Ed. 224.

The "original package" referred to in the decisions of the Supreme Court was and is the package of the importers as it existed at the time of its transportation from one state into another. The whole subject has relation to interstate commerce, and to nothing else. Hence the words must mean the package as transported by the importer himself and his agent, either as a common carrier or a private carrier, for the purposes of commerce, and it would seem that it is for the importer to determine how large or how small the package should be, and the manner in which the package should be made up, and the materials used in making it up. State v. Winters, 25 Pac. 235, 237, 44 Kan. 723, 10 L. R. A. 616.

The rule established by the Supreme Court of the United States in relation to the rights of states to restrict the sale of imported liquors goes no further than that the importer may sell the articles imported in the form and shape in which they were imported without impediment from state laws, and does not apply to the sale of liquor by the bottle by one who imports such bottles in boxes with closed tops which were broken open. Smith v. State, 54 Ark. 243, 15 S. W. 882.

The term "original package," as applicable to the sale of patent and proprietary medicines, means—and is so understood by all persons—the small individual package or bottle as prepared for retail, and not the large box or package in which the smaller packages may have been shipped by the manufacturer, and is so used in St. 1899, c. 85, § 2631, authorizing the sale of patent medicines in original packages. Kentucky Board of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 74 S. W. 730, 732.

The case or box or bale in which separate articles are placed together for transportation constitutes the "original package," in the commercial sense. Keith v. State, 8 South. 353, 354, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430. A separate wrapping of single bottles of medicine manufactured in another state, and inclosed in a package in which they were shipped into this state, did not constitute each bottle an original package, entitling the vendor thereof to the protection of Const. art. 1, § 8, vesting in Congress the power to regulate commerce between the states, as against Rev. St. 1899, §§ 7211, 7213, defining a "peddler," and imposing a fine for dealing as such without a license. State v. Parsons, 27 S. W. 1102, 1104, 124 Mo. 436, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457.

Contents of package.

A person who keeps a saloon with bar and fixtures, receives as original packages bottles of beer and whisky, and sells the same over his bar to customers, who destroy the seals or wire on the bottles, pull the corks, pour the contents into glasses on the bar, drink the same, and leave the bottles on the bar, is a seller of the contents of the original packages, and not the original packages themselves. Hopkins v. Lewis, 84 Iowa, 690, 51 N. W. 255, 15 L. R. A. 397.

Mingling with consignee's property.

When an importer has so acted upon the thing imported that it has become incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country, it has lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the state; but while remaining the property of the importer in his warehouse in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is a duty on imports, and therefore to that extent invalid. Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 419, 442, 6 L. Ed. 678.

Package adapted for sale at retail.

The right of one importing into a state a proper article of interstate commerce to sell it in the original package does not depend on whether the package is suitable for the retail trade or not. The right to sell it is the same, whether to consumers or to retail dealers. A sale of a 10-pound package of oleomargarine manufactured, packed, marked, imported, and sold in the ordinary course of business is sold in the original package, and therefore an act of a state forbidding the sale of oleomargarine is void as an interference with interstate commerce, as applied to oleomargarine brought into the state and sold in the original packages. Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49.

A package devised by a nonresident manufacturer, or put up by him, adapted for sale at retail to individual consumers—such, for example, as a flask of whisky, or a tub or pail or roll of oleomargarine—and actually sold by him or his agent to the consumer for use as an article of food or drink, in violation of the laws of the state where such sales take place, is not an "original package" within the meaning of the law relating to interstate commerce. Commonwealth v. Paul, 33 Atl. 82, 85, 170 Pa. 284, 30 L. R. A. 896, 50 Am. St. Rep. 776.

Very small packages.

The term "original package," within the rule that the state prohibitory law is in contravention of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution in so far as it applies to sales by the importer, outside the state, of liquor in the original packages in which it is brought into the state, is not affected by the form or size of such packages, and therefore single bottles of beer packed and sealed or nailed up in boxes made of pasteboard or wood, and shipped singly, are original packages. In re Beine (U. S.) 42 Fed. 545.

Where beer is put into sealed bottles and packed in boxes, and sent by a nonresident into the state, consigned to an agent, and the agent prior to August 14, 1890, merely removed the bottles from the box, furnished corkscrews and tumblers, and allowed customers to open them for themselves, the sale was in the original packages. State v. Miller, 86 Iowa, 638, 53 N. W. 330.

Subdivisions of package.

Goods, imported and remaining in the original boxes or cases or wrappings in which shipped are, until sold, in original packages; but goods taken from the original cases or boxes or wrappings in which shipped and received by the importers, though still remaining in the manufacturer's packages, become incorporated into the general mass of the property of the state, and subject to its tax laws. May v. City of New Orleans, 25 South. 959, 960, 51 La. Ann. 1064.

Where many boxes, each containing 10 cigarettes, are given absolutely loose to an express company by the manufacturer to transport to a person in another state, each box will not be held an original package, though it does not affirmatively appear that the express company used any receptacle in which to carry them. Cook v. Marshall County, 98 N. W. 872, 878, 119 Iowa, 384.

ORIGINAL PAPERS.

"Original papers," as used in Rev. St. 1881, § 1771, providing that, on a change of venue in a criminal proceeding, the clerk shall make a transcript of the proceedings and orders of the court, and, having sealed up the same with the "original papers," shall deliver them to the sheriff, means the original indictment, or the original affidavit and information, in which the defendant is charged with a public offense. An affidavit for a change of venue is not an "original paper" within the meaning of the statute. Bright v. State, 90 Ind. 848, 845.

ORIGINAL PARTY.

"Original party to a contract or cause of action," as used in Act 1868, declaring that an original party to a contract or cause of action shall not be competent to testify, means an original party to the contract or cause of action at issue or on trial, and therefore excludes a party as a witness only when he is a party to the cause. Wright v. Gilbert, 51 Md. 146, 157.

ORIGINAL PROPERTY.

"Original and ultimate property," as used in Const. 1846, art. 1, § 2, declaring that the people of the state in their right of sovereignty are deemed to possess the "original and ultimate property" in and to all lands within the jurisdiction of the state, means that theoretical title to which the state's right of possession and enjoyment become annexed on the failure of inheritance. People v. Rector of Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 44, 47.

ORIGINAL PROCESS.

The petition and citation in a suit constitute the original process by which the suit is commenced, and, where a statute requires that a revenue stamp be placed on the original process, it is sufficient to affix such stamp to either the petition or citation. Appeal of Hotchkiss, 32 Conn. 353, 355.

The process issued as notice to the plaintiff in a bill for a new trial is not "original process" within Rev. St. 789, restricting the bringing of suits by original process against a citizen of the United States save in the district where he resides or shall be found, but it is incidental, ancillary, a step in a pending cause. It is not a process which originates a cause, but it merely prolongs one already commenced. Oglesby v. Attrill (U. S.) 12 Fed. 227, 230.

ORIGINAL PROMISE.

"Original promise," as used with relation to the statute of frauds, is a promise such that, although the effect is to pay the debt of another, yet the leading object of the undertaker is to subserve or promote some interest or purpose of his own. If such a promise be made on good consideration, it is unaffected by the statute of frauds, because, although the effect of it is to release or suspend the debt of another, yet that is not the leading object on the part of the promisor. Nelson v. Boyton, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 896, 400, 37 Am. Dec. 148; Patton v. Mills, 21 Kan. 163, 169.

"The terms 'original' and 'collateral,' as applied to undertakings in connection with the statute of frauds, though not found in the statute, are often used in applying it, and, being significant and intelligible, are convenient. If the promise is made by one in his own name to pay for goods or money delivered to or services done for another, that is original; it is his own contract on good consideration, and is called 'original,' and is binding on him without consideration. But if the language is, 'Let him have money or goods, or do service for him, and I will see you paid,' or 'I promise you that he will pay,' or 'If he don't pay, I will,' this is collateral, and, though made on good consideration, is void by the statute of frauds." Stone v. Walker, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 613, 615.

An original promise, though it has the effect of paying the debt of another, is a promise in which the leading object of the promisor "is to subserve or promote some interest or purpose of his own." Such a promise is not within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another to be in writing. Olney v. Walton, 9 Cal. 328, 334.

An original promise to answer for a debt or default of another is a promise where, distinct from the original liability, there is a new and superadded consideration for the promise, moving between the party promising and him to whom the promise is made. Such a promise is not within the statute of frauds, requiring a promise to answer for a debt or default or miscarriage of another to be in writing. Elder v. Warfield (Md.) 7 Har. & J. 391, 396.

"The terms 'original' and 'collateral' promise are used to distinguish between the cases where the direct and leading object of a promise is to become the surety or guarantor of another's debt, and those where, although the effect of the promise is to pay the debt of another, yet the leading question of the undertaker is to promote some interest or purpose of his own." Beach on Contracts, § 570. "Whenever the main purpose and object of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either benefit to himself or damage to the other contracting party, his promise is not within the statute, although it may be in form a promise to pay the debt of another, and although the performance of it may have the effect of extinguishing that liability." An oral promise by the owner of a building in the process of construction to pay laboring men, for the purpose of procuring the completion of the building, is not a collateral promise to answer for the debt of a contractor within the statute of frauds, but is an original undertaking which may be enforced against the owner. Almond v. Hart, 61 N. Y. Supp. 849, 852, 46 App. Div. 481.

A parol promise by an attorney to pay whatever judgments might be rendered against his client is within the statute of frauds, though it be on consideration of the opposite party waiving costs in an undertaking, the attorney not being under any present duty to pay what he promised. Scott v. Brown, 60 N. Y. Supp. 511, 512, 29 Misc. Rep. 320.

Where the primary debt subsists and was antecedently contracted, the promise to pay it is original when it is founded on a new consideration moving to the promisor and beneficial to him, and such that the promisor thereby comes under an independent duty of payment irrespective of the liability of the principal debtor. White v. Rintoul, 108 N. Y. 222, 15 N. E. 818.

ORIGINAL RECEPTACLE.

"Original receptacle," as used in a city ordinance providing that no merchant, retailer, trader, dealer, hawker, or peddler should sell in such city any fruit, vegetable, or nut from cups, cans, or other receptacles other than sealed dry measures sealed by the city sealer, except when such fruit, vegetable, or nut is sold in its original receptacle, means the box, can, or other receptacle in which the merchandise originally came to the hands of the dealer. Raffetto v. Mott, 88 Atl. 857, 60 N. J. Law, 418.

ORIGINAL STOCK.

Between such stock as may be authorized and required by the charter of a corporation—that is, original stock or foundation stock—and increased stock, there is a substantial difference. In the case of the issue of increased stock there is no implied understanding that the whole of the authorized issue shall be subscribed for. A sub-scriber's contract for such stock is that he will pay the price agreed upon for the stock, and, if it is not delivered in accordance with such contract, he is liable at any time to be called upon to pay whatever balance he may owe. Gettysburg Nat. Bank v. Brown, 52 Atl. 975, 976, 95 Md. 367, 93 Am. St. Rep. 339.

ORIGINAL SUIT.

A bill filed on the equity side of the federal court to restrain or regulate judgments or suits at law in the same court, and thereby prevent injustice or an inequitable advantage under means or final process, is not an original suit, but ancillary and dependent, supplementary to the original suit out of which it has arisen, and is maintainable without reference to the citizenship or residence of the parties. Freeman v. Howe, 65 U. S. (24 How.) 450, 460, 16 L. Ed. 749.

The substitution of a plaintiff is not an original suit, but an incident of an existing one—a step in it, and nothing more; and allowing plaintiff's intestate to become the party plaintiff without a revival in the name of the personal representative of the original plaintiff, and proceeding without additional notice against the defendant, is not an unreasonable practice. Lockhart v. Locke, 42 Ark. 17, 21.

ORIGINAL WRIT.

An "original writ" means the first process or initiatory step taken in prosecuting a suit. It issues on the application of a party. In English, this writ is the præcipe. After this is issued and returned, an attachment issues to take the body, then a distingas, and then a capias. Walsh v. Haswell, 11 Vt. 85, 88.

Under Rev. St. c. 81, § 2, providing that "all civil actions, except scire facias and other special writs, shall be commenced by original writs," writs of summons and attachment are "original writs" within the meaning of section 8, which provides that "every writ original, or scire facias, of error," etc., shall, before entry in court, be indorsed by some sufficient inhabitant of the state, when plaintiff is a nonresident; the writs of scire facias, error, etc., enumerated in the section, being additional to, and not limitations of, the provision requiring original writs to be so indorsed. Frassey v. Snow, 17 Atl. 71, 81 Me. 288.

ORIGINALLY.

Acts 23 Geo. II, c. 30, § 8, relating to jurisdiction of the court of requests, and providing that the commissioners shall not decide on any debt for any sum, being the balance of an account on a "demand originally exceeding five pounds," would include a debt which originally exceeded five pounds, but had been reduced below that amount by payments from time to time before action was brought. Elsley v. Kirby, 9 Mees. & W. 536, 539.

Acts 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 122, § 22, excepts from the jurisdiction of Blackheath court of request any debt for any sum, being the balance of an account originally exceeding £5. Held, that this exception did not apply to an account containing items amounting to upwards of £5, and reduced by payments from time to time below that sum, where it appeared that at no time so much as £5 was due. Pope v. Banyard, 3 Mees. & W. 424, 425.

ORIGINALLY COMMENCED.

"Originally commenced," as used in Code, § 11, providing that an appeal should not be allowed to the Court of Appeals in an "action originally commenced" in a court of a justice of the peace, should be construed to include an action commenced in the county court or Supreme Court on the discontinuance of an action in a justice's court involving the title to land. There is no distinction between cases arising in a justice's court and "actions originally commenced" in that court. Cook v. Nellis, 18 N. Y. 126, 127.

ORIGINALLY GRANTED.

As used in Iowa statutes which declare that administration shall not be originally granted after the elapse of five years from the death of the decedent, the expression "originally granted" applies only to administration which is granted upon the estate for the first time. It does not apply to an administration which is merely auxiliary to one originally granted in another state. Dolton v. Nelson (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 872.

ORIGINALLY LIABLE.

Originally liable, as used in Pub. St. c. 155, § 23, authorizing a suit for contribution against any one or more of the "stockholders of a corporation who were originally liable" with the stockholders suing for the payment of the corporate debt, which the latter liquidated, means all stockholders who were liable for the debt before it was paid by the stockholders suing for contributions, and therefore all persons who were stockholders when the debt was contracted, and all who were stockholders when proceedings were begun to enforce the liability, are proper contributors. Sayles v. Bates, 5 Atl. 497, 499, 15 R. I. 342.

ORIGINALS.

"Originals," as used in Pub. St. c. 169, § 70, making copies of documents in the executive and other departments of the commonwealth, duly authenticated, competent evidence equally with the "originals" thereof, means the documents in the hands of the certifying officer, whatever they may be. Commonwealth v. Corkery, 56 N. E. 711, 712, 175 Mass. 460.

ORIGINATING.

The word "originating," in a fire policy on a building, which provides that the policy shall not cover any loss or damage by fire originating in the building proper, does not characterize a burning resulting from the outer brick walls of the building becoming so heated from without as to set fire to the woodwork within the building. Sohier v. Norwich Fire Ins. Co., 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 336, 337.

ORNAMENT.

See "Personal Ornaments."

A will contained the following provisions: "To my niece L. I give my finger rings and so many of my books, pictures and ornaments not otherwise bequeathed specifically as she shall choose to take." Held, that the word "ornaments," as used in the will, was intended to include articles of jewelry, such as breastpins, bracelets, earrings, brooches, lockets, chains, etc., and also many articles not classified under the head of "jewelry." In re Traylor's Estate, 16 Pac. 774, 775, 75 Cal. 189.

"Altering, repairing, or ornamenting a building," as used in the Illinois mechanic's lien law, does not include putting a lightning rod on a house. Drew v. Mason, 81 Ill. 498, 499, 25 Am. Rep. 238.

A statute giving a lien for labor and materials furnished for the building, altering, repairing, or ornamenting any house or other building or appurtenance thereto, does not give a lien on a lot for curbing, grading, and paving the street in front of the same. Smith v. Kennedy, 89 Ill. 486.

The word "ornament," in Act May, 1807, the chief object of which was to allow a certain space contiguous to the front line of lots for purposes of utility or ornament, and to provide means by which the health and beauty of the town might be promoted, etc., and allowing, in section 1, 10 feet "for erecting porches in front of houses, for doors or cellars, for an area to allow light to apartments below the level of the ground, for a grass plat or shrubbery, or for other purposes of utility or ornament, as the inclination or taste of the proprietor may direct," is to be construed with reference to the kind of ornament specially enumerated. It would not justify the use of those spaces for purposes of ornament not fairly deducible from the words "grass plat or shrubbery." The objects of ornament authorized by law are such only as may contribute to the convenience, comfort, or health of owners of lots, provided they do not annoy the public or mar the beauty of the city. People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. (Man.) 273, 283.

Watch.

Laws which exempt innkeepers who have provided a safe, and posted notice of the fact in accordance with the act, from liability for money, "jewels, and ornaments" of a guest not deposited in the safe, do not include a watch. The statute applies to certain property which is particularly valuable in itself, takes but small space compared with its value for its safe-keeping, is easy of concealment and removal, and which holds out great temptation to the dishonest, and is not necessary to the comfort or convenience of the guest while in his room. Ramaley v. Leland, 48 N. Y. 539, 541, 3 Am. Rep. 728; Becker v. Warner, 35 N. Y. Supp. 739, 741, 90 Hun, 187; Gile v. Libby (N. Y.) 86 Barb. 70, 77.

The term "jewels or ornaments," in Laws 1897, c. 305, relieving an innkeeper from liability from loss of money, jewels, or ornaments where he furnishes a safe in the office of his hotel, posts notice, etc., and the guest neglects to deposit such articles in the safe, does not include silver table forks, and a silver soup ladle, and a gold watch, even though a state coat-of-arms is engraved on the watch, and a picture of the guest's mother is on the inside of the case. Briggs v. Todd, 59 N. Y. Supp. 23, 28, 23 Misc. Rep. 208.

ORNAMENTAL PLASTERING.

After the execution of a plastering contract, a dispute arose as to the meaning to be given its terms, the defendants contending that "ornamental plastering" had a technical trade meaning, and only included such ornamental work as is modeled and cast in the shop, and afterwards applied to the building in a dry state; that "plain plastering" means the plain surface, and such plain moldings and cornices as are put on in the form of wet plaster in the building, and is distinguishable from those cornices and moldings which are not put upon the walls until after they are made. Upon this subject there was a conflict in the testimony, and, in so far as the question was one of fact, it was held that the finding of the court below was conclusive. Woodruff v. Klee, 62 N. Y. Supp. 850, 351, 47 App. Div. 633.

ORNAMENTAL PURPOSES.

A deed of blocks of real estate to a city "for ornamental purposes and not otherwise" implies that such property is to be enjoyed by the public at large, and hence it cannot be appropriated by the city authorities for its use in the management and conduct of city business by the erection of a city hall and jail thereon. Church v. City of Portland, 22 Pac. 528, 531, 18 Or. 73, 6 L. R. A. 259.

ORNAMENTAL STRUCTURE.

Baltimore Ordinance 1850, permitting the erection of a "portico, steps or other ornamental structure" on Mt. Vernon Place at a distance of nine feet from the building line, should be construed to include an inclosed porch built over the main entrance to a house, built of brownstone, as the house is, having two stained-glass windows and an ornamental panel in front, and another stained-glass window in the end. From its being inclosed, the doorways or arches through which visitors or inmates pass from this entranceway into the hall or building proper may remain open. Its primary use and purpose is a means of access to the building through the three doorways which are abreast of and command the hall, and this is essentially an inclosed porch or portico for that purpose. The ordinance, from using the descriptive terms "portico, steps," etc., and not mentioning "porch," did not mean to forbid the erection of porches, or use "portico" in a technical sense as distinguishing it from "porch," "piazza," "veranda," or any other equivalent mode of entrance, but in a generic sense, and in effect as synonymous. Besides, the words "or any other ornamental structure" would include a porch, if handsome, whether inclosed or uninclosed, if not implied in the word "portico." Garret v. Janes, 3 Atl. 597, 598, 65 Md. 280.

ORNAMENTAL TIMBER.

An injunction against cutting "ornamental timber" is confined to timber standing for ornament or shelter, and the description is not the same as trees "contributing to ornament." Williams v. McNamara, 8 Ves. 70.

ORNAMENTAL TREE.

Within the meaning of Laws 1853, c. 573, providing that any person who shall maliciously or wantonly destroy, injure, or deface any ornamental tree, shrub, or plant, etc., shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, a shade tree is an ornamental tree. Village of Lancaster v. Richardson (N. Y.) 4 Lans. 136, 139.

ORNAMENTED GLASSWARE.

Tariff Act 1890, Act Cong. Oct. 1, 1890, par. 106, providing a tariff for "ornamental glassware," does not include hollow translucent vessels, molded from glass and etched with fluoric acid, representing female figures, the heads separable from the body, and fitting closely on a narrow neck so as to form a stopper of a capacity of 7½ and 18½ fluid ounces respectively. Such articles are dutiable as bottles under paragraph 108. In re Smith (U. S.) 55 Fed. 476.

ORNAMENTED PORCELAIN.

The ornamented or decorated porcelain dutiable at 50 per cent. under Rev. St. § 2504, does not apply to paintings on porcelain, which does not in itself constitute an article of chinaware, and therefore it is only dutiable under another provision of the act as "paintings not otherwise provided for." Arthur v. Jacoby, 103 U. S. 677, 678, 26 L. Ed. 454.

ORNERY.

The word "ornery" has not such a place in the English language that any lexicographer has ventured to define it or give it authoritative recognition. It has much of the impress of provincialism. Its use seems to be peculiar to certain localities of people. While it is a word used to express quality or kind, it is not alone applicable to persons. It is doubtless never used to express good qualities. Its use is generally to express the opposite, and it does not in some of its uses differ from the words "common" or "mean." As applied to a woman, it is not equivalent to saying that she is a prostitute. Wimer v. Albaugh, 42 N. W. 587, 588, 78 Iowa, 79, 16 Am. St. Rep. 422.

ORPHAN.

An orphan is a fatherless child. Poston v. Young, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 501.

An orphan is a minor or infant who has lost both of his or her parents. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. v. Wheeler, 79 Ill. App. 241, 244.

The term "orphans" includes children that are fatherless, within the meaning of a will devising an estate in trust to found a college for white male orphans. Soohan v. City of Philadelphia, 83 Pa. (9 Casey) 9, 24.

"Orphans," as used in the constitution of a mutual benefit society, defining the object of the society to be to assist the widows and orphans of deceased members and to establish a widows' and orphans' benefit fund, means children of deceased members, whether their mother is living or not. Jackman v. Nelson, 17 N. E. 529, 530, 147 Mass. 300.

The legal meaning of the term "orphan" is a fatherless child. 2 Toml. Law Dict. 678. The term is so used in the statute giving the probate court jurisdiction to 6 Wms. & P.—13 appoint guardians for orphans, as there is nothing in the context of the statute to show that it is employed in a broader sense, and therefore the court cannot appoint a guardian for a minor whose father is living. Stewart v. Morrison's Ex'rs, 38 Miss. 417, 419.

"Orphans," as used in the Constitution and by-laws of a beneficial association, designating the beneficiaries of the deceased members as widows, orphans, and other dependents of deceased members, means the "children," in the proper sense of the word, of the deceased member, and "children" means offspring. Tepper v. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum, 45 Atl. 111, 115, 59 N. J. Eq. 321.

Adult.

The term "orphan children," in a regulation of a benevolent association providing that a certain benefit shall be paid to the lodge of which deceased was a member, for the use or benefit of his orphan children, in equal shares in case there is no widow, and, in case there is no widow, child or children, or designated person or object, the amount shall be paid to his executor or administrator, does not include adult children. Hammerstein v. Parsons, 29 Mo. App. 509, 513.

As minor.

In ordinary parlance, the child whose parents are living is not an "orphan"; but the statute which provides that "when any guardian, executor, or administrator, chargeable with the estate of any orphan or deceased person shall die so chargeable, he or her or their executor or administrator shall be compellable to pay out of his, her, or their estate so much as shall appear to be due to the estate of such orphan or deceased person before any other debt of such testator or intestate," clearly uses the word "orphan" as synonymous with "minor." A minor whose father is in life, as well as a minor whose parents are dead, is capable of acquiring an estate, and, if he have one, must have a guardian; and it would be impossible to conclude that the Legislature meant to give the protection only to minors whose parents were dead. Ragland v. Justices of Inferior Court, 10 Ga. 65, 70, 71.

Const. 1817, art. 5, § 4, conferring the jurisdiction of "orphans' business" on a certain court, will not be construed as using the word "orphan" as defined by the lexicographers, but the word will be construed as having been used as the equivalent of "minor," and hence the term includes both orphans' and minors' business. Hall v. Wells, 54 Miss. 280, 297.

An orphan is one bereft of parents; a minor is one under 21 years of age. In law and in common parlance, the words "minor" and "orphan" do not mean the same. Downing v. Schoenberger (Pa.) 9 Watts, 288, 290.

The word "orphan" or "orphans," as used in the act relative to the sale of unseated lands for taxes, shall be taken and construed to mean "minor" or "minors." 2 P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, col. 4638, § 478.

Motherless illegitimate child.

An orphan is a minor who has lost one or both of his parents. In New Jersey, however, a minor is not regarded as an orphan unless his father is dead. An illegitimate child, however, not being regarded as having any father, is held to be an orphan on the death of his mother. Friesner v. Symonds, 20 Atl. 257, 46 N. J. Eq. 521.

Stepchild.

"Orphans," as used in a charter of a benevolent association to assist and give pecuniary aid to the widows and "orphans of deceased members," the persons designated as "orphans of deceased members" include a stepdaughter of deceased. Renner v. Supreme Lodge of Bohemian Slavonian Ben. Soc., 62 N. W. 80, 81, 89 Wis. 401.

As too indefinite in devise.

"Orphans," as used in a devise to trustees for the benefit of worthy, deserving poor widows and orphans, means children who have lost one or both of their parents, and a devise to "orphans" is not void. Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 3 Atl. 557, 559, 53 Conn. 489, 55 Am. Rep. 152.

The word "orphan" may include a minor who has lost both of his or her parents, or one who has lost only one, so that a devise to all Roman Catholic "orphans" is void for indefiniteness. Heiss v. Murphey, 40 Wis. 276, 291.

A gift to the "widows and orphans" of the parish of Lindfield was necessarily confined to such of those two classes who were within the scope of general benevolence, and was a good, charitable bequest. Attorney General v. Comber, 2 Sim. & S. 93, 94.

ORPHAN ASYLUM.

As common school, see "Common School."

An orphan asylum is a place of refuge for orphan children—a home. Children are naturally dependent, and all need a home and protection. Indigent orphans have no home unless it is supplied by charity. To afford such a home, with support and protection, orphan asylums are provided by the humane. The asylum is undoubtedly the home; but these must be maintained by individuals or institutions. A home maintained by the San Francisco Ladies' Protection and Relief Society, in which is carried on the work of caring for and educating orphans, half orphans, and abandoned children, having therein an average of 20 whole orphans, 115 half orphans, and 42 abandoned children, and from 1 to 8 destitute women, is within a bequest to orphans asylums of the city. In re Pearson's Estate, 113 Cal. 577, 584, 45 Pac. 849, 850.

ORPHANS' BUSINESS.

The term "orphans' business," in a grant to the probate court of jurisdiction of "orphans' business," includes the power to allot to the members of a decedent's family the personal property of decedent, which, under Code, § 1738, they are entitled to retain free from account on the part of the executor or administrator. Turner's Adm'r v. Whitten, 40 Ala. 530, 532.

ORPHANS' COURT.

The orphans' courts of Pennsylvania are ordinary courts of chancery in their proceedings and decrees within the limited sphere of their jurisdiction, and a writ of error does not lie to review the proceedings of such a court. Commonwealth v. Judges of Court of Common Pleas, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 301-303.

Distinct tribunals for the establishment of wills and administration of the assets of men dying either with or without wills are variously called "prerogative courts," "probate courts," "surrogate courts," and "orphans' courts." Robinson v. Fair, 9 Sup. Ct. 30, 85, 123 U. S. 53, 32 L. Ed. 415.

An orphans' court is a court of limited jurisdiction. If it transcend its jurisdiction, its acts will pass for nothing. Gray v. Fox, 1 N. J. Eq. (Sart.) 259, 272, 22 Am. Dec. 508.

The "orphans' court" is not a court of common law, but a court partaking of the powers of a chancery and prerogative jurisdiction, instituted by law to remedy and supply the defects in the powers of the prerogative court with regard to the accountability of executors, administrators, and guardians. The authority given to the court by the act of December, 1784, is very extensive. The jurisdiction of the court is not restricted to orphans or persons under 21 years of age. A citation may issue from it as well against a surviving executor as against the executor of a deceased coexecutor for an accounting. Wood v. Tallman's Ex'rs, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 153, 155.

OSCILLATE.

"Oscillate" is defined to vibrate as a pendulum, to move backward and forward; to swing. "Oscillatory" is defined moving alternately one way and another, as a pendulum; swinging; vibrating. To "vibrate" is defined to move or play to and fro, as a pendulum, to oscillate; to swing. So a machine for treatment of disease by producing an oscillating or vibratory motion in the limbs of the patient is infringed by a machine producing substantially the same motions in the limbs by a rotary motion in the machine. Taylor v. Wood (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 807, 812.

OSTENSIBLE.

Ostensible means capable of being shown; proper or intended to be shown; shown; exhibited; declared; avowed; professed; apparent—often used as opposed to real or actual. Webst. Dict.

OSTENSIBLE AGENCY.

Ostensible agency exists in law where one, either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, although he never in fact employed him. Bibb v. Bancroft (Cal.) 22 Pac. 484.

An agency is "ostensible" when the principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2300; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4308; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1661; First Nat. Bank v. Minneapolis & N. Elevator Co. (N. D.) 91 N. W. 436, 438.

OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY.

"Ostensible authority" is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2317; Quay v. Presidio & F. R. Co., 22 Pac. 925, 927, 82 Cal. 1; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1675. "There are two essential features of an authority of this character; that is, the party must believe that the agent had authority, and such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person to be held. A belief founded on the agent's statements is not sufficient, for the party has no right to take the agent's word for the existence of his authority." Where it does not appear that the acts of a principal which are supposed to have been sufficient to justify a belief in an agent's authority were known to the person dealing with him, they could not have generated in his mind any belief on the subjects of the agency, and hence there was no "ostensible authority." Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 25 Pac. 758, 87 Cal. 626. This is the embodiment of a well-established principle of the common law which has been called the "foundation of the law of agency." Quinn v. Dresbach, 16 Pac. 762, 763, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. Rep. 188.

"Ostensible authority" as used in Civ. Code, § 2369, providing that a factor has ostensible authority to deal with the property of his principal as his own in transactions with persons not having notice of the actual ownership, has a broader meaning than "ostensible authority" as used in Civ. Code, § 2317, defining "ostensible authority" to be such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess, for it has reference to the ostensible authority of agents in general. "The authority is as real where it is declared to be ostensible as where it is declared to be actual." Wisp v. Hazard, 6 Pac. 91, 92, 66 Cal. 459.

"Ostensible authority" is defined in Comp. Laws, §§ 8965, 8979, as such authority as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess; and an agency is "ostensible" when the principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Reid v. Kellogg, 67 N. W. 687, 689, 8 S. D. 596.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER.

Gow, in his Treatise on Partnership, 12, 13, says: "An actual, ostensible partner is one who not only participates in the profits and contributes to the losses, but he appears and exhibits himself to the world as having a personal connection therewith, and as forming a component member of the firm." Mitchell v. Dall (Md.) 2 Har. & G. 159, 171.

An "ostensible" partner is one whose name appears to the world as such. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2628.

OSTEOPATHY.

The practice of osteopathy consists principally in rubbing, pulling, and kneading with the hands and fingers certain portions of the body, and flexing and manipulating the limbs, of those afflicted with disease, the object of such treatment being to remove the cause or causes of trouble, and comes within the provisions of Comp. St. art. 1, c. 55, § 17, requiring those who engage in the practice of medicine to procure a license. Little v. State, 84 N. W. 248, 60 Neb. 749, 51 L. R. A. 717.

Osteopathy teaches neither therapeutics, materia medica, nor surgery. Bacteriology is also ignored by it. It depends entirely on manipulation of the body for diseases. Its theory is that a large number of ailments are due to irregular nerve action, and that by manipulation they enable nature herself to right the evil. It administers no drugs; it uses no knife. It does not profess to cure all diseases. When a case is presented requiring surgery or medicine, the osteopath gives way to physicians. Faith cure or magnetism has no place in the system. It relies wholly upon manipulation aiding the vis medicatrix naturæ. The main things taught in the school are physiology, anatomy, and the treating of diseases by manipulation. The system is new, and of necessity imperfect as yet, but it is efficacious where the regular practice is ineffective. Still a school of osteopathy is not a "medical college" within the popular meaning of this term, nor within St. § 2618, authorizing the State Board of Health to issue a certificate to practice medicine to a physician who has a diploma from a reputable medical college. Nelson v. State Board of Health, 57 S. W. 501, 504, 108 Ky. 769, 50 L. R. A. 383.

The system of rubbing and kneading the body, commonly known as "osteopathy," is not an "agency" within the meaning of Act Feb. 27, 1896, "to regulate the practice of medicine" (92 Ohio Laws, p. 44), which forbids the prescribing of any "drug or medicine or other agency" for the treatment of disease by a person who has not obtained from the Board of Medical Registration and Examination a certificate of qualification. State v. Liffing, 55 N. E. 163, 61 Ohio St. 39, 46 L. R. A. 334, 76 Am. St. Rep. 358.

"Osteopathy" is defined as a method of treating diseases of the human body without the use of drugs, by means of manipulations applied to various nerve centers—chiefly those along the spine—with a view to inducing free circulation of the blood and lymph, and an equal distribution of the nerve forces. Special attention is given to the readjustment of any bones, muscles, or ligaments not in the normal position. The course of study in osteopathic colleges covers a period of four terms of five months each, and includes, in addition to the theory of clinical demonstration of osteopathy, demonstrative and descriptive anatomy, histology, chemistry, physiology, hygiene, pathology, physiological psychology, dietetics, obstetrics, and minor surgery. So that an exemption, in a statute regulating the practice of medicine, of those practicing osteopathy, seems based upon mental competency, though persons practicing by means of animal magnetism or hypnotism are excluded. Parks v. State, 64 N. E. 862, 869, 159 Ind. 211, 59 L. R. A. 190.

OTHER.

See "All Other"; "Any Other"; "Every Other"; "No Other."

"Other" always implies something additional. Ayrton v. Abbott, 14 Adol. & E.

1, 17; Michel v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. Supp. 832, 835, 17 App. Div. 87.

The use of the word "other" in Sess. Laws 1885, c. 49, §§ 1, 2, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person, after obtaining a divorce, to marry again during the time allowed for an appeal, and that a violation of this act shall subject the party violating it to all the penalties as in other cases of bigamy, plainly implies that, notwithstanding the divorce, the former relation is regarded as still continuing. It implies that a divorced person, until his status becomes unalterably fixed, is to be considered and dealt with as if the decree of divorce had not been granted. Eaton v. Eaton (Neb.) 92 N. W. 995, 997.

As all.

In a residuary bequest of "all other the rest and residue of my personal estate," after enumerating several subjects, the word "other" did not restrict the ordinary effect of the gift of residue, but it carried all the rest and residue. Martin v. Glover, 1 Colly. 269, 271.

"Others," as used in Pub. St. c. 195, § 2, as amended by Pub. Laws, c. 269, § 1, providing that the special courts of common pleas shall have jurisdiction of all actions brought for possession of tenements or estates let against "tenants and others" who have broken the terms and conditions of the lease or agreement under which they held, or who hold or occupy tenements or estates by wrongful entry or detainer, or as tenants at will or by sufferance, should be construed as meaning not only tenants of the plaintiff, but those who are not such tenants and those who have never been tenants of the plaintiff, as well as to those who formerly were and have ceased to be such. Kenney v. Sweeney, 14 R. I. 581, 582.

As different.

"Other," as used in Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that the Supreme Court shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and all "other writs" necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, is equivalent to "different from those which have been specified." "Other" does not mean the same as the word "also." Webster's definition of "other" is "different from that which has been specified"; Worcester's, "not the same; not this or these; different." Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353, 354.

"Other," as used in a statute declaring that inconsistent acts should be repealed, but that it shall not be construed to limit or abridge any other or greater power possessed by the governing body of any municipality, means "different." Mulcahy v. City of Newark, 81 Atl. 226, 57 N. J. Law, 513.

The words "other water," as used in a contract by a water company to supply pure water for certain specified purposes, and to supply for other purposes such other water as might be needed, are not equivalent to "additional water," and are put in contrast with "pure water," which the water company was to supply for purposes that required pure water. Scranton Gas & Water Co. v. Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., 81 Atl. 484, 485, 167 Pa. 138.

Code Cr. Proc. § 444, provides that on indictment for crime, "consisting of different degrees," the jury may find defendant guilty of any inferior degree. Section 445 provides in all "other" cases defendant may be found guilty of any crime the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged. One indicted for murder cannot be convicted of an assault, since the charge of murder is a charge of crime "consisting of different degrees," and the use of the word "other" in section 445 must exclude cases where the crime consists of different degrees. People v. Connors, 85 N. Y. Supp. 472, 474, 13 Misc. Rep. 582.

The word "other," as used in a statute relating to the taxation of logs in transit "other than through any water course in or bordering on" the state, is used to express a difference, such difference being between a transit which is, and one which is not, through any water course. Diamond Match Co. v. Ontonagon, 23 Sup. Ct. 266, 270, 188 U. S. 82, 47 L. Ed. 394.

As ejusdem generis.

The rule of ejusdem generis is by no means a rule of universal application, and its use is to carry out, not to defeat, the legislative intent. When it can be seen that the particular word by which the general word is followed was inserted, not to give a coloring to the general word, but for a distinct object, then, to carry out the purpose of the statute, the general word ought to govern. It is a mistake to allow the rule to pervert the construction. State v. Broderick, 7 Mo. App. 19, 20.

"Other" is a word of addition, and is often used in fire insurance policies to cover articles of the same kind and not particularly described by the preceding words. In a statute or in a contract where general words follow specific words, the general words are not construed to mean things of different kinds from those described by the specific words, but denote things of the same kind and for the same use. Michel v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. Supp. 882, 885, 17 App. Div. 87.

As explanatory.

The use of the word "other" in a question, in an application for a life policy, if the applicant's parents, etc., have been afflicted with consumption, scrofula, insanity, epilepsy, diseases of the heart, or other hereditary disease, plainly indicates that the question in reference to the enumerated diseases is to be taken as having reference to a hereditary form only of such diseases. Gridley v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. (U. S.) 11 Fed. Cas. 2, 8.

"Other equity cases," as used in Laws 1890, c. 167, providing for the bringing of an action by a wife to compel her husband to support her, section 8 of which provides that the practice in such cases shall conform as nearly as may be to the practice in divorce cases, and the court shall have power to enforce its orders as in "other equity cases," implies that a proceeding under this statute is a proceeding in equity. Bauer v. Bauer, 49 N. W. 418, 419, 2 N. D. 108.

"Other," as used in a statute providing that grants on entries and surveys made in the life of the late proprietor shall be made out in the same manner as is by law directed in case of other unappropriated lands, imports that the lands to which the entries in question relate are also unappropriated lands. Alexander v. Greenup (Va.) 1 Munf. 134, 144, 4 Am. Dec. 541.

Gen. St. 1878, c. 46, § 3, provides that the share of real property taken by a surviving husband or wife shall be subject, in proportion with the "other" real estate, to the decedent's debts. Held, that the term "other" implies that the real estate which is to share with it the burden of paying debts is also the property of the deceased, which would not include property conveyed by him or her during life. Goodwin v. Kumm, 45 N. W. 853, 854, 43 Minn. 408.

As used in Pub. St. c. 27, § 10, providing that city councils might appropriate a small sum for arms, for the celebration of holidays, and for other public purposes, "other" implies that the celebration of holidays is a public purpose within the meaning of the act, and indicates that purposes which are "public" only in that sense are included within its scope, although they look more obviously to increase the picturesqueness and interests of life than to the satisfaction of rudimentary wants, which alone were generally recognized as necessary. Hubbard v. City of Taunton, 5 N. E. 157, 140 Mass. 467.

"Other," as used in a charter of the city of St. Paul (Sp. Laws 1874, c. 1, § 3) conferring power to establish markets and "other" public buildings, shows that markets was used in a restricted sense, to designate public buildings erected and devoted to the use of receiving for sale and purchase such marketable articles for daily use and consumption as might be wanted to supply the inhabitants of the city. City of St. Paul v. Traeger, 25 Minn. 248, 253, 83 Am. Rep. 462.

The phrase "other intoxicating drinks," in 28 St. 697, prohibiting the sale of any vinous, malt, or fermented liquor, or of any other intoxicating drinks whatsoever, is to be construed, not as showing that the vinous, malt, or fermented liquor must be intoxicating, but rather as showing that the sale of such liquors is prohibited, whether intoxicating or not. United States v. Cohn, 52 S. W. 33, 45, 2 Ind. T. 474.

As indefinite term.

Where an indictment charged an act to have been done by violence and other means, the words "other means," though if used alone would render the charge too indefinite, being used in connection with other words, were merely surplusage. State v. Haney, 19 N. C. 390, 404.

The words "goods, wares, chattels, implements, fixtures, tools, and other personal property," in a chattel mortgage so describing the mortgaged property, are insufficient in failing to identify any particular property so that it can be known as to what it is intended to apply. Buskirk v. Cleveland (N. Y.) 41 Barb. 610, 611.

The phrase "other weapons of like kind and description," in an indictment charging that the defendant carried concealed about his person brass knuckles or other weapons of like kind or description, which alternative statement is authorized by Code, § 3779, is sufficiently definite to authorize a conviction for carrying any firearms, a knife, instrument, or other weapon which may be proved to fall within the class prohibited—"or of like kind or description." Bell v. State, 8 South. 133, 89 Ala. 61.

"Other philosophical or philanthropic purposes," as used in a devise to trustees of property, to be by them applied for the promotion of agricultural or horticultural improvements, or other philosophical or philanthropic purposes, means purposes which are not dissimilar in character from the purpose specified. Rotch v. Emerson, 105 Mass. 431, 433.

Other accidental causes.

"Accidental causes," within the meaning of Rev. St. §§ 4336-4338, forbidding interstate carriers of animals from confining them more than 28 consecutive hours without unloading for rest, water, and feeding, unless prevented by storm or other accidental causes, does not include an accident to a train due to negligence. The meaning of the general words "other accidental causes" must be ascertained by referring to the preceding special words. The rule "noscitur a sociis" is clearly applicable. A storm is unavoidable in the sense that it cannot be prevented. "Other accidental causes" must be taken to mean "other unavoidable causes." Newport News & M. V. Co. v. United States, 61 Fed. 483, 490, 9 C. C. A. 579.

Other action.

The term "other action," in a statute limiting every possessory, ancestral, mixed, or other action for any lands, tenements, or hereditaments or lease for a term of years, includes an action in the nature of a writ of right, though a writ of right is omitted from the section, and was in a former section from which the act was copied. Ellis v. Murray, 28 Miss. (6 Oushm.) 129, 142.

Other actionable injury.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, defines a "personal injury" as including libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction, and malicious prosecution; also assault, battery, false imprisonment, "or other actionable injury to the person." Held, that the phrase "other actionable injury" should be construed as if it had read "other similar actionable injury," and hence did not include an action against the master to recover personal injuries sustained through the negligence of a servant, and in such case there was no right to an order of arrest under sections 1487 and 549, authorizing arrest in action for personal injuries. Lasche v. Dearing, 58 N. Y. Supp. 58, 59, 23 Misc. Rep. 722.

Other acts.

All other acts, see "All."

"Other acts," as used in a municipal charter authorizing the municipality to do certain specified acts and all "other acts" as natural persons, "must necessarily be restrained to such other acts as are authorized by its charter, or the statutes of the state applicable to the city, if any, and cannot be construed to remove all the limitations inseparable from corporate existence, and to confer upon the city authority to engage in business of a private nature, or to make its powers commensurate with those of natural persons. It is not, therefore, an express power to borrow money or to issue commercial paper." Gause v. Clarksville (U. S.) 10 Fed. Cas. 98, 98.

"Other acts," as used in the charter of a school board authorizing it to sue for and be sued, and to purchase, receive, and hold property, real and personal, to lease, sell, and dispose of the same, and do all "other acts" as natural persons, means other acts within the powers specifically granted, but not specified, and which are necessary to be done in connection with the execution of the enumerated powers. It does not authorize such school board to issue bonds for the erection of a schoolhouse. Erwin v. St. Joseph Board of Public Schools (U. S.) 12 Fed. 680, 682.

Other agricultural product.

The term "other agricultural product or property," in a statute in reference to injuries to growing fruit, corn, grain, or "other agricultural product or property," real or personal, of any description whatever, cannot be construed to include products other than agricultural. Murray v. State, 2 S. W. 757, 762, 21 Tex. App. 620, 57 Am. Rep. 623.

Other alienations.

The words "other alienations," in Laws 1858, p. 236, §§ 1, 2, exempting a homestead, and providing that such exemption shall not extend to a mortgage lawfully obtained, but such mortgage or "other alienation" of such land by the owner thereof shall not be valid without the signature of the wife of the owner, applies to all alienations, and includes a deed executed by a husband alone, and therefore such deed is void. Schermerhorn v. Williams, 8 Pac. 199, 202, 34 Kan. 108.

Other amounts due.

"Other amounts due," as used in warehouse receipts for whisky in barrels, providing that it should be delivered after payment of the United States internal revenue tax and all "other amounts due," means proper warehouse charges, as, for instance, the storage charges. State Bank of City of New York v. Waterhouse, 38 Atl. 904, 906, 70 Conn. 76, 68 Am. St. Rep. 82.

Other animals.

The words "other animals," as used in Rev. St. § 4386 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2996], providing that "no railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of a road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one state to another," etc., shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a longer period than 28 consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding for a period of at least 5 consecutive hours, are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace horses and mules, though horses and mules are not named in the statute. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. American Exch. Bank, 23 S. E. 935, 837, 22 Va. 495, 44 L. R. A. 449; United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (U. S.) 15 Fed. 480, 481.

In the statute requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks and build cattle guards, and providing that "until fences, opening gates, and farm crossings, and cattle guards as aforesaid shall be made and maintained such corporation shall be liable in double the amount of damages which shall be done by its agents, engines or cars to horses, cattle, mules or other animals on such road," the words "other animals" include sheep and hogs. Henderson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 81 Mo. 605, 607, 608.

Other annual profits of estate.

A will provided that a legatee should receive rents, with timber felled, and "other annual profits" from a certain estate, due the testator at the time of his decease. Held, that tiles and bricks made on the estate from the soil thereof, and brick earth already prepared at the time of testator's death, passed to the legatee, the testator having given a key to the meaning of all "other annual profits" by coupling these words with the phrase "with timber felled." Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Sim. 212, 222.

Other articles.

"Other articles or things not prohibited by law," within the meaning of Act March 19, 1882, exempting from taxation all machinery used for the manufacture of cotton or woolen goods, yarns, or fabrics composed of these or other materials, or for the making of all kinds of machinery or implements of husbandry, or of all other things or articles not prohibited by law, by a well-known rule of statutory interpretation must be referred to the particular words which they immediately follow, and cannot include only articles or things ejusdem generis with those specifically enumerated, unless the text clearly requires that the general words shall be construed in their larger signification. The term does not include ice factories. Greenville Ice & Coal Co. v. City of Greenville, 10 South. 574, 575, 69 Miss. 86.

"Other article," as used in Rev. St. § 4963, providing that every person who shall insert or impress a notice of copyright, or words of the same import, in or upon any book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph or "other article" for which he has not obtained a copyright shall be liable to a penalty, does not mean any articles, whether copyrighted or not, but must be taken as limited to other articles which in preceding sections have been described as the proper subject of copyright, a part of which only are expressly enumerated in this section. Rosenbach v. Dreyfuss (U. S.) 2 Fed. 217.

In construing a statute providing that there shall be exempt from taxation and license the capital, machinery, and other property employed in the manufacture of furniture and other articles of wood, the courts say that the word "other," as qualifying articles of wood, contributes to give a restrictive sense to the words "articles of wood," and satisfies our mind that the articles of wood contemplated are such as furulture and other like articles. Carre v. City of New Orleans, 6 South. 893, 895, 41 La. Ann. 995.

"Other articles," as used in 14 Stat. § 14, providing that there shall be excepted from the operation of this section the necessary household and kitchen furniture, and such "other articles" and necessities of such bankrupt, etc., is a very indefinite expression, and might include family pictures, watches, or clocks, and many other things of small value, but cannot be construed as including things of considerable value, when used only as things of ornament or pleasure, as gold watches or pianos, and the like. In re Thiell (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 917, 918; In re Williams (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 1820.

"Other articles and necessities," as used in a statute relating to the property of a bankrupt which should be taken possession of by his assignee, and providing that there should be exempt from the operation of such statute the necessary household and kitchen furniture, and such "other articles and necessities" of such bankrupt as the assignee should designate and set apart, having reference in the amount to the family, condition, and circumstances of the bankrupt, but altogether not to exceed a certain specified value, means only that description of property which is palpably of an immediate necessity to the bankrupt or his family, and has relation to things not precisely furniture or wearing apparel, but manifestly useful to the individual or his family, in a like sense. "Provisions in the house, the common implements or tools of trade by which a day's support is gained, may justly be ranked in that class," and the auction stand and flags, as things in daily use necessary to the business of the bankrupt, fairly fall within the catalogue of articles that may be exempted, but a fowling piece, pistol, fishing tackle, paintings, etc., or watch, are not necessities within the purview of the act. In re Ludlow, 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 822, 823.

Act Nov. 30, 1865, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the better protection of religious meetings, agricultural fairs and other lawful assemblages of the people,' approved March 3, 1859" (Acts 1865, Sp. Sess. p. 201), provided that no person not the owner of the real estate, and not carrying on his regular business at the usual place of transacting the same, shall sell or offer for sale any drinks "or other articles" within a mile of the place where such assemblage is being held. Held, that the intention of the statute was not alone to prevent the sale of drinks nearer the locus of such public assemblage, but the term "other articles" had a broad signification, and included within the prohibition the keeping of an eating house and stand by an itinerant vender, though he sold articles intended to be drank and eaten not mentioned in the statute by name. State v. Solomon, 33 Ind. 450, 452.

"Other articles," as used in an assignment to a trustee for the benefit of creditors of certain specified property and other articles, is equivalent to the phrase "all other articles." Dowdel v. Hamm (Pa.) 2 Watts, 61, 64.

The general borough law of Pennsylvania of 1851 (Purd. Dig. 202, pl. 58) gives to all boroughs "the power to make all regulations respecting markets and market days, the hawking and peddling of market produce and other articles in the borough," etc. In construing this provision, the court said: "The peddling of 'other articles' beside market produce includes everything which may be disposed of by the method called hawking and peddling, and we cannot say that this does not include canvassing from house to house, and soliciting orders for books." Borough of Warren v. Geer, 11 Atl. 415, 416, 117 Pa. 207.

"Other articles of traffic," within the meaning of a statute making it a misdemeanor to expose to sale or gift any spirituous or other liquors, or any provisions, or "other articles of traffic" in certain places, is not to be restricted to articles of like nature to those enumerated, but the prohibition is against exposing to sale or gift any article of traffic, the enumeration being merely of such articles as would be most likely to be exposed and most obnoxious to the prohibition. Riggs v. State, 75 Tenn. (7 Lea) 475, 476.

Other bailee.

The meaning of the words "other bailee" in Wag. St. p. 469, § 37, making it criminal for any carrier or "other bailee" to embezzle, etc., is not limited by the rule of ejusdem generis to apply only to carriers. State v. Broderick, 7 Mo. App. 19, 20.

Other bank.

The charter of a bank provided that promissory notes made payable at the principal office of that bank or at any of its branches "or any other bank" shall be placed on the footing of foreign bills of exchange indorsed to and delivered to the charter bank. Held, that the term "other bank" meant only incorporated or legalized banks, and was not intended to include mere private institutions. Campbell's Ex'r v. Farmers' Bank of Kentucky, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 152, 155.

Other beasts.

In United States v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 (Gil. 226), it was held that the malicious killing of a dog was not an indictable offense under a statute providing that every person who shall willfully and maliciously kill, maim, or disfigure any horses, cattle, or "other beasts" of another person shall be punished, etc. Patton v. State, 19 S. E. 784, 93 Ga. 111, 24 L. R. A. 732.

Other beverages.

Laws 1885, p. 151, § 1, entitled "An act to protect the property of manufacturers, bottlers, and dealers in mineral waters, soda water, and other beverages from loss of syphons, bottles, and boxes," does not protect the manufacturer of a liquid preparation used as a beverage, and known as "Wild Cherry Bitters," since the words, "or other beverages," as used in the act, refer to the class known as "mineral waters" or "soda water." State v. Dinnisse, 19 S. W. 92, 98, 109 Mo. 484.

Other buildings.

See "Building."

"Other building," within the meaning of a statute making it burglary for any person to break or enter any shop, store, booth, tent, warehouse, or other building, means a building of like kind with those enumerated, and does not therefore embrace a chicken house. State v. Schuchmann, 38 S. W. 85, 86, 84 S. W. 842, 133 Mo. 111. Contra, see Gillock v. People, 49 N. E. 712, 713, 171 Ill. 307; State v. Rogers, 39 Pac. 219, 220, 64 Kan. 683, deciding that a courthouse was included.

Other business, trade, avocation, or profession.

"Other business," as used in Act 1872, designed to secure money due for labor and services rendered by any miner, mechanic, laborer, or clerk from any person or persons or charter company employing clerks, miners, mechanics, or laborers, either as owners, lessees, contractors, or underowners of any works, mines, manufactory, or "other business" where clerks, miners, or mechanics are employed, is not sufficiently comprehensive to embrace cutting and driving logs. The preceding words designating particular branches of business with which the idea of permanency and completeness in a certain sense is always associated control the meaning of the more general expression, "other business," used in immediate connection therewith. The other business is ejusdem generis with that more particularly described by the preceding words of the context, business of the same general character, and not embracing every species of employment in which the services of others may be rendered. Appeal of Pardee, 100 Pa. 408, 412.

Act June 13, 1883, amends Act April 9, 1872, so as to greatly enlarge the classes of employes whose wages due from any person or persons or chartered company employing clerks, miners, mechanics, or laborers, either as owners, lessees, contractors, or underowners of any works, mines, manufactory, or "other business," shall be a lien on the property, and entitled to a preference in payment. Held, that the words "or other business" in the act of 1883 should not be limited to business of the same general nature as those specifically enumerated, which was the construction given to the act of 1872, but the class of employers is enlarged, by necessary implication, to correspond with the classes of employes enumerated in the act, and the words "other business," in the act, include all kinds of business in which any of the classes of employes named in the act are engaged. Sproul v. Murray, 27 Atl. 303, 304, 156 Pa. 293.

The term "other business," in the act of April 9, 1872, as amended by the act of June 13, 1883, making the wages of employes in certain designated businesses and other business a preferred claim, does not include the business of a skating rink, as the statute makes no reference to places of amusement. Merriam v. Mullett, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 330, 362.

"Other business, trades, avocations or professions," within the meaning of a statute conferring upon the city of St. Joseph the power of licensing, taxing, and regulating auctioneers, grocers, commission merchants, retailers, merchants, hotel and inn keepers, boarding houses, public buildings, public grounds, concerts, photographers, artists, agents, porters, runners, drummers, public lecturers, public meetings and shows, real estate agents and brokers, horse and cattle dealers, beerhouses, patent right dealers, inspectors, gaugers, stock yard and wagon yard proprietors, mercantile agents and insurance agents, banking and other corporations and institutions, street railroad cars, coaches, omnibuses, carts, drays, job wagons, ice wagons, and other vehicles, and all other business, trades, avocations, or professions whatsoever, does not include an abstractor of titles, though it may be admitted that the words are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace the avocation if they were considered as standing alone, independent of the preceding parts of the section and other provisions of the statute in pari materia; but it is among the well-recognized rules of construction that, when a particular enumeration of words is followed by general terms or words, the latter are to be understood as limited in their scope and application to the business and thing of the same kind and character as those specified in the preceding part. City of St. Joseph v. Porter, 29 Mo. App. 605-668.

The words "all other business, trades, avocations or professions," in St. Louis City Charter, authorizing the city by ordinance to license, tax, and regulate auctioneers, grocers, merchants, retailers, hotels, boarding houses, tenement houses, office buildings, public halls, public grounds, concerts, photographers, artists, agents, porters, runners, drummers, public lecturers, public meetings and shows, real estate agents and brokers, horse and cattle dealers, beerhouses, patent right dealers, inspectors and gaugers, stockyard proprietors, examiners of titles, conveyancers, mercantile agencies, insurance companies, banking or other incorporations or institutions, street railroad cars, hackney carriages, omnibuses, carts, drays, and all other vehicles, and "all other business, trades, avocations or professions" whatever, cannot be made to include persons not of the same generic character or class as the enumerated persons, and therefore the charter does not authorize the city to license lawyers. City of St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559, 564.

Other cars.

"Other cars," as used in Laws 1898, c. 220, providing that every railroad company shall be liable for injuries caused by negligence to employes engaged in operating passenger or freight or other trains, engines, or cars, will include hand cars, and not merely cars used in operating trains on the road, under the rule ejusdem generis. Benson v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 77 N. W. 798, 799, 75 Minn. 163, 74 Am. St. Rep. 444.

Other cases.

"Other cases," as used in Act 1886, § 17, giving a right of appeal in all actions, suits, controversies, etc., on cases arising under any law of the United States granting or conferring on inventors the exclusive right to their inventions when the sum in dispute is below the value of $2,000, and in all "other cases" in which the court shall deem it reasonable to allow the same, refers to the cases described in that section and in which the matter in dispute is below $2,000. Wilson v. Sanford, 51 U. S. (10 How.) 99, 101, 13 L. Ed. 844.

The words "powers usual in other cases" in How. Ann. St. c. 93, § 10, providing that, on the report of the commissioners appointed by a court of record to ascertain the damages sustained by the owners of real estate taken by railway companies, the court on motion shall confirm the same, unless, for good cause shown by either party, "said court, as to the confirmation of such report, shall have the powers usual in other cases," refers to the powers of courts in the confirmation of reports made to such court by some body or person authorized by law to make them in accordance with the known practice of the court; and since neither the practice in chancery causes with reference to the confirmation of reports made by court commissioners or other officers of the court, nor the statute provisions with relation to the reports of commissioners of the court, extends further than to the mere setting aside of the reports for exceptions thereto, and does not authorize the appointment of new or different commissioners, the words "power usual in other cases" meant the power to set aside by the court, but not to appoint new commissioners. Bachus v. Gartner, 50 N. W. 646, 650, 89 Mich. 209.

Other casualty.

"Other casualty," as used in Rev. St. § 3221, abating tax on distilled spirits destroyed while in a bonded warehouse by fire or other casualty, means an accidental destruction by some cause of like character and operation as fire, such as lightnings, floods, cyclones, storms, or some uncontrollable force which ordinary foresight and prudence could not guard against nor prevent, and hence spirits lost by the warping of barrels from unusual and excessive heat, abnormal evaporation caused by such heat, or the existence of undiscoverable wormholes within the barrels, was not a loss within the meaning of the statute. Crystal Spring Distillery Co. v. Cox (U. S.) 49 Fed. 555, 559, 1 C. C. A. 365.

Other causes.

As used in Gen. Laws 1865, c. 189, § 2, authorizing the board of supervisors of M. county to remove an inspector of the house of correction for certain specified causes or "other causes" satisfactory to said board, "other causes" is to be considered as meaning "other kindred cause showing that it is improper that the incumbent should be retained in office." State v. McGarry, 21 Wis. 496, 498.

"Other causes," as used in a report of appraisers appointed to fix the full amount of the loss, and stating that taking into consideration the condition of the property, and making deductions for depreciations and "other causes," will be held to mean, under the maxim of ejusdem generis, such causes as might tend to fix the full amount of such loss, and to aid them in making an award equivalent to damages sustained. Stemmer v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 58 Pac. 498, 501, 83 Or. 65.

The "other causes" mentioned in a statute giving a wife the privileges of a free trader whenever her husband, from drunkenness, profligacy, or "other cause," shall neglect or refuse to provide for his wife, or shall desert her, does not apply to the temporary inability of the husband to support his wife by reason of sickness. "There must be a desertion or a neglect or refusal upon the part of the husband, something that involves the willful nonperformance of a duty on his part." King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. 365, 369, 30 Am. Rep. 364.

Other choses in action.

As used in Rev. St. § 629, declaring that no circuit court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or "other chose in action" in favor of an assignee unless the suit might have been prosecuted in such court if no assignment had been made, the phrase "other chose in action" is broad enough to comprehend any claim, whether liquidated or not, which is the subject of assignment, and did not confine the scope of the section, therefore, to choses in action evidenced by transferable paper. Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. S. 659, 665, 26 L. Ed. 1186.

Other children.

"Other children," as used in a will providing that after the death of the decedent's wife the estate should be divided among their surviving children, the sons' shares to be given to them absolutely, and the shares of the daughters to be assigned to a trustee and the income applied to the benefit of the daughters and their husbands during life, and after their death the trust property to vest in their respective issue, if any, and, if none, to "go to my other children or their issue," should not be construed to mean all of the testator's children, but to mean those who survive the son or daughter so dying. Lee v. Welch, 89 N. E. 1112, 1118, 168 Mass. 812.

The words "other children," in a will in which testator devises certain of his lands to his son A. and other lands to his son C., and providing, if the sons should die, or either of them, without child or children, the real estate given to them or either of them should go to testator's other children, share and share alike, were construed to include one of the sons who died leaving a child. Brooks v. Kipp, 35 Atl. 658, 661, 54 N. J. Eq. 462.

Other civil proceedings.

"Other civil proceedings," as used in Code 1851, includes all proceedings for special relief which cannot be included within the term "civil or criminal actions," and the words are intended to represent proceedings of a special or independent character, such as contempt, injunction, mandamus, information, etc. Kramer v. Rebman, 9 Iowa, 114, 118.

Other conditions.

A bill of lading stating that the goods are to be delivered on the payment of the agreed freight "and other conditions" means that before a consignee was entitled to delivery he was bound to make a payment beyond the freight, and to make other payments specified in the charter party, such as demurrage, when demurrage is mentioned therein. Smith v. Sieveking, 4 E. & B. 945, 951.

Other contracts.

"Other contracts," within the meaning of Code, § 2594, providing that actions on promissory notes, bonds, or other contracts, express or implied, for the payment of money, must be prosecuted in the name of the party really interested, whether he has the legal title or not, includes contracts of fire insurance. Insurance Co. of North America v. Forchheimer, 5 South. 870, 875, 88 Ala. 541.

Other contrivance.

Under Act March 25, 1886, making it a felony to set up, carry on, or conduct a keno bank, faro bank, or other machine or contrivance used in betting, it is held that the term "other machine or contrivance" must, under the rule of ejusdem generis, be limited to such as are similar in character to a faro or keno bank, and that hence the game of oonts, played with dice on a table or other surface, by betters, does not come within the meaning of the term "other machine or contrivance." Commonwealth v. Kammerer (Ky.) 18 S. W. 108.

Other corporations.

Comp. Laws 1871, c. 180, § 9, provides that, when any judgment shall be recovered against any turnpike or "other corporation" authorized to receive toll, the franchise of such corporation may be taken on execution, etc. Section 13 provides that the officer's return shall transfer to the purchaser all the privileges belonging to such corporation so far as relates to the right of demanding toll, and the officer shall deliver possession of all the toll houses and gates belonging to such corporation. Held, that the words "other corporation," as used in section 9, when read in connection with section 13, meant other corporations having tollhouses and tollgates of the same general nature and kind as turnpike and toll-road corporations, and hence did not include nor apply to telephone companies. Ripley v. Evans, 49 N. W. 504, 507, 87 Mich. 217.

The words "other corporations," in Acts 1877, p. 188, entitled "An act to secure the payment of wages or salaries to certain employes of railway, canal steamboat, and other corporations," and giving such employes a prior lien on the franchises, etc., of the companies, must be construed, by the maxim "nosctur a sociis," to mean corporations ejusdem generis. If we give the title the broad signification claimed for it by the appellants, and make the words "other corporations" mean corporations of every class, as well as corporations for transportation purposes, the title of the act would not express its object, and the act would be obnoxious to the constitutional requirement. Crowther v. Fidelity Ins., Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. (U. S.) 85 Fed. 41, 42, 29 C. C. A. 1. See, also, Fidelity Ins. & Safe Deposit Co. v.

Shenandoah Iron Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 372, 377. Hence the act, in attempting to give a prior lien to employees of mining and manufacturing companies, was unconstitutional as not expressing such object in the title. Fidelity Ins. & Safety Deposit Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co. (U. S.) 42 Fed. 372, 377.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1276, providing that any religious, benevolent, literary, scientific, "or other corporation," or any corporation having or being known by the name of any benevolent or charitable society, may apply to the superior court for a change in its corporate name, is not restricted in its application to corporations of the kind especially enumerated, but applies also to corporations organized for profit. In re La Societe Francaise d'Epargnes et de Prevoyance Mutuelle, 123 Cal. 525, 530, 56 Pac. 458, 460.

Other costs.

The phrase "other costs," in a note for a certain sum with attorney's fees and other costs in case the holder is obliged to enforce payment at law, renders the note nonnegotiable, since it cannot be construed as simply referring to the legal costs collectible in case of an action fixed and determined by statute. Such phrase renders the amount due uncertain. Johnson v. Schar, 70 N. W. 838, 839, 9 S. D. 536.

Other counsel.

"Other counsel," as used in Cr. Prac. Act, § 354, providing that the district attorney or other counsel for the people must open the cause and offer the evidence in support of the indictment, means private counsel. People v. Biles, 6 Pac. 120, 121, 2 Idaho (Hask.) 114.

Other court.

As used in Rev. St. p. 615, §§ 1, 5, providing that actions arising under the ordinance of a town should be brought before a justice of the peace residing within the town, or, if there were none such, then before any justice of the peace of the county or other court of competent jurisdiction, "other court" means some one already established by existing law, such as the probate court. People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412, 415.

Other craft.

"Other craft," as used in 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 75, § 37, forbidding any person not a free-man to navigate on certain waters any wherry, lighter, or other craft, meant craft of the same kind as wherry or lighter, and would not include a steam tug, though such vessel might ordinarily be included within the term "craft." Reg. v. Reed, 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 138, 139.

Rev. St. § 4426 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8029], declaring that the hull and boilers of every ferry boat, canal boat, yacht, or "other small craft of like character" propelled by steam shall be inspected, should not be construed to apply to a small pleasure boat 26 feet long and 7 feet wide, without deck, propelled by a small steam engine with a cylinder of 9 inches stroke and 8½ inches diameter, run occasionally by its owners for amusement on Buffalo Bayou below Houston, Tex. United States v. The Mollie (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1290, 1292.

The term "boats, vessels and other craft," in St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 75, § 57, authorizing by-laws for the government of "boats, vessels and other craft" to be rowed or worked, includes steamboats. Tisdell v. Combe, 7 Adol. & E. 788, 796.

Other creditors.

In construing a clause in a composition agreement stating that, "in consideration of other creditors accepting a like percentage of their respective claims and demands against" the debtor "in full settlement and compromise thereof," the court said: "The term 'other creditors,' as here used, must be construed as meaning all other creditors." M. A. Seed Dry-Plate Co. v. Wunderlich, 69 Minn. 288, 72 N. W. 122, 123.

Other crime.

"Other crime," as used in Const. art. 8, § 8, which disfranchises all persons who shall have been convicted of treason, embezzlement, malfeasance in office, larceny, bribery, or other crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, while it applies to all felonies not specifically named, includes all grades of larceny or other offenses particularly named, whether felonies or misdemeanors. Anderson v. State, 72 Ala. 187, 189.

"Other crime," as used in the Constitution and laws of the United States and the statutes of Massachusetts relative to the surrender of fugitives from justice, means any offense indictable by the laws of the state demanding the surrender of the alleged criminal. In re Brown, 112 Mass. 409, 411, 17 Am. Rep. 114.

In construing the provision of the federal Constitution relating to the surrender of fugitives from justice by the states, the courts say that it is quite possible that the general term "other crime" in the Constitution should be limited, by the words which precede it, so as to include only crimes of a single genus—to those which may be denominated "felonies." In re Greenough, 81 Vt. 279, 287.

Other dangerous trade or business.

A covenant not to erect or permit upon the premises conveyed any brewery, distillery, or "other dangerous trade or business" should be construed to mean any business which is as dangerous as the business which is prohibited by express designation. Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 185, 141.

Other deadly weapon.

"Other deadly weapons of like kind," as used in Code, § 1005, making it indictable for one to carry concealed about his person any pistol, bowie knife, razor, or "other deadly weapon of like kind," means weapons similar in their deadly character to those enumerated. State v. Erwin, 91 N. C. 545, 547.

As used in St. § 1166, providing for the punishment of any person who shall willfully and maliciously cut, strike, or stab another with a knife, sword, "or other deadly weapon," the phrase "other deadly weapon" does not refer to guns, pistols, knives, or swords, or other deadly weapons mentioned therein, but embrace any deadly weapon with which a person might be wounded, by cutting or stabbing, not therein specifically referred to. Sprague v. Commonwealth, 58 S. W. 480, 481.

Other dependents.

"Other dependents," in Rev. St. § 972, providing that beneficial associations may include in their corporate powers the privilege of providing for the relief and aid of the families, widows, orphans, or other dependents of the deceased members, or assisting such as may be sick, etc., "are inserted to include persons who, not being either members of the family of the deceased nor his widow or orphans, are yet dependent upon him in some manner." Grand Lodge Order of Hermann-Soehne v. Elmer, 26 Mo. App. 108, 116.

Other depositories of filth.

"Other depositories of filth," as used in a city charter prohibiting the construction and maintenance of sinks, cesspools, or "other depositories of filth," means such depositories as are of the same nature as sinks or cesspools, and means such as are constructed to hold the waste matter, solid and fluid, until they are emptied by natural causes (as by percolation through the soil or by evaporation of the fluid matter) or by artificial means. Sprigg v. Town of Garrett Park, 43 Atl. 818, 815, 89 Md. 403.

Other disability.

In Rev. St. § 933, as amended by Act June 5, 1900, permitting the allowance and signing of the bill of expenses by another judge thereafter holding court when the judge before whom the cause was tried is, by reason of death or sickness or other disability, unable to allow and sign the same, "other disability" means disability of like character to death or sickness, by which the trial judge is disabled from the performance of judicial functions, and not a disability arising from temporary absence from the district or circuit. It means a physical or mental disability arising from either death, sickness, or insanity, or disorder of like character, by reason of which the judge was disabled from the performance of judicial functions. Western Dredging & Improvement Co. v. Heldmaier (U. S.) 111 Fed. 123, 125, 49 C. C. A. 264.

The term "other disability" was said by the court, in Cummings v. Clark, 15 Vt. 853, in construing the term as used in a statute giving an official board jurisdiction in case of a vacancy occurring in certain public offices from nonacceptance, death, removal, insanity, or "other disability," "to import such like disability as had been before enumerated; that is, such as wholly vacated the office and left it the same as if there had been no appointment." Turnipseed v. Hudson, 50 Miss. 429, 446, 19 Am. Rep. 15.

The phrase "other legal disabilities," in a limitation statute providing that if the owner of real estate shall, at the time of a judicial sale thereof, be a minor, insane, or under the legal disabilities, he shall have five years after such disability is removed in which to bring suit or action, does not embrace non-residents in the state, but, so far as it refers to absence, means out of the United States. Smith v. Bryan, 74 Ind. 515-518.

Other easement.

As used in 2 & 3 Wm. IV, c. 71, § 2, enacting that no claim which may be lawfully made at common law by custom, prescription, or grant to any way or "other easement," or to any water course or the use of any water, the words "other easement" mean any other ejusdem generis with the way—something that is to be exercised on or over the soil of the adjoining owner. Webb v. Bird, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 268, 286.

Other effects.

"Other effects," as used in a bequest after an enumeration of certain kinds of personalty, applies to things of the same kind as those enumerated, and a bequest of plate, linen, household goods, and "other effects" will not include money. Iverson v. Gassiot, 27 Eng. Law & Eq. 483, 487; Hotham v. Sutton, 15 Ves. 820, 826.

Where a testatrix gave her daughter all the plate, linen, household goods, and "other effects," money excepted, it was held that the words "other effects," following articles specified in general, included such things only as were ejusdem generis, but that the exception of money showed that the words were used in their most extended sense, as otherwise the exception would have been unnecessary. Tefft v. Tillinghast, 7 R. L. 434, 436.

A statute providing that every person who has, knowingly and designedly, by false pretense, obtained from any person any money, goods, or chattels, or "other effects" whatsoever, with intent to cheat or defraud any person, etc., shall be punished, etc., should be construed to embrace everything of a personal character not appropriately and strictly falling under the description of money or goods or chattels. They are equivalent to the words "or other valuable thing whatsoever." People v. Stone (N. Y.) 9 Wend. 182, 189.

Other emergency.

Where one of the rules for the regulation of a police force declared that, in case of fire, burglary, riot, or other emergency, the sergeant or patrolman who discovers the same shall immediately send information to the officer in command at the station, and immediately take such action as the case may require, held, that the phrase "other emergency" should be construed in the light of the preceding particular words, as meaning some offense of equal gravity. People v. Bell, 8 N. Y. Supp. 812, 813.

Other employés.

The phrase "other employés," as used in Pol. Code, § 1617, authorizing boards of education and trustees of school districts to employ teachers, "janitors, and other employés of the schools," and to fix and order paid their compensation, refers to persons employed in or about the several schools and school buildings in like character and capacity to those named, and does not authorize the employment of an attorney. Denman v. Webster (Cal.) 70 Pac. 1063, 1064.

Other erection or enclosure.

"Other," as used in Pen. Code, § 504, declaring that "the term 'building,' as used in this chapter, includes a railroad car, vessel, booth, tent, shop, or other erection or inclosure," is to be interpreted as including things of a similar nature to those already described by the specific words found in the statute. A stone vault in a cemetery, used for the interment of dead bodies, though wholly above ground, is not a building, within the meaning of the section of the Code defining burglary. People v. Richards, 108 N. Y. 137, 15 N. E. 371, 376, 2 Am. St. Rep. 373.

"Other erection," as used in a statute declaring it to be burglary to break into any railway car, vessel, booth, tent, or shop, or other erection or inclosure, would include a factory. People v. Block, 15 N. Y. Supp. 229, 230, 60 Hun, 533.

"Other inclosure," as used in an ordinance prohibiting licensed liquor dealers from constructing, with screens, curtains, partitions of any kind, any stall, booth, or other inclosure in any place or room in any building wherein intoxicating liquors are sold, will be held to mean other such like inclosure; and hence it does not prohibit the use of bars, cigar counters, and telephone inclosures; and is not, therefore, an unreasonable provision. State v. Barge, 84 N. W. 911, 913, 32 Minn. 253, 53 L. R. A. 423.

The term "or other inclosures," as used in a city ordinance prohibiting the construction of booths or other inclosures with screens or partitions connected with the saloon, includes an inclosure of such a nature that it may be used as a lounging room, where the parties may to some extent, if not entirely, be cut off from the view of the main part of the saloon. The result is not affected in the least by the fact that no door or curtain was hung at the opening, where the partition was sufficient to conceal, in whole or in part, the persons occupying the back room. State v. McGregor, 92 N. W. 509, 510, 38 Minn. 74.

Other error.

"Other error," as used in Act 1839, § 5, providing that the board of supervisors may correct any manifest clerical or "other error" in any assessments or returns made by any town officer to such board, means one of the same or like character as that particularly mentioned—some error not technically clerical—but a mistake of the same general nature, and not any more intimately connected with or affecting the propriety or legality of the assessment or the action of the assessors; some error of form. Hernance v. Ulster County Sup'rs, 71 N. Y. 481, 485.

Other estate.

In Act 1702, for securing estates given to charitable uses, enacting that all such lands, tenements, hereditaments, "and other estates" that have been or hereafter shall be given for the maintenance of the ministry, schools, etc., should be exempt from taxation, the words "other estates" are not meaningless, but may be construed to mean money, that being an estate other than lands. Atwater v. Inhabitants of Town of Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 223, 227, 16 Am. Dec. 43.

Other evidences of indebtedness.

Rev. St. c. 83, § 16, provides that actions on bonds, promissory notes, bills of exchange, written leases, written contracts, or other "evidences of indebtedness in writing" shall be commenced within ten years next after cause of action accrued. Held, that "other evidences of indebtedness in writing" as here used refers only to evidences of indebtedness of a similar nature to those particularly enumerated, and includes only contracts whereof the parties intended to put the evidence in writing at the time they were made, and hence can have no application to verbal contracts sought to be proved by subsequent admissions in writing. Wood

v. Williams, 81 N. E. 681, 142 Ill. 269, 84 Am. St. Rep. 79.

Other false and fraudulent means.

The words "other false and fraudulent means" in an indictment charging one with seducing an unmarried female by persuasion and promises of marriage and other false and fraudulent means, cannot be treated as mere surplusage. These words were vital, pregnant, and full of significance. They carried a distinct and serious charge against the accused not embraced in the averment that he had employed persuasion and promises of marriage. Pen. Code, § 8067, in defining the offense, says that it may be committed either by persuasion and promises of or by other false and fraudulent means; that is, means not consisting of mere persuasion accompanied by promises of marriage. Langston v. State, 85 S. E. 166, 167, 109 Ga. 153.

Other false pretenses.

In construing statutes providing that "every person who, with intent to defraud or cheat another, shall designedly, or by color of any false token or writing, or by any other false pretense, obtain from any person any money or valuable thing, shall be punished by imprisonment," the rule that the term "other," when used in a statute, means those things only which are of a kindred nature to those which are mentioned, has no application, because this statute does not attempt to enumerate the pretenses that shall be held criminal. False tokens are mentioned, but the term is general, not particular; and the same may be said of false writings. The idea suggested to the mind by them is something cognizable to the sight or touch. "Any other false pretense" is a specification equally general, and will embrace other classes. The court held that falsely representing oneself as a storekeeper was a false pretense, within the meaning of the statute. Higler v. People, 44 Mich. 299, 6 N. W. 664, 665, 88 Am. Rep. 267.

Other fees.

"Other fees," as used in Act 1846, § 7, for restricting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and requiring the defendant in an action for a violation of the act to advance the jury fee, and all "other fees" that may arise after the appeal, means such fees as arise for the services of the clerk of the court. Levant v. Varney, 82 Me. 180.

Other felony.

The words "other felony" in Rev. St. c. 83, § 23, which declares that an assault with intent to commit murder, rape, mayhem, robbery, larceny, or other felony shall subject the offender to imprisonment in the penitentiary, is not to be construed as limiting the act to felonies only, and thus to prevent an assault with intent to commit petty larceny from being within the statute, but it means any other felony except the particular felonies enumerated in the statute. Kelly v. People, 24 N. E. 56, 132 Ill. 363.

The term "or other felony," in Rev. St. § 4406, providing that any person who shall break in any building not adjoining or occupied as a dwelling house with intent to commit the crime of robbery, larceny, or other felony, shall be punished, etc., is not a limitation on what precedes, but is inserted to extend the scope of the section to other offenses not specifically named therein. The statute must be read as though instead of the words "or other felony" it had been written "or any other offense" for which the offender on conviction shall be liable by law to be punished by imprisonment in the state prison. It includes the breaking and entering with intent to commit petit larceny. Pooler v. State, 73 N. W. 336, 337, 97 Wis. 627; Hall v. State, 4 N. W. 1063, 1069, 48 Wis. 683.

Other final process.

The term "other final process," in Rev. St. Ind. 1881, providing that property not exceeding the value of $600, owned by any resident householder, shall not be liable to sale on execution, or any "other final process," covers a case where a plaintiff, whose entire property does not exceed $600, claims as exempt the demand in a suit, and enables him to defeat a judgment for a greater amount set up by defendant in the action as a set-off. Coppage v. Gregg, 1 Ind. App. 112, 115, 27 N. E. 570, 571, 572.

Under Chancery Act, c. 21, § 46, providing "that if there shall be no master in chancery, or commissioner to execute a decree, the same may be carried into effect by execution or other final process, according to the nature of the case," etc., the "other final process" must be understood to mean such final process as is the practice of the court of chancery to issue, which are ordinarily, besides executions, writs of attachment or sequestration, and writs of assistance, all of which must run in the name of the people of the state of Illinois. Armsby v. People, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 155, 159.

The term "other final process" in a constitutional provision exempting personal property from execution sale or other final process was held to be an exemption from garnishment; the court saying that "to hold otherwise would be a too narrow interpretation of the constitutional provision, founded in humanity and benevolence, and intended to secure an unfortunate debtor the means of livelihood free from the claims of creditors." Williamson v. Harris, 57 Ala. 40, 42, 29 Am. Rep. 707.

Other fixtures.

"Other fixtures for manufacturing purposes," as used in Rev. p. 669, providing that any fixed machinery or gearing, or "other fixtures for manufacturing purposes," should be considered a building for the purposes of the mechanic's lien law, is as comprehensive as the language will admit of. Whatever appliances may be used for the accomplishment of a given purpose through the use of fixtures in a manufacturing establishment come within its meaning. Hughes v. Lambertville Electric Light, Heat & Power Co., 32 Atl. 69, 53 N. J. Eq. (8 Dick.) 435.

Other forms of indebtedness.

Where a guaranty was given to cover open account or other forms of indebtedness, and remains in force until notice to the contrary in writing by the defendant, it was held that the phrase "other forms of indebtedness" was intended to embrace notes that might be given for goods sold after the accounts for them had become due. Burt v. Butterworth, 32 Atl. 167, 168, 19 R. I. 127.

Other fresh waters in the state.

"Other fresh waters of this state," within the meaning of Laws N. Y. 1879, c. 543, § 23, which forbids the catching of any fish except minnows by other means than by hook and line in certain waters of the state, including the American waters of the Niagara river above Niagara Falls, and in any other of the fresh waters of this state, or in the American waters of the St. Lawrence river, includes the American waters of the Niagara river below Niagara Falls. People v. Gillette, 11 N. Y. Supp. 461, 58 Hun, 602.

Other future election.

A bond of surety for a public officer during the time he continued in office in consequence of his election, or in consequence of "any annual or other future election," meant any future election other than annual, or whether annual or not; and therefore the bond covered a term to which such officer was elected by virtue of an amended statute whereby he was elected to the office during pleasure. Borough of Berwick upon Tweed v. Oswald, 3 Bl. & Bl. 653, 671.

Other gambling device, bank, table, machine, etc.

The term "other thing," in an ordinance providing that no person shall set up, keep, or maintain any E O, A B C, rolly-pooly, keno or faro table, faro bank, roulette, or other instrument, device, or thing, for the purpose of gaming, does not include a lottery or a policy shop, as general words in a penal statute, when following an enumeration of particulars, apply only to cases of the same nature as those expressly mentioned. Marquis v. City of Chicago, 27 Ill. App.

251, 253; Moore v. Same, 69 Ill. App. 571, 573.

Other device, within the meaning of the statute making it criminal to play at games by means of any one of certain designated gaming tables or "other device," means all devices of every kind or quality which have the capacity to be the instrument of playing games of chance upon or with, and includes playing cards. Eubanks v. State, 5 Mo. 450, 451.

The Code, which prescribes the punishment for playing or betting at any E O or A B C table, or at any "other table of like character," or roulette, etc., embraces any table on which visible, material, or mechanical means are employed to dispose of money or other articles of value by chance, under conditions of risk, and with the result of profit to one of the participants or loss to the other. Hence it would include a table on which are placed articles of merchandise of unequal values, the particular parcel disposed of in the given instance being determined by the revolutions of a spindle, and the stoppage of the same opposite the point where the article rests on the table, the uniform price of each turn of the spindle being 10 cents. Mims v. The State, 14 S. E. 712, 88 Ga. 458.

In Brown v. State, 40 Ga. 689, 692, the words of a penal statute, "any E O or A B C table or roulette table," or "other table of like character," were construed to embrace a table at which the game called "keno" was played, and it was held that the plain intent of the statute required such construction. Bethune v. State, 48 Ga. 505, 510.

In a statute providing that "whoever, with or without compensation, shall set up, carry on, or conduct, or shall aid and assist in setting up, carrying on, or conducting, a keno bank, faro bank, or other machine or contrivance used in betting, whereby money or other thing may be won or lost," the term "other machine or contrivance," under the rule of ejusdem generis, must be one similar in character with a faro or keno bank, and the playing of the game known as "craps" or "bontz," in which no machinery is used except two ordinary dice, which may be shaken up in the hand and rolled or thrown on the floor, ground, or a table, does not come within the meaning of the statute as "other machine or contrivance." Commonwealth v. Kammerer, 18 S. W. 108, 109, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 777, 778.

In construing Act Feb. 1, 1858, the first section of which prohibits all gambling with cards, while section 3 provides that every person who shall bid any money or other property at any "other" gaming table, bank, or device shall be punished, etc., the courts say that the word "other," as used in the third section, by construction must refer to some gaming table, bank, or gambling device not mentioned in the preceding sections of the act, and cannot, therefore, refer to gambling with cards. Remington v. State, 1 Or. 281, 282.

"Other gaming table or bank," in a statute prohibiting the maintenance of certain designated gaming banks and tables, or any "other gaming table or bank" of the like kind or of any description, under any other name or denomination whatever, with or without any name therefor, includes any gaming table or bank similar to the designated tables or banks, although they have no name. The words following the phrase, "any other gaming table or bank," are mere tautology, and serve no other purpose than to evince the extreme solicitude of the Legislature to prohibit all gaming tables or banks, whether with or without a name, manifesting the intention of treating the name as wholly immaterial and unnecessary to constitute the offense. Estes v. State, 10 Tex. 300, 307.

"Other gambling device," as used in Rev. St. § 1547, 1548, prohibiting betting on a faro bank, roulette, equality, keno, or on any "other gambling device," refers only to such gambling devices as are of a kindred nature to those specifically enumerated, and would not apply to a gun and target. State v. Bryant, 2 S. W. 886, 887, 90 Mo. 584.

The term "other gaming table or bank or any other gambling device," in a statute making it criminal to bet on certain specified games, or on any other gaming table or bank, or any other gaming device, includes the game of rondo. Randolph v. State, 9 Tex. 521-523.

The words "or other device," as used in Act Md. 1797, c. 110, punishing the keeping of certain gambling devices "or other device" for a gambling purpose, includes the game called "equality." United States v. Speeden (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 1280.

Other good and sufficient cause.

Under Comp. St. c. 40, § 11, authorizing the Governor to remove the superintendent of an insane asylum for malfeasance or "other good and sufficient cause," the language "other good and sufficient cause" should be held to mean causes of like nature, and affecting the competency or fitness of the person for the position he holds. State v. Hay, 68 N. W. 821, 823, 45 Neb. 321.

Rev. St. § 5078, providing that certain proof shall be made by the claimant testifying of his own knowledge, unless he is absent from the United States, or is prevented by "some other good cause," means some sufficient cause other than, or in addition to, mere absence from the state. In re Jackson (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 190, 193.

Other goods.

"Other goods," as used in a contract providing that a traveling salesman should receive on sales of tobacco manufactured by certain firms, and any other goods that might be agreed on by the parties, a certain compensation, mean the same class of goods, including cigars and tobacco. Callaway v. Boroughs (Tex.) 19 S. W. 611, 613.

Other governing body.

"Other governing body," as used in Laws 1897, c. 248, providing that, before any city shall be liable for damages for injuries, a claim for compensation must be presented to the council or other governing body, will be construed a body ejusdem generis, and will not mean the mayor or any other individual officer. Doyle v. City of Duluth, 76 N. W. 1029, 1030, 74 Minn. 157.

Other grain.

A charter party stipulating the rate of freight to be paid as 11 shillings per quarter of 480 pounds for India corn or other grain, referred to grain which would average 480 pounds to the quarter, and therefore excluded oats. Warren v. Peabody, 8 Man., G. & S. 800, 810.

Other great necessity.

"Other great necessity," as used in Acts 1858, § 4, providing that water companies shall furnish water, to the extent of their means, to the city and town, or city or town, in case of fire or other great necessity, free of charge, includes its use for irrigating the parks, squares, watering the streets, flushing the sewers, and in case of any other demand based on a requirement which is incidental to the discharge, by the supervisors of their duty as local legislators. The necessities thus mentioned are of a different class from those of the inhabitants as members of families. The extinguishing of fires is under the control of the city government, or of a department of the city government, in San Francisco, and is always under the direction of the local government. So is, or may be, the flushing of sewers, the sprinkling of streets, and the watering of parks. These things are certainly necessities, in the ordinary signification of the word. The word is not to be given the more narrow signification of the absolutely indispensable, for this would be to deprive it of all practical force or meaning. It is for uses of the character last mentioned—such as are incidental to the direct employment by the municipality of its governmental or police powers, as distinguished from the family uses of a portion of the inhabitants, for which the city may be called on to pay—that all water companies are required to furnish water free of charge. It is impossible further to classify these uses, or to say that one of them is a greater necessity than another. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 111-120.

Other house.

In a statute declaring that any person who "shall in the nighttime enter without breaking, or break and enter, either in the daytime or nighttime, any office, shop, storehouse, warehouse, banking house, or other house," with intent to commit certain specified crimes, he shall be punished, etc., the words "or other house" are sufficient to embrace a dwelling house. State v. McDonald, 9 W. Va. 456, 463.

The words "other house," as used in Gen. Code, § 4379, punishing the willful and malicious burning of another's barn, stable, or any other house, except the dwelling house, on a farm or plantation, not in a city, town, or village, etc., include a country church. Watt v. State, 61 Ga. 66, 67.

Other improvements.

Manuf. Dig. § 4402, recites that every mechanic, builder, artisan, workman, laborer, or other person who shall do work or labor upon, or furnish any material for, any building, erection, or other improvement on land, shall have a lien on such building, erection, or improvement, etc. Under this statute it is held that the expression "other improvement" can only be construed as referring to improvements of a character similar to those before mentioned, and not to authorize a lien for the planting and setting of a bridge. Eastern Arkansas Hedge Fence Co. v. Tanner, 53 S. W. 886, 887, 67 Ark. 156.

Other incidental expenses.

The organic act of Minnesota Territory, which pledges the general government to defray the expenses of a Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses, must be restricted to such expenses as were incidental to the Legislative Assembly and the printing of the laws. United States v. Smith (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 1139, 1143.

Other indebtedness.

The clause in a mortgage describing an indebtedness was as follows: "And to secure any notes that may be given for renewal of said notes, or any part thereof, or for any interest thereon, and any further advances or other indebtedness due, or that may hereafter become due," etc. The said notes were not described in the mortgage. Held, that the said notes and notes given in renewal thereof were not secured by the mortgage, and that the words "or other indebtedness due, or that may hereafter become due," mean indebtedness other than future advances or indebtedness, evidenced by promissory notes. Rowen v. Ratcliff, 39 N. E. 860, 862, 140 Ind. 393, 49 Am. St. Rep. 203.

Other institutions.

Under a statute authorizing municipal corporations to collect a license tax on manufacturing and other corporations or institutions, it is held that the words "other institutions" apply only to such as are of the same nature as manufacturing institutions; the court observing that where several particulars are named, followed by a more generic term, it is considered that the more generic term intends only other things ejusdem generis, or of the like kind. City of Joplin v. Leckie, 78 Me. App. 8, 12.

Other instrument.

The words "other instrument," as used in Pen. Code, § 476, declaring that every person who makes, passes, utters, or publishes, with intent to defraud, any note, check, or other instrument, are limited to the instruments of the class mentioned in the section, and do not include a deed. People v. Chretien, 70 Pac. 305, 306, 137 Cal. 450.

Other instrument for payment of money.

Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 649, subd. 2, providing that a levy on personal property capable of manual delivery, including a bond, promissory note, or other instrument for the payment of money, must be made by taking the same into actual custody, is to be interpreted as referring to instruments of similar character with bonds and promissory notes, such as are evidences of debt, and the title to which passes by delivery merely. It will not include a life insurance policy. Kratzenstein v. Lehman, 44 N. Y. Supp. 269, 19 Misc. Rep. 600.

"Other instruments," as used in Cr. Code, § 107, providing for the punishment of whoever shall pass or publish any fictitious bill, note, or check, purporting to be a bill, note, or check, or other instrument in writing for the payment of money or property of some individual, when in fact there shall be no such individual in existence, only includes such instruments as contain an absolute, unconditional promise or obligation to pay a sum of money or personal property. It would only include such instruments as are of the same class or kind as those mentioned. Shirk v. People, 11 N. E. 888, 889, 121 Ill. 61.

Other interest.

An insurance policy required "that the interest in property to be insured, if a leasehold interest, or other interest not absolute, shall be so represented and expressed in the policy," etc. Held, that the use of the word "other" would seem to indicate that by "interest not absolute" was meant something similar to a leasehold interest. Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 431, 3 Am. Rep. 149.

Other intoxicating beverage.

The term "other intoxicating beverage," in an information alleging that defendant sold wine, spirituous liquors, and other intoxicating beverages to a common drunkard, is not of the same import as the term "wine and spirituous liquors," and therefore the offense is charged in the alternative, and on that account the information is insufficient. Smith v. State, 19 Conn. 493-499.

Other joint-stock company.

"Other joint-stock company," as used in Code 1892, § 3758, providing that any bank or other joint-stock company, the capital stock of which is divided into shares, shall furnish the assessor a written statement of its stock and its market value, means all associations which have stock, and are also incorporated. State v. Simmons, 12 South. 477, 481, 70 Miss. 485.

Other jurisdiction.

Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 780, subd. 5, providing that all persons are competent to testify in criminal actions, except persons specifically mentioned, including "all persons who have been or may be convicted of felony in this state or in any other jurisdiction," the term "any other jurisdiction" does not refer simply to other jurisdictions in the same state, but to a conviction within any state of the United States. Pitner v. State, 5 S. W. 210, 214, 215, 28 Tex. App. 868.

Other kind of killing.

"Other kind of killing," within the meaning of the statute declaring that all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison and certain other enumerated methods of killing, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, or premeditated killing, shall be murder in the first degree, means any other kind of killing, not any other kind of such willful, deliberate, or premeditated killings as are of the same nature as the enumerated methods of killing. Commonwealth v. Jones (Va.) 1 Leigh, 598, 611; People v. Bealoba, 17 Cal. 889, 894.

Other laborer.

The Nevada statute exempting from execution two oxen, two horses, or two mules, and their harness, and one cart or wagon, by the use of which a cartman, hostler, peddler, teamster, or other laborer habitually earns his living, cannot be construed to include one engaged in the business of a livery stable keeper. The word "laborer" is confined to other laborers ejusdem generis with those named. Edgescomb v. His Creditors, 7 Pac. 533, 534, 19 Nev. 149. In construing a like statute, it is held that the term "other laborer" means a person who labors by and with the aid of his team, and not by the aid of a pick and shovel, or the implements of other trade or vocation. A clerk in a store at a stated salary, who had purchased a team mainly to furnish employment for his son, who was 17 years old, and by whom exclusively the team was used habitually in hauling freight for the store and for other parties, and in delivering goods from the store to customers, did not come within the words "or other laborer," within the meaning of the statute. Brusie v. Griffith, 84 Cal. 302, 306, 91 Am. Dec. 623. And a bankrupt whose occupation is that of a paper hanger, and who owns a horse and wagon, which he uses exclusively for the purpose of conveying his supplies, tools, etc., from his residence to the places where he has jobs of work, and without which he could not carry on his occupation at a profit, is entitled to claim such horse and wagon as exempt. In re Hindman (U. S.) 104 Fed. 331, 333, 43 C. O. A. 558.

"Other laborer," as used in St. 20 Geo. II, c. 19, conferring jurisdiction on justices of the peace to settle all dissensions arising between masters and mistresses, artificers, handicraftsmen, miners, clerks, keelmen, pitmen, glazemen, potters, and "other laborers employed for any certain time or in any other manner," includes laborers generally, and does not restrict the provision to those employed only in the trades enumerated. Lowther v. Fadnor, 18 East, 113, 124.

Other lands.

The words "other lands," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 477, providing that the lands and tenements of a debtor within the county where a judgment is entered shall be bound for the satisfaction thereof from the first day of the term at which judgment is entered, and all other lands as well as goods and chattels of the debtor shall be bound from the time they shall be seized in execution, refer not only to lands of the debtor within the county, but they have a broader application, and embrace exactly what the words imply in their ordinary signification, to wit, all other lands—all lands not falling within the other classes mentioned. Berkley v. Lamb, 1 N. W. 820, 823, 8 Neb. 392.

Other lawful business.

"Other lawful business," as used in Gen. St. 1866, c. 34, § 45, as amended by Laws 1873, c. 13, authorizing the formation of corporations for various kinds of business, specifically enumerated, or "other lawful business," means any kind of business for pecuniary profit not elsewhere provided for, and which might have been omitted from the previous particular enumeration. The phrase "or other lawful business" is not to be limited to a business of the same kind as those previously enumerated. Brown v. Corbin, 42 N. W. 481, 40 Minn. 508.

Other legacies.

The word "other," as used in a will providing that, in case the residuary estate should not amount to a certain sum, then the other legacies, except two certain ones, should abate in proportion, so that at all events a certain sum should be available for a certain purpose, should be construed in its ordinary sense, and according to its full and fair meaning, as comprehending all the other legacies, both general and specific. Moore's Ex'r v. Moore, 25 Atl. 403, 407, 50 N. J. Eq. (5 Dick.) 554.

Other legal merchandise.

A charter party provided that the charterer might load a full cargo of wool, tallow, bark, or any "other legal merchandise," the quantity of the bark, tallow, and hides not to exceed certain amounts, and the freight rate being specified for such enumerated articles, but not for other legal merchandise. It was held that, for the purpose of ascertaining what freight should be paid on "other legal merchandise," this term would be construed as applying only to goods ejusdem generis with those enumerated. Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 Man. G. & S. 791, 817.

Other lien.

"Other lien," as used in Laws 1882, c. 410, § 1818, as amended by Laws 1883, c. 278, providing that, where the claimant for a mechanic's lien is made a party defendant to any action brought to enforce any other lien, the notice of the pendency of such action must be filed by him or in his behalf, is broad enough to include a mortgage lien, and is not confined to mechanics' liens. Danniger v. Simonson, 22 N. E. 570, 575, 116 N. Y. 329.

Other machine.

Under Act March 25, 1886, making it a felony to set up, carry on, or conduct a keno bank, faro bank, or other machine or contrivance used in betting, it is held that the term "other machine or contrivance" must, under the rule of ejusdem generis, be limited to such as are similar in character to a faro or keno bank, and that hence the game of oontz, played with dice on a table or other surface by betters, does not come within the meaning of the term "other machine or contrivance." Commonwealth v. Kammerer, 18 S. W. 108, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 777.

Other manifest impediment.

Rev. St. § 1342 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 944], providing that no person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless, by reason of having absented himself, or of some "other manifest impediment," he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period, should be construed to mean only such impediments as operate to prevent the military court from exercising its jurisdiction over the offender, as, for instance, his being continuously a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, or of his being imprisoned under sentence of a civil court for crime, and the like; and hence, where a person accused of desertion has been within the jurisdiction of the court and amenable to justice for over two years, without being prosecuted, he is entitled to a discharge. In re Davison (U. S.) 4 Fed. 507, 509.

Other matters.

"Other matters," as used in a city charter requiring that copies of all resolutions and other matters shall be furnished to the mayor for consideration, means matters of a similar character to resolutions, of which there can only be ordinances. Erwin v. City of New Jersey, 37 Atl. 732, 733, 60 N. J. Law, 141, 64 Am. St. Rep. 534.

Other means.

"Other means," as used in Const. art. 8, § 4, providing that all other grants, gifts, and devises that have been or may hereafter be made to the state, and not otherwise appropriated by the terms of the grant, gift, or devise, the income arising from all the funds mentioned, together with all the rents of the unsold school lands, and such other means as the Legislature may provide, shall be exclusively applied to the support and maintenance of common schools in each school district in the state, includes any fund raised by taxation for school purposes, levied under legislative authority. Moneys raised by taxation for school purposes shall be exclusively applied to the support and maintenance of common schools in each school district in the state. State v. Walsh, 48 N. W. 263, 265, 31 Neb. 469.

The words "other means," in Comp. Laws, § 7557, providing that every person who shall set fire to any building mentioned in the preceding sections, or to any other material, with intent to cause any such building to be burned, or shall by any other means attempt to cause any building to be burned, shall be punished, etc., is to be construed as meaning some physical means, and the statute cannot be satisfied without some such act committed in person or through another, reaching far enough to amount to the commencement of the causation. The Legislature did not have it in mind, and did not design to denote and identify a mere invitation to burn. McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50, 55.

"Other means, instrument, or device," as used in 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 32, c. 38, par. 143, § 98, which provides a punishment for every person who shall obtain, etc., any money or property by means or by use of any false or bogus checks, or by any other means, instrument, or device, commonly called the "confidence game," should not be construed to refer exclusively to the obtaining of money or property by the use of false or bogus checks, or by the use of other false or bogus commercial paper, or paper of the same specific class as checks, but should be construed in connection with the words following, and apply to all cases of swindling in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler, which comes within the meaning of what is commonly called a "confidence game." Maxwell v. People, 41 N. E. 995, 997, 158 Ill. 248.

Const. art. 9, § 2, providing that such other means as the Legislature may provide shall be appropriated to the support of schools throughout the state, should be construed to include any fund arising from annual taxation for school purposes, levied under general laws passed for that purpose. The means intended include such as might be raised by taxation, and are not limited to such as might be made continuing and permanent. Crosby v. Lyon, 37 Cal. 242, 245 (citing District Tp. of City of Dubuque v. County Judge, 18 Iowa, 250).

Other memoranda.

"Other memoranda," as used in St. 1870, c. 132, providing that in an action by or against an executor, administrator, or other legal representative of a deceased person, in which his account books or other memoranda are used as evidence on either side, the party may testify in relation thereto, means the memoranda made by the deceased person, and is not broad enough to include any memoranda that are used in evidence by either party. Cary v. Herrin, 59 Mo. 861, 864.

Other mine.

An inclosure act recited that defendant should hold and enjoy all manorial rights to certain premises, and also to mines, minerals, and quarries, with liberty of granting to any person a way over or along the commons or waste land intended to be allotted and inclosed, and to perform any other necessary work in the leading and carrying away said mines, minerals, and quarries, and also for the leading, carrying, and conveying the coals and the "produce of any other mines and minerals" over or under any other lands whatsoever. Held, that the words "produce of any other mines and minerals" did not mean the produce of mines and minerals other than coals, but produce of mines and minerals other than the mines, minerals, and quarries before mentioned. Bowes v. Ravensworth, 6 J. Scott, 512, 522.

Other moneyed capital.

"Other moneyed capital," as used in Rev. St. U. S. § 5219 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8502], providing that the shares of national bank stock may be taxed to the owners thereof by the states at a rate not greater than is assessed upon "other moneyed capital" in the hands of individual citizens of the state, "other moneyed capital" means such capital as, in its use, comes into competition with the business of national banks. Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Trenton v. Baker, 48 Atl. 582, 65 N. J. Law, 549 (citing First Nat. Bank of City of Aberdeen v. Chehalis County, 168 U. S. 444, 17 Sup. Ct. 629, 41 L. Ed. 1069; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. City of New York, 121 U. S. 188, 7 Sup. Ct. 828, 30 L. Ed. 895).

The word "other," in such statute, requires that the words "moneyed capital" include shares in national banks. First Nat. Bank of Wilmington v. Herbert (U. S.) 44 Fed. 158, 159.

Other moneys.

The term "other moneys," in Rev. St. 1887, § 3977, providing that any officer or person collecting or receiving money, fines, forfeitures, or other moneys, and refusing to pay over the same, shall forfeit double the amount, means other moneys of similar or like character to fines or forfeitures, and therefore the section does not apply to a retiring treasurer of a school district who fails to pay over a general balance of money in his hands. People v. Dolan, 89 Pac. 752-754, 5 Wyo. 245.

Other municipal boards.

The words "other municipal boards," as used in a statute providing that no member of any board of aldermen, township committee, or other municipal board or body, shall during the time for which he is elected be eligible for any office, is not governed by the rule of ejusdem generis, and limited to legislative bodies, but the words include any municipal board invested with governmental functions, whether legislative or administrative. State v. Board of Education of City of Bayonne, 23 Atl. 670, 671, 54 N. J. Law (25 Vroom) 318.

Other necessary officers.

Const. art. 4, § 32, requiring the Legislature to provide for the election of certain state and county officers, and other necessary officers to be elected, instead of being appointed, applies only to officers similar to those previously enumerated in the section, and not to legislative officers, officers of the militia, and other officers belonging to different classes from those mentioned. State v. Clarke, 31 Pac. 545, 546, 21 Nev. 333, 18 L. R. A. 813, 87 Am. St. Rep. 517.

Other necessary town charges.

"Other necessary town charges," as used in Rev. St. 1857, c. 3, § 28, providing that the qualified voters of the town may raise such sums as are necessary for the maintenance and support of schools and the poor, for making and repairing highways and townways and bridges, for purchasing and fencing burying grounds, for purchasing or building and keeping in repair a hearse, and house therefor, for the exclusive use of its citizens, and for other necessary town charges, embraces all incidental expenses arising directly or indirectly in the due and legitimate exercise of the various powers conferred by the statute, and does not constitute a new and distinct grant of indefinite and unlimited power to raise money for any purpose whatsoever at the will and pleasure of a majority. Opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, 52 Me. 595, 598.

Other necessities.

As used in Act Cong. June 26, 1884, c. 121, § 2, 23 Stat. 54 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3108], providing that if any seaman after his discharge shall have incurred any expense for board and other necessities at the place of his discharge before shipping again, or for transportation to the United States, such expense shall be paid out of the arrears of wages and extra wages received by the consular officer, which shall be retained for that purpose, and the balance only paid over to such seaman, though literally broad enough to cover expenses of cure in a case of the previous hurt, are equally applicable to the ordinary expenses of seamen who are uninjured and well, and has no such special claim against the ship. The words "other necessities" must be held to refer to the ordinary expenses of a well seaman, who has no special claim against the ship on account of previous injury or sickness. The Jansen v. W. L. White (U. S.) 25 Fed. 503, 506.

Other object.

Where a municipal charter directed that every ordinance requiring public work to be done should contain a specific appropriation for the whole of the cost of each street, part of a street, or "other object," respectively, it is not necessary that an estimate and separate appropriation for each street should be made; the words "or other object" being added so as to clearly embrace whatever may be the subject-matter of the ordinance in each particular case—whether part of a street, a whole street, or a district including a number of streets or parts. Seibert v. Cavender, 3 Mo. App. 421, 423.

Other obligations or securities.

The act of 1792 prescribing the order in which debts due by an intestate or testator shall be paid, after specifying certain preferred debts, continues the classification thus: then bonds or other obligations; and, lastly, open accounts. Held, that the phrase "other obligation" means a class of debts which were not open accounts, and which were not evidenced by writing under seal. Smith v. Ellington, 14 Ga. 379, 382.

As used in Rev. St. § 5430 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3671], providing for the punishment of the offense of having in possession an instrument engraved and printed after the similitude of any "obligation or other security" issued under the authority of the United States, with intent to sell or otherwise use the same, means an executed instrument or at least one which on its face purports to be executed by somebody, and hence the possession of false or bogus bonds, bearing no signatures whatever, was not the possession of an "obligation or other security," within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 14 Fed. 550, 552.

A bond issued by a mining company, and resembling a United States bond, but not purporting to be executed by any party whatever, is not an obligation or other security, within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Sprague (U. S.) 48 Fed. 828, 830.

Other occupation.

"Other occupation," as used in the constitution of a relief fund association, providing that a member permanently disabled from following his or her usual or other occupation should be entitled to a benefit, means other like occupation to his or her usual occupation. Albert v. Order of Chosen Friends (U. S.) 84 Fed. 721, 722.

Other officers.

"Other officer," as used in Rev. Laws, p. 357, providing that if the sheriff or other officer shall, by virtue of any writ of attachment, attach and take through ignorance any goods which shall be claimed by any person as his property, it shall be lawful for such sheriff or officer to summon and swear a jury to try the right of property, means the appropriate executive officer of the Supreme Court and the courts of common pleas; that is, the sheriff or coroner. Stryker v. Skillman, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 189, 191.

The phrase "other officers," as used in Const. art. 4, § 32, providing that the Legislature shall provide for the election by the people of a clerk to the Supreme Court, county clerk, county recorder, district attorneys, sheriffs, public administrators, and other officers, is used in its ordinary signification, and means that all officers necessary to the exercise of governmental functions in running the machinery of the state, other than those named, must be elected by the people.

State v. Arrington, 4 Pac. 735, 736, 739, 18 Nev. 412.

"Other officers," as used in Const. art. 10, § 2, providing for the election or appointment of all county officers, and for the election and appointment of all city, town, and village officers, and prescribing that "all other officers shall be elected by the people or appointed as the Legislature may direct," refers to all officers who are neither county, city, town, or village officers, and includes the office of health officer in New York, he being neither a city nor county officer. In re Whiting (N. Y.) 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 493, 500.

Notice of defects in sidewalks, given to a foreman of sidewalks, appointed and clothed with general power to repair throughout a large district of the city, by the executive board, who are the commissioners of highways, is notice to "a city officer having charge of highways," required by the charter to be given a reasonable time before the accident, to charge the city with liability; the charter authorizing the board to appoint a superintendent of streets, and to employ such other assistants as they see fit, and the provision for repairs by "the executive board, superintendent of streets, or other officer * * * having charge of the highways," contemplating the appointment by the board of some other officer with charge of highways. Sprague v. City of Rochester, 53 N. E. 697, 699, 159 N. Y. 20.

"Other officer," as used in Cr. Code, § 80, providing for the punishment of embezzlement by any state, county, township, city, town, village, or other officer of any public corporation of the state, includes a university officer, he being a like officer. Spalding v. People, 49 N. E. 993, 995, 172 Ill. 40.

In section 71 of the revenue act of 1890, as amended, providing that when, by mistake or wrongful act of the treasurer or other officer, land has been sold contrary to the provisions of the act, the county is to save the purchaser harmless by paying him the amount of principal, etc., the words "other officer" mean other officer of the revenue. Kelley v. Gage County (Neb.) 28 N. W. 194, 195.

"Other officer," as used in Gen. St. tit. 12, § 103, providing that any person who shall resist or obstruct any sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, or other officer in the execution of his office shall be punished, includes an indifferent person deputed to serve a writ of attachment. State v. Moore, 39 Conn. 244, 249.

Other operations.

"Other operations," as used in Act April 23, 1890, providing for the control of debris from mining and other operations, may include many subjects which are not expressed in the title of an act to promote drainage; and the existence of such phrase renders it obnoxious to the constitutional provision requiring every act to embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. People v. Parks, 53 Cal. 624, 632.

Other party.

"Other party," as used in a statute providing that, where an executor or administrator is a party, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living, cannot be construed to include the administrator of a former executor in a suit by an administrator de bonis non against the sureties of the former executor, so as to prevent his testifying as to payments made by the deceased executor during his lifetime on claims or demands against the estate. State, to Use of Burrough, v. Farmer, 54 Mo. 439, 447.

The words "the other party," in Pub. St. c. 214, § 33, providing that, "whenever an original party to the contract or cause of action is dead, the other party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be allowed to testify on his own offer," do not apply to a deceased partner, and prevent a defendant in an action by the surviving partner from testifying as to a conversation with such deceased. "The other party" was the partnership, and not the partner. Clapp v. Hull, 13 R. I. 652, 653, 29 Atl. 687.

"Other party," as used in Laws R. I. providing that, where "one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, * * * the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," means the other original party to the contract or cause of action. Barnes v. Dow, 10 Atl. 253, 263, 59 Vt. 530; Kenyon v. Peirce, 24 Atl. 825, 17 R. I. 794. And hence, in a suit between an executrix of one of the original parties to a contract and the heir at law of the other original party thereto, the former was a competent witness in her own behalf. Kenyon v. Peirce, 24 Atl. 825, 17 R. I. 794.

Other perils.

The term "other perils," in a marine policy on a barge and cargo against the perils of the voyage and other perils, may possibly include a loss occasioned by the vessel springing a leak and sinking at port, though, if the sinking is caused by unseaworthiness, there can be no recovery on the policy. Gartside v. Orphans' Ben. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 322, 324.

Other persons.

The term "other person," in a statute making it criminal for any ferryman or other person to convey any slave from Missouri across the Mississippi river, unless the slave have a permit, etc., includes a steamboat captain. "It seems to me that all persons whatever who do the act are guilty of the offense. Ferry-men are mentioned because they have generally the means in constant readiness to do the act. They were therefore more prominent in the eye of the Legislature than all other persons." Russell v. Taylor, 4 Mo. 550, 551.

Acts 1881, No. 259, § 2, as amended by Acts 1883, No. 191, § 18, provides that every wife, child, parent, guardian, husband, or other person who may be injured thereby shall have a right of action against persons selling intoxicating liquors. "The words 'or other person' seem to have been intended by the Legislature to cover all persons injured in person or property by intoxicated persons." Flower v. Witkovsky, 87 N. W. 364, 366, 69 Mich. 371.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 59, § 4, providing that every gift, grant, conveyance, assignment, or transfer of, or charge upon, any estate, real or personal, made with the intent to disturb, hinder, or defraud creditors or other persons, should be void, should be construed to include the wife of the debtor. Tyler v. Tyler, 21 N. E. 616, 618, 126 Ill. 525, 9 Am. St. Rep. 642.

Pub. Acts 1883, No. 191, gives a right of action to the wife or other person injured by any intoxicated person, against the seller of the liquor by which such person became intoxicated. Held, that the words "or other person" are broad enough to include a widow whose husband's death resulted from intoxication. Brockway v. Patterson, 40 N. W. 192, 194, 72 Mich. 122, 1 L. R. A. 708.

"Other person," as used in Act Cong. March 2, 1799, § 65, providing that in all cases of insolvency, or where any estate in the hands of executors, administrators, or assignees shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debts due the United States on any bond or bonds for the payment of duties shall be first satisfied, and any executor, administrator, or assignee, or other person, who shall pay any debt due from the person or estate for whom or for which they are acting previous to the debt or debts due to the United States, shall be personally liable therefor, means "the person who might have the property or funds in charge which had vested in the executors, administrators, or assignees, and to which the right of priority attached. Besides, it sometimes happens that, instead of the nominative assignee, the person coming into possession of an insolvent's estate is called a 'trustee and garnishee,' and the phrase 'or other person' may have been intended to embrace them. In short, these words were introduced for the purpose of securing a faithful application of the funds which should come to the hands of an executor, administrator, assignee, or other representative of an insolvent's estate, out of which the preference arises, but not for the purpose of extending such preference to other descriptions of property." United States v. Crookshank (N. Y.) 1 Edw. Ch. 233, 237.

The words "other persons," as used in Rev. St. 2159, providing that damages which a widow is entitled to recover for the withholding of her dower shall be a certain amount, to be estimated in an action against the heirs of the husband from the time of his death, and in actions against other persons from the time of her demanding her dower of such persons, not exceeding six years in the whole, includes the allenee of the husband, or one who has become vested with the husband's title by operation of law. Munger v. Perkins, 22 N. W. 511, 513, 62 Wis. 499.

The term "other person," in 2 Tayl. St. P. 1610, § 123, providing that all deeds purporting to convey real estate, which are duly executed, etc., and which purport to be made and executed by any sheriff, deputy sheriff, referee, or other person by virtue of any judgment, order, or decree, is of very general import, and not to be restrained, except by the clear context and proper subject-matter of the act, or by the express words found in it, or in some other statute in pari materia. To say that the words signify some ministerial officer of a court of general jurisdiction, legal or equitable, other than a sheriff, deputy sheriff, or referee, is to deprive them of nearly all force and effect. Chase v. Whiting, 30 Wis. 544-547.

"Other persons," as used in Sess. Laws 1891, c. 114, making it unlawful for laborers, workmen, mechanics, or other persons employed by the state to work more than eight hours per day, does not include an officer or employee for whom an annual salary has been specifically named and appropriated by the Legislature. State v. Martindale, 27 Pac. 852, 853, 47 Kan. 147. Thus a person contracting to do a certain amount of work for a certain sum of money cannot recover a greater sum for the reason that he has worked over eight hours a day in performing such work. Billinsley v. Marshall County Com'rs, 49 Pac. 329, 5 Kan. App. 435.

The phrase "other person," found in Code 1876, c. 6, tit. 2, pt. 3, relative to liens of mechanics and others, and giving a lien to every mechanic or other person who shall perform any work, etc., includes a timber merchant furnishing materials for the erection of a building. Geiger v. Hussey, 63 Ala. 338-341.

The term "mechanic, miner, or other person," in the statute exempting from execution the necessary tools and implements of any mechanic, miner, or other person, used for the purpose of carrying on his trade, are broad enough to include a merchant tailor who is a practical workman, and who cuts and fits garments for customers, and superintends their manufacture. In re Jones (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 931.

"Other person," as used in Acts 1855, § 14, which provides that every mechanic, workman, or other person doing or performing any work toward the erection or construction of any building shall have a lien, means any one connected with the work, and hence includes a superintendent. Mulligan v. Mulligan, 18 La. Ann. 20, 22.

"Other persons," as used in Rev. St. 1858, c. 5, § 1, providing that all words purporting to give a joint authority to three or more public officers or other persons shall be construed as giving such authority to a majority of such officers or other persons, and the words include arbitrators and executors. Melms v. Pfister, 18 N. W. 235, 256, 59 Wis. 136.

Under a statute providing that in forcible entry and detainer cases a bond shall be executed to the sheriff or other person, it is held that the other person referred to is not the defendant, but the officer to whom the writ is directed. Mitchell v. Gibson, 14 Ark. 224.

Same.—As ejusdem generis.

Act Sept. 24, 1866, makes it a penal offense for any warehouseman, wharfinger, or other person to issue vouchers for goods, wares, etc., unless he shall have actually received them into store. Held, that the words "other person" should be construed in connection with the preceding words, and to mean those who are engaged in a like business, or who may connect the business of warehousemen or wharfinger with some other pursuit, such as shipping, grinding, or manufacturing. Bucher v. Commonwealth, 108 Pa. 528, 534, 41 Leg. Int. 288.

In a mechanics' lien statute giving a lien on buildings to laborers, mechanics, or other persons who have performed labor in the construction thereof, the words "other persons" should be construed to mean other persons of the same nature as laborers and mechanics, and are not sufficient to extend the provisions of the statute to an architect. Raeder v. Bensberg, 6 Mo. App. 445, 447.

As used in Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 9, 26 Stat. 125 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1895], providing that if any owner, importer, consignee, agent, or other person shall make or attempt to make a fraudulent entry of goods for the payment of custom duties, such goods shall be forfeited, etc., the words "other person" mean some one of the same general class as those described by the preceding words, and hence do not include a stranger who is a mere trespasser in respect to goods. United States v. 1,150½ Pounds of Celluloid (U. S.) 82 Fed. 627, 636, 27 C. C. A. 281.

Rev. St. § 1564, prohibits the sale of liquor on Sunday by any tavern keeper or other person, etc. The words "tavern keeper" indicate very clearly the class of persons against whom the act was named, and the general words "other person" must, under the familiar rule, noscitur a sociis, be taken to mean a similar class of persons, and not be extended so as to include all persons. The words "tavern keeper," as used in this statute, clearly mean a person, a part, at least, of whose business it is to sell intoxicating liquors, and, applying the rule above quoted, the words "other person" must be held to mean persons whose business, either in whole or in part, is to sell such drinks. Jensen v. State, 19 N. W. 874, 875, 60 Wis. 577.

Gen. Laws 1899, p. 266, providing for the election of a public weigher, and forbidding the employment of commission merchants or other person or persons for weighing cotton or other merchandise offered for sale, means others of the same class as factors and commission merchants, and does not prohibit ginners and warehousemen from weighing cotton for their customers, or farmers from having it weighed by the purchaser or any other person. Whitfield v. Terrell Compress Co., 62 S. W. 116, 118, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 235.

In an ordinance referring to all appointments of janitors, engineers, or other persons, the words "other persons" will not include inspectors of buildings, since it will apply only to those ejusdem generis, and will not reach a higher class of officials. State v. Longfellow, 69 S. W. 596, 597, 95 Mo. App. 680.

The words "other persons," as used in Code, § 4074, relating to the conveyance of property with intent to defraud creditors, purchasers, or other persons, mean those who have or might have a claim or right to the property conveyed, which might be enforced at law or equity. Day v. Lown, 1 N. W. 786, 790, 51 Iowa, 864.

A statute prohibiting any "tradesman, artificer, or other person" from engaging in his usual occupation on Sunday does not include a coachman or farmer. Cavan v. City of Brooklyn, 5 N. Y. Supp. 758, 760.

In a statute providing that "if any judge or clerk of an election, or any other person, shall knowingly receive and place in the ballot box any ballot not legally voted by a qualified voter," he shall be punished, etc., the words "other person" apply only to persons ejusdem generis with the officers named; and an indictment thereunder which fails to aver that defendant was a judge or clerk, or acting in a similar capacity, is invalid. State v. Krueger, 124 Mo. 262, 35 S. W. 604, 606.

A merchant tailor, who is a practical workman, and who cuts and fits garments for customers, and superintends their manufacture, comes within the meaning of "other person," as used in a statute exempting the tools and implements of any mechanic, miner, or other person, used and kept for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business, etc., from execution. In re Jones (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 931.

In considering the question whether the city of Lynchburg had the power to assess a railroad corporation with a license tax under a provision of its charter authorizing the council to impose a tax on persons engaged in certain specified employments, "and upon any other persons or employment which it may deem proper, whether such person or employment is herein specially enumerated or not, and whether any tax be imposed thereon by the state or not," the term "other persons or employment" must be construed as applicable to persons and employments ejusdem generis with the enumerated classes; and the court held that the charter did not confer upon the council power to tax railroad corporations under cover of these general words. City of Lynchburg v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 80 Va. 237, 246, 249, 56 Am. Rep. 592.

In Sandiman v. Beach, 17 Barn. & C. 96, which was an action of assumpsit to recover the expense of hiring a post chaise to convey the plaintiff to a certain place, in which it was contended that the contract was illegal and against the statute because it was performed on the Sabbath, Lord Tenterden, C. J., in delivering the unanimous opinion of the Queen's Bench, said that, "upon looking into the statutes (3 Car. I, c. 1, and 29 Car. II, c. 7) upon which the objection is founded, we are of the opinion that this case does not come within them. By the first of these it was enacted that no carrier with any horse, nor wagonman with any wagon, nor cartman with any cart, nor wainman with any wain, nor drover with any cattle, shall, by themselves or any other, travel on the Lord's Day; and by 29 Car. II, c. 7, that no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person or persons, shall do or exercise any worldly labor, business, or work of their ordinary callings upon the Lord's Day. It was also contended that under the words 'other person or persons' the drivers of stagecoaches are included, but, where general words follow particular words, the rule is to construe them as applicable to persons ejusdem generis. Considering, then, that in 3 Car. I, c. 1, carriers of a certain description are mentioned and that in 29 Car. II, c. 7, drovers, horse courses, wagoners, and travelers of other description are specifically mentioned, we think that the words 'other person or persons' cannot have been used in a sense large enough to include the owner and driver of a stagecoach." City of St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559, 563.

In Rev. St. § 2982, exempting from execution the tools and implements, or stock in trade, of any mechanic, miner, or other person, used or kept for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business, the term "other person" should not be interpreted to mean only a person ejusdem generis—that is, an artificer of some sort—but it also includes a tradesman or merchant. The "other person" of the statute is one who, although not a mechanic, necessarily uses or keeps a stock in trade for the purpose of carrying on his business. Wicker v. Comstock, 9 N. W. 25, 26, 52 Wis. 315, 316.

"Other person," as used in the exemption law, providing that the tools and instruments of every mechanic, miner, or other person shall be exempted, etc., were intended to comprehend a class of citizens who earn their livelihood by the use of tools and instruments, in whole or in part. Grimes v. Bryne, 2 Minn. 99, 103 (Gil. 72, 85). And such is its use in a like statute in Kansas (Gen. St. c. 38). Guptil v. McFee, 9 Kan. 30, 34. So, also, in Rev. St. c. 184, § 31, subd. 9. Beritt v. Crandall, 19 Wis. 581, 583.

"Other person," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 60, § 32, which exempts from execution and attachment the tools, implements, working materials, books, and stock in trade of any mechanic, miner, or other person, etc., includes merchants and tradesmen; the application of the rule noctitur sociis to limit the words "other person" to persons similar to the designated classes of mechanics and miners being contrary to the manifest purpose and intention of the act. Martin v. Bond, 24 Pac. 826, 827, 14 Colo. 466.

Under a statute providing that "every wife, child, parent, guardian, husband, or other person who shall be injured in person or property or means of support by reason of the intoxication of any person, or by reason of the selling, giving, or furnishing any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, that person shall have a right of action against any person who shall, by selling or giving intoxicating liquors, have caused or contributed to the intoxication of such person," one who lost money while intoxicated brought an action to recover from the one who had sold him the intoxicating liquor. The court held that he could not maintain the action. "The party intoxicated is excluded. The persons enumerated are persons who stand to him in special relation, and it is therefore to be assumed that any other person who may sue must also stand to him in some special relation, so as to be injured by his intoxication, or by the sale to him. A creditor might, perhaps, stand in that relation under some circumstances, or a contractor or servant, or the master of a vessel, or a traveler passing him in the street, and so on; but he could not stand in any such relation to himself, and therefore cannot be understood as embraced in the terms "wife, child, parent, husband, or other person." Brooks v. Cook, 7 N. W. 216, 217, 44 Mich. 617, 38 Am. Rep. 282.

A school-teacher is neither a laborer, clerk, servant, nurse, nor "other person," within the meaning of the statute providing that in all cases within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, where any action is brought by any laborer, clerk, servant, nurse, or other person for compensation claimed due for personal services performed, the plaintiff, if successful, shall be entitled to recover, as part of the costs, a judgment against the defendant for an attorney's fee. School Dist. No. 94 v. Gautier, 78 Pac. 954, 957, 18 Okl. 194.

Same—As person other than.

The words "other person," used in a statute following the enumeration of certain classes of persons, always mean persons other than those enumerated. Warner Elevator Mfg. Co. v. Houston (Tex.) 28 S. W. 405, 408.

The words "other person," as used in a statute providing that if any servant, etc., shall embezzle, without the assent of his employer, any money, goods, etc., belonging to any other person, he shall be punished, etc., mean any other person than the servant who is guilty of embezzlement. State v. Porter, 28 Mo. 201, 207; Fleener v. State, 23 S. W. 1, 2, 58 Ark. 96.

"Other person," as used in St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, § 1, providing that no licensed victualer, or person licensed to sell beer by retail to be drunk on the premises, or not to be drunk on the premises, or other person, shall open his house for the sale of wine, spirits, or beer on Sunday before a certain hour, comprehends all the world except the persons before mentioned, viz., licensed victualer, or persons licensed to sell beer by retail. Harris v. Jenna, 9 C. B. (N. S.) 152, 157.

Other personal effects or property.

A testator bequeathed to a friend all her silver, jewelry, and other personal effects not otherwise enumerated in the will; saying, in connection with such bequest, that she had already communicated to her friend her wishes in connection with the bequest. It was held that the words "other personal effects" were employed in a restrictive sense, and embraced only effects of personal use, like jewelry and silver, and did not operate on the residuum of testatrix's personal estate. This construction was reached by construing the will as a whole; there being a previous provision bequeathing all the rest and residue of testatrix's estate, after certain specified legacies had been paid, to a church. One of the main reasons for this conclusion seems to have been a presumption that testatrix would not have left undivided and undeclared the trusts which were to govern the use of the residuum of her estate, which was large, as she had done those relating to the silver and other personal effects bequeathed to her friend. Welman v. Neufville, 75 Ga. 124, 128.

A deed conveying "all the buildings, tanks, derricks, pipes, pipe lines, fixtures, and all other personal property whatsoever," situated on any portion of a ranch, covers simply personal property not previously mentioned, but of the same kind or nature as that specified. Diets v. Mission Transfer Co., 30 Pac. 380, 383, 95 Cal. 92.

"Other personal property," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 68, §§ 269, 270, providing that whoever shall carry off or destroy any wood, timber, lumber, hay, grass, or other personal property of another person, without lawful authority, shall be liable for treble damages, should be confined to things ejusdem generis with those enumerated—that is, such as are produced by and grown upon land; the statute being designed to apply only to trespasses committed by carrying off, using, or destroying the products of the soil. Berg v. Baldwin, 18 N. W. 821, 822, 31 Minn. 541.

In a statute making every railroad corporation liable for injuries in certain cases to furniture, personal effects, and "other personal property," etc., such phrase will be construed, in connection with the context, as used to mean property, and to mean property of the same general description as the furniture and personal effects. Wall v. Platt, 48 N. E. 270, 274, 169 Mass. 398.

Under Cr. St. § 165, providing that whoever shall willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously cut, shoot, maim, wound, or otherwise destroy any horse, mule, neat cattle, hog, sheep, goat, or other personal property, the goods and chattels of another, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the term "other personal property" includes oil in an oil tank. State v. Switzer, 37 S. E. 813, 819, 59 S. C. 225.

Other place

"Other place," as used in Act Cong. 1790, c. 9, § 3, which gives the federal courts jurisdiction of any offense committed within any fort, arsenal, dockyard, or in any other place or district of the country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, refers to other places of a similar character to those previously enumerated in the same section, and to that which follows. Hence, under this provision, federal courts would not have jurisdiction of an offense committed on board a ship of war lying within the harbor of Boston. United States v. Bevans, 16 U. S. (3 Wheat.) 836, 890, 4 L. Ed. 404. It does not include a place ceded to the United States as a home for disabled volunteers. In re Kelly (U. S.) 71 Fed. 545, 550.

In construing the act of March 2, 1799, providing that no search by the officers of customs for the purpose of making seizures shall be made in any ship, vessel, dwelling house, store building or other place, unless by virtue of a magistrate's warrant, the court said that "the words 'other place,' following the words 'ship, vessel, dwelling house, and store building,' cannot mean 'other place' in the most general and extensive sense of the words. In this general sense of the words, every material object must occupy such place. If the Legislature had intended to prohibit searches for the purpose of making seizures in every case without a warrant, they would have said so in general terms, without particularly mentioning places. The words 'other place,' in this case, mean 'other like place'; that is, a place substantially the same with the place mentioned in connection with it, having in view the motive and object which induced the Legislature to prohibit an entry into those places without a warrant." It does not include a stagecoach. Jones v. Gibson, 1 N. H. 266, 272.

As used in Gen. Laws 1885, c. 224, as amended by Gen. Laws 1897, c. 349, forbidding the excluding of any person from barber shops, eating houses, or other places of public resort, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, "other" will be read "others of such like," so that persons or things therein comprised may be read as ejusdem generis with, and not of a superior quality or different from, those specifically enumerated. Rhone v. Loomis, 77 N. W. 81, 82, 74 Minn. 200 (citing Sandiman v. Breach, 7 Barn. & C. 99, 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 278).

Other place of amusement.

"Other place of amusement," as employed in Act 1881, providing that a license for the sale of liquor should not be granted to the proprietors of any theater, circus, museum, or other place of amusement, included not only theaters, circuses, and museums, but any other place of amusement, as such phrase enlarged the meaning and extended the operation of the statute beyond the three special classes of amusement designated. In re Hastings (Pa.) 39 Leg. Int. 440.

Other place of business.

In an ordinance providing that "no person shall play on Sunday at billiards, ten-pins, or other games of amusement, or shall on that day keep his store, shop, or other place of business open, or sell or offer to sell any goods," the words "other place of business" include a theater. City of St. Joseph v. Elliott, 47 Mo. App. 418, 420.

Other pleading.

In construing a statute providing that "when a declaration or other pleading alleges that any person made, indorsed, assigned, or accepted any writing, no proof of the handwriting of such person shall be required, unless the fact be denied by an affidavit with the plea which puts it in issue," the court said: "The words 'other pleadings' must obviously be construed to mean a plea in a common-law suit, or an answer in chancery. The word 'plea' in the clause of the section obviously is used in its comprehensive sense, and means any pleading, as a replication in law or in chancery." Robinson v. Dix, 18 W. Va. 528, 542.

Other power.

"Other power," as used in an act incorporating a street railway company, which provides that the road shall be operated with steam, horse, or other power, is not limited to animal power for the reason that steam cannot be legally used, and hence such road may use electricity. Taggart v. Newport St. Ry. Co., 19 Atl. 826, 827, 16 R. I. 668, 7 L. R. A. 205; Hudson River Telephone Co. v. Watervliet Turnpike & R. Co., 9 N. Y. Supp. 177, 178, 56 Hun. 67.

Other premises.

"Other premises," as used in Act April 27, 1855, § 8 (P. L. 369), declaring it to be lawful for every lessee for a term of years of any colliery or mining land, manufactory, or other premises, to mortgage his or her lease or term in the demised premises, are equivalent to "other lands and tenements," and are not to be restricted to leases of the same or like nature as colliery, mine, or manufacturing leases. The word "premises," as applied to realty, means land and tenements. Appeal of Hilton, 9 Atl. 342, 343, 116 Pa. 351.

Other proceedings.

As used in a power given to one to execute a release for the writer of all manner of imperfections or errors concerning a certain judgment, or concerning any writ, warrant, process, declaration, plea, entry, or other proceeding whatsoever, the words "other proceeding" must be construed to mean proceedings of the same kind, and would not include an error in the mode of enforcing the judgment subsequently. Solomon v. Graham, 5 El. & Bl. 800, 823.

"Other proceeding," as used in Revision, p. 401, providing certain solicitor's fees for drawing every bill, etc., and other pleading, and drawing exceptions and other proceedings, includes affidavits. Booram v. North Hudson County Ry. Co., 14 Atl. 104, 107, 44 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 70.

The term "other proceeding," in Civ. Code, § 761, subd. 2, provides that if a judgment be reversed, and the case remanded for trial or other proceedings, it shall stand for trial on such other proceedings in the court whence the appeal was taken, etc., includes cases where the court of appeals reverses the judgment and directs one of a particular character to be entered by the court below. Lloyd v. Matthews, 17 S. W. 795, 92 Ky. 800.

Under Pol. Code, § 8787, making a tax deed prima facie evidence of certain proceedings, and "conclusive of all other proceedings," the other proceedings referred to are acts and proceedings required to be done and had at the hands of the public officials, entrusted with the various steps leading up to the execution of a tax deed, and to something required to be done by the applicant for the deed, such as the giving of notice to redeem. Reed v. Lyon, 81 Pac. 619, 620, 96 Cal. 501.

Other process.

"Other process," as used in a deed reserving to the grantor "a supply of spring water by means of a hydraulic ram, wheel, or all other processes of forcing the water," includes the use of a windmill to force the water. Richardson v. Clements, 89 Pa. 506, 506, 38 Am. Rep. 784.

Other products.

Code, § 1593, providing that cotton, corn, rice, or other products sold by planters and commission merchants on cash sale shall not be considered as the property of the buyer, or the ownership given up, until the same shall be fully paid for, does not include turpentine and rosin. The products here meant are the products of the planters. Planters are those who plant something in the ground, or sow something therein which produces fruit or increase from this planting, and growing from the soil, such as corn, cotton, or rice. Potatoes, sugar cane, sugar, ground peas, hay, and fodder are such products as planters raise from the soil as they do cotton, corn, and rice, but timber, turpentine, wood, and things of that sort, are not products of the soil of the same sort as the three named, planted or sown and raised by planters from the soil. Roberts v. Savannah, F. & W. Ry., 75 Ga. 225, 226.

Other projections.

"Other projections," as used in Gen. St. c. 19, § 13, authorizing cities to make such rules and regulations for the erection and maintenance of balustrades or other projections upon the roof or sides of buildings therein as the safety of the public requires, as applied to the sides of a building, are those portions of or attachments to the sides which are near the line of a highway, or which project over, and therefore, in one sense, into, the highway, such as balconies, canopies, windows, cornices, gutters, signs, or other additions supported by the building itself, which do not obstruct the travel on the highway. They do not include doorsteps within the actual limits of a highway. Such doorsteps, though connected with and a part of the building, are not necessarily supported by it, and are not, properly speaking, projections on the side of it, but are rather structures erected in and occupying a part of, the highway itself. Cushing v. City of Boston, 128 Mass. 330, 331, 35 Am. Rep. 383.

Other proper person.

"Other proper person," as used in Rev. Laws, p. 193, § 14, and page 425, § 91, allowing the landlord or other proper person to be made defendant in an action against the tenant, means any one whose title is connected to and consistent with the possession of the occupant, which existed between them prior to the commencement of the action. Layton v. Fen, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 497, 499 (citing Fairclain v. Shamtitle, 3 Bur. 1290; Layton v. Shupe, 18 N. J. Law [1 J. S. Green] 66).

Other property.

"Other property," as used in Sess. Laws 1881, c. 92, providing that a railroad company shall be liable for an injury done to a building or other property of any person or corporation by fire communicated by a locomotive engine, should be construed to embrace fences, growing trees, and herbage, and is not confined only to subjects ejusdem generis. Grissell v. Housatonic R. Co., 9 Atl. 187, 188, 54 Conn. 447, 1 Am. St. Rep. 138.

Gen. St. 1883, § 3581 et seq., relating to the liability of railroad companies for damage by fire to buildings or other property, cannot be limited, under the rule of ejusdem generis, to embrace only property of the same kind as buildings—that is, real estate—but includes personal property as well. Martin v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 25 Atl. 239, 241, 62 Conn. 331.

As used in Hart. Dig. art. 560, providing for the punishment of any person who shall willfully and maliciously kill, maim, beat, or wound any horse, cattle, goat, sheep, or swine, or shall willfully injure or destroy any other property of another, cannot be construed to include a dog. The expression "any other property" was intended to include only inanimate property, to the injury or destruction of which the terms kill, maim, wound, etc., could not properly be applied. State v. Marshall, 18 Tex. 55, 58.

"Other property," as used in a statute giving the lessor a lien for rent upon any and all goods, chattels, or other property, means property in the nature of personalty, such as goods and chattels, and hence does not embrace fixtures or real chattels partaking more of the nature of personalty than realty. First Nat. Bank v. Adam, 28 N. E. 955, 957, 138 Ill. 483.

"Other property," as used in Act Cong. March 26, 1863, § 1, providing that whenever the exigencies of any army in the field are such as to make impressment of forage, articles of subsistence or other property absolutely necessary, then such impressment may be made, cannot be construed to include real estate and all other property, but signifies that kind of personal or perishable property answering to that kind of property actually specified in the act, and absolutely necessary for the army in the field. White v. Ivey, 34 Ga. 186, 199.

Rev. St. § 4423, provides that any person who shall designedly, by any false pretense or false token, obtain from any other person any money, goods, wares, merchandise, or other property, shall be punished, etc. Under this statute it is held that, though the word "property" is in many cases construed to include things in action and evidences of debt, the words "other property," in the statute quoted, must, under the rule of noscitur a sociis, be limited to such tangible classes of property as are therein previously enumerated—that is to say, money, goods, wares, merchandise, and other property of that description—and does not include the obtaining of board and lodging by false pretenses. State v. Black, 44 N. W. 635, 75 Wis. 490.

Under a law providing that if any damage shall happen to any person, or his or her team, carriage, or other property, by means of the insufficiency or want of repair of any bridge upon any public road, the person sustaining such damage shall be entitled to recover the same from the board of chosen freeholders of the county, the words "other property" can only be construed as including property of the same kinds as that mentioned; that is, personal and movable. Livermore v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Camden Co., 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 245, 247; Bralley v. Inhabitants of Southborough, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 141, 142. And it does not extend to injuries to real estate, so that the board of chosen freeholders are not liable under the act for damages to the owner of a gristmill for not repairing a bridge over a raceway, whereby the water in the dam escapes. Livermore v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Camden Co., 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 245, 247.

"Other property," within the meaning of Act May 15, 1871, providing that in all actions of replevin to recover timber, lumber, coal, or other property severed from the realty, the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover, notwithstanding the fact that the title to the land from which said property is severed may be in dispute, is to be construed, according to the rule of ejusdem generis, to apply only to articles which before the severance constituted a part of the freehold, the severance of which depreciates its value. The term does not include growing crops. Renick v. Boyd (Pa.) 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 267; Id., 99 Pa. 555, 557, 44 Am. Rep. 124.

Prior to the incorporation of the California Fig Syrup Company, several parties were the proprietors of the medicine, and of the appliances connected with its manufacture and sale. One of them owed his associates a certain sum, due on the purchase price of his interest. On the creation of the corporation, they all joined in a deed of conveyance to it. The deed conveyed certain enumerated property, and then proceeded: "Also the same undivided interest in all the machinery and means used in manufacturing said medicine, in the materials used now belonging to them as such manufacturers in all such medicine now on hand or sold conditionally, and in the price of that sold or furnished and not yet paid for, in the bottles, filled and unfilled, and in the art of compounding or manufacturing said medicine, and in all the other property, labels, circulars, and other things, rights, or interests in or relating to such medicine now belonging to said first parties." And it was claimed that such indebtedness was conveyed by such deed. The court said: "If conveyed at all, it is by the words 'all the other property and other things,' but we are of opinion that these words do not include, and were not intended to include, the indebtedness, because, first, the instrument of conveyance carefully designates the particular property conveyed, and so important a matter as this indebtedness would naturally have been mentioned if the intention had been to transfer it; and, second, the rule of construction is that general expressions of the nature of those quoted, used in connection with enumerated matters and things, are limited to matters and things of the same kind. Thus the words 'all the other property and other things' refer to property of the nature of labels and circulars. The clause 'rights or interests in or relating to such medicine' probably refers to the proprietary right and matters connected therewith. Certainly it cannot be construed to include a debt due from one of the partners to the partnership." Alt v. California Fig Syrup Co., 7 Pac. 174, 175, 19 Nev. 118.

"Other property," as used in Pen. Code, § 53, providing that every person who shall falsely represent or personate another, and in such assumed character shall receive any money or other property whatever, shall be deemed guilty of larceny, does not refer to property of the same class, since the word "money" includes every kind or species of that class. State v. White, 41 Pac. 182, 183, 12 Wash. 417.

A will devised the "whole of my lands" to certain persons, and directed that "my other property" of every kind, not before mentioned, should be sold, etc. Held, that the words "other property" referred to other personal property, and did not include land acquired by the testator after the publication of his will, since such land was covered by the devise of the whole of his lands. Edwards v. Warren, 90 N. C. 604, 606.

Under Rev. Laws, § 4154, providing for the punishment of persons obtaining money or other property from another with intent to defraud, a promissory note comes within the description of "other property." State v. Switzer, 22 Atl. 724, 725, 68 Vt. 604, 25 Am. St. Rep. 789.

The term "other property," in Rev. St. § 949, authorizing counties to pay their subscriptions to railroad stock in moneys, lands, or other property, includes tax certificates. Hall v. Baker, 42 N. W. 104, 107, 74 Wis. 118.

The words "other property," in a statute providing punishment for any one obtaining goods, wares, merchandise, or other property under false pretences, should be limited to such identical classes of property as are therein previously enumerated; that is to say, money, goods, wares, merchandise, and other property of that description. Under Pen. Code, § 532, providing that any person obtaining money or property by false pretences is punishable to the same extent as for larceny, a person so obtaining land is not punishable. People v. Cummings, 114 Cal. 437, 441, 46 Pac. 284, 285.

Under Act 1860, providing that money or other property acquired by a married woman during coverture by her personal services shall be held by her to her sole and separate use, money due for her services is protected as hers in the same manner as if the money had been received. Whiting v. Beckwith, 81 Conn. 596, 597.

Pen. Code, § 4627, prohibiting all acts of willful and malicious mischief in the injuring or destroying any other public or private property, relates only to the injury or destruction of inanimate property, and does not apply to the injury or killing of animals of any kind. Patton v. State, 19 S. E. 784, 83 Ga. 111, 24 L. R. A. 732.

Other provision.

Rev. St. § 2171, providing that, when a devise or other provision is made for a widow, she must elect whether to take the provision made for her by law, or such devise or other provision, should be construed to include a direction in a will to the testator's executors to bear constantly in mind the wants of his wife, and set aside, use, and expend whatever moneys might be necessary, consistent with her condition, to provide for her comfort and physical health, and placing no limit on the sums which might be spent for such purposes. Van Steenwyck v. Washburn, 17 N. W. 289, 59 Wis. 483, 48 Am. Rep. 532.

Other publication.

An obscene private letter is not a book, pamphlet, picture, or print, and is not covered by the words "other publication" as used in Act March 3, 1865, § 16, providing that no obscene book, pamphlet, picture, print, or other publication of an indecent character, shall be admitted into the mails. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 8 Fed. 484, 486.

Other public building.

The words "other public buildings," in Nix. Dig. 829, which forbids the pulling down or removal of any dwelling house, market house, or other public building "heretofore erected, and which may encroach on any highway," are to be construed as meaning buildings similar to the designated buildings, and show that the building meant was such that the property in it, and also its possession and use, were in the public. An engine house, the property of which was not in the public, and the possession of which was exclusively in a fire company, is not a public building in such sense. Pancoast v. Troth, 84 N. J. Law (5 Vroom) 877, 883.

Other public grounds.

"Other public grounds," as used in title of Laws 1897, c. 248, being an act relating to actions against municipalities for damages to persons injured on streets and other public grounds, will not be construed, under the rule of ejusdem generis, to mean grounds of the same general kind as those previously mentioned, since such fact does not appear to be the intent of the Legislature from the general provisions of the act. Winters v. City of Duluth, 84 N. W. 788, 789, 82 Minn. 127.

Other public measures.

"Other," as used in Rev. St. 1891, c. 46, § 808, declaring that, whenever a constitutional amendment or other public measure is proposed to be voted upon by the people, the ballots should be prepared in a particular form, is not to be construed as limiting the public measures to like measures of equal breadth, affecting like territory with "constitutional amendments," for, if such a construction were adopted, only constitutional amendments would be included, and the words "or other public measures" would be rendered meaningless. The rule that the word "other," following an enumeration of particulars, embraces enumerated particulars of like nature, unless a broader sense is obviously intended, is not applicable. Union County v. Usery, 85 N. E. 618, 619, 147 Ill. 204.

Other public official proceeding.

The execution of a capital sentence upon a convict does not come within the true meaning of a statute exempting from the libel law publications which are a fair and true report of some "judicial, legislative, or other public official proceeding, or of some statement, subject, argument, or debate in the course of the same." Such enactment was only intended to embrace such transactions as resemble judicial and legislative proceedings—such as the transactions of administrative boards, in which the subjects dealt with are liable to be considered, deliberated upon, discussed, and determined—and has no reference to the speech of a convicted criminal just before his execution. Sanford v. Bennett, 24 N. Y. 20, 24.

Other public officer.

Rev. St. § 5344 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3629], providing that every owner of any steamboat or vessel, inspector, or other public officer through whose fraud, connivance, etc., the life of any person is destroyed, is guilty of manslaughter, does not include a pilot. The words "other public officer" evidently mean one who had something to do with regulating or limiting the number of passengers to be taken on board—a matter over which the pilot is presumed to have had no authority. United States v. Holtzhauser (U. S.) 40 Fed. 76, 80.

Other public purposes.

The words "other public purposes," in the act of incorporation of a water company, providing that the corporation shall supply water to the city of New Orleans, free, for the extinguishment of fires and other public purposes, and authorizing the city to draw a sufficient quantity of water from the hydrants for extinguishing fires, for wetting, washing, watering the streets and gutters, and any other public purposes, means, in both places in which it is used in the statute, public purposes of a similar nature to the enumerated purposes. It does not include water for the use of the whole city. Commercial Bank of New Orleans v. City of New Orleans, 17 La. Ann. 190, 195.

Other public schools.

Rev. Laws, § 270, provides that the real and personal property belonging to colleges, academies, or other public schools, shall be exempt from taxation. Held, that the phrase "other public schools" should not be construed as meaning those which are supported by public taxation, but those which are public in the sense that colleges and academies are. Willard v. Pike, 59 Vt. 202, 9 Atl. 907, 915.

Other public use.

Act Cong. July 2, 1836, provided that a certain strip of land along the river bank at the town of Burlington, Iowa, and running with the river the whole length of the town, should be reserved from sale for public use as public highways and for other public uses. Held, that the term "for other public uses," as used in such act, did not mean to limit the use to a use analogous to that of a highway, but authorized the land so reserved to be used for any public uses, which included the right to make an excavation and erect a wall and freight depot thereon for the benefit of a railroad and of the public. Burlington Gaslight Co. v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 59 N. W. 292, 294, 91 Iowa, 470.

Other purposes.

"The words 'other purposes' have been extensively used in titles to statutes, reciting that they are for certain specified and other purposes, to cover any and every thing, whether connected with the main questions indicated by the title or not; but the words cannot have such effect, in view of the provision of the Constitution requiring every law to relate only to one subject, to be expressed in its title." City of St. Louis v. Tiefel, 42 Mo. 578, 592; Lincoln Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n v. Graham, 7 Neb. 178, 179; Town of Fishkill v. Fishkill & B. Plankroad Co. (N. Y.) 22 Barb. 634, 642; Pitkin County Com'rs v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 32 Pac. 717, 718, 3 Colo. App. 223. Nothing which the act could not embrace without them can be brought in by their aid. Pitkin County Com'rs v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 32 Pac. 717, 718, 3 Colo. App. 223; State v. Arnold, 88 N. E. 820, 821, 140 Ind. 628.

"Other purposes," as used in Gen. St. 1889, § 7084, authorizing township trustees to levy a tax for township, road, and other purposes, means such sums as are necessary to meet the ordinary expenses of the year, such as the payment of such municipal officers as it is necessary to employ, the support and defense of such actions as they may be parties to, and the expenses they incur in performing such duties as the law imposes, and hence would authorize the levy of a tax for township bridge purposes. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Scammon, 25 Pac. 858, 859, 45 Kan. 481.

"Other purposes," as used in Rev. St. § 5388 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3649], providing for the punishment of every person who unlawfully cuts or wantonly destroys any timber standing on the land of the United States, which in pursuance of law may be reserved or purchased for military or other purposes, must be construed as extending only to purposes ejusdem generis with military purposes; that is, governmental or public purposes. A military purpose is a public purpose. United States v. Garretson (U. S.) 42 Fed. 22, 23.

"Other purposes," as used in a deed of land on which a meeting house was to be erected, in which seats were to be provided free of charge for the students of a certain academy, the trustees of which academy to have the use of such meeting house for public exhibitions and other purposes at all times, while sufficiently broad to include any purpose to which the building could be lawfully put, should be construed in a restricted sense, and not to include any purpose that would interfere or be inconsistent with the use of the house by parishioners and students for public religious worship. Trustees of Phillips Exeter Academy v. New Parish in Exeter, 38 Atl. 548, 549, 68 N. H. 10.

The words "other purposes," mentioned in the charter of a water company authorized to take water from a stream by purchase or otherwise, to supply a town with water for the extinguishment of fires, and for domestic, sanitary, and other purposes, must be "construed to refer to purposes ejusdem generis with the purposes specifically mentioned, and to mean other like purposes, or other like public purposes. They give the company no right to take more water than is ordinarily needed for the purposes enumerated in order to supply power to manufacturers, though this latter supply might be necessary to protect the town in case of a general conflagration." In re Barre Water Co., 20 Atl. 109, 62 Vt. 27, 9 L. R. A. 186.

In a law exempting from local taxation or other purposes all the real and personal property of a charitable corporation, "so long as it or its income is used for the purposes for which it was incorporated," the other purposes referred to are evidently local purposes, such as assessments, etc., and could never have been intended to extend to taxation by the state. In re Vanderbilt, 2 Con. Sur. (N. Y.) 819, 826, 10 N. Y. Supp. 239.

The words "or other," as used in a provision of a will authorizing the executor to distribute a certain sum "for such religious, charitable, educational, or other purposes" as they may deem advisable, cannot be construed as intended to be read "other such," or "other like," or "other of the same kind," for such a construction would make them mere surplusage, and deprive the clause of meaning, for there are other charitable purposes than those which are educational or religious, such as the care of the poor, the sick, etc. Therefore, when the testator adds the words "or other," the clause clearly expresses the intent of the testator to permit the trustees to devote the fund, if they choose to do so, to purposes other than those which are educational or religious or charitable. Hyde's Ex'r's v. Hyde, 53 Atl. 593, 594, 64 N. J. Eq. 6.

The phrase "other purpose intended for mutual profit or benefit," in Rev. St. art. 566, providing that a corporation may be created for purposes enumerated, and any other purpose not otherwise specially provided for, authorizes the creation of a corporation for buying, selling, and dealing in real estate, live stock, bonds, securities, and other properties of all kinds on its own account and for commission. National Bank of Jefferson v. Texas Investment Co., 12 S. W. 101, 108, 74 Tex. 421.

The words "other purposes," in a city charter authorizing the assembly to order the construction of sewers when the board of public improvements shall recommend it as necessary "for sanitary or other purposes," do not mean "other like purposes pertaining to the health, or designed to secure the health of the city's inhabitants," as there may be other purposes besides sanitary purposes which make the construction of a sewer necessary. Eyerman v. Blakaley, 78 Mo. 145, 151.

Other question.

As used in Acts 1893, § 14, providing that, whenever the approval of a constitutional amendment or other question is submitted to the vote of the people, such question shall be printed upon the ballots, etc., the words "other question" mean matter on which the electors are to express their will, other than the election of officers. The clause has reference to the nature of the subject before the people, not to the particular body of electors who are to decide it; and the words "other question" are used in contradistinction to the choice of candidates for office, which is the main subject of the act. They include all questions, whether state or local, which are submitted by referendum to the direct vote and decision of the electors either of the state at large or of a particular locality. Evans v. Willistown Tp., 32 Atl. 87, 88, 168 Pa. 578.

Other railroads.

"Other railroads held by the state," as used in Const. art. 7, § 13, par. 1, providing that the proceeds of a sale of the Western & Atlantic, Macon & Brunswick, "or other railroads held by the state," should be applied to the discharge of the existing bonded debt, applies to railroads which might be acquired after the adoption of the Constitution by the state, as the consequence of the indorsement of the bonds of these railroad companies, for in no other way, unless at a tax sale or other sale under a claim in favor of the state, could the state ever acquire railroad property, the direct acquisition of such property being prohibited by the Constitution. Park v. Candler, 89 S. E. 89, 93, 118 Ga. 647.

Other reasonable cause.

"Other reasonable cause," as used in St. 1762, providing that new trials may be granted for misleading, newly-discovered evidence, want of notice, or a reasonable opportunity to appear and defend, or "other reasonable cause," means a cause of the same general nature as those enumerated. The causes enumerated being results of mistakes or accidents, any other cause, to come within the description of "other reasonable cause," must also be the result of mistake or accident. Brown v. Congdon, 50 Conn. 302, 309.

Remedy.

"Other remedy," as used in the statement that mandamus will not lie if the relator has any other remedy, means a remedy equally as convenient, beneficial, and effective as mandamus. State v. Wilson, 26 South. 482, 487, 123 Ala. 259, 45 L. R. A. 772.

The term "other remedy," when used to denote a remedy which will prevent the issuing of a writ of certiorari or other special writ or proceeding, must be construed to mean a remedy which, like a writ of error or appeal, will set aside and annul the void proceedings of which the petitioner complains. State v. Rose, 58 N. W. 514, 519, 4 N. D. 319.

Other remedial writs.

Under the Constitution, investing the Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction, and authorizing it to issue "other remedial writs," it is held that this phrase embraces only such writs other than those specifically enumerated as may be properly used in the exercise of appellate powers, or of the power of control over inferior or other courts expressly granted by the Constitution. State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. (1 Pike) 279.

The term "other remedial writs," in the constitutional clause giving to the Supreme Court a superintending control over all the inferior courts of law and equity, with power to issue writs of error and supersedeas, certiorari and habeas corpus, mandamus and quo warranto, and other remedial writs, means only such other writs as may be proper, needful, and appropriate to carry out the general objects of the grant, leaving to the courts to say when and in what shape their interposition for the preservation of life, liberty, or property is necessary. Ex parte Woods, 8 Ark. (3 Pike) 532, 538.

The term "other remedial writs," in a constitutional provision that "the Supreme Court shall have power to issue writs of error and supersedeas, certiorari and habeas corpus, mandamus and quo warranto, and other remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same," embraces only such other writs as may be properly used in the exercise of appellate powers, or the power of control over inferior or other courts, expressly granted by the Constitution, and does not include the power to issue writs of injunction to stay proceedings at law. Ex parte Jones, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 93, 97.

Other rock.

"Other rock," as contained in an instruction requiring the claimant for mineral land to show by a preponderance of evidence that such mineral consists of veins of quartz or other rock in place, means any combination of rock broken up, mixed with minerals and other things, and does not mean merely hard rock or quartz rock. Stevens v. Williams (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 40, 42.

Other sharp or dangerous weapon.

The words "other sharp or dangerous weapon," as used in Laws 1854, c. 74, providing for the punishment of any person who, with intent to do bodily harm, and without justifiable or excusable cause, shall hereafter commit any assault on the person of another with any knife, dirk, dagger, or other sharp or dangerous weapon, mean a weapon of the same character as a knife, dirk, or dagger; that is, naturally producing the same or similar results as those produced by the instruments mentioned. People v. Cavanagh (N. Y.) 62 How. Prac. 187, 193.

Other state or government.

"Other," as used in Code Proc. § 227, defining a foreign corporation to be a corporation created by or under the laws of any other state, government, or county, means any other state or government than that of New York. Cooke v. State Nat. Bank of Boston (N. Y.) 50 Barb. 339, 341.

Other street railway.

Act Mo. March 26, 1887, § 2, relating to the granting of street railway franchises, declares that before granting any franchise for constructing and operating any elevated, underground, or other street railway on, over, or under any street, etc., the city authorities shall designate the route, etc. It was held that the words "other street railway" are not repugnant to any other words in the sentence, but apply to a surface road; the court remarking that, even construing the phrase "other street railways" according to the rule of ejusdem generis, surface street railways were included. The genus is street railway. The kinds or species of street railways are elevated, underground, and surface, and the act clearly included them all. Ruckert v. Grand Ave. Ry. Co., 63 S. W. 814, 818, 163 Mo. 280.

Other structure.

The words "other structure," as used in Acts Mich. 1885, p. 293, § 1, giving one who builds any house, building, machinery, wharf, or other structure a lien thereon and on the lot or piece of land not exceeding one quarter section, following, as they do, specific words, do not include a railroad. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. J. E. Potts Salt & Lumber Co. (U. S.) 63 Fed. 11, 15, 11 C. C. A. 11.

"Other structures," as used in Acts 1872, c. 669, providing that all the provisions of the laws relating to mechanics' liens should apply to wharves, piers, bulkheads, and bridges, and materials furnished therefor, and labor performed in constructing such wharves, piers, bulkheads, and bridges, and other structures connected therewith, covers something not strictly included in the terms before used. It means all structures on or connected with the pier, and necessary for its use, and includes sheds built on the piers, which were quite essential to their use, and, in a broad sense, were really a part of them. Collins v. Drew, 67 N. Y. 149, 151.

Other sufficient cause.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2481, authorizing the surrogate to open and vacate decrees for fraud, newly discovered evidence, clerical error, or other sufficient cause, will be interpreted as meaning causes of like nature with the others specifically named. In re Tilden's Ex'r's, 98 N. Y. 434, 442; In re Hawley, 100 N. Y. 203, 8 N. E. 68; In re Monteth's Estate, 58 N. Y. Supp. 379, 27 Misc. Rep. 163; In re Soule, 25 N. Y. Supp. 270, 272, 72 Hun, 594.

Other thing.

"Other thing," as used in St. 1862, c. 168, § 1, providing that whoever prints, publishes, sells, or distributes any book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, or other thing containing obscene, indecent, or impure language, etc., shall be punished, etc., must be construed to mean "or other thing of like kind." The maxim noscitur a sociis applies. Commonwealth v. De Jardin, 128 Mass. 46, 47, 30 Am. Rep. 652.

Act Feb. 18, 1867, § 1, authorizing the giving of a lien for an advance of money for the purchase of supplies, farming utensils, working stock, or "other things necessary for the cultivation of a farm," means all other things in addition to the specified articles which constitute the common and usual outfit to make the crop. "The exact articles included therein must depend upon the usage and custom of agricultural pursuits, taking into account the system of agriculture as we have it. What might be necessary on large plantations would be very extravagant for the cultivation of a few acres." Herman v. Perkins, 52 Miss. 818, 816.

The words "other things," in a will, held represented by the sign, "etc.," and to cover articles of the same nature as those specified in the clause. Tefft v. Tillinghast, 7 R. L. 484, 486.

Other thing of value.

The words "other thing of value," in a statute making it a misdemeanor to obtain by means of any forged instrument, etc., any money, goods, or property, or other thing of value, do not modify the words "money, goods, and property," but are only used to enlarge the class of personal things which the statute makes penal to retain by false pretenses; and therefore, in an indictment for obtaining property in violation of the statute, it is not necessary to allege the value thereof. State v. Gillespie, 80 N. C. 896, 897.

Other tort.

The term "other tort resulting in personal injury," in Gen. St. 1894, § 5338, subsec. 1, as amended by Laws 1895, c. 80, providing that actions of libel, slander, assault, battery, false imprisonment, or other tort resulting in personal injury must be brought within two years, includes an action for malicious prosecution. Bryant v. American Surety Co., 71 N. W. 826, 69 Minn. 80.

Other unforeseen cause.

A charter party required the charterer to load a full cargo of guano, and also that he should be discharged from liability in the event of the vessel being lost, or of any other unforeseen cause preventing the completion of the charter party. It was held that the phrase "other unforeseen cause" did not refer to any unforeseen cause which might prevent the loading of a cargo, such as the failure to find sufficient guano to make a load. Hills v. Sughrue, 15 Mees. & W. 253, 261.

Other unlawful game.

"Other unlawful game," as used in 1 Ky. St. Law, 760, 761, providing for the punishment of any owner, tenant, or other superintendent of a house who permits or suffers games at faro, or any other unlawful game or games whatever at which money or any other thing is won or lost in such house, should be construed to include the game of poker, at which money is won and lost. Any game at which money or other thing is lost and won is an unlawful game, within the meaning of the statute. Vicaro v. Commonwealth, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 504, 506.

Other valuable minerals.

"Other valuable minerals," as used in a conveyance of all the coal, iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals in, on, or under the particular lands, does not include petroleum oil and natural gas. Detlor v. Holland, 49 N. E. 680, 692, 57 Ohio St. 492, 40 L. R. A. 263.

Other valuable thing.

Money or other valuable thing, within the meaning of a statute imposing a penalty for running a ferry for money or other valuable thing without obtaining a license, does not include a supposed benefit to one who runs a free ferry as an inducement to trade at his store, if there is no agreement to trade at his store with the parties ferried, and no money paid by them prior to the time that they are so ferried. Shinn v. Cotton, 12 S. W. 157, 52 Ark. 90.

Other vessels.

Laws 1862, c. 482, authorized the seizure of seagoing or ocean-bound vessels, or any other vessel, for the collection of demands and debts. Held, that the words "other vessels" should be construed to include canal boats. Where the Legislature, in its enactments, distinguished between seagoing and other vessels, the latter clause should be received in its largest sense, and be held to include all craft used in navigating the waters or canals of the state. Crawford v. Collins (N. Y.) 30 How. Prac. 398, 400.

"The words boats, barges, or other vessels, in an act of Parliament, have been held not to include ships, as ships or vessels are not ejusdem generis with boards and barges." In re Barre Water Co., 20 Atl. 109, 110, 62 Vt. 27, 9 L. R. A. 195 (quoting Lyndon v. Standbridge, 2 Hurl. & N. 45).

The term "boats and other vessels," in a statute giving a lien upon boats and other vessels for construction, repairs, and supplies, applies exclusively to vessels intended for navigation, and does not include a floating wharf, constructed for receiving, storing, and forwarding merchandise. Olmsted v. McNaill (Ind.) 7 Blackf. 887, 888.

Other waters.

"Other waters," as used in Code, § 2546, providing that a warden may take from any of the public waters of the state, at any time and in any manner, any fish, for the purpose of propagating or restocking other waters, is restricted to the kind previously mentioned; that is, public waters. State v. Sears, 87 N. W. 735, 115 Iowa, 28.

Other writing.

"Other writing," as used in the statute relating to the crime of forgery, and providing, after naming certain specific writings or instruments which might be the subject of forgery, "or any other writing of any person or persons whatsoever to prevent equity and justice," includes an order, though the same was not specifically mentioned. State v. Cooper (Conn.) 5 Day, 250, 254.

"Other writing for the payment of money," as used in Code, § 8285, dispensing with an inquiry of damages in an action on any bond or other writing for the payment of money, means other writing like a bond, for the payment of a sum ascertained and certain. It does not include a policy of fire insurance containing a provision that, if there is other insurance on the property, the loss shall be adjusted among the several insurers. Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Everhardt's Adm'r, 14 S. E. 836, 837, 88 Va. 952.

Under section 1, Act April 15, 1866 (14 Stat. 12), now section 5418, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8666], which provides a penalty for the forging of any bid, proposal, guaranty, official bond, public record, affidavit, or other writing, for the purpose of defrauding the United States, the words "other writing" include an owner's oath required to be taken before making an entry of goods at the customhouse, and an import entry and importer's bond. United States v. Lawrence (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 878.

OTHER INSURANCE.

"Other insurance," as contained in an insurance policy providing that the policy should be void if there should, without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, be "other insurance, valid or otherwise," on the property insured, meant insurance in addition to that effected by the policy itself, or which was allowable under its terms; and consequently it would not have been rendered void by the existence of another insurance policy covering the same property if this state of things was permissible under any language constituting a portion of the policy, or by virtue of the company's consent indorsed thereon. Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 29 S. E. 148, 149, 102 Ga. 106.

An insurance policy providing that if the insured shall thereafter make other insurance on the property without the consent of the company written thereon, etc., then the policy shall be void, means other valid insurance, and the making of a void policy does not create a forfeiture of the first policy. "A contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity, and if there be no indemnity by its terms, and the contract is void, then there is no insurance, though there may be a policy of insurance in form; and, there being no insurance in reality, such void policy is not included in the words 'make other insurance.'" Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nicol, 35 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 291, 299, 40 Am. St. Rep. 625;

Dahlberg v. St. Louis Mut. Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 6 Mo. App. 121; Cassity v. New Orleans Ins. Ass'n, 3 South. 138, 139, 65 Miss. 49; Allison v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 530, 532.

The words "other insurance," in a fire policy conditioned to be void if other insurance is obtained without the written consent of the insurer, "do not mean a void policy, which obviously offers no insurance at all, nor do they mean a policy which may, at the option of the underwriter, be canceled, for that is, at best, but conditional insurance. They mean a binding, available insurance, only, upon which the insured can rely for protection in case of loss, and which he can enforce by law, and which cannot be repudiated with impunity at the arbitrary election of the insurer. The condition prohibits a second valid insurance without the consent of the insurer, and not a mere futile attempt to procure conditional insurance. A second policy which by its own terms is void for any cause is not an insurance at all, and this is equally true whether the invalidity is apparent on the face of the policy itself, or is made to appear by evidence aliunde the policy." Sweeting v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 34 Atl. 826-827, 83 Md. 63, 32 L. R. A. 570.

An insurance policy stipulated that the defendant company, in case there was other insurance, should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss sustained than the sum covered by its policy should bear to the whole amount of the insurance. Plaintiff violated a condition in a policy taken out in another company to the effect that it should be null and void in case other insurance was effected without the consent of the insurer. Held, that the words "other insurance," in defendant's policy, should be construed to include the policy taken out in the other company, since it was only voidable at the option of the company. Saville v. Aetna Ins. Co., 20 Pac. 646, 650, 8 Mont. 419, 8 L. R. A. 542.

An insurance policy providing that the assured shall not be entitled to recover any greater proportion of the loss or damage than the amount insured bears to the whole sum insured on the property, "without reference to the solvency or the liability of other insurers," does not mean other valid insurance, and the sum insured by a policy which was invalidated by the taking of a subsequent policy was to be deducted from the amount specified in such later policy. Cassity v. New Orleans Ins. Ass'n, 3 South. 138, 139, 65 Miss. 49.

Insurance by third person.

Where a fire policy procured by the owner provided that it should be void if now or hereafter there be other insurance on any property hereby insured, the fact that a mortgagee subsequently procured insurance on his interest did not render the policy void, the interest thus insured being distinct from the owner's interest, so that the insurance of that interest did not constitute other insurance, within the meaning of the policy. Home Ins. Co. v. Koob, 68 S. W. 453, 454, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L. R. A. 58; Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co., 28 N. W. 749, 61 Mich. 635; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 32 N. E. 914, 915, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L. R. A. 114; Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 410, 415.

The term "other insurance," in a fire policy providing that, in case of any other insurance upon the property insured, the assured shall be entitled to recover no greater proportion of the loss sustained than the sum thereby insured should bear to the whole amount insured thereon, does not include insurance on the property effected by a mortgagee upon his interest as such. Adams v. Greenwich Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 9 Hun, 45, 48; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 28 N. E. 919, 922, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L. R. A. 114; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Pacuad, 37 N. E. 460, 462, 150 Ill. 245, 41 Am. St. Rep. 355.

"Other insurance," as used in an insurance policy providing for a pro-rata distribution of the loss if the assured "shall have already any other insurance" on the property, covers not only insurances made by the assured in his own name, but any others which he had either in the name of another, or by assignment for his benefit. But a policy will not be deemed void where it was effected by the purchaser of premises, who insured without notice of a policy effected by his vendor, and which was not assigned to him. Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler (N. Y.) 16 Wend. 385, 400, 30 Am. Dec. 90.

Where it appears that insurance was taken upon a joint interest in property, further insurance on the interest or title of one of the joint owners did not vitiate the policy under a clause providing that, if any other insurance shall be made upon the said property without the company's consent, the policy should be void. Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 61 Barb. 335, 342.

"Other insurance," within the meaning of a fire policy taken out by a mortgagee for the protection of his interest, but jointly in his name and that of the mortgagor, without the knowledge of the mortgagor, which policy provides that it "shall be void if there is or shall be any other insurance on the property insured," does not include a prior policy taken out by the mortgagor upon his interest in the property, as the mortgagor and mortgagee have separate insurable interests therein. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Foster, 90 Ill. 121, 124.

Prior or subsequent insurance.

A condition in an insurance policy that every person insuring must give notice of any "other insurance" effected applies to subsequent as well as to prior insurance. Warwick v. Monmouth County Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 83, 43 Am. Rep. 843, 28 Alb. Law J. 44.

A prohibition in a policy against other insurance refers to subsequent insurance, and the validity of a policy was not affected by prior insurance, though unknown to the underwriter. Mussey v. Atlas Mut. Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 79, 82.

The taking of a policy of insurance in renewal of prior insurance mentioned in the application for a policy was not within the terms of a provision in the latter policy requiring notice in case of taking other insurance. Brown v. Cattaraugus County Mut. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 885, 891.

OTHER THAN.

A creditor's action to set aside a conveyance in fraud of creditors is within the six-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 882, as an equitable action to procure a judgment "other than for money." Weaver v. Haviland, 37 N. E. 641, 142 N. Y. 534, 40 Am. St. Rep. 681.

The use of the words "other than," in an indictment charging that defendant was a married man having a lawful wife other than said A., cannot be construed to mean that A. was also his wife, especially where another sentence stated that said defendant and A. were not then and there married to each other. Lyman v. People, 64 N. E. 974, 975, 198 Ill. 544.

As contrary to.

"Other than" is not a reasonable substitute for "contrary to" or "at variance with," and hence as used in an instruction that if a witness has made statements out of court "other than" those made in his testimony, etc., is erroneous. Elrod v. Ashton, 85 N. W. 599, 600, 14 S. D. 850.

As creating an exception.

Plaintiff devised land by indenture, excepting all timber, trees, etc., "other than such bushes and thorns as shall be necessary for the repair of fences," and the lessee covenanted to keep the fences in repair during the term, finding all materials, except that the lessor should find rough wood for such repairs, if growing on the premises. Held, that the provisions as to bushes and thorns was not an exception out of an exception, but that all trees, bushes, and thorns were excepted, whether part of the fence or not, or whether necessary for repairs or not. Jenney v. Brook, 6 Q. B. 323, 338.

The words "other than," in a constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken or applied for public use unless just compensation be made therefor, nor shall private property be taken for private use, or for the benefit of corporations "other than" municipal, without the consent of the owner, operates to except municipal corporations from the operation of the section. Ex parte Selma & G. R. Co., 45 Ala. 696, 732, 6 Am. Rep. 722.

OTHER THINGS BEING EQUAL.

The court, in instructing the jury, with reference to the testimony of men of great scientific attainments, "that, 'other things being equal,' the greater number would carry the greater weight," meant all things being equal in respect to such witnesses. Spensley v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 22 N. W. 740, 745, 62 Wis. 443.

OTHERS.

"Others," as used in a bill of exceptions in reference to the plaintiffs in error, did not serve to designate any person, and those not specifically mentioned will not be considered parties to the appeal. Farr v. Farr, 38 S. E. 962, 113 Ga. 577.

"Others," as used in the articles of association of a corporation, providing that the officers should continue in office until the next annual meeting and until "others" are elected in their stead, does not necessarily mean different persons. Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 887, 890 (citing Commissioners of Public Accounts v. Greenwood [S. C.] 1 Desaut. 450, 452; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 720, 6 L. Ed. 199).

"Others," as used in Act March 21, 1871, providing that the commissioners appointed to assess damages for opening streets shall meet on ten days' notice given by or to any of the persons so applying for a review of the assessment to each of the "others," or to his, her, or their attorney or agent, extends to all who are interested in the application for a new assessment, and not merely to those other persons who make application for commissioners to review the assessment. Copeland v. Village of Passaic, 36 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 382, 386.

Where a testator having eight children, besides grandchildren by a deceased daughter, divided the residue of his estate into nine parts, and gave two parts absolutely to two sons, and the other seven parts in trust for the other children and grandchildren, and the will provided that, if any of the beneficiaries of the trust died without issue, his or her portion should be equally divided among the others, the word "others" should be construed not to refer merely to the beneficiaries of the trust, the next preceding antecedent, but to include all those beneficially entitled under the residuary clause, including the two sons who were given their portions absolutely. Niles v. Almy, 36 N. E. 582, 161 Mass. 29.

The word "others," in a statutory definition of "murder" as including homicide perpetrated by an act imminently dangerous to others, must be held to mean any person or persons other than the one committing it, and does not imply that the act shall be dangerous to several. Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226, 247.

The word "others," in a statute giving a lien to mechanics, tradesmen, or others for labor or materials, "is a general one, immediately following the enumeration of particular cases—'mechanics' and 'tradesmen'—and is therefore applicable to other persons in the same category or calling. The statute should not be construed to include every person who furnishes material or performs labor on a vessel, because if that was the intention of the Legislature, it was very easy to have said so." The City of Salem (U. S.) 81 Fed. 618, 618, 2 L. R. A. 880.

The term "mechanics and others," in 4 Stat. 659, entitled "An act to secure mechanics and others payment for labor done and materials furnished in the erections of building in the District of Columbia," does not include a master builder, undertaker, or contractor who undertakes by contract with the owner to erect the building, or some part or portion thereof, on certain terms. The persons enumerated in this section are plainly those mechanics or tradesmen whose personal labor or property have been incorporated into the building, and not the agents, supervisors, undertakers, or contractors who employed them. Winder v. Caldwell, 55 U. S. (14 How.) 434, 444, 14 L. Ed. 487.

Where an insurance company agreed to "become insurer to a warehouseman for the benefit of himself and 'others' having tobacco stored and to be stored in his warehouse, on said stock of tobacco," etc., it was held that the words "for the benefit of himself and others" expressed an insurance of the tobacco of other persons which should be stored in the warehouse of the insured, and not merely of the insured's interest therein. Strohn v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 33 Wis. 648, 655.

OTHERWISE.

See "Not Otherwise."

The words "or otherwise," in law, when used as a general phrase following an enumeration of particulars, are commonly interpreted in a restricted sense, as referring to such other matters as are kindred to the classes before mentioned. Cent. Dict. The phrase "or otherwise," when following an enumeration, should receive an ejusdem generis interpretation. In Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. (7 O. E. Green) 130, 400, the chancellor said that the radical meaning of the word "otherwise" is "different from that to which it relates." People v. Feitner, 75 N. Y. Supp. 738, 739, 71 App. Div. 479.

One of the usual meanings of "otherwise" is "contrarily." Contra Costa Water Co. v. Breed, 73 Pac. 189, 193, 139 Cal. 482.

"Otherwise" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as meaning "in a different manner; in another way; differently in other respects"; by Webster, "in a different manner; in other respects"; and by the Century Dictionary, "in a different manner or way; differently in other respects." Thomson v. City of Highland Park, 58 N. E. 823, 329, 187 Ill. 285.

The allegation of specific personal injuries, followed by the allegation that plaintiff was "otherwise greatly hurt and wounded," does not authorize proof of injuries other than those specifically alleged. Chesapeake & N. Ry. v. Hanmer (Ky.) 66 S. W. 375, 376.

The word "otherwise," in Act April 26, 1891, entitled "An act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in original packages, or otherwise," shows that the object of the act was to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in any manner, whether in original packages or not. Webster defines the word "otherwise" as meaning "in a different manner; in any other way; differently; contrarily." The words "or otherwise," as used in the title of an act, have a more definite and a different meaning from the words "or other purposes," as those words are generally used in the title to legislative enactments. The latter words, when thus used, are laid out of consideration, and are not regarded as amounting to anything, but it is not so with the words "or otherwise." Lynch v. Murphy, 24 S. W. 774, 775, 119 Mo. 163.

"Otherwise," as used in Rev. St. § 811, denouncing punishment against whoever shall be found guilty of attempting to rob from the person by cutting or tearing the clothes, or thrusting the hand into the pockets, or "otherwise," is intended to include all similar acts to those specified, resorted to in an attempt to rob. State v. West, 80 South. 848, 106 La. 274.

Under a statute prohibiting the obstructing or incumbering highways by fences, buildings, structures, or "otherwise," that term includes incumbering by a felled tree. Nagle v. Brown, 87 Ohio St. 7, 10.

The term "otherwise," in a statute providing that it shall be lawful for the United Companies to consolidate their respective capital stocks, or to consolidate with any railroad or canal company in this state, "or otherwise," with which they are or may be identified in interest, is not an adverb of place, and is an inappropriate word to express the meaning of their rule, and cannot be given such meaning, and therefore the act does not authorize a lease to be made to a formed corporation. Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. (9 C. E. Green) 455, 475.

Under a statute entitling a wife injured in person or property or means of support, or "otherwise," by the sale of intoxicating liquors to her husband, to recover from the person selling the same, she may recover for injuries to her feelings. Radley v. Selder, 99 Mich. 431, 58 N. W. 363.

Otherwise acquired.

"Otherwise acquired," as used in a statute of descent in connection with lands inherited from parents, means lands descended from neither parent. Hoover v. Gregory, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 444, 451; Roberts v. Jackson, 12 Tenn. (4 Yerg.) 308, 323.

Otherwise appropriated.

The term "otherwise appropriated," in Act May 15, 1856, granting land to a state to aid in the construction of a railroad, and providing that, if any of the land shall have been sold or "otherwise appropriated," other sections may be taken, includes lands withdrawn from sale at the time of the passage of the act, and excludes lands granted to the state of Iowa by the act of September 28, 1850, known as the "Swamp Land Grant." Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Fremont County, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 89, 94, 19 L. Ed. 563.

"Otherwise appropriated," as used in Act March 20, 1863, appropriating land in aid of the construction of the Mineral Range Railroad, and declaring that there should be withheld from sale not exceeding 1,280 acres of the swamp lands in the Upper Peninsula "not otherwise appropriated," meant an appropriation by the Legislature for some purpose similar to that intended by the statute—a disposition of the lands in some way by which the state is to part with the title—and it did not mean lands which had been set aside or withdrawn from the course of sale as mineral lands had been in some instances. Houghton County v. Commissioners of State Land Office, 23 Mich. 270, 278.

Otherwise controlled.

The phrase, "or otherwise controlled by him," in Rev. St. § 2734, requiring every person of full age and sound mind to list for taxation "all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him, as agent or attorney, or on account of any other person or persons," must be construed to mean in a manner similar to the loaning and investing of money. Myers v. Seaberger, 45 Ohio St. 232, 234, 236, 12 N. E. 796, 798.

Otherwise defective or invalid.

In 19 Stat. U. S. 267, commonly called the "Booth Act," providing that where indemnity school selections have been made and certified to the state, and said selections shall fail by reason of the land in lieu of which they were taken not being included within such final survey of a Mexican grant, "or are otherwise defective or invalid," the same are hereby confirmed, the use of the words "or are otherwise defective or invalid" shows that the intention of Congress in enacting the law was to cover any and all defects in indemnity school selections. Daniels v. Gualala Mill Co., 19 Pac. 519, 520, 77 Cal. 300.

Otherwise disabled.

Rev. St. § 1512, provides that when any person not a resident nor having a legal settlement in a town, shall become sick, lame, or "otherwise disabled," and shall not have money or property to pay his board, attendance, and medical aid, the supervisors shall provide such assistance as they may deem just and necessary, and if he shall die they shall give him a decent burial. Held, that the term "otherwise disabled," as used in such section, meant bodily or mental disability to procure a livelihood, and included a case of a woman who was so disabled by reason of mental infirmity as to be practically an imbecile. McCaffrey v. Town of Shields, 12 N. W. 54, 57, 54 Wis. 645.

Otherwise dispose of.

"Otherwise disposed of," as used in Pen. Code, art. 773, making it a penal offense to remove out of the state any personal property on which accused has given any written lien, to sell such property, or to "otherwise dispose" of such property with intent to defraud the lienholder, "does not include a removal or sale, but does include any other method of placing the property beyond the reach of the holder of the lien with such intent." Robberson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 502, 503.

The statute authorizing a mining corporation, on the vote of two-thirds of its stockholders and directors, to "sell, lease, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of" its property or any part thereof, does not authorize the corporation to give or transfer all its property to a corporation organized in another state in exchange for stock in such other corporation to be given to the stockholders of the mining corporation. The words "or otherwise dispose of," in so far as they may seem sufficiently significant to require their application to powers other than those specifically named, may be satisfied by reference to the right to assign for the benefit of creditors, to hypothecate or pledge, or possibly even the right to remove or destroy the mills, smelters, concentrators, or reduction works, rather than by allowing them, by mere implication, to create or recognize a power radically different from those particularly specified. Forrester v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 55 Pac. 229, 235, 236, 21 Mont. 544.

The words "otherwise disposed of," as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1820 (3 Stat. 547), granting to the state of Missouri for the use of schools the sixteenth section of every township in the state which had not been sold or "otherwise disposed of," signifies some disposition of the property equally efficient with a sale, which necessarily signifies a legal sale by competent authority, which is a disposition final and irrevocable of the land, and equally incompatible with any right in the state, present or potential. The expression "otherwise disposed of" does not include the case of an imperfect title, claimed to be derived from the Spanish government, which had been rejected by the board of commissioners. Ham v. Missouri, 59 U. S. (18 How.) 123, 133, 15 L. Ed. 334.

The expression "otherwise dispose of," as used in Acts 1871-72, p. 71, § 1, providing that no person, after having executed a mortgage deed to personal property, shall be permitted to sell or "otherwise dispose of" the same with intent to defraud the mortgagee, means a disposing of the property in the nature of a sale, and not in any other manner, and is included in and in effect the same as the selling mentioned in the title of the act, which was entitled "An act to make penal the selling of personal property mortgaged as security for a debt." Conley v. State, 11 S. E. 659, 661, 85 Ga. 348.

In a statute prohibiting the selling, giving, or otherwise disposing of intoxicating liquors without a license, the words "or otherwise disposing of," in the absence of any expression of a larger legislative intention, must be construed to refer to a disposition of the same class as a sale or gift. Roberson v. State, 14 South. 554, 555, 100 Ala. 37.

Otherwise disqualified.

Laws 1870, p. 171, § 2 (Cr. Code, § 56), provides that in all cases in which it shall be made to appear that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the suit is pending, as where the judge is interested, or has been of counsel in the case, or is related to either of the parties, or is "otherwise disqualified" to sit, the court, on application of either party, may change the place of trial. Held, that the words "otherwise disqualified" meant prejudice, and that the section required a change of venue on a showing of prejudice being made. Appeal of Peyton, 12 Kan. 398, 407.

Otherwise improve.

"Otherwise," as used in an ordinance providing for the grading, draining, paving, and "otherwise" improving of a certain street, is a broad and comprehensive word, sufficient to make the phrase "otherwise improving" include almost any improvement of the street. Thomson v. City of Highland Park, 58 N. E. 328, 329, 187 Ill. 265.

Laws 1872, c. 100, § 54, providing that a city council shall have power to open, widen, or "otherwise improve" any street, avenue, lane, or alley, etc., provided that the damages sustained by the citizens of the city or the owners of the property therein shall be ascertained as prescribed, refers only to such improvements as are like those mentioned, namely, to open, widen, and extend, or are necessarily incident thereto and which partake of the same character, for under the rules of construction the words "or otherwise improve" must be limited by the preceding language of the section. Methodist Episcopal Church v. City of Wyandotte, 3 Pac. 527, 530, 81 Kan. 721.

"Otherwise improving highways," as used in a statute authorizing a county board to expend certain moneys in making gutters, graveling, ditching, or "otherwise improving highways," should be construed to mean making other improvements of a similar character to the designated improvements, and hence does not authorize the building of a bridge at an extraordinary expense. State v. Wood Co., 40 N. W. 381, 385, 72 Wis. 629.

The words "otherwise improving," as used in Act 1891, § 10, giving the right of appeal from ordinances "otherwise improving" a street or alley, will not embrace the vacating of a street. The word "vacating" is not suggestive of improving, but of abandoning, abolishing, or destroying, and the words "otherwise improving" could not within any reasonable interpretation give the right of appeal for vacating. Daughters of American Revolution v. Schenley, 54 Atl. 366, 370, 204 Pa. 572.

Otherwise occupied.

"Otherwise occupied," as used in a lease of a certain factory building, including the passageway from the street to the end and front of such building, and the yard room around the same not "otherwise occupied," has reference to the usual and customary occupation thereof. Meredith Mechanic Ass'n v. American Twist Drill Co., 20 Atl. 330, 331, 66 N. E. 267.

Otherwise produced.

"Otherwise produced," as used in Laws 1887, c. 377, § 2, as amended by Laws 1888, c. 181, making it unlawful for any person or corporation to use, without the owner's consent, the bottles, boxes, etc., of another with the owner's name or other marks or devices branded, stamped, engraved, blown, impressed, or "otherwise produced" upon such bottles, etc., relates to the same means of engraving upon the bottles, etc., as the other preceding words indicate naturally something that is developed out of the surface of the bottle by engraving, etching, or blowing, or other like means whereby an inerasable impression is produced. People v. Elfenbein, 20 N. Y. Supp. 384, 385, 65 Hun, 434.

Otherwise provided.

"Otherwise provided," as used in Gen. St. § 1618, providing that every person charged with an offense shall be tried in the county wherein the offense was committed, except when "otherwise provided," means when otherwise provided by statute. State v. Meehan, 25 Atl. 478, 62 Conn. 128.

"Otherwise provided," as used in Const. art. 15, providing that the Constitution shall be in force from January 1, 1895, except as herein or "otherwise provided," should not be construed to mean otherwise provided in express terms, but to mean that any language used in or any proper and necessary construction of the instrument which shows an intention that the particular provision shall take effect at some time other than January 1, 1895. In re Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Com'rs, 41 N. E. 575, 578, 147 N. Y. 280.

Otherwise secured.

The term "otherwise secured," in Supreme Court rule 29, requiring supersedeas bonds, conditioned that the writ of error or appeal shall be prosecuted to effect, to be, where the judgment or decree is for the recovery of money not "otherwise secured," for the whole amount of the judgment or decree, including just damages for delay, and costs and interest on appeal, means secured otherwise than by mere force of judgment. A judgment is not "otherwise secured" within the meaning of the rule when the court has not, by reason of a lien on property secured to plaintiff otherwise than by the judgment, or by reason of actual custody of property liable to satisfy the claim asserted, the means of making the claim of the plaintiff by subjecting specific property. Fuller v. Aylesworth (U. S.) 75 Fed. 694, 701, 21 O. C. A. 505.

Otherwise used.

As used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 81, § 5, providing that all public schoolhouses, academies, colleges, universities, and seminaries of learning, with the books and furniture therein necessary for their proper occupancy, use, and enjoyment, and "not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit," shall be exempt from taxation, means other uses of the property than the appropriation and operation of the same for the legitimate purposes of an institution of learning. The words do not relate to revenues derived from the use of the seminary property for the legitimate purposes of an institution of learning. Ramsey County v. Stryker Seminary, 53 N. W. 1138, 1184, 52 Minn. 144.

"Otherwise used and practiced," as used in the Constitution, providing for a right of trial by jury except in those cases in which it had been "otherwise used and practiced," includes the practice of assessing damages occasioned by the laying out of highways by the court or by a committee, and where such custom was in practice before the Constitution was adopted it comes within the exception. Backus v. Lebanon, 11 N. H. 19, 27, 35 Am. Dec. 466.

Accident or otherwise.

A provision in a lease, under which the lessor was to furnish steam power to the lessee, that, on failure to furnish such power "through accident or otherwise," the liability of the lessor should be limited to a certain recovery, is broad enough to include wear and tear, breakage from inherent defects, or even simple negligence or the torts of others, but does not limit the lessor's liability for damages to the lessee's business arising from the breaking by the lessor of the connections by which the steam power was conveyed, committed in a willful trespass for the purpose of requiring the lessee to surrender possession. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Morrison, Adams & Allen Co., 43 N. E. 393, 399, 160 Ill. 288.

Accidentally or otherwise.

As used in the clause of an insurance policy declaring that the insurance does not cover injuries or death resulting from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, "otherwise" is read in connection with the preceding word "accidentally," and means an injury of a kindred character, and would cover an intentional taking as well as an accidental taking. Lowenstein v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York (U. S.) 88 Fed. 474, 477.

Agent or otherwise.

Under a statute providing that, "if any person or persons except taverners, by agent or 'otherwise' shall keep any house for the sale of wines and spirituous liquors to be drank thereat," he shall be punished, etc., defendant, who was indicted, charged that "he, not being a taverner, did keep a certain house, store, and shop for the purpose of selling wines and spirituous liquors," claimed that no offense was alleged, because it was not averred that he kept the house, store, and shop by his agent, and that if he kept it himself personally, and not by his agent, there was no violation of the law. It was insisted that the word "otherwise," so used in the penal statute, had no meaning, and is to be rejected in its construction. In considering this objection, the court said: "No man can read this statute without learning from its entire purport that the controlling purpose of the Legislature was to suppress tippling houses, under whatever pretense or name established, and thus prevent the facilities to intemperate and ruinous dram drinking. To reject the word 'otherwise' from the law, and thus to legalize the evil which it was the object of the statute to prevent, if perpetrated in person and not by agent, would be not only absurd, but it would involve a judicial repeal of an important part of the law itself. This word was not incautiously introduced into the statute; it was necessary to give full expression to the intent of the Legislature." Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292, 299.

As alleged or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in an answer alleging that defendant was not indebted to the plaintiff as alleged in the complaint "or otherwise," should be construed as a denial that the defendant was in any manner indebted to the plaintiff on account of the subject-matter of the complaint, whether in the precise form as stated or not. King v. De Coursey, 9 Pac. 81, 82, 8 Colo. 463.

Assignment or otherwise.

The words "or otherwise," in Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that an interested party or person shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person or lunatic, by assignment or "otherwise," concerning a personal transaction or communication with deceased, embraces and covers all means and manner of succession or devolution, in addition to that by assignment. Thus an executor of an estate appointed after the death of a prior executor is a person deriving his title or interest through a deceased person, and entitled to the protection of the statute. Carpenter v. Romer & Tremper Steamboat Co., 63 N. Y. Supp. 274, 278, 48 App. Div. 863.

Barred by statute of limitations or otherwise.

A provision in a will that all debts and dues enforced against testator's estate in consequence of certain transactions, "whether barred by the statute of limitations or otherwise," are to be adjusted, may mean whether barred by the statute of limitations or barred otherwise, and it may mean whether barred or otherwise—that is, whether barred or not by the statute of limitations. Bosworth v. Smith, 9 R. I. 67, 75.

Caption or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Const. art. 2, § 17, requiring that all acts which repeal, revive, or amend former laws shall recite, in their caption or "otherwise," the title or substance of the law repealed, revived, or amended, refers to the body of the repealing, reviving, or amending act. State v. Yardley, 82 S. W. 481, 483, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 548, 84 L. R. A. 656; Sheiton v. State, 32 S. W. 967, 968, 96 Tenn. (12 Pickle) 521; State v. Rannels, 21 S. W. 665, 666, 92 Tenn. (8 Pickle) 320; Ransome v. State, 20 S. W. 810, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 716.

The term "otherwise," as used in a constitutional provision that the title or substance of the act to be amended must appear in the amending act, either in its caption "or otherwise," can only mean the preamble or body of the act, as contradistinguished from the title or caption. Memphis St. R. Co. v. State, 75 S. W. 730, 732, 110 Tenn. 598.

Collusion or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in the mechanic's lien law, rendering the owner liable to subcontractors for money "paid in advance by collusion or otherwise," relates to the subject of the special word "collusion," and means a payment made collusively or by some fraudulent or collusive practice, and does not include a payment made in good faith and with no intention of defrauding the estate. Foeller v. Voight, 5 Ohio Dec. 2.

"Otherwise," as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1863, § 3 (12 Stat. 739), providing for the punishment of any person who shall by exhibition of any false sample, or by means of any false representation or device, or by collusion with any officer of the revenue, or "otherwise," knowingly effect or aid in effecting any entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at less than the true weight or measure thereof, means by any other fraudulent means whatsoever. If the fraudulent entry were effected by any other means than by false sample, false representation or device, or collusion with an officer of the revenue, such fraudulent means would be included in the word "otherwise." United States v. Bettilini (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1135, 1136.

The word "otherwise," as used in Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, § 1, authorizing an action by a taxpayer against county supervisors for injury consisting in auditing any illegal claim by "collusion or otherwise," does not mean any audit, but an audit due to some sinister or improper motive, and in violation of the public trust. Wallace v. Jones, 82 N. Y. Supp. 449, 451, 83 App. Div. 152.

Composition, real or otherwise.

The word "otherwise," in 18 Ellis, c. 10, § 1, providing that all prescriptions and claims of or for any modus decimandi, or of or to any exemption from or discharge of tithes by composition, real or otherwise, shall be sustained and be deemed good and valid in law, "cannot surely be construed to introduce an entirely new ground of exemption wholly unknown to the law, but the only legitimate meaning of the words must be that exemption on any legal ground shall be sustained and deemed good and valid, and indefeasible upon evidence of nonpayment for a certain length of time, instead of the length of time formerly required." Fellowes v. Clay, 4 Q. B. 311, 340.

Contiguous property or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Const. 1870, art. 9, § 9, providing that the General Assembly may vest cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments or by special taxation of contiguous property or "otherwise," is to be construed as meaning "or otherwise assessing the costs of the improvement against the property actually or presumptively benefited thereby." Wilson v. Board of Trustees of Sanitary Dist of Chicago, 27 N. E. 203, 208, 183 Ill. 443.

Death, absence from state, or otherwise.

Under Const. art. 49, providing that whenever the chair of the Governor shall become vacant by reason of his death, absence from the state, or "otherwise," the president of the senate shall during such vacancy have and exercise all the powers and authorities with which the Governor is vested, the Governor's physical disability is included in the word "otherwise," as equivalent for the provisional purpose of this article, to his death or absence from the state. Attorney General v. Taggart, 29 Atl. 1027, 1029, 66 N. H. 362, 25 L. R. A. 613.

"Otherwise," as used in Comp. St. 1897, c. 1280, § 184, relating to vacancies in the office of police judge by death, resignation, or "otherwise," the word "otherwise," in connection with the special words there employed, should probably be restricted to other causes of similar character, and the special terms refer only to causes which end prematurely the term of an actual incumbent; but section 75 makes refusal to qualify create a vacancy, and hence the word "otherwise" will be held to include the vacancies by reason of ineligibility. State v. Moores, 78 N. W. 529, 531, 58 Neb. 285.

Descent, devise, or otherwise.

The term "otherwise," in a statute declaring that all property belonging to a married woman as her sole and separate property, or which she owns at her marriage, or acquired in good faith from any person, other than her husband, by descent, devise, or otherwise, shall be her sole and separate property, includes the purchased property. Carpenter v. Mitchell, 54 Ill. 126, 131.

Divided or otherwise.

The term "divided or otherwise," as used in Internal Revenue Act 1864, § 117, requiring stockholders in companies mentioned in the section to return as income all gains and profits in them to which they should be entitled, whether the same were "divided or otherwise," embraces not only dividends declared, but profits not divided and invested partly in real estate, machinery, and raw materials, and partly applied to the payment of debts incurred in previous years. Annual gains and profits, whether divided or not, are property. Brainard v. Hubbard, 79 U. S. (12 Wall.) 1, 18, 20 L. Ed. 272.

Expiration of term of office or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Act March 16, 1866, providing for the filling of vacancies in the office of poor directors, whether such vacancy occurred by the expiration of the term of office or "otherwise," which is a supplement to Act April 9, 1862, providing for appointment to fill vacancies caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, is broad enough to cover vacancies by death or resignation. It also covers vacancies by removal of the incumbent from the district, and by failure of a director-elect to assume the duties of his office. Commonwealth v. Dickert, 45 Atl. 1058, 1061, 195 Pa. 234.

Fees, clerk hire, or otherwise.

The words "or otherwise," as used in Act April 18, 1865, providing that any county auditor who shall make, order, or pay any other or further allowances to a county treasurer, either as fees or for clerk hire, "or otherwise," than is specially provided by law, shall be liable in an action on his bond, etc., comprehend every case of getting money out of the treasury other than that which the laws have provided should be the legitimate one. State v. Kelly, 32 Ohio St. 421, 429.

Felonious or otherwise.

The use of the words "felonious or otherwise," in a life policy exempting the insurer from liability for a death caused by the act of assured, "felonious or otherwise," has the same effect as the words "sane or insane," and precludes a recovery if insured dies by his own hand, even though insane at the time of the act. Riley v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. (U. S.) 25 Fed. 315, 316.

Gift, grant, purchase, devise, or otherwise.

Sp. Laws 1885, c. 3, authorized a corporation to establish and maintain in the city of Minneapolis public libraries and reading rooms, galleries of art, and museums for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the city, and for these purposes the corporation were given power to take real and personal property "by gift, grant, purchase, devise, bequest, or otherwise." Held, that the words "or otherwise" were not meaningless, but were added to express an intention to authorize the taking of property in any mode other than those specified in the statute, which authorized it to take and hold property not only as owner but as bailee. Smith v. Library Board of City of Minneapolis, 59 N. W. 979, 980, 58 Minn. 108, 25 L. R. A. 280.

In this state or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Act 1870, providing that it shall be lawful for certain companies to consolidate their respective capital stocks, or to consolidate with any other railroad or canal company or companies in this state or "otherwise" with which they are or may be identified in interest, or whose works shall form, with their own, connected or continuous lines, means companies different from or other than companies in this state. The radical meaning of the word "otherwise," which is always a relative word, different from that to which it relates, and the phrase to which it relates in this case, both from location and the sense, is clearly the words "in this state." The word "otherwise" is an inapt word to designate companies out of the state by being placed in opposition to the words "in this state." It is inapt because its proper use is to express difference of means or manner, and not of place. Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. (7 C. E. Green) 180, 898.

In trust or otherwise.

Where a loan and trust company's charter (chapter 685, Laws 1870) authorized it to grant, bargain, sell, buy, or receive all kinds of property, or to hold the same in trust or otherwise, the phrase "or otherwise" was not intended to confer banking powers, but to embrace the holding of property differently or otherwise than as a trust. New York State Loan & Trust Co. v. Helmer, 77 N. Y. 64, 67.

Mode of proving claims or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Gen. St. c. 44, art. 2, § 3, permitting any number of creditors to unite in a petition against a debtor and his transferee, and providing that the action and proceedings as to the mode of proving claims "or otherwise" shall be conducted as actions for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons are required to be conducted, etc., include mode of distribution. Marbury v. Kentucky Union Land Co. (U. S.) 62 Fed. 835, 854, 10 C. C. A. 393.

Negligence or otherwise.

Where an employé of an express company had notice of the contract between the railroad company and the express company, creating an obligation on the part of the express company to pay for injuries or death of its employé, his release of the express company from any liability by reason of its negligence or "otherwise" will be construed to include such liability as might arise from the railroad company's negligence. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Mahoney, 46 N. E. 917, 920, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L. R. A. 101, 62 Am. St. Rep. 508.

Nonsuit, default, or otherwise.

The word "otherwise," in Act 1845, c. 172, providing that whenever it shall happen in the trial of any cause in the district court, that any one or more questions of law arise, it shall be lawful for the judge, with the consent of the parties, to draw up a report of the case, presenting the legal points for decision, and containing such stipulations as the parties may make, relative to the disposition of the case by nonsuit, default, or "otherwise," must necessarily have reference to a disposition of the cause equivalent to what would be effected by a nonsuit or default. Loring v. Proctor, 26 Me. (18 Shep.) 18, 27.

Original package or otherwise.

The words "or otherwise," as used in the title of Act April 20, 1891, entitled "An act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in original packages 'or otherwise,'" show that the object of the act was to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in any manner, whether in original packages or not, and have a very different meaning from the words "or other purposes," as those words are generally used in the titles to legislative enactments. Lynch v. Murphy, 24 S. W. 774, 775, 119 Mo. 168.

Owner or otherwise.

"Otherwise" is an extremely broad word in its meaning, and, where used in connection with "owner or otherwise," is intended to signify something more than the members of the class owners, and in a lottery statute means any person who opens or establishes a lottery in any capacity, whether as agent, employé, or other representative of the owner. State v. Dennison, 82 N. W. 883, 884, 60 Neb. 157.

Person killed or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in Pen. Code, § 183, subd. 3, declaring that the killing of a human being, without a design to effect death, by a person engaged in the commission of or in an attempt to commit a felony either upon or affecting the person killed or "otherwise," is murder in the first degree, cannot be construed to mean "another." It was held that the killing while engaged in the commission of any felony, whether affecting any person or property only, was murder in the first degree. People v. Greenwall, 22 N. E. 180, 115 N. Y. 520.

"Otherwise," as used in Pen. Code, § 183, defining "homicide" by a person engaged in the commission of, or in the attempt to commit, a felony, either upon or affecting the person killed or "otherwise," relates to felonies against any person than the one killed, as well as to those against property. People v. Miles, 88 N. E. 456, 458, 143 N. Y. 383.

Purchaser, incumbrancer, or otherwise.

"Otherwise," as used in a bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage, alleging that the mortgagor's wife, he being dead, claimed some interest in the premises as subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer or "otherwise," means in some other like capacity, and does not embrace a claim of dower. Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 602, 520, 61 Am. Dec. 706.

Purposes of road or otherwise.

In construing the statute providing that railroad companies shall be taxed "upon all the real property by them as aforesaid occupied, used or owned for the purposes of their road or otherwise," reference must be had to the object and purpose of the act, and to the artificial character and limited capacity of the persons to be affected by it. In contemplation of the Legislature, the property to be occupied, used, or owned by these persons for the purposes of the road or otherwise is only such as may be necessary or convenient for their legitimate purposes to accomplish the end which the Legislature had in view at the time of the enactment of the charter. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Fuller, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 828, 830.

Rents, accounts, bonds, mortgages, or otherwise.

The words "or otherwise," as used in a power of attorney authorizing the grantee to collect and receive all sums of money now due or hereafter to become due to the grantor, whether from rents, accounts, bonds and mortgages, "or otherwise," are limited in their meaning by the words "rents, accounts, bonds, and mortgages," preceding them, and refer to debts and liabilities of a similar character, and cannot reasonably be held to extend to the collection of moneys already received and deposited in a solvent institution, subject to the immediate disposition of the owner. Sims v. United States Trust Co., 9 N. E. 606, 608, 103 N. Y. 472.

In a bond conditioned that the obligors should pay to a bank any sum or sums of money which a certain person owed or thereafter might become indebted to the bank upon bond, bill, note, draft, check, account, or otherwise, "otherwise" covers only conveyances or forms of debt of the same class as may accidentally have been omitted. Donley v. Bank, 40 Ohio St. 47, 50.

Sample, card, or otherwise.

In a statute imposing an occupation tax on persons engaged in "selling goods by sample, card, or otherwise," the word "otherwise" should be understood as intended to mean by other like means, for, if it be taken literally, it would include any and every person engaged in selling goods. It is most obvious that this part of the sentence had no reference to merchants, as, if it had, it would have fixed their tax at a uniform rate. It is equally obvious that it related to sellers, and not to buyers and sellers of goods. Galveston County v. Gorham, 49 Tex. 279, 290.

Sickness or otherwise.

Under a contract of hire of two slaves for the term of one year for a gross sum, conditioned that the owned should "deduct or account for the time lost by sickness or otherwise," the term "otherwise" must be understood to refer to time lost by the death of the slaves, or by their disability to render services, arising from any cause unmixed with the fault of the parties to the contract. Such clause did not give the owner a right to take one or both of them before the year was up. Nesbitt v. Drew, 17 Ala. 379, 384.

Stocks or otherwise.

A will gave the executor power to sell a portion of the estate, "and to invest the proceeds of the sale, and the cash and choses in action, in bank stock or otherwise." Among the assets were two notes made by parties who were perfectly solvent, and these parties were permitted to renew their notes. The makers of the notes continued solvent until the close of the War of the Rebellion, when they failed. In considering the question of the liability of the executor for the amounts represented by such notes, the court construed such clause in the will as committing the general management of the estate to the discretion of the executor, and, where he had acted in good faith, held that he was not liable. Pope v. Mathews, 18 S. C. 444, 453, 456.

A clause in a will read: "And whereas during my lifetime I have made or may hereafter make advances in money, stocks, or otherwise to my son, or to the husbands of either of my daughters, and it is my express intention that the shares of all my said children shall be equalized, I hereby direct that such advances respectively shall be deducted from the share to be paid to the trustees of my said son or to either of my said daughters, whose husbands shall be indebted to me." In construing this clause, the court said: "The advances made and to be made were not limited to money. 'Stocks or otherwise' is the phrase used, which last word would cover anything of value of which he would make advances. It might be real estate, evidences of debt, or money due to him, or any other kind of personal property. To advance or make advances of such kind of property, if voluntary on his part, and without solicitation by the sons-in-law, would not of itself convert that which was advanced into debts. Such advances would rather stand as gifts, to be accounted for or not, as the donor should direct, in such manner as should be specified by him." Appeal of Whelen, 70 Pa. (20 P. F. Smith) 410, 429.

Wagon, boat, or otherwise.

Act July 6, 1812, § 2, providing that if any citizen of the United States, or person inhabiting the same, shall transport or attempt to transport over land or otherwise, in any wagon, cart, sleigh, boat, "or otherwise," naval or military stores, arms or munitions of war, or any articles of provision, from the United States to Canada, etc., the wagon, cart, sleigh, boat, or other thing by which the said articles are transported, together with the articles themselves, shall be forfeited, and the person privy to the same shall forfeit a certain sum and be guilty of a misdemeanor, should be construed to mean to carry or convey the forbidden articles in a wagon, or in some other vehicle, by whatever name it might be distinguished. "Or otherwise" should be construed to mean the thing by which the articles are transported, distinguishing between the thing which transports and the thing which is transported. United States v. Sheldon, 15 U. S. (2 Wheat.) 119, 120, 4 L. Ed. 199.

Waylaying or otherwise.

The word "otherwise," in Laws 1887, c. 82, making an assault committed in a secret manner by waylaying "or otherwise" an offense, is not to be interpreted by supplying after it the words "ejusdem generis," and thus is not limited to assaults of a similar nature to that of waylaying, but is to be construed as meaning otherwise in any secret manner. State v. Shade, 20 S. E. 537, 115 N. C. 757.

OTTER BANKS.

The localities where sea otters are found, along the Alaskan coast from Cook's Inlet to the Semedi Islands are called "otter banks" by the hunters, and are designated as "otter killing grounds" in Treasury Department circular of April 21, 1879. The Alexander (U. S.) 60 Fed. 914, 919.

OTTOMAN CAHVEY.

"Ottoman cahvey" is a substance the ingredients of which are known only to the manufacturer, but which contains a certain proportion of coffee, and is used to mix with pure coffee in the proportion of about one-half of each, which mixture produces a substitute for coffee, so that authority to purchase it is not implied from authority to purchase tea, coffee, rice, and molasses. Ottoman Cahvey Co. v. City of Philadelphia (Pa.) 4 Atl. 745, 746.

OUGHT.

"Ought," as used in Bill of Rights, § 80, providing that all property subject to taxation "ought" to be taxed in proportion to its value, is used in its mandatory, and not its directory, sense, and prohibits, therefore, taxation in any other mode. Life Ass'n of America v. St. Louis County Assessors, 49 Mo. 512, 519.

"Ought," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for murder that the jury "ought" to consider the circumstances of the case from the standpoint of defendant as it appeared at the time of the killing, will be understood to have been used in a mandatory sense, and to mean "must." Jackson v. State, 22 S. W. 881, 889, 82 Tex. Cr. R. 192.

As morally bound.

In an instruction in a prosecution for murder providing that, if the jury believed from all the evidence that the defendant has knowingly sworn falsely in regard to any material point in this case, they "ought" to disregard his testimony on all material points, excepting so far as he is corroborated by other evidence in the case, the word "ought" means, in its ordinary sense, to be held or bound in duty or moral obligation. Otmer v. People, 76 Ill. 149, 152.

As equivalent to would.

"Ought," is often used as the equivalent of "would," and hence its use in the question for a special verdict in place of "would" was not prejudicial. Curran v. A. H. Stange Co., 74 N. W. 377, 881, 98 Wis. 598.

OUNCE OF GOLD.

Where a note sued on bound the payor to pay "an ounce of gold," the fact that gold entered in the composition of money did not authorize the presumption that the note was payable in money, so that it would be negotiable, and such clause rendered the contract, instead of a promissory note, a simple contract for the delivery of merchandise. Roberts v. Smith, 4 Atl. 709, 710, 58 Vt. 492, 56 Am. Rep. 567.

OUR.

The words "her children," "our children," and "my children," used by a testator in making devises or bequests to his wife and his children, mean substantially the same, and constitute no ground for any distinction or a different construction of the gift than the usual acceptance of the term "children." Vaughan v. Vaughan's Ex'x, 33 S. E. 603, 605, 97 Va. 322.

"Our child," as used in a will devising all testator's property to his wife, and providing that the testator leaves the disposition of such estate to the wife in the manner she thinks proper and well with reference to our children, etc., is to be construed to be a sufficient designation of the child of testator. Beck v. Metz, 25 Mo. 70, 72.

What is said as to risks on property where "our" company have risks is not necessarily or probably understood to refer to a company of which the writer is an officer. The expression would naturally be regarded as having reference to an insurance company located in the village in which the writer resides. New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. National Protection Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 85, 92.

The word "our," as used in a description in a contract for the sale of land in which the premises are described as "our" farm in L's reserve, R. county, and consisting of 83 acres, more or less, indicates that the farm referred to was the farm owned by the vendors in the contract, and will be so construed, so as not to render the written contract void for uncertainty, for the description can be made certain by such construction and by other evidence. Guyer v. Warren, 51 N. E. 580, 583, 175 Ill. 323.

In construing a letter in which the writer stated that he had purchased certain property, and that he candidly believes that "we will be able to realize from our half of it, $15,000," it was said that "the employment of the pronoun 'we' and the pronominal adjective 'our' is referred to as a recognition by the writer that the person addressed was interested with him in the property, counsel arguing that these words being in the plural form could not possibly refer to any but the writer of the letter and the plaintiff to whom it was written." But the inference deduced by counsel is not by any means necessary or exclusive. In the first place, the assumption that the writer would not have used the words "we" and "our," in the connection in which they are employed, unless some one was interested with him in the stock spoken of, has but the barest probability to rest upon. Although incorrect, it is not infrequently the case that the plural pronoun is used for the first person singular, and so with the pronominal adjective "our." Mitchell v. O'Neale, 4 Nev. 504, 517.

The expression "our property," as used in a letter by a daughter to her father, she being a married woman, in which she said,

"In case of anything happening us, I wish you to take charge of our property," may or may not refer to the estate of both herself and her husband. It may refer to only her own possessions, and have been a mode of expression common to her in speaking of these possessions with her father, to whom this testamentary letter is addressed. But even if it relates to the property of herself and her husband, when in the next sentence she speaks of the disposition which the law would make of her estate, the slip in the change of the pronoun in a familiar letter like this would not be at all strange, and it would be giving too much weight to a mere verbal criticism if it were allowed to force a conclusion that in the words she referred to other property than that belonging to her. Cowley v. Knapp, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom) 297, 301.

OUR A/C.

"Our a/" and "our a/c," when used in mercantile accounts, mean "our account," and do not designate that the shippers of goods have taken them on their individual account, but on joint account. Ogden v. Astor, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 311, 333.

OUSTER.

See "Presumption of Ouster."

An ouster is the wrongful dispossession or exclusion from real property of a party entitled to the possession thereof. Winterburn v. Chambers, 27 Pac. 658, 659, 91 Cal. 170; Bath v. Valdez, 11 Pac. 724, 726, 70 Cal. 350. Like all other wrongful acts, it includes a question of intent. It may be committed by one tenant in common against his or her cotenant, and may be proved by any acts which show an actual intent to exclude the cotenant permanently from his rights. Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 492, 497.

An ouster is an actual deprivation of the possession of a part of the land, or what is equivalent; a title which is capable of being used to deprive grantee of his possession of a portion of the land. McMullin v. Wooley (N. Y.) 2 Lans. 394, 396.

Ouster is the actual turning out or keeping excluded a party entitled to the possession of any real property and in trying to prevent plaintiff from obtaining effective possession of the land. Childs v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 23 S. W. 373, 378, 117 Mo. 414.

"An entry by one man on the land of another is an ouster of the lawful possession, arising from a title or not, according to the intention with which it is done. If made under claim and color of right, it is an ouster; otherwise it is a mere trespass. In legal language the intention guides the entry and fixes its character." Ewing v. Burnet, 36 U. S. (11 Pet.) 41, 52, 9 L. Ed. 624; Probst v. Presbyterian Church, 129 U. S. 182, 191, 9 Sup. Ct. 263, 265, 32 L. Ed. 642; Copeland v. Murphey, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 64, 70; Hacker v. Horlemus, 41 N. W. 965, 967, 74 Wis. 21.

To constitute an ouster of him who was seised, the disseisor must have the actual, exclusive occupation of the land, claiming to hold it against him who was seised, or he must actually turn him out of possession. Schwallback v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 34 N. W. 123, 131, 69 Wis. 292, 2 Am. St. Rep. 740; McCourt v. Eckstein, 22 Wis. 153, 157, 94 Am. Dec. 594.

To constitute an ouster physical expulsion is not necessary, but the compulsory surrender of a part of an estate by reason of a judgment in ejectment is sufficient. Mason v. Kellogg, 38 Mich. 132, 143.

Where there is a conveyance with a covenant of warranty, and there is in fact a superior title, which is asserted by offering the premises for sale at public auction, and the grantee under the subsequent conveyance yields to the superior title and purchases it, this assertion of title and purchase is a sufficient ouster to sustain an action on the covenant of warranty; as is also a sheriff's sale under a paramount incumbrance whereby a covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken. Brown v. Dickerson, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 372, 374.

By landlord.

In the law of landlord and tenant, in order to constitute an ouster of the tenant by the entry of the landlord, the ouster must be animo clamandi, and for the purpose of taking possession; and these are evidenced by the acts and declarations of the party. Holli v. Brown, 14 Conn. 255, 270.

By tenant in common.

An ouster of one co-tenant by another is produced by acts of the same character as will produce any other ouster. Winterburn v. Chambers, 27 Pac. 658, 659, 91 Cal. 170.

Ouster, both where the property is owned in severalty and where it is held in divided interests, depends upon the intent of the party taking and holding possession. If a person without title enters into possession of land and subjects it to his will and dominion, the inference of his intent to oust the true owner is patent. A co-tenant, however, has a right to enter upon the realty, and when he does so, and exercises acts of ownership, the law presumes that he intends nothing beyond the assertion of his right, and the apparent intent to oust his co-tenant is wanting. Bath v. Valdes, 11 Pac. 724, 726, 70 Cal. 350.

The mere taking of a deed by one of two co-tenants to the entire estate, and putting the same on record, is not an ouster of the other co-tenant, nor a notice of claim to exclusive and adverse possession. Towery v. Henderson, 60 Tex. 291, 297 (citing 3 Washb. Real Prop. [4th Ed.] p. 142).

Where a tenant takes possession of the land owned by him and a co-tenant in common, and openly and notoriously exercises acts of exclusive ownership for a series of years—as by removing the soil, quarrying and selling rock, and by such acts as amount to the destruction of the thing itself, takes all the rents and profits without accounting to his co-tenant, and by other acts which exclude the idea of his merely claiming as a tenant—a jury are warranted in finding an ouster, notwithstanding the legal presumption that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of his co-tenant. Warfield v. Lindell, 38 Mo. 561, 581, 90 Am. Dec. 443.

It seems that the notion once entertained in regard to what was necessary to constitute an actual ouster by a tenant in common has given way, and that an undisturbed and quiet possession for a certain length of time is sufficient ground for the jury to find an actual ouster. Milliken v. Brown, 10 Serg. & R. 188. In Pennsylvania such quiet possession and exclusive claim of the whole for the period of limitation is evidence from which the jury may presume an actual ouster, and in that state it seems well established that the sole undisturbed possession of one tenant in common receiving the rents and profits for himself without recognition of the claim of his co-tenant will be evidence from which an ouster may be presumed. In the case of Law v. Patterson (Pa.) 1 Watts & S. 184, in which this rule was distinctly affirmed, the acts of ownership by the tenant in common in possession were very unequivocal; such as, for instance, leasing the land in his own name, and receiving the rents for 23 years, without any claim by the other tenant in common, erecting a dwelling house and other improvements, paying the taxes, and even paying the purchase money of the land. Alexander v. Kennedy, 19 Tex. 483, 493, 70 Am. Dec. 358.

A partition by judicial proceedings among several tenants in common claiming the whole estate to the exclusion of others, is an act of ouster. Cryer v. Andrews, 11 Tex. 170, 181.

OUT.

See "Carry out."

Where property was described on a tax duplicate as "Out 63," parol evidence was admissible to show that this stood for "Outlot 63," and, as so explained, the description was sufficient. Barton v. Anderson, 104 Ind. 573, 582, 4 N. E. 420, 422.

OUT AND OUT.

Out and out, as used in a deed of trust containing a power to sell the trust property for a price or consideration to be paid "out and out" in money, means a sale for cash. "Lexicographers define this expression as meaning completely, entirely, without reservation; consequently when applied to an act to be performed 'out and out,' it must mean ended and complete." Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co., 86 Pa. (12 Casey) 204, 210.

OUT OF.

"Out of," as used in an agreement between a debtor and creditor by which the debtor, in consideration of forbearance on the part of the creditor, promised that he would, "out of" the first moneys he might receive on certain claims, pay the creditor the sum of $500, and "out of any further moneys" he might receive on the same claims he would pay the creditor 10 per cent. on the net amount which he might from time to time receive, the words "out of," relating to the first payment, imported that there should be a residuum, and the creditor was not entitled to the $500 and also to the 10 per cent. on such residuum, but the 10 per cent. was intended only on the further moneys received. Cochrane v. Green, 9 C. B. (N. S.) 448, 469.

Nothing appearing to the contrary, a bequest of a certain sum of money "out of" or "to be paid out of" a designated fund will create a demonstrative legacy, pledging a particular fund as a collateral security, and being as to that security merely directory, but not depending for its validity or value on the sufficiency or existence of the fund thus specially dedicated for its security. On the other hand, where the legacy is made payable "in" Confederate state bonds, rather than "out of" Confederate state bonds, it will be a general, rather than a demonstrative, legacy. Gilmer's Legatees v. Gilmer's Ex'rs, 42 Ala. 9, 16.

The promise to pay for cotton gins purchased "out of the proceeds of the first cotton ginned," fixes the time of payment, but does not show, or intend to show, that the seller of the property is to look for his pay alone to the profits made in ginning that season. White v. Chaffin, 32 Ark. 59, 67.

An agreement of partnership between two solicitors, who held themselves out as partners, provided that one of them should receive a certain amount annually "out of the profits," and that he was not to be liable for any losses in the business. Held that, as the amount which was to be received out of the profits—that is, out of the net profits—could not be ascertained until an accounting should be had at the end of the year, the agreement created a partnership between the parties, so far as related to liability for work and labor performed by the firm. Bond v. Pittard, 3 Mees. & W. 357, 359.

OUT OF COURT.

A court will take no notice of agreements made by attorneys "out of court," unless reduced to writing. Plaintiff's attorney moved for judgment for want of plea, which the court granted, but the attorney then stated that he would not enter the default if defendant's attorney, who had entered an appearance, would stipulate to plead in ten days, so that the cause might be carried down for trial to the then ensuing circuit court. This proposition was agreed to by defendant's attorney. This agreement was not an agreement "out of court." Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 344, 345.

OUT OF DOORS.

"Out of doors," as used in Code, § 985, declaring that any person who should willfully burn any other person's oats, etc., or other provender in stacks, hills, ricks, or pen, or secured in any other way "out of doors," does not require that the property should actually be in the open, and not within a building, in order to complete the offense, but were merely used as a recognition of the fact that provender was not stacked "within doors"; and an indictment alleging such offense was not defective in not containing an allegation that the property destroyed was out of doors. State v. Huskins, 35 S. E. 608, 126 N. C. 1070.

Code, § 985, par. 5, as amended by Act 1885, c. 42, provides that any person who shall burn or destroy any other person's corn, cotton, etc., secured in any way, by stack, hill, etc., "out of doors," shall be guilty of misdemeanor, etc. Held, that the phrase "out of doors" means "not housed." State v. Avery, 18 S. E. 931, 932, 109 N. C. 798.

OUT OF TERM.

The words "out of term" in Code, § 428, with regard to referee's reports, which enacts that either party during the term, or upon ten days' notice to the adverse party "out of term," may move the judge to review such report, and set aside, modify, or confirm the same, mean "out of term, but within the territorial jurisdiction of the judge as to that action not beyond and outside of it, unless by the common consent of the parties." McNeill v. Hodge, 6 S. E. 127, 128, 99 N. C. 248.

OUT OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

A showing that defendant is "out of the commonwealth," within the meaning of Act Ky. Dec. 19, 1893, authorizing service by publication in certain cases on satisfactory proof that defendant is out of the commonwealth, is sufficiently made by proof that defendants are not inhabitants of the commonwealth. The legislative meaning of the words "out of the commonwealth" implies and embraces the case of one who is properly described as not an inhabitant. To be out of the commonwealth implies one permanently out, as a nonresident or noninhabitant. Foster v. Givens (U. S.) 67 Fed. 684, 693, 14 C. C. A. 625.

OUT OF THE COUNTRY.

Being "out of the country," within the meaning of the statute of limitation providing that, if the plaintiff be out of the country at the time the cause of action accrues, he shall be allowed to commence his action at any time within the time limited for such action after he returns from without the country, means without the state. Graves v. Graves' Ex'rs, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 207, 4 Am. Dec. 697.

OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.

"Out of the jurisdiction," as used in Code Civ. Proc. subd. 8, § 1870, relating to witnesses, means "without the state," and so beyond the reach of any process of the courts to compel testimony. Meyer v. Roth, 51 Cal. 582, 583.

OUT OF THE REALM.

"Out of the realm," as understood by the judges of England, Parliament, and law writers, meant, prior to the union of the crowns of England and Scotland, out of the realm of England, and subsequent to such union signified out of the realm of Great Britain, including England and Scotland. Pancoasts' Lessee v. Addison (Md.) 1 Har. & J. 350, 353, 2 Am. Dec. 520.

OUT OF THE STATE.

The phrase "out of the state" is analogous to the phrase "beyond sea." Faw v. Roberdeau, 7 U. S. (8 Cranch) 174, 177, 2 L. Ed. 402; West v. Pickesimer, 7 Ohio (7 Ham.) 235, pt. 2.

"Out of the state," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 57, § 50, providing that persons out of the state may commence an action to recover real estate sold by an executor or administrator within five years after their return to the state, extends to persons who have always resided abroad as well as to those who have resided within the state and returned after an absence therefrom. Jordon v. Secombe, 22 N. W. 383, 384, 33 Minn. 220.

2 Rev. St. p. 239, § 178, provides that the heirs, devisees, and distributees of a decedent shall be liable to the extent of the property received by them from decedent's estate to any creditor whose claim remains unpaid, who, six months prior to the final settlement of the estate, was out of the state. Held, that the words "out of the state" were intended to include creditors whose residence was continuously in a place outside the state, and that where a creditor came into the state, and begun a suit which was dismissed, the limitation of one year began to run from such time. Yoast v. Willis, 9 Ind. 543, 550.

A foreign corporation is a person out of the state, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4231, providing that when any person is outside of the state when a cause of action accrues it may be commenced within the time limit therefor after his return. Larson v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 56 N. W. 915, 917, 86 Wis. 281, 39 Am. St. Rep. 893.

Where a party has commenced a journey leading out of the state, and has progressed thereon at the commencement of a suit so far as to rebut any presumption of notice, though not yet actually over the line, he is to be regarded as being "out of the state," within the meaning of section 18 of the justice act (St. 129, c. 9, § 18), giving a writ of review where it is made to appear to the justice that the defendant is out of the state, etc. Marvin v. Wilkins (Vt.) 1 Aik. 107, 110, 111.

OUT OF USE.

"Out of use" is defined to be "not in employment." Astor v. Merritt, 4 Sup. Ct. 413, 419, 111 U. S. 202, 28 L. Ed. 401.

OUT WEST.

Where, at the time a note was made, the makers resided and were doing business in a city of New York, and at maturity it was presented at the place at which they had been doing business, and the notary was informed that they had gone "out West," the term "out West" meant in the Western States, and that they had left the state of New York. Adams v. Leland, 30 N. Y. 309, 312.

OUTAGE.

A charge payable on withdrawing hogsheads from inspectors under an act providing that it should not be lawful to carry tobacco out of the state in hogsheads which had not been inspected and marked. The charge was for labor for receiving and handling them, and appears to be a charge for services properly rendered. Turner v. Maryland, 2 Sup. Ct. 44, 61, 107 U. S. 33, 27 L. Ed. 370.

The term "outage" was used in Maryland to include a charge made to reimburse the state for the expense of requiring the delivery of export tobacco at one of the state tobacco warehouses in order that the inspector could ascertain whether it conformed to the requirements of the law, whether it was the true growth of the state, and packed by the grower or purchaser in the county or neighborhood where it was grown. Such a charge is not an inspection law, within the meaning of the laws of the federal Constitution prohibiting the states from levying export or import duties except as necessary for the execution of inspection laws. Turner v. State, 55 Md. 240, 264.

OUT-BOUNDARIES.

The term "out-boundaries" was used in early Mexican land laws to designate certain boundaries within which grants of a smaller tract, which designated such out-boundaries, might be located by the grantees. United States v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co., 7 Sup. Ct. 1015, 1023, 121 U. S. 825, 30 L. Ed. 949.

OUTBUILDING.

An "outbuilding" is something which is to be used in connection with a main building. Commonwealth v. Intoxicating Liquors, 3 N. E. 4, 140 Mass. 287. Where there was no main building, a stable cannot be deemed to be a necessary outbuilding. Blakemore v. Stanley (Mass.) 83 N. E. 689, 690.

"Outbuildings," as used in a complaint and warrant for the search for intoxicating liquors describing the premises to be searched as a certain building, the cellar under the same, and the outbuildings within the curtilage thereof, means those that from their character are to be used in connection with the main building, and may thus be held to be a parcel thereof, even if not immediately attached thereto, as the barns, shed, wood and store house belonging to a dwelling house; but cannot be construed to include another building connected with the building described by a covered passageway giving access thereto, which was in all respects adapted for independent use, and actually thus used, except so far as the basement was concerned. Commonwealth v. Intoxicating Liquors and Vessels, 3 N. E. 4, 5, 140 Mass. 287.

In a deed of warranty of "the north half of the double dwelling house, situated, * * * and the lands used with it and belonging thereto, and all outbuildings and fences thereon and thereto belonging," etc., the phrase "belonging thereto" refers to the house, not to the defendant. The "outbuildings thereon" are outbuildings on the land used with it; i. e., the house. If the phrase "belonging thereto" meant land belonging to the defendant, then, if he had no title, and the covenant was as to what he owned and not as to what he did not, the warranty would be useless and unavailable just precisely where it was needed for the protection of the grantee.

Such deed included a barn which was on the land, which had been used with the dwelling house and was on the land used with it. Woodman v. Smith, 53 Me. 79, 80.

OUTCROP.

The definition of the word "outcrop" as used in mining law is "given by one learned author (Geike) as the edges of strata which appear at the surface of the ground, and by another (Van Cotta) as that portion of a vein appearing at the surface." It is defined "by Dr. Daymond in his Glossary as the portion of a vein or strata emerging at the surface or appearing immediately under the soil and surface debris." Duggan v. Davey, 26 N. W. 887, 896, 4 Dak. 110.

"Outcrop," in mining, relates to the apex of the vein, and means a presentation of the mineral to the naked eye on the surface of the earth. Stevens v. Williams (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 40, 42.

OUTCRY.

Synonymous with auction, see "Auction."

OUTER DOOR.

The term "outer door" may properly designate a door leading from the cellar way into the cellar of the house, and opening inwardly, though there is a second door before such entrance, opening outwardly; and therefore a breaking of the door first mentioned is a sufficient breaking to constitute the crime of burglary. McCourt v. People, 64 N. Y. 583-586.

OUTFITS.

See "Original Outfit."

The word "outfits" in its original use, as applying to ships, embraced those objects connected with a ship which were necessary for the sailing of her, and without which she would not in fact be navigable. It included the sails and rigging, boats, and provisions for the ship's crew; and it has long since been determined that such items enter into the value of the ship, and are covered by an insurance upon her. 1 Phil. Ins. (1st Ed.) 71, and authorities there cited. But in ships engaged in whaling voyages the word has acquired a much more enlarged signification. It has embraced within it not only the ordinary tackle and apparel of the ship, and the provisions of a common voyage from port to port, but the casks and staves, the fishing gear, and the stores and clothing necessary for the successful prosecution of such voyages; articles not for sale, like a common outward cargo of a ship, but for consumption and use during a protracted voyage of years, and for the storing of the cargo or catchings to be obtained. Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co., 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 354, 364.

Outfits, though a distinct subject of insurance are neither ship nor cargo, as these words are ordinarily used. A part of the outfits themselves resemble the provisions, tackle, apparel, and furniture of a commercial vessel. Macy v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 135 Mass. 323, 330.

OUTHOUSE.

The term "outhouses" in a statute providing for the punishment of every person who shall willfully burn any barn, stable, or other outhouses in parcel of any dwelling house, means houses separated from the main building, but useful to it as a dwelling. State v. Powers, 36 Conn. 77-79.

An outhouse is one that belongs to a dwelling, and is in some respects a parcel of such dwelling house, and situated within the curtilage. State v. Roper, 88 N. C. 656, 658.

An outhouse is any house necessary for the purposes of life in which the owner does not make his constant or principal residence. State v. O'Brien (Conn.) 2 Root, 516.

An outhouse is a building appurtenant to some main building or mansion house. State v. Bailey, 10 Conn. 143, 145.

"An outhouse is a building without the mansion house, intended for the accommodation of the owner or occupant. It is the subserviency of it to the mansion house that gives it the denomination of an outhouse, and not the fact that it is included within the same fence, or within what is denominated the curtilage or homestead." State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 446, 448.

A house contiguous to and used in connection with a hotel, the two belonging to and being controlled by the same person, is an outhouse. It is not proper to define an outhouse as one within the curtilage. Shotwell v. State, 43 Ark. 345, 349.

Car used as freighthouse.

Outhouse primarily means a building adjacent to a dwelling house, and subservient thereto, but distinct from the mansion itself. A freight-car body, which has been detached from the wheels and placed upon permanent posts near a track at a station, and to which a platform has been attached, thus constituting a structure to be used as a freight warehouse, located elsewhere than a city, town, or village, may be characterized as an outhouse, though not appurtenant to any other building; and an indictment charging the burning of an outhouse is sustained by proof of the burning of such building. Carter v. State, 32 S. E. 345, 346, 106 Ga. 372, 71 Am. St. Rep. 262.

Cart or implement shed.

A building intended for and constructed as a dwelling house, but which had not been completed or inhabited, and in which the owner had deposited straw and agricultural implements, is not a "house, outhouse, or barn," within St. 9 Geo. I. c. 22, § 7, entitling the owner of a "house, outhouse, or barn" to maintain an action against the hundred for an injury sustained in consequence of malicious setting fire to the same. Elmore v. The Inhabitants of St. Briavells, 8 Barn. & C. 461.

A cart hovel, consisting of a stubble roof supported by uprights, in a field at a distance from other buildings, is not an outhouse. Rex v. Parrot, 6 Car. & P. 402.

Chicken house.

A chicken house on the same lot as the dwelling house, and owned and used by the same person, is an outhouse, within Gen. St. c. 29, art. 5, § 4, providing that any person who shall break into a dwelling house or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and carry away anything of value, shall be guilty of felony. The outhouse is not to be understood as being part of the dwelling house in order to constitute such felony, but it must be a house belonging to or used with the dwelling house, or "contributory to habitation." Price v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 25 S. W. 1062.

Cowshed.

Outhouse applies to a dwelling house, and in some respects parcel of such dwelling house. A building built for a brick kiln, and afterwards roofed, and in which was kept a cow, and which was one hundred yards from the nearest dwelling house, was not an outhouse within the law relating to arson. Rex v. Haughton, 5 Car. & P. 555, 556.

Pigsty.

A pigsty situated in a yard, into which the back door of a house opened, and which yard was bounded by fences and by other buildings, and by a cottage and barn which were let to a tenant, but which did not open into the yard, is an outhouse within the meaning of statute 1 Vict. c. 89, § 3, relating to setting fire to an outhouse. Reg. v. James, 1 Car. & K. 303.

Schoolhouse.

An outhouse is any house necessary for the purposes of life in which the owner does not make his constant or principal residence. Education and schooling are necessary to the well-being of individuals and of society. A schoolhouse, in this sense, may be considered as the most important outhouse to all the inhabitants of the district who built it. State v. O'Brien (Conn.) 2 Root, 516.

A district schoolhouse is not an out-house within the meaning of Act 1880, § 80, concerning the breaking and entering of out-houses. An outhouse is a building appurtenant to some main building or mansion house; and whether it be parcel of it or not depends upon its particular location, or its connection with such mansion house. State v. Bailey, 10 Conn. 144, 145.

The term "other outhouse not parcel of any dwelling house," in a statute making it criminal to willfully burn any mill, distillery, barn, meathouse, tobacco house, stable, warehouse, or other outhouse not parcel of any dwelling house, includes a schoolhouse. Jones v. Hungerford (Md.) 4 Gill & J. 402, 403.

Spring house.

"Outhouse," as used in the act concerning mills and milldams, providing that, before an increase in the altitude of the dam would be allowed, the jury must inquire whether the mansion house of any other proprietor or other outhouse, curtilages, or gardens thereto belonging would be overflowed, etc., includes a spring house. Willoughby v. Shipman, 28 Mo. 50, 52.

Storehouse or tobacco barn.

The term "outhouse" could not include an old building located at a crossroad, not inclosed, or used in any way as a dwelling house, and occupied only as a storehouse. State v. Roper, 88 N. C. 656, 658.

"Outhouse," as used in Gen. St. c. 29, art. 5, § 4, providing for the punishment of any person who feloniously breaks any dwelling house or part thereof, or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and feloniously take away anything of value, embraces such structures as are ordinarily attached to and used in connection with dwelling houses. It cannot reasonably be construed to include a tobacco barn built and used expressly for the storage of tobacco, for it would not ordinarily be understood as an outhouse of the dwelling house in its usual and ordinary acceptance and meaning. White v. Commonwealth, 9 S. W. 808, 87 Ky. 454.

OUTHOUSE WHERE PEOPLE RESORT.

"Outhouse," as used in a statute prohibiting a playing of cards for money in an outhouse where people resort, does not mean that it should be in the same inclosure with a mansion house or other building in which persons reside, however far removed from these. If it is a house to which people resort, it is sufficient to entitle it to the designation of an outhouse. The fact that it was detached from others, and inclosed by a fence, does not affect its character. Camerson v. State, 15 Ala. 383, 384.

The word "outhouse" in the statute prohibiting gaming in any outhouse where people resort is used in its ordinary and popular acceptance as meaning any house standing out and apart from houses occupied and used as dwelling houses or business houses, and includes any unoccupied house. The word differs in meaning in the law of burglary, where it is used to designate a small house or dwelling belonging to a mansion or dwelling house, and usually standing separate from or without it, and a small distance from it. Wheelock v. State, 15 Tex. 253, 255.

Code, § 4052, prohibiting playing with cards in any public house or in any "outhouse where people resort," means a house or place which is not strictly a public one or made public temporarily, although the house must be public to some extent in that it must be a place where people resort. Downey v. State, 8 South. 869, 870, 90 Ala. 644.

"An outhouse where people resort" as used in Hart Dig. art. 1474, making it criminal for any person to play in any outhouse where people resort, is a house not used as a dwelling or business house where persons have resorted on more than one occasion for the purpose of playing cards, or where more persons were present on one occasion than those who went for the purpose of playing. Wheelock v. State, 15 Tex. 260, 261.

It is error to charge that under the statute making playing cards at an outhouse where people resort a misdemeanor, an outhouse is one where parties may go for the purpose of playing cards, whether they go there once or a dozen times. Downey v. State, 20 South. 439, 440, 110 Ala. 99.

Distillery.

"Outhouse," as used in a statute prohibiting gaming in any tavern, inn, store for the retailing of any spirituous liquors, or in any other public house, or in any street, highway, or in any open wood, race field, or open place, or in any barn, kitchen, stable, or other outhouse, means outhouses of every description, and includes a distillery. It is not limited to outhouses appurtenant to mansion houses, though such is the literal meaning of the word. State v. Faulkener (S. C.) 2 McCord, 438, 439.

Dwelling or business house.

Code 1886, § 4052, making it a misdemeanor to play at dice at enumerated places or in any other public place or "outhouse where people resort," means any house standing out and apart from the houses used as dwellings or business houses. Even if it be shown that people are in the habit of resorting to a residence or business house, that does not constitute it an outhouse where people resort. Pickens v. State, 14 South. 672, 100 Ala. 127.

Sleeping apartment.

"Outhouse," as used in Pen. Code, art. 355, prohibiting card playing in an outhouse, should be construed to include a room furnished and occupied as a sleeping apartment only, no other room in the house being occupied. Sisk v. State, 13 S. W. 647, 649, 28 Tex. App. 482.

An outhouse, within the meaning of a statute prohibiting gambling at outhouses, etc., includes any house not occupied as a dwelling house or business house, and the fact that it is occupied as a sleeping apartment is immaterial. Wheelock v. State, 15 Tex. 257, 259.

Storehouse.

A building used only for the keeping of stock and storing of grain, in which the defendant and another played a game of cards, no other persons being present when the game was played, was not an outhouse within the meaning of the statute prohibiting the playing of cards in an outhouse where people resort for the purpose of gaming. Stockton v. State (Tex.) 44 S. W. 509, 510.

"Outhouse," as used in a statute prohibiting the playing at cards for money in an outhouse where people resort, should be construed to include a vacant storehouse, if habitually resorted to by persons for the purpose of playing at cards. Swallow v. State, 20 Ala. 30, 32; Downey v. State, 22 South. 479, 481, 115 Ala. 108.

OUTLAW.

By the common law an outlaw is one who has been so declared by the judgment of the court in some regular judicial proceedings for that purpose, and this could take place only in a civil or criminal proceeding. The word "outlaw," as used in Acts Dec. 23, 1868, § 1, declaring counties liable for persons killed by an outlaw, etc., does not mean an outlaw in the strict sense of the common-law use of the term, but is used in the act in a loose sense, having reference to the disturbed condition of society at the time, and includes the lawless and disorderly persons then addicted to roving through the state in disguise and committing habitually acts of violence and outrage. It is to be understood as referring to the character of the persons named in the act entitled "An act for the suppression of secret organizations of men disguising themselves for the purpose of committing crimes and outrages." Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 138.

By the unlearned the word "outlawed" is often used as applying to notes, bills, and other evidences of debt invalid by lapse of time, or as tantamount to the legal language "barred by the statute of limitations." Thus a barred note in popular phrase is said to be "outlawed," and it will be given this sense in an agreement by one to pay a certain note in case the promisor therein did not pay it before it was "outlawed." The word "outlaw" has a distinct technical signification, and when used in that sense refers to persons, and not to things. Thus, an outlaw is one who is put out of the law; that is, deprived of its benefit and protection. In earlier times he was called a "friendless man"; one who could not by law have a friend. An outlaw was said "caput genere lupinum," by which it was meant that any one might knock him on the head as a wolf, because he would not surrender himself peaceably. He forfeited everything he had, whether in right or possession. Reeves, Eng. Law, 20. But in modern times the word has a much less stringent meaning, importing, however, the forfeiture of property and civil rights. Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 389, 391 (citing Burrill's Law Dict.).

The term "outlaw," as used in an agreement that a certain mortgage be discharged of record unless the same shall "outlaw" before a certain time, is held to have reference to the time when by law the mortgage will be presumed to be paid. Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 Mich. 18, 22.

OUTLAWRY.

"Judgment of outlawry in England is given by the coroner, and is in these words: 'Therefore the said A. B., by the judgment of the coroner of our Lord the King, of the county aforesaid, is outlawed.' The party is thereby attainted, and shall forfeit and lose as much as if sentence had been given against him upon a verdict or confession. And after such outlawry, if the party is brought before the Court of King's Bench, execution shall be awarded against him, but no sentence pronounced, because the outlawry is a judgment, and no man shall have two judgments for the same offense." Respublica v. Doan (Pa.) 1 Dall. 86, 91, 1 L. Ed. 47.

Outlawry, legally speaking, is a judicial proceeding, and no one can be outlawed but in such a proceeding, and by due process of law, and an act of the Legislature is not in this connection due process of law. Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 138.

OUTLOT.

In construing 2 Stat. 748, confirming the claims of the inhabitants of the several towns and villages in Missouri to the town or village lots, outlots, common field lots, and commons in, adjoining, and belonging to the several towns or villages, may properly include vacant land contiguous to the town of St. Louis, bounded on all sides except the one fronting on the river. "The term 'outlot' is said to be of American origin, and to be unknown to those who preceded us in the possession and government of this country. If this be so, we would naturally look for an American interpretation of it, and, as the public authorities from Congress to the recorder have applied it to property situated in relation to the town just as that now in controversy was situated, we would have the signification of the term conveyed in the most forcible manner." Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 16 Mo. 553, 592.

In construing Act June 13, 1812, in reference to outlots in the city of St. Louis, the court says that: "No court by perspective definition can embrace all lots which must come under the class of outlots. Each lot must depend on the evidence in relation to it in order to its classification. It is obvious that it is not necessary that a lot should touch the town to make it an outlot. If it is adjacent to the common fields it is near the town; as the common fields must, in the words of the act, be adjoining and belonging to the town." City of St. Louis v. Toney, 21 Mo. 243-256.

The term "outlot" as used in the acts of Congress relating to lands included in the Louisiana purchase, must be construed in connection with the subject-matter in the view of the Legislature. Mere contiguity to the village, coupled with the fact that the owner of the lot is an inhabitant of the village, will not alone constitute an outlot within the meaning of the act. These two circumstances may be predicated of any tract of land in the vicinity of the town or village, although cultivated merely as a farm, and not subject to the control of the village authorities. Why were the common field lots regarded as part of the village or belonging to the village? They did not belong to the inhabitants as a corporation, or to the mass of the villagers, as the commons did, but were owned by individuals; yet they were subject to the regulations of the village authorities, and this circumstance determined their character as outlots of the village. Eberle v. St. Louis Public Schools, 11 Mo. 247, 285.

"Town lots, outlots, common field lots, and commons were known and recognized parts of the Spanish town or commune of St. Louis. They existed by public authority, whether by concession, custom, or permission. It has been settled that the existence of the facts necessary to constitute an outlot is a matter of fact for the jury to determine, but that what facts will constitute an outlot is a question of law for the court." Vasques v. Ewing, 42 Mo. 247, 256.

"Outlot," as used in act of Congress June 13, 1812, requiring the out-boundary lines of the city of St. Louis to be run so as to embrace the villages "and the outlots, common field lots, and commons thereto respectively belonging," meant nothing other than common field lots. Trotter v. Board of President & Directors of St. Louis Public Schools, 9 Mo. 69, 76.

OUTRAGE.

The word "outrage" is variously defined, and the particular definition to be applied should be the one indicated by considering the word in the connection in which it is used. It signifies a bold or wanton injury to person or property; wanton mischief; gross injury, etc. Under all definitions it is an aggravated wrong. Moens v. Snyder, 105 Iowa, 500, 504, 75 N. W. 356.

Within the meaning of a statute which expressly excludes the allowance of damages for an alleged outrage to the feelings of the plaintiff, and vindictive damages in an action to recover for a nuisance, personal annoyance or inconvenience is not included and comprehended in the term "outrage to the feelings." The term "outrage" implies something more than mere inconvenience or annoyance or injury. It implies excess, violence, as well as injury and wrong, intended and designed; and when applied to the feelings it implies not merely a physical pain, but mental. Aldrich v. Howard, 8 R. I. 246-250.

"Outrages," as used in the acts of the fifth Congress, p. 19, § 3, providing that a divorce by stipulation may be decreed where either the husband or wife is guilty of excesses, cruel treatment, or outrages towards the other, rendering their being together insupportable, means an outrage to the person, and will not admit of a construction embracing larceny or crimes against law or sound morality. Lucas v. Lucas, 2 Tex. 112, 114.

An instruction in an action for injuries caused by beating and forcible resistance of a railroad brakeman, stating that the plaintiff was entitled to recover compensatory damages for the "outrage and indignity" put upon him, must be construed to mean and include mental anguish or pain, as distinguished from bodily suffering. McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 814, 819, 24 Am. Rep. 748.

OUTSIDE THE BAR.

By the term "outside the bar" in Rev. St. 1895, § 3801, giving the pilot one-half pilotage, etc., against a vessel outside the bar refusing his services, the Legislature probably meant outside the harbor limits. Olsen v. Smith (Tex.) 68 S. W. 320, 321.

OUTSTANDING.

"Outstanding crop," as used in Act Feb. 20, 1875, making it criminal to steal part of an outstanding crop of corn, means "a crop in the field, not gathered thence and housed, without regard to its state. It is an outstanding crop from the day it commences to grow until it is finally gathered from the ground on which it is planted and taken away." Sullins v. State, 58 Ala. 474, 476.

OUTSTANDING ACCOUNTS.

"Outstanding accounts," as used in a contract providing that an account of the stock of a business should be taken, and from the outstanding accounts of the firm there should be first deducted five per cent. thereof to cover losses and bad accounts, and then should be paid to such party the share of net profits, after the deduction, to which he was entitled under the agreement, should be construed in its mercantile sense, which, when net profits are to be ascertained, means such accounts as are deemed good and collectible, and from which accounts deemed to be bad and uncollectible have been segregated and charged to profit and loss, and not in its general sense as meaning such accounts as are due, unpaid, and uncollectible, as an ordinary outstanding draft or bond or other indebtedness, and it is broad enough to include within its terms good and bad accounts which are due and unpaid. McCulsky v. Klosterman, 25 Pac. 366, 367, 20 Or. 106, 10 L. R. A. 785.

OUTSTANDING LIABILITIES.

"Outstanding liabilities," as used in a stipulation by the vendee of a newspaper to pay all the "outstanding liabilities of the paper," meant such debts and liabilities as created some legal or equitable right or lien on the property, types, presses, stock, etc., such as wages, sums due for paper and supplies, salaries of editors and writers; and hence the vendee was not liable for damages for libel subsequently recovered in a suit pending when the stipulation was made. Perret v. King, 80 La. Ann. 1368, 1870, 81 Am. Rep. 240.

OUTSTANDING TITLE.

An outstanding title in another which will give protection to a defendant in ejectment, the Court of Appeals of Maryland decided in Hall v. Gitting's Lessee (Md.) 2 Har. & J. 112, "means such a title as the stranger could recover on in ejectment against either of the contending parties."

It must be, therefore, a clear, subsisting title on which recovery can be had. Waltemeyer v. Baughman, 63 Md. 200, 208.

"A mere right of redemption in a third person after foreclosure is not such an outstanding title as will defeat a recovery in ejectment." Lanier v. McIntosh, 23 S. W. 787, 789, 117 Mo. 508, 38 Am. St. Rep. 676.

OUTWARD.

The words "outward," "open," "actual," "visible," "substantial," and "exclusive," in connection with a change of possession, mean substantially the same thing. They mean not concealed, not hidden, exposed to view; free from concealment, dissimulation, reserve, or disguise; in full existence; denoting that which not merely can be, but is opposed to potential, apparent, constructive, and imaginary; veritable, genuine, certain, absolute, real at present time, as a matter of fact, not merely nominal, opposed to form, actually existing, true; not including, admitting, or pertaining to any others; undivided, sole, opposed to inclusive. Bass v. Pease, 79 Ill. App. 308, 318.

OVER.

See "Assign Over."

Lexicographers, among other definitions of the word "over," give it the meaning of from one to another by passing. In re Miller's Will, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 54-70.

A charter of a railroad giving it power to construct its line, "over and across a ferry to East Boston," etc., did not give the railroad authority to establish and maintain a ferry for toll at the place there mentioned. The Maverick (U. S.) 16 Fed. Cas. 1186, 1188.

Where it appears from the testimony in a cause that a party at the time of his death was "over thirty years of age," it will be presumed that he was under 40. Johnson v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 18 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Duer) 633, 648.

An affidavit for an attachment stating only that defendant is indebted to the attaching creditor in a sum named "over and above all discounts" is insufficient to sustain the process, the words "over and above all discounts" not being equivalent to the words in the statute "over all payments and set-offs." Solinger v. Patrick (N. Y.) 7 Daly, 408, 410.

"Over and above capital stock," as used in Rev. Code 1855, p. 1322, authorizing the taxation of shares of stock in banks and other incorporated companies except, etc., and all other property owned by incorporated companies over and above their capital stock, does not authorize the taxation of corporate property which is represented by its capital stock, but only includes the property which is owned over and above its capital stock. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Shacklett, 80 Mo. 550, 558.

As upon or along.

In construing a statute granting to railroad companies the right of way and providing that any railroad company may raise or lower any turnpike, plank road, or other way for the purpose of having their railroad pass over or under the same, the court say that "the word 'over' means undoubtedly an elevation above, as opposed to 'under,' but it is clearly not limited to this meaning in this section, but includes the idea of crossing highways on the surface thereof and also running upon them lengthwise. The first definition given to the preposition 'over' by Webster is 'across'; its fifth meaning is 'on the surface of'; its sixth definition is 'upon.' And it is in the sense of these last two definitions that the Legislature in the fourth section of the same act referred to use it when it is enacted that if the owner of any real estate over which said railroad corporation may desire to locate their road shall refuse, etc. In the sense of our statute the words 'over' and 'upon' are synonymous, and, without giving it an unduly liberal construction, we can safely conclude that the Legislature did mean by such language to give the railroad companies the privilege of running their tracks upon the highways in the country and streets in the city." Milburn v. City of Cedar Rapids, 12 Iowa, 246, 258; Gear v. C., C. & D. R. Co., 43 Iowa, 83, 84.

"Over," as used in Code, § 1262, providing that any railroad corporation may raise or lower any highway for the purpose of having its railway pass over or under the same, is substantially the same in meaning as the word "upon," as used in an indictment for causing a nuisance by constructing and maintaining a railway upon a highway. State v. Davenport & St. P. Ry. Co., 47 Iowa, 507, 508.

By the word "over" in Rev. Laws, § 8381, reading: "If after laying out and making a railroad, a turnpike road or other way is so laid out as to cross said railroad, the turnpike road or other way may be so made as to pass under or over the railroad, and shall be so made as not to obstruct or injure it," was intended not "upon," but "above," so that the railroad should pass under the highway. Central Vermont R. Co. v. Town of Royalton, 58 Vt. 234, 240, 4 Atl. 868.

As across at same or higher level.

"Over," as used in a grant by a city of authority to a telephone company to run and maintain wires "over" and through the streets of the city, does not include permission to lay them under, below, or beneath. "Over" is equivalent to "across." Commonwealth v. Warwick, 40 Atl. 93, 94, 185 Pa. 623.

The word "over" means "above," and not "upon," as used in Rev. Laws, § 8381, providing that highways, when laid out so as to cross a railroad, shall pass over the same. Central Vermont R. Co. v. Royalton, 4 Atl. 868, 872, 58 Vt. 234.

The two words "over" and "across" may be used interchangeably as having the same meaning. Webster defines the word "across" from side to side; athwart; crosswise; quite over. He defines the word "over" as above, or higher than, in place or position, with the idea of covering; across; from side to side of; upon the surface of. Over has also been construed to denote a crossing of the higher level, and not the same level, and it has been held to mean not upon, but above. The word "over," in the statute authorizing a city to extend any street over or across any railroad track, right of way, or land of any railroad company, is broad enough to confer the power of extending the street above and over the track or right of way by means of a viaduct or bridge, but the word "across" is used to designate a grade crossing on the same level as the railroad right of way. Illinois Central R. Co. v. City of Chicago, 30 N. E. 1044, 1046, 141 Ill. 586, 17 L. R. A. 530.

"Over," as used in Rev. St. c. 39, § 67, providing that every railroad corporation may raise or lower any turnpike or way for the purpose of having their railroad pass over or under the same, as applied to the surface, is not precisely the opposite of "under." One passes over a road if he crosses it on the surface as well as when he crosses over it on a bridge, but he cannot be said to pass under it unless on another surface at a lower level. To raise the turnpike road to permit the railroad to pass over it at the same level is as much within the words and intent of the statute as the power of raising it much higher to carry the travel over the railroad by an independent bridge. Newburyport Turnpike Corp. v. Eastern R. R. Co., 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 326, 328.

"Over," as used in Rev. St. c. 39, § 69, providing that if, after the laying out and making of any railroad already granted or which may be hereafter granted, any turnpike road or other way shall be so laid out as to cross such railroad or turnpike road, or may be so made as to pass under or over such railroad, and be so made as not to obstruct or injure such railroad, does not mean at the same level as the railroad, but at a higher level. Boston & Maine R. v. City of Lawrence, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 107, 109.

OVER SEA.

"Over sea," as used in the statute of limitation providing that persons over sea or legally incapable of bringing their actions may bring them within four years after coming over sea, means, literally, "beyond the seas," and a person at Halifax, without the jurisdiction of the court, is not over the seas within the meaning of the term. Gustin v. Brattle (Conn.) Kirby, 299, 300.

OVEREXERTION.

"Overexertion," as used in an accident policy excepting the insurer from liability for injury or death caused by "overexertion," is to be construed "to mean an exertion which is the voluntary and unnecessary act of the insured; one from which injury might reasonably be anticipated, and which might, in the exercise of reasonable care, have been avoided; and an overexertion put forth in an emergency of danger—as, for instance, in the effort to save oneself from being crushed by a descending weight—is not within the exception of the policy." Reynolds v. Equitable Acc. Ass'n, 1 N. Y. Supp. 788, 789, 49 Hun, 605.

OVERCHARGE.

"Overcharge," as used in Rev. St. art. 4357, providing that a shipper shall have the right to recover a penalty of $500 from railroad companies for willful discrimination in freight charges, if the company refuse, on notice, for 20 days, to refund the overcharge, means a charge of more than is permitted by law, and unless there has been a charge of more than the maximum rate allowed by law no notice is necessary in order to maintain an action for the penalty. Woodhouse v. Rio Grande Ry. Co., 3 S. W. 823, 824, 67 Tex. 413.

OVERDRAW.

The offense of overdrawing an account is properly described as one whereby one unlawfully obtains money from a bank on his check, and the money is drawn from the bank by him who draws the check, and not by him who receives it, and it is drawn upon the account of the individual by whose check it is drawn, though it be paid to and for the benefit of another. State v. Stimson, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 473, 483.

OVERDRAFT.

"Overdraft occurs when a depositor of a bank checks out more money than he has in the bank. Sometimes the bank permits this to be done without security and without previous arrangement, and sometimes a previous arrangement to this effect is made, and security for the repayment of that amount is given, and a rate of interest is agreed on. But every overdraft, whether by previous arrangement or not, and whether secured or not, and whether drawing interest or not, is a loan." United States v. Allis (U. S.) 73 Fed. 165, 173.

"An overdraft arises when a customer of a bank draws from that bank more money than is standing to his credit in his account with the bank. Such a sum so appearing from a depositor's account to be overdrawn is an overdraft, and should be reported as such in reports made to the Comptroller of the Currency, although arranged for or covered by a note in the hands of the bank, called an 'overdraft note.' This is the ordinary meaning of the word 'overdraft,' as used among bankers; and it must be presumed, therefore, that when the Comptroller of the Currency calls upon a national bank for a report of its condition, and asks for a statement of the amount of overdrafts, secured and unsecured, he uses the word in the sense last mentioned, and desires a statement of the total amount which customers of the bank have drawn in excess of the sums that have been placed to their credit on the books of the bank." Bacon v. United States (U. S.) 97 Fed. 35, 43, 38 C. C. A. 37.

As between a banking firm and a depositor not a member of the firm, an overdraft is a loan; but the situation changes when the person making the overdraft is a member of the firm which advances it; and an agreement between the partners in a banking firm that, if either of them should overdraw his account, he should pay interest on such overdrafts at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, is not a charging of interest on a loan, and is not usury. Payne v. Freer, 91 N. Y. 43, 48, 43 Am. Rep. 640.

OVERDUE.

As a general rule, a note or bill may be said to be overdue when a period has elapsed in which it should have been presented. If the parties reside in different towns, the note should be presented for payment in the due course of the mail, which would not commonly require above one or two weeks at most. In such a case two months having elapsed, a note must be considered as overdue. Camp v. Scott, 14 Vt. 387, 390.

"Overdue," as applied to a demand bill of exchange, and used in reference to a right of action against the drawer or indorser, means a bill which has come into the hands of an indorser so long after its issue as to charge him with notice of its dishonor. Le Due v. First Nat. Bank of Kasson, 16 N. W. 426, 428, 31 Minn. 33.

OVERFLOW.

See "Periodical Overflow."

The word "overflow," as used in a petition alleging that land was damaged by the "overflow" of water, should be construed to include the percolating of water through the earth so as to rise and stand therein within one or two feet of the surface, it being set back by a dam, and causing it to stand at a greater depth in the bed of a stream by reason thereof. Though the word "overflow," when applied to the surface of land, doubtless is correctly defined by Webster, "to fill beyond the brim or margin, to deluge, to submerge or drown," its sense as used in the petition is not necessarily confined to the surface of the land, but to the ground itself. Pierce Mill Co. v. Koltermann, 42 N. W. 877, 878, 26 Neb. 722.

OVERFLOWED LANDS.

See "Swamp and Overflowed Lands."

"Overflowed lands," as used in Act Cong. Sept. 20, 1850, granting swamp and overflowed lands to the states, mean "those lands which are subject to such periodical or frequent overflows as to require levees or embankments to keep out the water and render them suitable for cultivation. It does not make any difference whether the overflow be by fresh water, as by the rising of rivers or lakes, or by the overflow of the tide." San Francisco Sav. Union v. Irwin (U. S.) 28 Fed. 708, 712.

Lands described in the approved plats of township surveys made under the federal authority as "subject to periodical overflow" are not swamped and overflowed lands within Act Cong. July 28, 1866, making it the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify over to the state as swamped and overflowed all lands represented as such on such plats. The term "overflowed," as thus used, having reference to a permanent condition of the lands, to which it is applied—that is, to those lands which are overflowed and will remain so without reclamation or drainage, while "subject to periodical overflow"—has reference to a condition which may or may not exist, and which, when it does exist, is of a temporary character. Heath v. Wallace, 11 Sup. Ct. 880, 884, 138 U. S. 573, 84 L. Ed. 1063. See, also, McDade v. Rossier Levee Board, 83 South. 628, 631, 109 La. 625.

OVERISSUED STOCK.

By overissued stock is to be understood stock to be issued in excess of the amount limited and prescribed by the act of incorporation. Certificates of stock issued in excess of the certificates that represent the full authorized capital of the corporation represent overissued stock. Such stock is spurious, and wholly void. Hayden v. Charter Oak Driving Park, 27 Atl. 232, 233, 63 Conn. 142.

OVERLOAD.

The words "overloaded," "injured," etc., in Code, § 2482, declaring it a misdemeanor to "willfully overdrive, overload, wound, * * * any useful beast, fowl, or animal," do not imply or describe the acts charged to have been done with certainty. They each imply a variety of acts that may or may not constitute the offense or parts of it. The acts should be so specified and charged as to show that they mean what the statute intends by overdriving, overloading, etc. State v. Watkins, 8 S. E. 346, 347, 101 N. C. 702.

OVERPERSUASION.

"Overpersuasion," as used in an instruction in an action for seduction and breach of promise of marriage, that there must be some "overpersuasion by the man, followed by sexual intercourse as the result of such overpersuasion, to constitute the offense of seduction," does not mean that mere persuasion, followed by illicit intercourse, constitutes the offense, where, in the same instruction, the words "inducements," "promise," "artifice," and "deception" are used as equivalents of "overpersuasion," and the phrase "false or fraudulent persuasion" is used as the equivalent of "false or fraudulent acts, promises, or inducements." Graham v. McReynolds, 18 S. W. 272, 273, 80 Tenn. 678.

OVERPLUS.

"Overplus," as used in St. 2 Wm. & Mary, Sess. 1, c. 5, § 2, providing that the overplus on a distress shall be left in the hands of the sheriff, under-sheriff, or constable for the owner's use, means that which remains after payment of the rent and of the reasonable charges. Lyon v. Tomkies, 1 Mees. & W. 603, 608.

"Overplus," in a will, usually imports whatever shall turn out to be overplus; but it may be given a different meaning, and it may be inferred from the expressions of the will that the testator was contemplating a certain overplus, and was making his disposition accordingly. Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463, 466.

OVERRATE.

Though in its strict sense overrating means rating for more than it ought to be, yet it may also mean rating when the party ought not to have been rated at all. The latter meaning is to be given the word in 43 Geo. III, c. 99, § 23, which enacts that, if any person shall think himself overcharged, or overated by any assessment or surcharge, etc., it shall be lawful for him to appeal to the commissioners. Allen v. Sharp, 2 Ezech. 352, 364.

OVERSEE

To oversee is to superintend. Bylow v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 47 Atl. 1066, 1067, 72 Vt. 325 (citing Webster Int. Dict. 1024).

As used in St. 1808, p. 382, authorizing the county court to appoint some person a conservator to "take care of and oversee" idiots and their estates, the words "to oversee" authorize the conservator to superintend, and the expression "to take care of" makes it his duty to assume the requisite charge in order to the preservation and profit of the estate. Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 280, 284.

OVERSEER.

See "Road Overseer."

Overseers are a class of men who have the management of slaves on a plantation or elsewhere as the agents or employees of the owner, and the term is used in the statutes to distinguish them from the class of owners. It has become a technical word, and is used in this sense in the statutes. Overseers, in our slaveholding states, compose an industrial class well defined and distinctly recognized. In the popular acceptance of the term, they are persons who superintend and manage the slaves of others, and direct their labors, and are contradistinguished from owners who manage their own slaves. In this sense the term is used in the statutes and judicial decisions of this state, and in the acts of Congress. In re State ex rel. Dawson & Mays, 39 Ala. 367, 374, 392 (citing Code, pt. 1, tit. 13, c. 4, art. 1; Gilliam v. Senter, 9 Ala. 395).

The word "overseer," in relation to the husband's position as manager of the wife's separate property, is used as a convertible term with "agent," so that it made no difference whether the husband received the rents and interest by the wife's express direction, or by that implied by the statute. Faircloth v. Borden, 41 S. E. 381, 382, 130 N. C. 268.

The term "overseer of a slave" means a person who, as the agent or employee of another, has a right to command the obedience, and, of course, is entitled to the services, of the slave placed under his charge, within the meaning of St. 1822, § 44, providing for the punishment of any master or other person entitled to the service of any slaves who shall inflict cruel or unusual punishment on them. Scott v. State, 31 Miss. 473, 479.

The words "overseer" or "overseers," wherever used in the chapter relating to the superintendent and overseers of the poor, shall be construed as if followed by the words "of the poor." Code Va. 1887, § 889.

As a laborer.

An overseer is one who is employed, not to labor himself, but to overlook and direct the labor of those who are employed to do the manual work of planting, cultivating, and gathering the crop, and it would be a confusion of terms to call such a person a laborer. Isbell v. Dunlap, 17 S. C. 581. A farm overseer is not a laborer, within the meaning of Gantt's Dig. §§ 4079-87, giving a laborer a lien for his services. Flournoy v. Shelton, 43 Ark. 168, 170; Barkman v. Duncan, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 465, 466; Rust v. Billingsale, 44 Ga. 306, 318; Caraker v. Matthews, 25 Ga. 571, 573.

An overseer is an agent; a superintendent; a sort of alter ego. His business is not to labor, but to oversee those who do work in subjection to his authority. He might in special cases unite both capacities, and be both laborer and overseer. Where an overseer did not perform any labor except to supervise and superintend a farm and laborers, he was not a laborer, within the meaning of Acts 1870, c. 206, giving laborers a lien for wages. Whittaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340, 342, 31 Am. Rep. 508.

Overseers of mines and railroad construction crews are within the term "laborer." Warner v. Hudson R. Co. (N. Y.) 5 How. Prac. 454, 455; Hovey v. Ten Broeck, 26 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Rob.) 316, 320.

OVERSEER OF HIGHWAYS.

An overseer of a highway is a township officer, and not an officer of a particular road district only. Green v. Kleinhans, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 473, 476.

Code, § 1223, declaring that every overseer of a public road should put at every crossing of any railroad of such public road a sign marked, "Look out for the cars when you hear the whistle or bell," and the county court should defray the expense of such sign, cannot be construed to include a turnpike company, as the "overseer of a public road" means the overseers of common roads, upon which overseers are annually appointed by the county courts. Louisville & N. Turnpike Co. v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 129, 130.

Under a statute (Code, § 1166) making it the duty of the overseer of every public road crossed by a railroad to place at each crossing a sign warning the public of the cars, a municipal corporation is the overseer charged with such duty as to the portion of a public road which passes within its limits, and is used by its inhabitants and the public in general. State v. Town of Loudon, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 263-265.

Wherever the word "overseer" is used in the act relating to highways, it shall be construed to mean the commissioner of highways elected or appointed over and for each road district. Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 4192.

OVERSIGHT.

The term "oversight," in Code, §§ 4501, 4502, allowing the Supreme Court, after the term, to vacate or correct mistakes in judgments given through inadvertence or oversight, does not apply to any judgment which was given upon the deliberate consideration and judgment of the court, though the court may have since adopted a different ruling as correct. It will be seen that the case provided is where judgment is given through inadvertence or oversight, and not where an opinion is formed from inadvertence and oversight. Russell v. Colyer, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 154, 176.

OVERT ACT.

An overt act sufficient to justify the taking of human life must be some demonstration made by the deceased against the accused of such character as to impress upon him that he was in imminent danger of his life or some great bodily harm. In some instances the extent of the overt act which would induce the accused to act in self-defense is measured by the character of the deceased for a violent, quarrelsome, dangerous and turbulent disposition, notorious in the community or known to the accused. State v. Williams, 15 South. 82, 83, 46 La. Ann. 709.

The overt act of the deceased justifying another person in the exercise of the right of self-defense is a hostile demonstration of a character to create a belief in such person that he was about to lose his life or suffer great bodily harm at the hands of deceased; and this belief could have been entertained honestly by accused, though deceased did not strike, or come within striking distance of, him. State v. Frontenot, 23 South. 634, 635, 50 La. Ann. 537, 69 Am. St. Rep. 455.

No exact definition of an overt act justifying a person in the exercise of the right of self-defense can be given. It may be a motion, a gesture, conduct, or demonstration, or anything else which evidences reasonably a present design to take the life of the defendant, or to do him great bodily harm. Trifles light as air when viewed alone may become fraught with deadly meaning when viewed in connection with all the preceding facts disclosed, and with all the evidence in the case. Hood v. State (Misa.) 27 South. 643, 644.

The term "overt acts," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for murder, with reference to the right of self-defense, means any acts of the deceased which manifested to the mind of a reasonable person a present intention on his part to kill defendant or do him great bodily harm. State v. Harrington, 12 Nev. 125, 134.

OVERT DEMONSTRATION.

What is or is not an overt demonstration of violence, as used in the law of self-defense, varies with the circumstances. Under some circumstances a slight movement may justify instant action, because of reasonable apprehension of danger, while under other circumstances this would not be so. And it is for the jury, and not for the judge, passing upon the weight and effect of the evidence, to determine how this may be. Allison v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 252, 257, 160 U. S. 203, 40 L. Ed. 895.

OVERTAKING.

Within the meaning of the rules for preventing collisions in harbors, rivers, and inland waters, every vessel coming up with another vessel from any direction more than two points abaft her beam—that is, in such a position with reference to the vessel which she is overtaking that at night she would be unable to see either of that vessel's sidelights—shall be deemed to be an overtaking vessel; and no subsequent alteration of the bearing between the two vessels shall make the overtaking vessel a crossing vessel. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2383.

"Overtaking," as used in Act March 3, 1885, art. 20, providing that every ship overtaking any other shall keep out of the way of the overtaking ship, means that one vessel must be ahead, and the other more or less astern. A vessel coming up from abeam, or not aft of the other's beam, is not astern of the other, and is not an overtaking vessel. The Aurania (U. S.) 29 Fed. 93, 103.

OVERTIME.

"Overtime," as used in relation to the services of railroad employes, is the time which they are delayed on their runs beyond that fixed by the schedule. Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (U. S.) 62 Fed. 17, 21.

OVERVALUATION.

"Overvaluation," as used in an assessment for taxes, means valuation in excess of the market value of the property. People v. Feltner, 58 N. Y. Supp. 869, 871, 27 Misc. Rep. 884.

Under an insurance policy providing that it should be void in case of an overvaluation of the property insured, the term "overvaluation" meant a substantial overvaluation; that is, one which would not ordinarily arise from a difference of opinion, whether fraudulent or otherwise. Boutelle v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 51 Vt. 4, 5, 31 Am. Rep. 668.

OVERWHELMING.

In an action to cancel a satisfaction and discharge of a mortgage which had been executed by mistake, the mortgagee supposing that he was discharging another mortgage, the court, in discussing the rule that in such case the proof must be "clear and overwhelming," said: "What is intended to be understood by the very strong expression 'overwhelming proof' is explained by other authorities. It cannot be disputed that proof sufficient to remove every doubt from the mind is, in effect, overwhelming, because it establishes the fact sought to be proved, and no proof can usefully accomplish more than this result." Bond v. Dorsey, 65 Md. 310, 314, 4 Atl. 279, 281.

OWE.

See "Actually Owning."

"Owes and is indebted," as used in a recognizance declaring that the party owes and is indebted, etc., is synonymous with the words "is held and firmly bound to pay." The language, though varied in form, has the same force and meaning. Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 477, 480.

"Owe," as used in a statement in a will that "I owe him that," implies a debt; and, as there can be no debt, in a legal sense, without a consideration to support it, the words imply both debt and consideration. Kellogg v. Ogden, 50 N. Y. Supp. 650, 651, 27 App. Div. 214 (citing Gallagher v. Brewster, 153 N. Y. 864, 47 N. E. 450).

The word "owe," in the provision of the Code that children owe alimony to their father and mother and other ascendants who are in need, "implies a debt imposed on them by law in that respect, for which a civil action lies. The fulfillment of that obligation does not transform the child into a creditor capable of claiming reimbursement in any contingency." Succession of Guidry, 4 South. 893, 895, 40 La. Ann. 671.

A man is said to owe a sum of money when he is absolutely and unconditionally bound to pay it—not when he is contingently and conditionally liable to pay it on the happening of some future event. One who guarantees the payment of a sum due from a principal debtor, provided the debtor does not pay it by a given day, and due demand and notice is made on the guarantor, does not owe the money. Doolittle v. Southworth (N. Y.) 8 Barb. 79, 85.

Due synonyms.

The word "owing" is often used in business transactions as synonymous with "due" or "remaining unpaid." Fowler v. Hoffman, 81 Mich. 215, 219.

The word "due" was held to be equivalent to "owed" or "owing," so that an allegation that a certain sum is wholly owing and unpaid is equivalent to an allegation that the same is due and unpaid. Tomlinson v. Ayres, 49 Pac. 717, 718, 117 Cal. 568.

Enforceable obligation.

The word "owing," as used in a will remitting certain debts which shall be owing and unpaid at the time of the death of testator, does not necessarily imply an enforceable obligation. In re Tompkins, 64 Pac. 268, 270, 182 Cal. 178.

Future advances.

"Owing," as used in a deed stating that it is given to secure money owing, cannot be construed to mean money that may be owing in the future, so as to secure future advances. Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Germania Bank, 79 N. W. 899, 401, 76 Minn. 409.

Unliquidated claims.

In an action by a father to recover the penalty imposed by statute for selling or giving intoxicating liquors to his minor son, the allegation at the end of the counts of the declaration that the defendant owes the plaintiff the penalty does not render such counts bad. The statute makes the defendant liable to pay the plaintiff a definite sum, and this liability may be expressed by the word "owes," although it is required to be enforced in an action of tort. Hamer v. Eldridge, 171 Mass. 250, 251, 50 N. E. 611.

"Due and owing," as used in an assignment for benefit of creditors, does not apply to a debt for rent under a lease after the voluntary retaking of possession by the landlord; the amount being uncertain and unliquidated. In re Willis, 18 N. Y. Supp. 412, 63 Hun, 634.

Unmatured debt.

The term "owing" may properly be used to designate money which is not due. A man may owe the money represented by his note, but the money is not due until the note matures. Coquard v. Bank of Kansas City, 12 Mo. App. 261, 265.

The phrase "debts owing or accruing" in Common-Law Procedure Act 1854, § 61, authorizing an attachment of all debts owing or accruing from the garnishee to the judgment debtor, includes all debts, though not presently payable. Jones v. Thompson, 1 EL. Bl. & EL. 63, 64.

"Owes," as used in a complaint charging that the defendant owes the plaintiff the price of an article sold, means simply to be obliged or bound to pay, and applies as well to an immature as to an overdue obligation. Musselman v. Wise, 84 Ind. 248, 250.

Within the common-law procedure act, enabling a judge, on its being made to appear that any person is indebted to the judgment debtor, to order that all debts owing or accruing from such third person to the judgment debtor shall be attached to answer the judgment debt, "owing" applies only to a debt perfected. When the words "owing" and "accruing" are used to designate two classes of debts, they can each receive a distinct meaning only by taking one as denoting debts which are not yet payable, and the other as denoting those which are. There is no existing debt until judgment, and, where orders were obtained to attach moneys in the hands of the company which were to become payable to the debtor on a verdict recovered by him in his action against the company, there was no debt owing or accruing from the company; the judgment not then having been entered. Dresser v. Johns, 6 O. B. (N. S.) 429, 434.

OWELTY.

The term "owelty" is usually, if not universally, applied to partition of lands. Smith v. Hall, 87 Atl. 698, 699, 20 R. I. 170.

OWN.

See "For His Own."

When following a possessive pronoun, "own" is used to emphasize or intensify the idea of peculiar or personal interest, so that, as used in Const. art. 13, § 5, providing that no public officer shall accept or receive for his own use or benefit any pass, it indicates that the practice of giving passes to public officers for their individual use, and to save them from personal expense, should be stopped, but does not prevent the Legislature from providing for their expenses while engaged in public business by means of passes. In re Board of Railroad Com'rs, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1115, 1116, 11 Misc. Rep. 103.

The term "own manufacture," in a license law authorizing any person to sell certain articles of his own manufacture without payment of the prescribed tax, limits the right to things made by the person who actually does the selling, not things made by the principal and sold by his agent. "The definition of the word 'own' in the Century Dictionary is: 'Belonging to one's self; peculiar; particular; individual; following the possessive (usually a possessive pronoun) as an intensive to express ownership interest or individual peculiarity with emphasis, or to indicate the exclusion of others, as my own house; his own idea.' So, when the law allows a person to sell articles of his own manufacture, it must refer to ownership in a sense peculiar and intensive as to the owner." State v. Rhyne, 26 S. E. 126, 127, 119 N. C. 905.

The term "own establishment," in a license to use an invention at the licensee's own establishment, cannot be construed to include an establishment owned by the licensee and others. Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 788, 19 L. Ed. 566.

A will directing "the rest and residue of my money in banks, stocks and bonds to be paid to" a certain person "for his own" should be construed as a legacy of the property mentioned to the person to whom the testator directs it to be paid. Sanborn v. Clough, 10 Atl. 678, 64 N. H. 815.

The term "carpenters at work in their own shops," in a memorandum attached to a fire policy as to the conclusions of the hazards, which mentions carpenters at work in their own shops as applying to one class, does not include a carpenter constantly employed in a china factory in making the racks, shelves, etc., necessary for the proper conducting of business therein. Delongue-mare v. Tradesmen's Ins. Co., 2 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Hall) 629, 644.

OWN (Verb).

See "Absolutely Own."
All I own, see "All."

Perhaps the word "own" cannot strictly be regarded as a technical term, but both in legal and common use it implies estate, and applies only to things subject to sale and transfer. The use of the word "own" in Rev. St. c. 95, § 2, providing that the property owned by a woman at the time of her marriage shall continue to be her sole and separate property after marriage, clearly applies the provision to actual property only, and not to possible damages to be recovered in actions ex delicto. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 34, 28 Am. Rep. 527.

A bequest of "stock owned by me" is sufficient to render the bequest specific, and to show that testator intended to devise the specific property, and not a quantity or species of the thing bequeathed. Norris v. Thompson's Ex'rs, 18 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 218, 222.

"Owned by them," as used in a deed conveying a title in fee simple to certain land, and describing the same as that part of lot 44 owned by the vendors, are "mere words of description, and not of restriction, and would not confine the vendee to what the vendor owned, if it is less than the amount indicated, but he had a right to the whole according to the lines mentioned." Champion v. White (N. Y.) 5 Cow. 509, 512.

In a policy of fire insurance on carpets, describing them with relation to the insured as their own, or held by them in trust, "own" is broad enough to cover everything answering the description and intended to be covered, but the property and interest the word is intended to cover must be averred and proved. The word "owners" does not necessarily cover all owners. The parties insured by such general terms are only those for whom the insurance was intended. Richardson v. Home Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. (15 Jones & S.) 138, 154.

As absolute ownership.

The word "own," in Comp. Laws, § 8393, providing that each stockholder of a corporation shall be entitled to as many votes as he or she may own shares of stock, does not require that a person having stock shall be the absolute owner thereof, but stock which has been legally transferred by a father to his son in order to make the son eligible for a corporate office makes the son an owner, within the meaning of the statute. State v. Leete, 16 Nev. 242, 249.

"Own," as used in the description of a deed conveying all the land "which I own in said town," means all the lands claimed and possessed by the grantor, and includes land conveyed to him, but to which he did not appear to have any title by record, or any other than a title acquired by possession. Field v. Huston, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 69, 74.

A public highway is not a public work owned by a city or town, within St. 1892, c. 270, providing that a person to whom a debt is due for labor on such public work shall have a right of action therefor against the city. In no proper sense can the public ways be said to be "owned" by the town, within the ordinary meaning of such word. McHugh v. City of Boston, 53 N. E. 905, 908, 173 Mass. 408.

As now owned.

"Owned," as used in a mortgage of land, describing the land conveyed as "all the land 6 Wds. & P.—17 owned by me," must be construed as meaning "all the land now owned by me," which is equivalent to "all the land which I have not heretofore conveyed." Fitzgerald v. Libby, 7 N. E. 919, 142 Mass. 246.

As used in a power of attorney to sell real estate, "I own" means present possession or ownership, as distinguished from that which is to be acquired in the future. Weare v. Williams, 52 N. W. 328, 332, 95 Iowa, 253.

Leasehold interest.

As used in Rev. St. § 8383, providing that, when the tracks of two railroads cross each other or in any way connect at a common grade, the crossing shall be made and kept in repair, and watchmen retained thereat, at the joint expense of the companies owning the tracks, depends somewhat for its signification upon the connection in which it is used. "To own" is defined "to hold as property; to have a legal or rightful title to; to have; to possess." And an owner is one who owns; a rightful proprietor. The owner is not necessarily one owning the fee simple, or one having in the property the highest estate it will admit of. One having a lesser estate may be an owner, and, indeed, there may be different estates in the same property vested in different persons, and each be an owner thereof. Lessees operating a railroad are companies owning the tracks of the roads operated by them, in the sense in which that phrase is used in the statute. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Walker, 16 N. E. 475, 480, 45 Ohio St. 577.

A corporation owning a railroad in Connecticut, running from the southern line of that state to the Massachusetts line on the north, which takes a perpetual lease on a fixed rent of two Massachusetts roads, one connecting at the state line with its own road, and the other with the latter at its northern terminus, thereafter operating the two roads in Massachusetts as if they were its own property, and the three roads one entire road, is not to be regarded as owning the Massachusetts roads, within the meaning of Act 1876, providing that where only a part of a railroad lies in the state the company owning such road shall pay 1 per cent. of such proportion of the valuation as the length of its road lying in the state bears to the entire length of the road. State v. Housatonic R. Co., 48 Conn. 44, 54.

OWN ACCOUNT.

In her own name and on her own account, see "Own Name."

OWN AND OCCUPY.

Where a homestead exemption statute authorised the exemption to a householder who owned and occupied the same, the term "owned and occupied" should be construed to mean ownership coupled with residence, and therefore could not include the right of an adult son, having a family of his own, who was engaged in cultivating a distant farm, to his interest in homestead property occupied by his father's widow, though he occasionally occupied the homestead jointly with his mother, and had some of his furniture stored there. Brokaw v. Ogle, 48 N. E. 894, 397, 170 Ill. 115.

OWN MEMBERS.

A city charter providing that the mayor and aldermen of the city shall constitute the common council thereof, and that the common council shall be the judge of the election and qualification of its own members, does not include the mayor. Garside v. City of Ochoes, 12 N. Y. Supp. 192, 196, 58 Hun, 605.

OWN NAME.

The use of the phrase "in her own name" in Rev. St. c. 61, § 4, providing that a married woman shall be liable for all her debts contracted before marriage, and for debts contracted afterwards in her own name for any lawful purpose, seemed to indicate that the wife's power to contract is not unlimited; that it is confined to her separate business or estate. Haggett v. Hurley, 40 Atl. 561, 565, 91 Me. 542, 41 L. R. A. 362. But the statute does not prevent a wife from contracting with her husband, or joining with her husband in contracts with other parties, nor in becoming a surety for a husband, nor making contracts through him as her agent. Peaks v. Hutchinson, 53 Atl. 38, 39, 96 Me. 580, 59 L. R. A. 279 (citing Haggett v. Hurley, 91 Me. 542, 40 Atl. 561, 41 L. R. A. 362).

The words "in his own name" in Rev. St. § 784 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 607], providing that suit can be brought by a party injured by a breach of a United States marshal's bond, "in his own name and for his own use," should be construed to mean that, instead of suing in the name of the United States, the obligee of the bond, a private party can sue in his own name. Bollin v. Blythe (U. S.) 46 Fed. 181, 183.

A Chinaman claiming to be a merchant, and making application for entrance into the United States on the ground that he was formerly engaged in this country as a merchant, is required by Act Nov. 3, 1893 (28 Stat. 7), to establish by the testimony of two credible witnesses, other than Chinese, (1) that he was engaged in this country in buying and selling merchandise; (2) at a fixed place of business; (3) that the business was conducted in his own name, etc. Proof that Quan Gin was a member of a firm doing business under the name of Yow Kee & Co. is not sufficient to entitle him to admission to the country. A Chinese person does not bring himself within the statutory definition of "merchant" unless he conducts his business either in his own name, or in a firm name of which his own is a part. The requirement that a merchant must conduct the business in his own name can have but one purpose, to wit, that he who is a merchant in fact should also be known to be such by the parties with whom he deals, and by the public generally. That purpose could readily be defeated if it were possible to conceal his identity by trading under an assumed name or the disguise of a "Co." In re Quan Gin (U. S.) 61 Fed. 895, 897.

The phrase "in his own name, without any such addition," in Code, § 1800, requiring persons doing business as agents, factors, partnerships, etc., to designate the nature of the business by the words "agents, factors, and company," and making the property of any such person liable for any debts contracted if he transacts business in his own name without any such addition, is designed to meet the case of one who transacts business without any such addition and not in the name of some other person than himself, who is the real owner. Whoever transacts business without doing it in the name of another does it in his own name and character necessarily. The statute does not mean that it shall be defeated by the easy disguise of a fictitious name or the real name of one not the owner or evaded by the artful dodge of not using any name at all. Hamblet v. Steen, 4 South. 431, 433, 65 Miss. 474.

The statute in relation to married women as sole traders, providing that any married woman shall have the right to carry on and transact business under "her own name and on her own account" by making a declaration of her intention before any person authorized to take acknowledgements of conveyances, etc., means that she must make a declaration stating that she intends to carry on business not only "in her own name," but "on her own account." Both of these terms are natural, and each is essential to the validity of her declaration. They are not synonymous. The one term does not presume the other, for she might transact business in her own name, and not on her own account, or vice versa. Manton v. Tyler, 1 Pac. 743, 744, 4 Mont. 364.

OWN PREMISES.

"Own premises," as used in Pen. Code, art. 319, providing for the punishment of any person carrying a weapon, except on his own premises, cannot be construed to include premises which were in the possession of a tenant under an unexpired lease containing no reservation, authorizing the owner to enter upon the premises. Zallner v. State, 15 Tex. App. 23, 24.

The phrase "own premises" does not apply to the common stairway of a building, on the upper floor of which a defendant and other persons rent and occupy offices for business purposes, as used in Manst. Dig. § 1907, making the carrying of weapons a misdemeanor, except upon the defendant's own premises. Clark v. State, 4 S. W. 638, 49 Ark. 174.

OWN PROPER.

"Own proper," as used in St. 1798, § 34, providing that where a feme sole is or shall be possessed of any slave as of her own proper slave or slaves, the same shall accrue to, and be absolutely vested in, her husband when she marry, imports a possession sua jure, as contradistinguished from a trust or possession en autre droit. Hykes v. White's Adm'r, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 184, 185.

OWN RIGHT.

"In his own right," as used in Rev. St. 1841, c. 105, § 18, as amended by Act April 14, 1841, c. 105, § 15, providing that the estate of a deceased person shall be settled in another county whenever the judge of probate shall be interested therein in his own right, means the direct personal interest previously described in the statute as that of an "heir, legatee, creditor, or debtor." In re Marston, 8 Atl. 87, 89, 79 Me. 25.

Where a person enters upon land as a tenant in common, his claim of a right to occupy it in his own right does not necessarily imply that he asserts a right to the portion of the land occupied by him adversely to the rights of his co-tenant. Teal v. Terrell, 58 Tex. 257, 262.

Comp. St. c. 17, § 1, cl. 4, as amended in 1856, which provides that every person of full age, who shall reside in any town in this state, and whose ratable estate held "in his own right," shall be listed at the sum of $3 or upward for five successive years, shall have a settlement in such town, "refers to the title which the party has in the estate—not necessarily a title in form, but one which he may assert." Town of Newfane v. Town of Somerset, 49 Vt. 411, 414.

The phrase "own right" in Gen. St. c. 19, § 1, subd. 4, providing that a legal settlement may be gained in a town, where a person of full age resides in the town, and whose ratable estate, "held in his own right," shall be set in the grand list of such town at the sum of $3 or upwards for five years in succession, should be construed to include a holding of a farm by one under a bond conditioned that he should have a deed thereof on the payment of the sums specified in it. Town of Weston v. Town of Landgrove, 58 Vt. 875, 877.

Const. art. 2, § 1, providing that no person is a legal voter unless he is possessed in his own right of real estate of a certain value, being an estate in fee simple, fee tail for the life of any other person, or an estate in reversion or remainder, which qualifies no other person to vote, means an estate which the party holds beneficially for himself, and not simply as trustee or custodian. In re Horgan, 18 Atl. 279, 281, 16 R. I. 542.

As creating separate estate.

The conveyance of land to a married woman "in her own right" is not a sufficient conveyance of it to her sole and separate use, free from the interference or control of her husband, within the meaning of St. 1845, c. 208, § 8. Merrill v. Bullock, 105 Mass. 486, 489.

"Own right," as used in a grant of property to a married woman in her own right, means to her own use and benefit, and not that the grantee should have a separate estate in the property. Grand Gulf Bank v. Barnes, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 165, 185.

A testator, by making a bequest to two daughters of realty and personalty "in their own rights," did not create separate estates which will deprive their future husbands of marital rights in the property. Hart v. Leete, 15 S. W. 976, 977, 104 Mo. 815.

OWN RIGHT HEIRS.

Where a will devised all of the property of the testator, both real and personal, to his wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage living at her death, and in default of such issue to his own right heirs, the testator meant by the use of the words "own right heirs" such persons as were his heirs by the laws of Pennsylvania, where the will was made, and such persons were his brothers and sisters of the full blood, to the exclusion of brothers and sisters of the half blood. Guerard v. Guerard, 73 Ga. 503, 510.

OWN USE.

Where a marriage settlement contained a limitation "to the executors" or assigns of the settlor, to and for his and their "own use and benefit," the words, though strong, as showing that the executors were entitled to take beneficially, will not be so construed where the opposite intention is shown by the entire context. Hames v. Hames, 2 Kean, 646, 652.

The phrase "for his own use," in Rev. St. § 784 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 607], providing that suit can be brought by a party injured by a breach of a United States marshal's bond "in his own name and for his own use," should be construed to mean that the benefit of the suit would inure primarily not to all persons injured, but to him solely. Bollin v. Blythe (U. S.) 46 Fed. 181, 183.

A conveyance of a full fee simple to premises, reserving to the grantor, his heirs and assignees, a free toleration of getting "coal for their own use," does not necessarily or naturally mean getting coal for the market, or the exclusive right to get all the coal underlying the tract. On the other hand, the words are capable of being understood as meaning supplying the personal needs of the grantor, his heirs and assignees, for fuel from the coal granted by the deed. This is the plain, natural meaning of the words employed, when read in connection with the deed in which they are found. Algonquin Coal Co. v. Northern Coal & Iron Co., 29 Atl. 402, 403, 162 Pa. 114.

A will giving testator's wife the stock—horses, mules, cattle, and hogs—and provisions, as she may want "for her own use" during her natural life, does not limit her interest in the property, but refers to the amount and quality of the stock, plantation, tools, and furniture which she might need in operating the farm and keeping up the establishment as he left it at his death. It merely indicates how much of the stock she was to take. Roundtree v. Roundtree, 2 S. E. 474, 475, 28 S. C. 450.

As creating separate estate.

A bequest to a married woman for her own use is equivalent to a bequest to her for her separate use, and, in an action by the husband and wife for the legacy, a debt due by the husband to the testator cannot be set off against it. If by such bequest it had been intended merely to give the legacy subject to the marital rights of the husband, it would have been sufficient to say, "I give it to" the wife, but the addition of the words "for her own use" is tantamount to saying "not for the use of her husband," because, if it was for his use, it could not be for her own use. If the legacy were to be deducted from the debt of the husband to the testator, the legatee would have no use whatever of it. Jamison v. Brady (Pa.) 6 Serg. & R. 466, 467, 9 Am. Dec. 460.

A legacy given to a married woman for her own use, and at her own disposal, vests in her a separate estate. Prichard v. Ames, 1 Turn. & R. 222, 223.

A gift or bequest to a married woman after marriage, giving her property to "her own use during life, independent of her husband," is to be construed to exclude the marital rights of the husband, and the property will be for her exclusive use. Clark v. Maguire, 16 Mo. 302, 314 (citing Story, Eq. § 1382).

In Jamison v. Brady (Pa.) 6 Serg. & R. 466, 9 Am. Dec. 460, where a testator gave to his sister, who was intermarried with Brady, a legacy for her own use, the use of the phrase "for her own use" was held to be tantamount to saying "not for the use of her husband," because, if it was for his use, it could not be for her own use. Heck v. Clippenger, 5 Pa. 385, 388.

A deed executed by a feme sole the day before her marriage with an insolvent man, conveying all her property, real and personal, to a trustee, in trust that "he shall permit her to remain in quiet and peaceable possession of the same, and take the profits thereof to her own use and benefit during her natural life, and at her decease to descend and go to her heirs absolutely forever," does not exclude the husband's marital rights. The force of the word "own" has been often considered in this connection, and sound criticism has pronounced that it cannot be held to be equivalent to "sole or separate." It does not point at the marital rights, as these do. To say "We take property to our own use," seems mainly intended to negative the idea that we are taking it for another, with some trust or agency. "To have and hold the same to his own proper use and behoof" are words to be found in almost every deed a man takes to himself for land in fee simple, or absolute bill of sale of chattels. It is a common sort of tautology, more used for sound and emphasis than to express any special quality of ownership, out of the ordinary way. "To his use," "To his own use," "To his own proper use and behoof"—what are they but the same thing? The meaning of the first words is not amplified in the least when we get to the last. There are more words, but that is all. You gather no new idea. Mitchell v. Gates, 23 Ala. 433, 446, 447.

OWNER.

"The popular definition of the word 'owner' is the right to own; exclusive right of possession; legal or just claim or title; proprietorship." Woodward v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 32 Hun, 365, 369.

"The owner of property is one who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has the right to enjoy and to do with it as he pleases—either to spoil or destroy it as far as the law permits—unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right." Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 28 N. W. 555, 556, 69 Iowa, 202; McLain v. Maricle, 83 N. W. 85, 87, 60 Neb. 353; Territory v. Young, 2 N. M. 93; Turner v. Cross, 18 S. W. 578, 580, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 263; Dow v. Gould & Curry Silver Min. Co., 81 Cal. 629, 649; Directors of Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Abila, 89 Pac. 794, 796, 106 Cal. 355; Larimer County Ditch Co. v. Zimmerman, 84 Pac. 1111, 1112, 4 Colo. App. 78; Johnson v. Crookshanks, 21 Or. 339, 28 Pac. 78.

An owner is one who has dominion over that which is the subject of the ownership. He has the right to make such use of it, consistently with the rights of others, as he may see fit. The ownership may extend to the entire thing, or may be limited to an interest in it, and whatever is the subject of the ownership is held by the owner for his own individual benefit. Florman v. School Dist. No. 11, 40 Pac. 469, 6 Colo. App. 319.

The word "owner," as applied to land, has no fixed meaning which can be declared to be applicable under all circumstances, and as to any and every enactment. It usually denotes a fee-simple estate, but it has been defined to be "one who has the usufruct, control, or occupation of land, with a claim of ownership, whether his interest be an absolute fee or a less estate." Coombs v. People, 64 N. E. 1058, 1057, 198 Ill. 538.

An owner, according to Black's Dictionary, is a person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property. It is defined by Webster as one who owns; a rightful proprietor; one who has the legal or rightful title, whether he is the possessor or not. It is a sufficient allegation of ownership in an action of ejectment to authorize proof of any right to property, general or special. Atwater v. Spalding, 90 N. W. 370, 371, 86 Minn. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 331.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2140, defines the word "owner" thus: "Every person, including guardians of minors, married women and any company or corporation any tenants or lessees for whose use, benefit or enjoyment any property, building, structure, or improvement mentioned in this chapter is constructed, repaired, or altered, is deemed the owner thereof for the purpose of this chapter." Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 60 Pac. 991, 993, 24 Mont. 65.

By statute the term "owner," with respect to condemnation proceedings, is defined to mean all persons having any interest, estate, or easement in the property to be taken, or any lien, charge, or incumbrance thereon. In re Opening of Onelda St., 49 N. Y. Supp. 823, 832, 22 Misc. Rep. 235.

The words "owner, resident, or householder," as used in the homestead statute to describe the persons entitled to the homestead exemption, are not limited to married men; and therefore a widower whose children are all married and away from home, and who has rented the premises claimed as his homestead, but who still boards and lodges in the house, is entitled to the homestead exemption. Myers v. Ford, 22 Wis. 139, 141.

The word "owner," as used in Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 782 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 770), which provides that lands sold under a judgment, when redeemed by the owner, shall be subject to resale to pay an amount remaining unpaid on such judgment, means any owner of the real estate whose interest is subject to payment of the judgment, without regard to whether or not he is the judgment debtor, or claims under him. Lemmon v. Osborn, 54 N. E. 1058, 1060, 153 Ind. 172.

Under St. 1888, c. 390, § 40, providing that if taxes are not paid, the whole of the land may be sold, and, after the taxes and charges are paid therefrom, the city or town shall pay the balance to the owner of the estate on demand, the word "owner" means the owner at the time of the sale, and not the owner at the time of the assessment. Worcester v. City of Boston, 60 N. E. 410, 411, 179 Mass. 41.

"Owner of the land," as used in Rev. St. c. 117, § 7, directing that the court shall order notice of the filing of a petition for a mechanic's lien to be given to the owner of the land, means the contractor—the debtor—the party who procures the work to be done, by which various designations the same person is intended, such is the party intended to be the defendant, and to be summoned in the suit. Howard v. Robinson, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 119, 122.

In an action under Rev. St. 1889, § 4512, authorizing a recovery against the owner or keeper of dogs for damages for stock killed or maimed by such dogs, an instruction was given, and approved on appeal stating that the words "owner and keeper" meant one who actually owns or claims to own a dog, or who maintains or controls and uses the dog of another. Jacobsmeyer v. Poggemoeller, 47 Mo. App. 560, 563.

The remedy against the "owner or occupant" in Rev. St. c. 14, § 16, providing that, "when any source of filth or other cause of sickness is found on private property, the owner or occupant thereof shall, within 24 hours after notice," etc., at his own expense, remove or discontinue it—all expenses of removing the same by the committee or officer of the town, in case of failure to comply with the notice, to be paid by such owner or occupant—would be construed, in common parlance, to be against either, at the option of the officer, as he should decide as to the responsibility of the respective parties. An owner of land is liable under this section for the expense of removing a nuisance therefrom, although a tenant for a term of years caused the nuisance, and continued to be the occupant of the premises under his lease when the nuisance was removed. City of Bangor v. Rowe, 57 Me. 436, 439.

Under Act May 2, 1834, § 12, "to provide for supplying the city of New York with water," and authorizing the water commissioners to enter upon land and agree with the owner of any property which may be required as to the amount of compensation to be paid to him, the word "owner" means the person or persons who represent a particular piece of property, where there is a unity of possession. Dyckman v. City of New York (N. Y.) 7 Barb. 498, 506.

In the provisions of the revenue laws of the United States which require the delivery of distilled spirits by the government warehousemen to the owner when the tax is paid, Congress merely intended by the use of a general word of description to designate, without circumscription or needless specification, any person who upon the payment of the government dues is in law entitled to the possession of the goods. Conrad v. Fisher, 37 Mo. App. 352, 8 L. R. A. 147.

The term "owner," as used in determining who may redeem from tax sale, has been construed to include mortgagees, judgment creditors, and holders of contingent interests in the land affected by the sale. Lane v. Wright, 96 N. W. 902, 903, 121 Iowa, 378.

The word "owner," as used in an act relating to municipal liens, means the person or persons in whose name the property is registered, if registered according to law, and in all other cases means any person or persons in open, peaceable, and notorious possession of the property, as apparent owner or owners thereof, if any, and, if not, then the reputed owner or owners thereof in the neighborhood of such property. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1897, vol. 4, col. 1269, § 55.

As used in the chapter relating to domestic animals, the term "owner," used with reference to animals, means any one entitled to the present possession thereof—the one having care or charge of them—and the person holding the legal title to them, and, as to land, the person having title thereto, or the lessee or occupant thereof. Code Iowa 1897, § 2311.

"Owner," as used in the herd law act, includes the person entitled to the immediate possession of the animal, and also the person having care or charge of the same, and also the person having the legal title thereto. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 51.

"Owner," as used in the herd law act, providing for actions by the owners of land injured by animals trespassing thereon, includes the owner, homesteader, tenant, or other person in possession of or cultivating the land trespassed upon. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 55.

The term "owner," as used in the act relating to mines, is defined to mean the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of any coal mine, or any part thereof. Horner's Rev. St. Ind. 1901, § 5463.

The terms "owner," "owners," "lessee," "agent," or "operator," as used in the act relating to mines and mining, shall include the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of any coal mine, or any person having on behalf of any owner or owners or lessee as aforesaid the care and management of any coal mine, or any part thereof. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 4141.

Any person, association of persons, or corporation in the peaceable possession of any mining claim under claim or color of title, and engaged in the mining and sale of ores therefrom, shall, as to all persons purchasing such ore or ores in good faith, and without notice of the claim or claims of any other person, association, or corporation to such mining claim or claims, be deemed to be the owner or owner of such ore or ores. Any person who, or association or corporation which, shall in good faith, and in the usual course of business, and without notice, purchase and obtain delivery of any ore or ores from any person, association, or corporation in possession of any mining claim or claims, shall be deemed the owner or owners of such ore or ores. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, §§ 3235, 3236.

The terms "owners" and "operators," as used in the act relating to mines and mining, mean any person or body corporate who is the immediate proprietor or lessee or occupier of any coal mine or colliery, or any part thereof. The term "owner" does not include a person or body corporate who merely receives a royalty, rent, or fine from a coal mine or colliery, or part thereof, or is merely the proprietor of the mine subject to any lease, grant, or license for the working or operating thereof, or is merely the owner of the soil, and not interested in the minerals of the mine, or any part thereof. But any contractor for the working of a mine or colliery, or any part or district thereof, shall be subject to this act as an operator or owner, in like manner as if he were the owner. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, vol. 2, col. 3110, § 193.

Whenever the term "owner or manager" is used in the chapter relating to coal mines, the same shall include lessees or other persons controlling the operation of any mine. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 1525.

Laws 1881 (Act March 25) making it the duty of the owner, agent, or proprietor of any coal mine to keep a sufficient supply of timber when required to be used as props to secure the mine against caving in, etc., expressly defines the word "owner" to mean the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupant of any coal mine, or any part thereof. Leslie v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co., 110 Mo. 81, 41, 19 S. W. 308; Fell v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co., 23 Mo. App. 216.

The term "owner," in the Pennsylvania act of March 8, 1871, requiring owners of coal mines to ventilate the same, is defined by the act itself to mean the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of the coal mine or colliery, or of any part thereof; and the term "agent," in the act, is defined as meaning any person having, on behalf of the owner, the care or direction of any coal mine or colliery. United States v. Gratiot, 39 U. S. (14 Pet.) 528, 538, 10 L. Ed. 573.

As occupier.

The word "owner," as applied to realty, does not necessarily import that the party is the occupier of the premises. Russell v. Shenton, 3 Q. B. 449, 451.

Every person for whose immediate use and benefit any building, erection, or improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, shall be included in the word "owner" thereof, as used in the act relating to mechanics' liens. Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1908, § 710.

The term "owner, or reputed owner," as used in an act relating to the powers of boroughs, means any person or persons in open, peaceable, and notorious possession of property, remaindermen, or other persons interested in expectancy. P. & L. Dig. Pa. vol. 3, p. 50, § 32.

As owner at the time of.

Rev. St. c. 18, § 53, as amended by Acts 1872, c. 48, providing for the recovery of damages for an injury to the owner of adjoining land by the raising or lowering of a street or way, applies to the owner of the property at the time of the injury. Sargent v. Inhabitants of Machias, 65 Me. 591, 592.

Under Act 1854, making taxes a lien upon land throughout the state, and directing that all lands shall be assessed in the name of the owner, and declaring that any assessment of taxes against any person or persons on account of lands "of such person or persons"—that is, lands of which he or they are the owner—shall be a lien on the said lands, etc., the phrase "owner or owners" was used to denote the owner of an estate in possession at the time of the assessment, and not a prior owner, or the owner of an estate in expectancy, or any executory or contingent interest; and the design of the act was to make the interest of such owner, and those claiming under him, liable to the tax assessed. Hopper v. Malleson's Ex'rs, 16 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 382, 387.

As payee.

In an action on a written "promise to pay steamship Juda and owners or order" a certain sum of money 30 days after date, it was claimed that the instrument was not a promissory note, and that an indorsee was not vested with the legal title thereto, on the ground that the name of the payee did not appear on the face of the note. In considering this objection, the court said: "The statute does not require that the real name of the payee should be expressed in the note. It must contain a promise to pay a person, etc., but we perceive no reason why such person may not be designated on the face of the note under any style or description agreed on by the parties. Indeed, in the case before us it may be said that the term 'owners,' as it occurs in the note, sufficiently indicates a person, within the intent of the law." Moore v. Anderson, 8 Ind. 18, 22.

As right to possession.

The term "owner," as used in the replevin statute, is defined by Cobbey, Repl. § 538, as meaning not the absolute and unqualified title, but as meaning a right to possession. "Any interest coupled with a right of immediate possession constitutes ownership, under these statutes." Therefore the failure of a complaint in a replevin action to show right to immediate possession to chattels on the part of the plaintiff is not supplied by averment in the answer that defendant is the owner and entitled to immediate possession. W. W. Kimball Co. v. Redfield, 54 Pac. 216, 218, 33 Or. 292.

In an action of forcible entry and detainer, an allegation that plaintiff is the owner of the premises therein described does not raise a question of title, so as to deprive a probate court of jurisdiction; the word "owner," as there used, being merely descriptive of plaintiff's right of possession, and not changing the character of the action. McClung v. Penny, 69 Pac. 499, 500, 11 Okl. 474.

Absolute or qualified owner.

Laws 1885, c. 349, declares that a mechanic's lien shall also attach to, and be a lien on, the real property of any person on whose premises improvements are made; such owner having knowledge thereof. Held, that the words "real property of any person" and the word "owner," in the statute, were synonymous, and meant the same thing. The word "owner" does not always mean absolute ownership. Edwards & McCulloch Lumber Co. v. Mosher, 90 N. W. 284, 285, 88 Wis. 672.

The term "owner," in an action of claim and delivery, in which the plaintiff alleges generally that he is the owner and entitled to immediate possession, does not necessarily import general or absolute ownership. Cumbeby v. Lovett, 79 N. W. 99, 100, 76 Minn. 227.

The word "owner," in the revenue act, is always used in the sense of absolute owner. For example, it provides that the real estate becoming taxable for the first time shall be listed to the owner thereof, that the owner of the property on the 1st day of April in any year shall be liable for the taxes of that year, that the purchaser of property on the 1st day of April shall be construed the owner on that day, and that land comprising more than one subdivision belonging to one owner may at his request be listed as one tract. These provisions of the revenue act clearly indicate that the Legislature uses the word "owner" in the popular sense—the sense in which it is understood by the people at large. Leigh v. Green, 86 N. W. 1093, 1098, 62 Neb. 344, 89 Am. St. Rep. 751.

Under a statute requiring a juror to be the owner of real estate, it is not necessary that he should be the absolute owner of the fee, and the requirement is met if the juror be in possession of, or have a qualified interest in, the real estate. Territory v. Young, 2 N. M. 93.

The word "owner," as used in the charter of a railroad, which directs the method by which the railroad may acquire land or other materials when the owner thereof cannot agree with the company for the use or purchase thereof, means the person having some legal estate which the company proposes to acquire by the condemnation. National Ry. Co. v. Easton & A. R. Co., 86 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 181, 184. It includes any person having a claim or interest in real property, though less than an absolute fee. Larimer County Ditch Co. v. Zimmerman, 34 Pac. 1111, 1112, 4 Colo. App. 78 (quoting Lozo v. Sutherland, 88 Mich. 171).

The word "owner," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 90, § 1, providing for a mechanic's lien in favor of one performing labor or furnishing material by virtue of a contract with the owner, does not mean the absolute owner, but includes a qualified ownership. Benjamin v. Wilson, 34 Minn. 517, 520, 26 N. W. 725.

The term "owner," when used alone, imports an absolute owner, or one who has complete dominion of the property owned, as the owner in fee of real property. But its meaning is varied according to the connection in which it is used, and is to be understood according to the subject-matter to which it relates. McFeters v. Pierson, 24

Pac. 1076, 1077, 15 Colo. 201, 22 Am. St. Rep. 388.

Administrator.

The word "owner," as used in the statutes, means any one who has the right of possession to property. An administrator appointed in Nevada cannot sue to redeem from a mortgage on land of his intestate in another state, by setting off against the mortgage debt waste committed thereon by the mortgagee in possession after the death of the intestate, nor to recover for damages to, or trespass committed on, the land, since he is not an owner thereof; and is not entitled to its possession, nor are the assets in his hands for the payment of debts. Price v. Ward, 58 Pac. 849, 852, 25 Nev. 203, 46 L. R. A. 459.

Agent or servant.

The word "owner," as used in the charter of the city of St. Paul, c. 4, § 10, subd. 42, compelling the owner or occupant of any grocery, etc., to cleanse, remove, or abate the same from time to time, as may be deemed necessary for the health, comfort, and convenience of the inhabitants of the city, includes an agent who is endowed with full power to control or regulate the premises. City of St. Paul v. Clark, 86 N. W. 898, 894, 84 Minn. 138.

One who is an agent and in possession of land through which a railroad runs, but who is not the owner of such land, cannot maintain an action against a railroad company under Code, § 3480, providing that railroads shall construct cattle guards wherever the owner of land through which the road passes shall make demand on them or their agents, etc. The language of the statute forbids a construction extending its provisions to any other person than the owner of the land. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Murphy, 29 South. 592, 593, 129 Ala. 432.

Sp. St. 1868, c. 443, § 3, providing that if any sawdust or refuse wood or timber of any sort shall be thrown in the Penobscot river "by any person or persons who may be in the employ of any mill owner or owners, mill occupant or occupants, such owner or owners, occupant or occupants, shall also be liable" for such offenses, does not apply to the agent of the owner and lessor of a mill. State v. Coe, 72 Me. 456, 459.

The term "owner or holder," within the meaning of a statute requiring notice of application for a public road to be served on the owner or holder of the land over which the road is to run, includes an overseer on the premises. The words "owner or holder" were not used as meaning the tenant only, or the person holding under a lease, but reasonably extend to any person occupying or in possession, placed there by the owner, who may be expected to take care of his interests in this as on other matters connected with the land. In re Kinney (Del.) 5 Har. 18.

An indictment charging larceny, and alleging that the property taken was the property of one who was a mere superintendent of the owner, is insufficient. A bailee or person who has a special property in a chattel may be alleged, in an indictment for larceny of it, to be the owner, when it is taken from his possession, but not a servant. The servant's possession is construed as that of the master or employer. The distinction, though, between these relations, is not always clear. It has also been suggested that, as larceny is always accompanied by a trespass, except in some cases of a peculiar kind, as larceny by a bailee, any person—and only a person—who could maintain the action of trespass for the taking of a chattel, may properly be alleged as an owner of it, in an indictment for the larceny of such chattel, and this is probably a good rule. Heygood v. State, 59 Ala. 49, 50.

Within the statute providing that the owners, lessees, and tenants of a disorderly house shall be punished, a servant of the owner of such house, merely taking care of the place, cannot be punished. By fair intendment, it would seem that only those who occupied the relation described should be punished. Speaking on the subject, Mr. Bishop says: "But when we descend among the minor misdemeanors, we find some differences occasioned by the smaller degrees of blameworthiness involved in the offense or the special terms of the statute creating it. If the terms of the statute distinctly limit the penalty to persons who participate in the act only in a certain way, these terms furnish the rule for the court. Or if the expression is general, then, if the offense is of minor turpitude, and especially if the thing is only malum prohibitum, the court will limit its operation to those persons who are more particularly within the reason or the expressed words of the enactment." Mitchell v. State, 30 S. W. 810, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 311.

Rev. St. c. 119, § 1, providing that "whoever willfully and maliciously sets fire to the dwelling house of another, or to any building adjoining thereto, or to any building owned by himself or another, with intent to burn such dwelling house, and it is thereby burnt in the nighttime, shall be punished with death," while in terms excluding only the owner of the dwelling house, also excludes, by a reasonable construction, the servant of such owner. State v. Haynes, 63 Me. 307, 308, 309, 22 Am. Rep. 569.

Agister.

Under a statute giving a remedy by distress to enforce in a summary manner a claim for damages against the owner of cattle who is charged with the duty of keeping them off the cultivated lands of others, an agister is held to be an owner, within the meaning of the statute, but a mortgagee without possession is not an owner. Goff v. Byers Bros. & Co. (Neb.) 96 N. W. 1037, 1038.

All persons having an interest.

The words "owner or owners," used in Sp. Laws 1887, tit. 1, p. 335, § 4, indicating the procedure for the making of assessments of damages for injury to property resulting from a change of grade of a street under a city charter, are used to designate the parties interested, and in whose favor the assessment is to be made. The words are to be construed in a comprehensive sense, as including all persons having interests in the land, or who are entitled to the compensation to be awarded for the injury to the property. Moritz v. City of St. Paul, 54 N. W. 370, 371, 52 Minn. 409.

The word "owner," in the homestead exemption law, and even in the case of certain criminal offenses, includes all who have a claim or interest in the property, even though it is an undivided interest, or falls short of absolute ownership in fee. Lozo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168, 171.

The word "owner," found in Gen. St. §§ 1550, 1561, prescribing how the right of way for a railroad may be acquired from the owner of land, is a word of general import, and applies to any one having a legal interest in the land. A mother devised real estate in trust for her son and his wife, and the survivor of either of them, during their natural lives, but in no wise to be subject to the debts or contracts of the son, and, after the death of the survivor, such land to be equally divided among the son's children. Held, that the son had power to release the right of way for a railroad through the land during the joint lives of himself and wife. Railway Co. v. Scott, 38 S. C. 34, 37, 38, 16 S. E. 135, 339.

The word "owner," as used in a statute authorizing the condemnation by a railroad for its right of way of private property, and the awarding of damages therein, applies to any person having an interest in the estate. Gerrard v. Omaha N. & B. H. R. Co., 14 Neb. 370, 371, 15 N. W. 231.

For the purpose of the act relating to mechanics' liens, except when otherwise indicated, any person having an assignable, transferable, or conveyable interest or claim in or to any land, building, structure, or other property mentioned in the act shall be deemed an owner. Mills' Ann. St. Colo. 1891, § 2367.

Every person for whose use or benefit any building, erection, or other improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, including guardians, shall be included in the word "owner," as used in the chapter relating to mechanics' liens. Code Iowa 1897, § 8096.

The term "owner or proprietor," as used in the chapter relating to liens, includes every person, including cestuis que trust, for whose immediate use, enjoyment, or benefit any building, erection, or improvement shall be made. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 8184f.

Every person, including married women and cestuis que trust, for whose use, benefit, or enjoyment any building or improvement shall be made, is embraced within the words "owner or proprietor," as used in the article of the Code relating to liens. Civ. Code Ala. 1896, § 2751.

Every person, including all cestuis que trust, for whose immediate use, enjoyment, or benefit any building, erection, or other improvement shall be made, shall be included in the words "owner or proprietor" thereof, under the act relating to mechanics' liens, not excepting such as may be minors over the age of 18 years, or married women. Ann. St. Ind. T. 1899, § 2886.

Every person for whose immediate use, enjoyment, or benefit any building, erection, or improvements shall be made, shall be included by the word "owner" or "proprietor" thereof, as used in the chapter relating to mechanics' and builders' liens, not excepting such as may be minors over the age of 18 years and married women. Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2907.

The word "owner," as used in the mechanics' lien laws, means an owner in fee, a tenant for life or years, or one having any estate or interest in the property described in the claim, who, by contract or agreement, express or implied, in person or by another, contracts for the erection, construction, or removal of the structure or other improvement, or any part thereof, for the addition thereto, for the alteration or repair thereof, or for the fitting up or equipping the same, from time to time, for the purpose for which it is intended. 4 P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1897, col. 1150, § 2.

The word "owners," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 71, § 4, providing that a town seeking to lay out a highway shall attempt to agree with owners of land as to resulting damage before an appraisalment shall be had, is comprehensive enough to include all persons who have an interest of record in the land over which the highway is laid. It therefore required an attempt by the town to agree with one who had the unmolested, perpetual, and exclusive right to take and carry away the black sand on certain land, and to erect necessary buildings thereon, at a stated annual rental. McCotter v. Town of New Shoreham, 41 Atl. 572, 574, 21 R. I. 43.

Consignee synonymous.

See "Consignee."

Correlative of contractor.

The word "owner," as used in the mechanic's lien law, is a correlative of "contractor," and means the person who employs a contractor, and for whom the work is done under the contract. McDermott v. Palmer (N. Y.) 11 Barb. 9, 13; Mosher v. Lewis, 81 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 10 Misc. Rep. 373. The fact that subsequent to the execution of a building contract the parties entered into an agreement for the purchase by the contractor of the property and buildings when completed did not change their relations as to one furnishing work and labor on the property. McDermott v. Palmer (N. Y.) 11 Barb. 9, 13.

Corporations.

The word "owner" as used in Mass. Pub. St. c. 11, § 20, providing that all personal estate within or without the commonwealth shall be assessed to the "owner" in the city or town where he is an inhabitant on the 1st of May, cannot be construed to include a corporation. Boston Investment Co. v. City of Boston, 83 N. E. 580, 158 Mass. 461.

St. 1842, c. 60, § 4, imposing a penalty on the owner, agent, or superintendent of any manufacturing establishment who shall knowingly employ any child under the age of 12 years in such establishment, etc., refers only to natural persons, and does not include corporations. Benson v. Monson & B. Mfg. Co., 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 562, 563.

The terms "owner, lessee, or operators of passenger terminals, and the person or company operating the same," in Laws 1899, c. 4700, § 6, relating to the power of railroad commissioners to compel admission into certain passenger terminals of railroad companies desired or required by the commissioners to enter, and to fix reasonable rates, etc., for the use and privileges conferred, cannot be limited to corporations only, but also includes associations and individuals. State v. Jacksonville Terminal Co., 27 South. 221, 237, 41 Fla. 363.

In the construction of statutes relating to and affecting animals, the words "owner" and "person" shall be held to include corporations as well as individuals. Ann. St. Ind. T. 1899, § 1298; Comp. Laws Mich. 1897, § 11,748; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2287; Cr. Code S. C. 1902, § 630; Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 4459; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 8721; People v. Brunell (N. Y.) 48 How. Prac. 435, 447.

In the chapter relating to offenses against chastity, morality, and decency, the words "owner" and "person" include corporations as well as individuals. Rev. St. Me. 1888, p. 911, c. 124, § 48.

Under a statute requiring railroads to give signals at public road crossings, and providing a penalty for their neglect, to be paid by the corporation owning the railroad, it is held that a corporation representing the road as owner, lessee, or otherwise, is an owner, within the statute. State, to Use of Ray County, v. St. Joseph, St. L. & S. F. Ry. Co., 46 Mo. App. 466, 469.

The word "owner," as used in the article punishing the cutting down or destroying of any tree or timber, or the carrying away thereof, without the consent of the owner, includes the state and any corporation, public or private, owning lands within this state. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 826.

Dedicator before acceptance.

"Owners of land," as used in Jersey City Charter, § 23, providing that no petition for any municipal improvements shall be of any force, avail, or effect unless the same be signed by the owners of one-third the frontage of land along the improvement desired, includes one owning land which he has dedicated to the public as a street, but which the public has not accepted or appropriated. De Groot v. City of Jersey City, 25 Atl. 272, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 120.

Equitable owner.

The word "owner," in the mechanics' lien statute, has always been construed to include and mean equitable owner, as well as the person who holds the legal title. His interest thereunder, whatever it may prove to be, is subject to the plaintiff's lien. This interest can be proceeded against, and the lien enforced as to it, without joining the legal owner as defendant in the same action. Carey-Lombard Lumber Co. v. Bierbauer, 79 N. W. 541, 542, 76 Minn. 484. See, also, Wilder v. Haughey, 21 Minn. 101, 106; Atkins v. Little, 17 Minn. 342, 353 (Gil. 320, 327).

The word "owner," in the lien law of August 12, 1858, providing that one who furnishes material or machinery for constructing, altering, or repairing any building by virtue of a contract with the owner, has a lien to secure payment upon the right, title, and interest of such owner, includes an owner in equity as well as at law. Atkins v. Little, 17 Minn. 342, 353 (Gil. 320, 327).

The word "owner," in the mechanic's lien law, is held to embrace one having an equitable as well as a legal title. Belmont v. Smith, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 216, 218.

A contractor, who, under the provisions of his contract with the legal owner, has an equitable title to a house which he is building, is to be deemed the owner, within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law. Belmont v. Smith, 8 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Duer) 675, 678.

Where an insured is the absolute owner of the property destroyed, a dry trust of the legal title in another will not prevent a recovery, for he is still the owner of the property, within a warranty that he is the owner. Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Simons, 96 Pa. 520, 525, 527.

One having the beneficial title, while the naked legal title is in another, is the owner, within the meaning of the clause in a fire policy requiring that the insured shall be the entire, unqualified, and sole owner, for his own use and benefit, or otherwise the policy shall be void. American Basket Co. v. Farmville Ins. Co. (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 618, 619.

The word "owner," as used in Rev. St. 1860, §§ 1814-1831, providing that, if the owner of real estate refuse to grant a right of way, the commissioners appointed to assess the damages may, on notice to the owner, proceed to assess such damages, means any person who has an equitable right to or interest in real estate. Severin v. Cole, 88 Iowa, 463, 464.

Where a member and officer of a company has the legal title to land belonging to it, and superintends the construction of a building thereon, he is the owner, within Mechanic's Lien Law, § 1, giving a lien to any person who shall, by contract with the owner of any lot or piece of land, furnish labor or material. The word "owner," in the statute, includes the owner in equity as well as at law. It covers one who has the equitable title. Springer v. Kroeschell, 43 N. E. 1084, 1087, 161 Ill. 358.

The term "owner," in an insurance policy, providing that it should be void if the insured was not the owner of the property, includes an equitable ownership, although the bare legal title was in the other. Martin v. State Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 485, 490, 48 Am. Rep. 397.

Factor.

A factor who has merely made advances on the property is not an owner, within the abandoned and captured property act, giving to the owner of any such property a right after it has been sold by the government to recover the proceeds of it in the treasury of the United States; there being another person who has the legal interest in the proceeds of the property. The factor owns of the property consigned to him nothing but a lien for his advances and expenses, and he is therefore not entitled to the entire proceeds of the sale of the property. No doubt, a factor who has made advances upon goods consigned to him may be regarded, in a limited sense, and to the extent of his advances, as an owner. Yet in reality he has but a lien, with a right of possession of the goods for its security. He may protect that possession by a suit against a trespasser upon it and he may sell the property to reimburse advances; remaining, however, accountable to his consignor for any surplus. But, after all he is not the real owner. He is only an agent of the owner for certain purposes. United States v. Villalonga, 90 U. S. (23 Wall.) 35, 43, 23 L. Ed. 64.

Fee-simple owner.

The word "owner" has a definite meaning, and signifies one who has dominion over a thing, which he may use as he pleases, except as restricted by law or by agreement. The precise meaning, perhaps, depends upon the nature of the subject-matter, and the connection in which it is used; but, when applied to real estate without any qualifying words, in common as well as legal parlance, it prima facie means an owner in fee. Johnson v. Crookshanks, 21 Or. 339, 340, 28 Pac. 78 (citing And. Law Dict. tit. "Owner").

The term "owner," when applied to real estate, means an estate in fee simple. Bowen v. John, 66 N. E. 357, 358, 201 Ill. 292 (citing Illinois Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co. [111.] 1 Gilman, 236).

The word "owner," in the mechanic's lien law, in the phrase "owner of property to be affected by the lien," means the owner of the fee when the fee in the land is to be affected, and the owner of a leasehold or less interest when such less interest is to be affected. Poole v. Fellows (R. L.) 54 Atl. 772.

The word "owner," as used in a notice given under a mechanic's lien proceeding, should be taken in its ordinary sense, as owner of the fee. Hankinson v. Riker, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1040, 1043, 10 Misc. Rep. 185.

In Rev. Laws, p. 602, providing that any person who shall cut timber without having first obtained permission to do so from the owner of the land shall forfeit a certain penalty for each tree, the term "owner" means a person who has an estate in fee simple. Wright v. Bennett, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 258, 259.

A city ordinance rendering abutting owners liable for the graveling of a street in which were located two strips of land originally dedicated for park purposes, except so much thereof as was occupied by the "public grounds owned by the city" bordering thereon, is not to be construed to mean simply such public grounds as are owned by the city in fee simple by deed, for, as the representative of the public, the city acquires by a dedication and acceptance such an interest in a public park as gives it, in some sense of the term, at least, an ownership of the land. Ownership does not necessarily require the absolute title in fee. One may own a much less interest in land than fee. The word "owner" includes any person who has the usufruct, control, or occupation of the land, whether his interest in it is an absolute fee, or an estate less than a fee. Bennett v. Selbert, 35 N. E. 35, 39, 10 Ind. App. 369 (citing 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 299).

Grantee of standing timber.

The grantee in a deed of standing timber is not the owner of the land, within Code, § 3296, providing that any person who, without the consent of the owner of the land, willfully and knowingly cuts trees thereon, must pay to the owner certain sums. In reaching this conclusion, we have not been unmindful of the variant shades of meaning which variant circumstances may cast upon the word "owner," nor of the adjudged cases giving to it different interpretations in unlike connections, to which counsel have called our attention, nor yet to the well-established, and, with reference to this case, more concrete, proposition, that all that is on or under or above the surface of the earth are but constituent elements of what we denominate land, and that, of consequence, one who owns only minerals in the bowels of the earth, or only trees which grow upon its surface, is, to speak with legal precision, and technically, the owner of land. But at the same time we cannot overlook the fact that in common parlance the phrase "the owner of land" is primarily understood to mean the surface proprietor, having also, more as incidents than otherwise, the mineral and timber interests, and not one who owns only the one or the other, or even both of these interests, but not the surface. Clifton Iron Co. v. Curry, 18 South. 554, 555, 108 Ala. 581.

Holder synonymous.

See "Holder."

Homestead entryman.

One who resided upon land on which he had made a homestead filing, but had not made final proof, and for whose immediate use the house was built, was the owner of the land, within the mechanic's lien law (Comp. Laws, § 5483). Defining the word "owner," in this connection, it declares: "Every person for whose immediate use and benefit any building, erection, or improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, including guardians of minors, or other persons, shall be included in the words 'owner thereof.'" Mahon v. Sururus, 81 N. W. 64, 65, 9 N. D. 57.

Homestead right.

A husband who has elected to take his homestead right in lieu of distributive shares in the real estate of his deceased wife is an owner of such homestead, and may exchange it for another homestead without subjecting such right to the claims of his creditors. Green v. Root (U. S.) 62 Fed. 191, 196.

Where real estate of the wife, held by her as her separate property, is occupied by the husband as a family homestead, he is not the owner of such homestead, within the meaning of statutes relating to the exemption of property from execution. Davis v. Dodds, 20 Ohio St. 473.

The word "owner," as used in Comp. St. 1899, c. 79, § 4, subd. 2, defining the qualifications of voters of a school district as "every person, male or female, who has resided in the district forty days, is twenty-one years old, and who owns real property in the district," does not include the wife of a person owning a homestead on which the family reside, for her homestead interest does not constitute her an owner of real estate in the district. McLain v. Maricle, 83 N. W. 86, 87, 60 Neb. 353.

A wife who, with her husband, had occupied a house and lot as the family homestead until he abandoned her and made a verbal gift of the property to her, and which she and the family thereafter occupied as the homestead, erecting a building thereon with her own money, had an insurable interest in such building, and proof of such facts sustained her averment that she was the owner of the building. Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 65 Ill. 415, 420.

Husband as to property of wife.

Under a statute of New York providing that real estate shall be assessed and taxed in the name of the owner or occupant, it is held that a husband living separately from his wife is neither an owner nor occupant of land belonging to his wife, so that an assessment to him of such land was void. Smith v. Read, 51 Conn. 10, 11, 13.

Incumbrancer or lienholder.

The term "owner," within the meaning of a statute making the owner or one in possession of Texas or Cherokee cattle liable for infection of other cattle, means absolute ownership, and not a conditional ownership growing out of a lien on the cattle. Smith v. Race, 76 Ill. 490, 491.

The word "owner," as used in Comp. St. art. 5, c. 77, § 4, refers to persons having estate in lands, and not to incumbrancers and lienholders. Leigh v. Green, 90 N. W. 255, 257, 84 Neb. 533.

Insurable interest or title.

The term "owner," as used with reference to fire insurance, must be held to include any insurable interest or title which the insured has, and which entitles him to possession and use. It does not necessarily imply exclusive or absolute ownership. Convis v. Citizens' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Calhoun County, 86 N. W. 994, 996, 127 Mich. 616.

Under an averment in a declaration of an insurance policy that plaintiff was the owner of the property insured, she was bound to prove that she owned an insurable interest—such a title as, if there should be a loss, it would fall on, and have to be borne by, her. In a declaration on a policy of insurance, the averment that the assured was the owner of the property must be considered with reference to the contract of insurance. It amounts to an agreement that she had an insurable interest, and not that she was the absolute owner of the property. When she sues, her right to recover depends on whether she was the owner of an insurable interest, and not whether she was the absolute owner, and the agreement must be so construed. Rockford Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 65 Ill. 415, 420.

Joint owners.

Where a master of a vessel, who was also a part owner, carried to a foreign port property belonging to the owners of the vessel, and disposed of the same, and put on board the proceeds to be brought home, part of which was joint property and part separate property, and caused insurance to be made "on property on board for the owners of the vessel," it was held that the policy covered his own interest, both joint and separate, and that it did not protect the interest of other owners; there being no proof of a previous direction to place insurance, or a ratification of his act. It is also held in this case that, where a policy of insurance is made on property on board of a vessel for the owners of the vessel, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that the insurance was not intended by the insured to cover both joint and separate property of the owners. Foster v. United States Ins. Co., 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 85.

Lessee.

An "owner" is one who owns; a right-ful proprietor. An owner is not necessarily one owning the fee simple, or one having in the property the highest estate it will admit of. One having a lesser estate may be an owner, and, indeed, there may be different estates in the same property, vested in different persons, and each be an owner thereof. It was held that lessees of a railroad were owners of the tracks of the roads operated by them, in the sense of a statute requiring the owner of a railway track to make grade crossings, and keep them in repair, and maintain watchmen thereat. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Walker, 16 N. E. 475, 480, 45 Ohio St. 577.

The word "owner" includes any person who has usufruct, control, or occupation of real estate, whether his interest in it is an absolute fee, or an estate for years under lease. A tenant for a term of years is an owner of property, within the general or popular meaning of the word, and he may properly allege himself to be owner in a complaint in an action of ejectment brought against his landlord. Parker v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 79 Minn. 372, 373, 82 N. W. 373.

A statute giving a right of action against the owner of any locomotive or car, by the defects in which a person is injured, means the owner at the time of the injury—owner for the purpose of operating the road—and not necessarily the party in whom the absolute right of property is vested. If a corporation hires cars from a car builder, and runs them on its road, the corporation, not the lessor, is the party liable to the statutory action. Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 64 Mo. 112, 123.

As used in St. 5 Wm. IV, c. 36, § 25, empowering the trustees of a turnpike road to enter upon and take certain lands, and pull down certain houses, etc., "making or tendering satisfaction to the owners or proprietors of all private lands, houses, buildings," etc., so taken, the word "owners" means the tenant of a term, and not necessarily the owner in fee simple. Lister v. Lobley, 7 Adol. & E. 124.

A statute making it the duty of owners of factories to provide permanent fire escapes for every such building, means the owner at the time of an injury for want of such fire escape, without regard to the quantity or duration of his estate, and does not mean the person who holds the fee in the land on which the factory building stands. It means the occupant in possession, who places the operatives in a position of danger, and enjoys the benefit of his services. If he is a lessee of the building, then he is a tenant in possession, and for all practical purposes is the owner until the end of his term, which may be in one year or in 100 years. A tenant for years, a tenant for life, and a remainderman in fee is each an owner. Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 227, 51 Am. Rep. 201.

Gen. St. c. 60, § 38, providing that any abutting owner shall be entitled to compensation for damages arising from a change of street grade, is comprehensive enough to include a tenant for life or for years, or from year to year, of the abutting estate, as well as the owner of the fee. A lessee is an owner pro tanto of the estate which is leased to him, and entitled to damages for a change of grade. Gilligan v. Board of Aldermen of Providence, 11 R. I. 253.

In a statute requiring "the owner, trustee, or lessee or occupant in the actual control of any building," etc., to file a written application for a permit to erect or construct fire escapes, the word "owner" does not mean the owner in fee, but may mean the lessee in actual possession and control of the building. Arms v. Ayer, 61 N. E. 851, 192 Ill. 601, 53 L. R. A. 277, 85 Am. St. Rep. 357.

The word "owner," in the provision of the liquor tax law requiring the consent of the owner or agent of dwellings within 200 feet of a contemplated saloon before a liquor tax certificate will issue, is used in its ordinary sense, and does not include a lessee. In re Sherry, 55 N. Y. Supp. 421, 25 Misc. Rep. 361.

The word "owner," as used in Act March 11, 1843, giving a mechanic's lien on land for labor in the construction of improvements thereon, etc., under contract with the owner, does not mean merely an owner in fee, but includes also an owner of a leasehold estate. If the ownership is in fee, the lien is on the fee. If it is of a less estate, the lien is upon such smaller estate. Choctau v. Thompson, 2 Ohio St. 114, 123.

The lessee of land for a fixed term is an owner thereof, within St. 1895, p. 53, requiring sheep owners who are not owners and holders of one acre of land for each two sheep to procure a license. The word is not always easily defined. Generally, as stated in 1 Hare, Const. Law, 355, it is a generalissimum, and may be applied to any defined interest in real estate. As used in statutes providing that property shall be assessed to the owner, it has been held to mean the owner in fee, and not to include a lessee, while in other cases what would seem to be exactly the opposite has been decided. State v. Wheeler, 44 Pac. 430, 433, 23 Nev. 143.

One to whom a reservoir is leased in consideration of his completing its construction and maintaining it is an owner, within Mills' Ann. St. § 2272, providing that the owners of reservoirs shall be liable for floods from the breaking of the embankments. The word "owner" is rather embarrassing, without qualification or assistance, and can only be construed in a legal or modified sense. Larimer County Ditch Co. v. Zimmerman, 34 Pac. 1111, 1112, 4 Colo. App. 78.

Within Gen. St. p. 234, § 21, providing that the driver of any vehicle meeting another on the public highway, who shall neglect to turn to the right, and thereby drive against the vehicle so met, and injure its owner, shall pay to the party injured treble the damages, and that the owner of the vehicle so driven shall, if the driver is unable to do so, pay such damages, the word "owner" means the person in control of the vehicle, either mediately or immediately, and not the literal and technical owner. Any person hiring a carriage for the time for which he takes it, in a certain sense, is its owner. He has a special property in it. Camp v. Rogers, 44 Conn. 291, 298.

An incorporated agricultural society holding lands used exclusively for fair grounds under a lease for years from the owner of the fee is not the owner thereof, within Rev. St. § 1038, subds. 4, 17, exempting from taxation lands owned and used by any such society exclusively for fair grounds. In Katzer v. City of Milwaukee, 79 N. W. 745, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that the word "owner" must be deemed to have been used in its ordinary sense, calling for proprietorship of the title to the property, not a mere right or privilege to use it. True, such word has often been construed so as to be satisfied by less than possession of the legal title. Such lesser significance is doubtless within its reasonable meaning, and may be adopted in a proper case. But in a tax exemption statute the words cannot be bent from their ordinary meaning to favor the exemption, in the absence of a legislative intent clearly manifested pointing that way. Douglas County Agricultural Soc. v. Douglas County, 80 N. W. 740, 104 Wis. 429.

The term "owner," as used in the Code of Iowa, relating to homesteads, includes one who has merely a term of years or leasehold interest in the land. Green v. Root (U. S.), 62 Fed. 191, 196. See, also, Johnson v. Richardson, 38 Miss. 462, 464.

Under St. 1889, p. 694 (Municipal Charter Acts, c. 6, §§ 1, 2), authorizing the appointment of water commissioners when a city shall become the owner of any water supply, or shall decide to construct a system of water supply, the word "owner" is used in the sense that the city should have control over the water supply, and includes a case where a city leases a water plant, as the term "owner" includes any person having a claim or interest in real property, though less than an absolute fee. Higgins v. City of San Diego, 181 Cal. 294, 308, 63 Pac. 470, 476.

While it is held that the word "owned," in statutes describing exempt property, must receive its most limited meaning, and be satisfied only by complete and entire ownership, or at least not by leasehold title, nevertheless, under Rev. St. 1898, § 1038, subd. 14, subjecting street railway companies to a charge on their gross revenues in lieu of other taxation, and exempting from taxation on the payment of such license fee all real estate owned and actually and necessarily used by the company in the operation of its business, real property leased by a street railway company which has paid the license tax for five years, and actually and necessarily used by it in the operation of its business, is exempt from general taxation. Merrill Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 96 N. W. 686, 119 Wis. 249.

Lessor.

The word "owner" is a general term, which, under varying conditions, may include different estates. As applied to real estate, it doubtless means prima facie one who holds the fee, but it may mean less. So the word "owner" is defined as any person who has the usufruct, control, or occupation of the land, whether his interest in it be less than a fee. So it is held that when the owner of the fee of leased premises is sued for negligence in their management, resulting in injuries to one invited on the premises, a special plea alleging the leasing of the premises was demurrable, because the owner might prove under the general issue that he was not the owner, within the meaning of that term in the declaration, inasmuch as in that sense it implies one charged with an active duty towards the premises. McKee v. McCardell, 46 Atl. 181, 22 R. I. 71.

Mortgagee.

The popular definition of the word "owner," as given by lexicographers, is the right to own; exclusive right of possession; legal or just claim of title; proprietorship. Where a policy of insurance provided that if the interest of the assured in the property should be any other than the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership of the property, for the use and benefit of the assured, it must be represented to the company and expressed in the written part of the policy—otherwise the policy to be void—the assured held the legal title to the property, and was the sole owner thereof, within the meaning of those terms as they are in use, although there were two mortgages upon the property at the time. The mortgagee is not the owner; he has a lien on the title, and that is all; and a mortgage on real estate is not, in legal sense, an alienation of the property. Woodward v. Republic Fire Ins. Co. (N. Y.), 82 Hun. 365, 369.

"Owner," as used in Civ. Code, § 908, authorizing the owner of lands sold for taxes to redeem the same within a certain period, means one who has any right which, in law or equity, amounts to ownership in the land—any right of entry upon it, to its possession or enjoyment, or any part of it, which can be deemed an estate in it—and a mortgagee will not be deemed an owner entitled to redeem the same. Mixon v. Stanley, 28 S. E. 440, 441, 100 Ga. 372.

A mortgagee of land is an owner, within Duluth City Charter, relating to assessments for local improvements, and providing that persons interested and the owner may properly oppose the confirmation of the assessment, and the entry of judgment therefor. The term "owner" was not used in the strict meaning of the term—that is, he who possesses the legal title—but it means a person interested in the land, which includes mortgagees. Morey v. City of Duluth, 77 N. W. 829, 831, 75 Minn. 221.

A mortgagee is not an owner within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law, and is not entitled to a notice of a suit upon a lien claim. The owner, under such a statute, of the legal estate, is alone to be made a party. The word "owner" means the person for whom, as the owner of the land, the building is constructed. Cornell v. Conine-Eaton Lumber Co., 47 Pac. 912, 914, 9 Colo. App. 225.

While the word "owner," as used in our statutes with reference to real estate, has a very broad meaning, it cannot be construed to apply to persons who have no interest whatsoever. In Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Sheldon, 53 Kan. 189, 35 Pac. 1106, it was held that a mortgagee had only a lien upon the land out of which the right of way for a railroad was taken. He was not the owner of the same—not the owner of an interest therein. A mortgagee is not an owner, with an interest in the lands mortgaged, so as to make him a proper party to condemnation proceedings by a railroad. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Need, 48 Pac. 997, 998, 2 Kan. App. 492.

A mortgagee is an owner, within Rev. St. 1880, §§ 1314-1331, providing that, if the owner of real estate refuse to grant a right of way, the commissioners may, on notice to the owner, proceed to assess such damages. Severin v. Cole, 38 Iowa, 463, 464.

The term "owner," as applied to real estate, is undoubtedly one of variable meaning. Thus in contracts of insurance it has received much latitude of interpretation, so as to embrace persons entitled to particular estates and equitable interests, where such construction was necessary to preserve the validity of the policy, or prevent the forfeiture of rights under it. May, Ins. § 285. Likewise, in statutes providing a compensation to owners for lands taken for public use, where the Constitution required that special interests should be paid for, similar scope has also necessarily been given to the language, in order to render the acts consistent with the fundamental law. Thus, in Ellis v. Welch, 6 Mass. 246, 4 Am. Dec. 122, and Parks v. City of Boston, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 198, it was held to include every person having a valuable vested interest in land, capable of being indemnified by the laying out of a street, because a narrower construction would have infringed upon the Constitution of the commonwealth. But in Watson v. New York Cent. R. Co., 47 N. Y.

157, where, upon the same principle, it was urged that the phrase "owners of land" should embrace judgment creditors of the legal owner, the court refused to construe it so broadly, because the remedies of such creditors against the land were supposed to be subject to legislative supersedure, by the power of eminent domain, without compensation. Whether this reason was sound in law need not be here considered. The case is cited merely to mark the limit of the ground upon which an extended signification of the word "owner" is adopted. The term in the charter of the city of Elizabeth, requiring compensation to be made to the owner or owners of lands and real estate taken for streets, does not include a mortgagee of the lands, though the value of the damage to all interests is to be paid to the owner. But if other claimants interfere, and if in any case such owner ought not to receive the whole, timely resort must be had to the chancery court for an equitable distribution of the fund. Crane v. City of Elizabeth, 36 N. J. Eq. (9 Stew.) 339, 341.

Under a statute giving a remedy by distress to enforce in a summary manner a claim for damages against the owner of cattle, who is charged with the duty of keeping them off the cultivated lands of others, an agister is held to be an owner, within the meaning of the statute, but a mortgagee without possession is not an owner. Goff v. Byers Bros. & Co. (Neb.) 96 N. W. 1037, 1038.

As a mortgage does not pass title to the mortgagee, the latter is not an owner of the mortgaged property, and therefore is not entitled, under section 909 of the Civil Code, to redeem land on which he holds a mortgage, where the same was sold under a tax execution against the mortgagor. Mixon v. Stanley, 28 S. E. 440, 441, 100 Ga. 372.

The word "owner," as used in the statutes relating to condemnation proceedings, may perhaps be construed to apply to every person having any interest in the property to be taken. It will be noted, however, that this observation was purely speculative. But Goodrich v. Atchison Co. Com'rs, 47 Kan. 455, 27 Pac. 1006, 18 L. R. A. 113, holding a mortgagee not entitled to notice of the opening of a road, if the case previously cited were correct, would be wrong, for certainly a mortgagee has an interest in the land covered by his mortgage, but he is not an owner; and a wife occupying with her husband a homestead, legal title to which is in the latter, is not an owner of the land, within Gen. St. 1901, § 6019, relating to notice of proceedings in the establishment of a highway. Mathewson v. Skinner, 71 Pac. 580, 581, 66 Kan. 309 (citing Smith County Com'rs v. Labore, 37 Kan. 480, 15 Pac. 577).

A mortgagee is an owner, within the meaning of the statute providing for the taking of land under the power of eminent domain; and, as such owner, he has the right to prosecute an independent appeal from the freeholders' award. Omaha Bridge & Terminal Ry. Co. v. Reed (Neb.) 96 N. W. 276.

In replevin the term "owner" does not necessarily import general or absolute ownership, and, under an allegation of ownership and right of possession, plaintiff may prove a chattel mortgage on the property from the owner to himself, and a breach of its conditions which, by the terms of the instrument, entitles him to the possession of the mortgaged property. Miller v. Adamson, 47 N. W. 452, 45 Minn. 99.

Under a statute providing that when municipal corporations seek to appropriate private property the owners of the property shall be notified of the resolution before the passage of the same, it is held that a mortgagee is not an owner. Incorporated Village of Put in Bay v. Stimmel, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 644, 7 O. C. D. 380.

Under the charter of the city of New Haven, providing that the common council, in taking land for a street, shall give or shall make compensation to the owner of the land so taken, where land so taken is covered by a mortgage, the mortgagor, and not the mortgagee, is the owner of the land. Whiting v. City of New Haven, 45 Conn. 303, 305.

Mortgagor.

The word "owned," in the statute declaring that a homestead situate, etc., "owned and occupied by a resident of this state," etc., shall be exempt from forced sale on execution, is not used in a restricted sense, as meaning the person having both the legal and equitable title to the homestead. A person who has mortgaged his homestead is an owner thereof, within the meaning of the act; and where a husband has the entire equitable estate, although the legal title may be vested in his wife, he is the owner, within the meaning of the statute. Dreutzer v. Bell, 11 Wis. 114, 118.

The mortgagor is the substantial owner of the property, though the legal estate is in the mortgagee, and he can transfer or vest his interest at his own pleasure so long as the right of redemption exists. The interest of the mortgagor is also subject to attachment and execution. "So a mortgagor in possession and before foreclosure has an absolute and insurable interest in the property." Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 82 Md. 421, 438, 8 Am. Rep. 149.

A mortgagor after foreclosure ceases to be the owner of the lands, and therefore cannot then redeem from a tax sale under Pub. St. c. 12, § 49. Da Silva v. Turner, 44 N. E. 532, 533, 166 Mass. 407.

6 Wds. & P.—18

Occupant.

As used in the chapter relating to trespassing animals, making owners liable for trespasses, the term "owner" includes any person occupying or cultivating lands. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 6154; Code Civ. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 818.

The term "owner," as used in the herd law act, applies to the occupant or tenant when the owner does not reside in the county. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 63.

Officers of corporation.

The term "owner," as used in the act relating to pipe line companies, in reference to an effort to agree with, or to the tender of a bond to, or service of notice upon, the owner of roads, railroads, turnpike roads, canals, or other highways, shall be taken to mean the officers in charge of said road, railroad, turnpike road, canal, or other public highways, on whom service of process could be made in any action at law or in equity. P. & L. Dig. Laws Pa. 1894, vol. 2, col. 3492, § 7.

Operators.

The word "owners," in Laws 1893, c. 66, § 5, providing that "it shall be the duty of the owners of every railroad or steamboat situate or operated * * * within this state, to redeem," etc., unused railroad tickets, etc., is evidently used in a comprehensive sense, so as to include all that are operating a railroad or steamboat, whether as owners of the property, or as lessees, receivers, or the like. State v. Corbett, 59 N. W. 317, 320, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498.

Ostensible owner.

The phrase "family of the owner," in the constitutional provision declaring that a homestead occupied as a residence by the family of the owner shall not be alienated without the joint consent of husband and wife, "clearly implies that it was not intended that the family, as a family, or any member thereof except the ostensible owner, should be considered as an owner." Vining v. Willis, 20 Pac. 232, 234, 40 Kan. 609.

Person in possession or control.

The word "owner" conveys the idea of property in the thing in right of the person who is said to be the owner, and excludes that of a mere possessor in the right of another, although the possession may be coupled with the duty or obligation to take care of or even use the thing in that other's right. Turner v. Cross, 18 S. W. 573, 580, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 262.

Pen. Code, art. 724, relative to larceny, and providing that, to constitute the offense, the property must be owned by some one other than the thief, and the taking must be without his consent, does not necessarily mean the consent of the owner, unless he is in actual possession at the time of the taking, but means the consent of the special owner, or the person who is in possession. The phrase "without his consent" refers specially to possession, rather than ownership. Frasier v. State, 18 Tex. App. 434, 441.

The word "owner" will include the person in possession and control of any article of personalty, as one who hires a carriage. Thus, where a husband and wife keep a dog on the premises, exercising apparent ownership and control, the actual ownership is unimportant. Hornbein v. Blanchard, 85 Pac. 187, 188, 4 Colo. App. 92.

The word "owner" is not a technical term. It is not confined to a person who has the absolute right in the chattel, but also applies to the person who has the possession and control of it. Thus it has been said in this commonwealth, in Hartford v. Brady, 114 Mass. 466, 470, 19 Am. Rep. 377—a case under Gen. St. c. 25, § 25; Pub. St. c. 86, § 27—by which the owner of cattle is made liable for injury done by them, "the word 'owner' is intended to include all persons in whom is the general property of animals, while it embraces also those who are in possession of them under a special title, or by virtue of any lien." Pub. St. c. 192, §§ 24, 25, provided for the sale of personal property on which there is a lien for work and labor and for money expended, if the amount due is not paid within 60 days after demand, and also provided for notice of the intended sale to the owner of the property. We are of the opinion that where a person, by the consent of the owner of goods, stores them with a third person as his own, by contract, express or implied, and this third person does not know that any one else is the real owner, it is enough to give notice to the person with whom the contract is made. Keith v. Maguire, 48 N. E. 1090, 170 Mass. 210.

Code, § 1485, makes the owner of a dog liable for all damage done by the dog, except where the party injured is doing an unlawful act. Held, that the word "owner" includes one who has a dog in his possession, and harbors it on his premises. Shultz v. Griffith, 72 N. W. 445, 446, 103 Iowa, 150, 40 L. R. A. 117.

As to real property, the person who, by himself or his tenant, has the freehold in his possession, whether in fee or for life, shall be deemed the owner for the purpose of taxation. A person who has made a mortgage or deed of trust to secure a debt or liability shall be deemed the owner until the mortgagee or trustee takes possession, after which such mortgagee or trustee shall be deemed the owner. Personal property mortgaged or pledged shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed property of the party who has the possession. Code W. Va. 1899, p. 196, c. 23, § 40.

Under Rev. St. § 5880, making any water craft navigating the waters within the state liable for all debts contracted on account thereof by the master, owner, steward, consignee, or other agent for materials, supplies, etc., furnished the same, and section 5882, giving any person having a demand under the former section a right to proceed against the owner of the craft, or the master who contracted the debt, etc., the word "owner" means the person who has the possession and control of the boat, and remains and operates it pro hac vice in his own interest. He may be the hirer of it, or the mortgagor in possession, and the owner of it as against all the world except the mortgagee or the vendee in possession, and also a like owner except against the vendor, who retains the legal title as a simple security. It is not necessary that he should be the absolute or legal owner, but one who simply holds the legal title to the water craft as security for the amount due him on the sale of it, having neither the possession nor control of the craft, is not such an owner, or liable for supplies furnished it. Hemm v. Williamson, 25 N. E. 1, 2, 47 Ohio St. 493.

The word "owner," as used in the statute making the owners of stock liable for all damage done by the same, is to be construed by extending it to persons in possession under some special title, and having the custody of the stock, as well as the general owner. Lafin v. Svoboda, 55 N. W. 1049, 1050, 37 Neb. 368.

The word "owner," in Gen. St. 1872, c. 68, § 83, requiring that a railroad shall, before entering on any land for the purpose of constructing its road, give notice to the owner, is not used in the sense of holder of the legal title, but rather in the sense of one who has control of the land. Tompkins v. Augusta & K. R. Co., 21 S. C. 420, 431.

In any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, arising under the chapter relating to sheep, all persons having an interest in sheep, and controlling the same, concerning which such action or proceeding is had, shall be deemed to be the owners of such sheep. Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 2065.

Person taxed as owner.

The word "owner," as used in Acts 1872-73, c. 117, § 50, declaring that the owner of land may redeem from a delinquent tax sale, means the person charged for the taxes as owner. Townshend v. Shaffer, 3 S. E. 586, 587, 30 W. Va. 176.

Pledgee.

"Owned by, or in possession of the debtor," as used in the exemption law, does not apply to stock put in the hands of a creditor as collateral, as against the debt for which it is pledged. Hawley v. Hampton, 28 Atl. 471, 472, 160 Pa. 18.

Proprietor synonymous.

An owner is one who has a legal right or exclusive title to anything, and the word "owner" is synonymous with the word "proprietor." Turner v. Cross, 18 S. W. 578, 579, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 262.

Receiver.

A receiver is an officer of the court appointing him, and holds possession of the property to which the receivership relates as an officer of the court, and is not a proprietor or owner, within Rev. St. art. 2899, giving a right of action for injuries resulting in death, caused by the proprietor or owner of a railroad. In cases of receiverships of railway property, the receiver often operates the road, and assumes the duties, burdens, and liabilities imposed by law upon common carriers, in addition to the ordinary duties attaching to the position; but he is at all times only an agent of the court, subject to its orders, and having no personal interest in the property in his hands, resulting from the existence of the receivership, though responsible officially for the proper management and custody of property confided to his care, and responsible personally in the same manner as other persons for his own unlawful acts working injury to others, but not so responsible for the negligence or unlawful acts of the servants he may be compelled to employ in the business confided by the court to his management and control. A receiver is not the representative of the company or persons whose property may be placed in his possession and under his management, and may only be subject to liability for injuries arising under the permission of the court appointing him, or from the negligence of himself or his employes. Turner v. Cross, 18 S. W. 578, 579, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 262.

The word "owner," as used in Rev. St. art. 2899, giving a right of action for injuries resulting in death, caused by the negligence of the owner of a railroad, does not include a receiver, though it is often used to express right to property in a thing less than absolute or exclusive right; but when this occurs it will ordinarily appear from the context, and in all such cases the person holds for himself, and in his own right. The ordinary meaning of the word "owner" is such that no person can hold such relation to property unless he has a personal interest in or right to it. Turner v. Cross, 18 S. W. 578, 579, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L. R. A. 262. See, also, Yoakum v. Selph, 19 S. W. 145, 83 Tex. 607; Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Roberts (Tex.) 19 S. W. 512; Bonner v. Thomas (Tex.) 20 S. W. 722.

The term "owner," as used in Laws 1898, c. 66, § 5, providing that the owners of any railway companies or common carrier within the state shall redeem tickets sold by it in any manner, no matter whether sold within or without the state, was intended to be used in a comprehensive sense, so as to include all who are operating a railroad or steamboat, whether as owners of the property, or as lessees, receivers, or the like. State v. Corbett, 59 N. W. 817, 820, 57 Minn. 845, 24 L. R. A. 498.

Remaindermen.

Remaindermen are owners, within Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that private property shall not be taken for private use without the consent of the owner. Cureton v. South Bound R. Co., 87 S. E. 914, 915, 59 S. C. 371. See, also, Johnson v. Richardson, 33 Miss. 462, 464.

School district.

Whatever is the subject of ownership is held by the owner for his individual benefit. A school district is not the owner of school property, within Gen. Laws 1888, pp. 662, 669, providing for mechanics' liens in favor of contractors and subcontractors on the property of the owner. Florman v. School Dist. No. 11, 40 Pac. 469, 470, 6 Colo. App. 319.

Tenant in common.

The term "owner," as used in the Code of Iowa, relating to homesteads, includes one who, as tenant in common, has merely an equitable title in the land. Green v. Root (U. S.) 62 Fed. 191, 196.

Under Laws 1897, p. 101, § 4, providing that cities of a certain class can pass local improvement ordinances only on petition of the owners of a majority of the abutting property, it is held that the word "owners" means owner in fee, and that a tenant in common cannot sign a petition in behalf of his co-tenants. Merritt v. City of Kewanee, 51 N. E. 867, 872, 175 Ill. 587.

Tenant for life.

Any person holding an interest in land for years, for life, or any greater estate, freehold, in reversion or remainder is held to be an owner. Johnson v. Richardson, 33 Miss. 462, 464.

Under Acts 1874, c. 218, § 3, empowering the mayor and council of Baltimore to provide by general ordinance for a street improvement, and an assessment therefor upon the abutting property upon the application of the owners of a majority of the front feet, and declaring that a tenant for 99 years, or the executor or administrator of such tenant, or the guardian of an infant owner, or a mortgagee in possession, should be deemed the owner for the purposes of any application, it was held that a tenant for life was not the owner. within the meaning of the statute, and could not bind the property. City of Baltimore v. Boyd, 20 Atl. 1028, 1029, 64 Md. 10.

The word "owner," in the homestead act (Scates' Comp. St. § 576), providing that, in addition to the property exempt by law from sale under execution, there shall be exempt from levy and forced sale the lot of ground and the buildings thereon occupied as a residence and owned by the debtor, being a householder and having a family, to the value of $1,000, etc., includes one who has a life estate in the property. Owning an estate for his own life in the premises, the home of his family, we do no violence to the language of the act by considering him the owner for all the purposes of the act. He is to all intents and purposes the owner of the immediate freehold, and seized thereof, and, as such, must be protected by the homestead act, and this is neither an unreasonable nor forced definition of the word "owner." It seems to us to be its most natural meaning, regarding, as we must, the purpose and object of the act. Deere v. Chapman, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 610, 611, 79 Am. Dec. 350.

Trustee.

A trustee in a trust deed is a purchaser for value. Being a purchaser for value, and holding the legal title, he is an owner having a right to redeem from a tax sale, as permitted to owners under Code 1899, c. 81, §§ 15, 24. Clark v. McLaugherty, 44 S. E. 269, 271, 53 W. Va. 376.

A mere naked trustee of an equitable trust is not a necessary party to proceedings to condemn lands under the charter of a railroad, requiring notice of such proceedings to be given to owners and persons interested. McIntyre v. Easton & A. R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. (11 C. E. Green) 425.

User.

The right of the owner is more extended than of him who has only the use of the thing. He may commit what would be considered waste if done by another. Territory v. Young, 2 N. M. 93, 95; City of Bangor v. Rowe, 57 Me. 436, 439.

"Owners or occupants," as used in the Rochester city charter (Laws 1861, c. 143, § 41), conferring on the common council power to require the owners or occupants of any mill race within the city to cover the same with bridges or arches, meant only those who had occasion for the water thus conveyed for the purpose of propelling the machinery in their respective mills, and did not intend to enforce an expense on the owners or occupants of lots adjoining a street through the center of which ran a mill race. People v. Common Council of City of Rochester, 54 N. Y. 507, 510.

Vendee under bond or contract.

A party in possession of a dwelling house under a valid and subsisting contract of purchase, although he has not paid the whole consideration, he is properly spoken of as the owner of the house. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tayler (N. Y.) 18 Wend. 385, 394. See, also, Green v. Root (U. S.) 62 Fed. 191, 196.

A purchaser of land, holding a bond for a deed, cannot recover from his vendor under Code, § 3296, providing that any person cutting trees on land not his own, without the consent of the owner, shall pay to such owner a stated sum for each tree so cut. The purchaser is not the owner by legal title. Whatever may be the varied meanings of which the word "owner" is capable, and whatever may have been the signification attached when employed in other connections, or in reference to other subject-matters in this statute, it is limited to the owner of the legal estate in lands. This is its precise meaning, and it would be an unwarrantable interpretation, violative of the cardinal rule that penal statutes are to be strictly construed, if it were extended so as to include one who has but an equity, of which courts of law cannot take cognizance. Gravlee v. Williams, 20 South. 952, 953, 112 Ala. 539.

One in possession of land under a bond for title, with a part of the purchase money paid, is not the owner of such land, within Civ. Code, § 2243, so as to entitle him to recover the penalty therein provided, on failure of a railroad company to put in a cattle guard on notice. Hardin v. Chattanooqa S. O. R. Co., 113 Ga. 357, 38 S. E. 839. A son of the owner of land, who had given the notice provided by the statute, and who was cultivating the land, was not the owner. Fenn v. Georgia Northern R. Co., 43 S. E. 378, 116 Ga. 942 (citing Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Judge, 100 Ga. 601, 28 S. E. 379).

The word "owner," in a statute giving mechanics and materialmen a lien, and providing that the word "owner" shall include every person for whose immediate use or benefit any building, erection, or other improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, including guardians of minors or other persons, is not a limitation, but is intended to extend to the definition of the term "owner," so as to include persons who would not ordinarily be held to come within its meaning. The term was construed to include one contracting to purchase land under a contract requiring him to pay a part of the price upon delivery of the deeds, and to secure the balance by a mortgage to be junior to another mortgage to be placed thereon by the purchaser to secure funds with which to pay for improvements which he agreed to make, although the purchaser did not make the first payment, and did not negotiate the mortgage, but constructed the improvements. Janes v. Osborne, 79 N. W. 143, 144, 108 Iowa, 406.

One holding a certificate of purchase from the state of school lands, upon which he has paid 20 per cent. of the price, is not a freeholder owning lands, within Wright Act 1877, § 2, requiring a petition to organize an irrigation district to be signed by 50 such freeholders. "Owner," in its general sense, means one who has full property in, and dominion over, property. In Bouvier's Law Dictionary it is said that the word "owner," when used alone, imports an absolute owner. The precise meaning, perhaps, depends on the nature of the subject-matter, and the connection in which it is used, but, when applied to real estate, without any qualifying words, in common as well as legal parlance it prima facie means an owner in fee. Directors of Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Abila, 89 Pac. 794, 796, 106 Cal. 855.

The word "owner" has no technical meaning. Under different circumstances the word "owner" has been held to mean the person having the legal title, or the owner who has the equitable title. And it has also been held to include every person having an interest in the estate. One in possession of land under a bond for title, with a part of the purchase money paid, is not the owner thereof, within Act Nov. 11, 1899, imposing on railway companies the duty of erecting and maintaining cattle guards at designated points along their lines of road. The Legislature used the word "owner," in this statute, as meaning the real owner as against the world. Hardin v. Chattanooga S. R. Co., 38 S. E. 839, 840, 113 Ga. 357.

Owner of corporate stock.

A person in whose name shares of stock stand on the books of a company shall be deemed the owner thereof, as it regards the company. Code Va. 1887, § 1181.

Owner of vessel.

In the construction of the title relating to merchant seamen, the term "owner" shall be taken and understood to comprehend all the several persons, if more than one, to whom a vessel shall belong. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8120.

Vendor in contract of sale.

The word "owner," as used in 1 Rev. St. p. 514, § 64, providing that no highway shall be opened or worked without a release by the owner of the land or an assessment of his damages, means the person entitled to the legal estate in the land, and therefore, where an executory contract for the sale of the land through which a highway is to be opened has been made, it is the consent of the vendor, and not of the vendee, which is required; the vendee not being the owner of the land in a legal sense, though the vendor held the same in trust for him. Smith v. Ferris (N. Y.) 6 Hun, 553, 554.

Where a contract of sale required the erection by the vendee of a house on the land, and provided that the title to the house and land should remain in the vendor until the purchase price was paid, the vendor's interest in the land was that of an owner, so as to be subject to a mechanic's lien. Edwards & McCulloch Lumber Co. v. Mosher, 60 N. W. 284, 285, 88 Wis. 672.

Where the owner of a lot in the city of New York contracted with the purchaser to convey the lot to him for a certain sum, and to loan him money in installments for the location of a building thereon, the price and the money to be secured by bond and mortgage upon the premises at the completion of the building, at which time the lot was to be conveyed, the seller of the lot was not the owner of the building, within the meaning of the mechanic's lien act, although it was erected on land of which he had the legal title. Loonie v. Hogan, 9 N. Y. 435, 440, 61 Am. Dec. 706.

A contract for sale of land required the vendee to erect certain houses thereon; the vendor agreeing to advance a designated sum to partly pay for their construction. It was held that the vendor was the owner of the land, within the meaning of Laws 1885, c. 342, § 1, giving any one furnishing labor or materials in the erection of any house "with the consent of the owner" a lien thereon, and providing (section 5) that an owner who has entered into a contract to sell land shall be deemed to be the owner within the meaning of the act until the deed has been actually delivered and recorded. Miller v. Mead, 28 N. E. 387, 388, 127 N. Y. 544, 13 L. R. A. 701.

A person having only a vendor's lien on the property on which the work is to be performed, though he is in possession thereof, is not an owner, within the mechanic's lien law of 1883, which only authorized a mechanic's lien under a contract with the owner, although the law provides that the word "owner" includes any person having a presentable or conveyable interest in a claim, since the grantor's lien is not a claim to the land or an interest in it. Griffin v. Seymoure, 63 Pac. 809, 811, 15 Colo. App. 487.

OWNER'S RISK.

See "At Owner's Risk."

In England it is held that shipment at the "owner's risk" in general terms exonerates the carrier or bailee from all responsibility, thus putting the questions of diligence and neglect out of the case. In West Virginia it has been held, following the United States Supreme Court in New Jersey Steam

Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 47 U. S. (6 How.) 844, 12 L. Ed. 465, that it limits the railroad to loss or damage resulting from ordinary neglect. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rathbone, 1 W. Va. 87, 107, 88 Am. Dec. 664.

OWNERSHIP.

See "Absolute Ownership"; "Act of Ownership"; "Apparent Ownership"; "Claim of Ownership"; "Entire, Unconditional, and Sole Ownership"; "Imperfect Ownership"; "Several Ownership"; "Sole Ownership"; "Unconditional and Sole Ownership." Change of ownership, see "Change." Unqualified ownership, see "Unqualified."

Ownership is the right by which a thing belongs to an individual, to the exclusion of all other persons. Converse v. Kellogg (N. Y.) 7 Barb. 590, 597; Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co., 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 474, 477.

The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of the others. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1070; Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 488; Maestri v. Board of Assessors (La.) 84 South. 658, 661; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3266; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 182; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 4017.

A contract for the sale of realty, no deed having been made and part of the purchase money being unpaid, does not invest the vendee with ownership of the property. Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co., 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 474, 477.

Where a fire policy required that the insured should, in case of loss, make affidavit stating the value and "ownership" of the insured property, such language did not require the insured to make any statement with regard to incumbrances on the property. Taylor v. Aetna Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 254, 257.

The ownership of property is a matter of fact, although it may result from a question of law. Turner Falls Lumber Co. v. Burns, 45 Atl. 896, 898, 71 Vt. 354.

The ownership of property may be in the sovereign and the use private or public, or the ownership may be public and the use private. This depends upon the character of the ownership and dedication, and the circumstances of the use. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, 548 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. verb. "Dedication"); Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 13 U. S. [9 Cranch] 292, 3 L. Ed. 735.

Occupancy, possession, or seisin.

An indictment for burglary, alleging that the building burglarized was owned by the prosecuting witness, is sufficient, since "ownership" implies occupancy. Price v. State (Tex.) 58 S. W. 83, 85.

"Ownership," as used in the Penal Code relative to larceny, is synonymous with "possession." Frasier v. State, 18 Tex. App. 434, 441.

Seisin and ownership, as to corporeal hereditaments in the common-law sense of the term, mean practically the same thing. Mere occupancy does not constitute seisin in the legal sense of that term. Ft. Dearborn Lodge, I. O. O. F., v. Klein, 3 N. E. 272, 273, 115 Ill. 177, 56 Am. Rep. 183.

The term "ownership," within the meaning of the law of larceny, requiring that stolen property be taken from the possession of the owner, may be predicated of the right in notes of the cashier of a bank to whom the notes are intrusted to convey them to his bank, and from whom they are stolen. Commonwealth v. Butts, 124 Mass. 449, 453.

"Ownership," says Bishop in his work on Criminal Procedure (volume 2, §§ 137, 138), "is one thing in one offense and another thing in another. In burglary ownership means any possession which is rightful as against the burglar." State v. Gilligan, 50 Atl. 844, 845, 23 R. I. 400. See, also, Trice v. State, 42 S. E. 1008, 116 Ga. 602.

Title distinguished.

See "Title."

Ownership means title to property. Hill v. Cumberland Valley Mut. Protection Co., 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 474, 477.

OWNERSHIP BY SEVERAL.

The ownership of property by several persons is either (1) of joint interests, (2) of partnership interests, or (3) of interests in common. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3282.

OX—OXEN.

See "Yoke of Oxen."

An indictment charging the theft of an ox is a sufficient allegation of the kind of animal stolen, in an indictment under a Code prescribing a penalty for the theft of cattle. Parchman v. State, 44 Tex. 192.

"Ox," and "steer," in the popular use of words, are equivalent, and are used to designate a castrated taurine male which has been brought under the yoke. In this case the word "steer" was held to be a sufficient description in an indictment of the animal stolen. Watson v. State, 55 Ala. 150.

"Oxen" are included in the term "cattle," as used in a statute providing for damages for killing cattle. Randall v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 107 N. C. 748, 749, 12 S. E. 606, 11 L. R. A. 460; Id., 10 S. E. 691, 692, 104 N. C. 410.

"Oxen" is a word of sufficiently definite meaning to furnish an accurate description of property in an indictment for theft. The term cannot be regarded as an exact synonym of "cattle," which has such an inclusive meaning as to include various different species of animals and goods. While an indictment charging defendant with theft of "cattle" might be held insufficient on the ground that the term was of indefinite signification, being used with reference, not only to all domestic animals, but to inanimate goods as well, and even extended by Shakespeare to include boys and girls, it cannot be said that the term "oxen" is capable of the same extended meaning, so that it would not include either inanimate goods or human beings, but is a sufficiently definite description of animals of the bovine genus. Henry v. State, 45 Tex. 84, 87.

OX CART.

"Ox cart," as used in the statute exempting an ox cart from execution, is not employed literally, so as to mean that a cart is not exempt if drawn by any other animal than oxen, but means any vehicle of such nature possessed by a debtor. Webb v. Brandon, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 285, 289.

OXIDE.

See "Metallic Oxide."

OXIDE OF ZINC.

Oxide of zinc is manufactured in European establishments as follows: Sheets of zinc ordinarily sold in commerce are placed in retorts. The face of the retort has an opening large enough to admit the sheet. The backs of the retorts are inclosed in a furnace, and the retorts are heated by bituminous coal to a white heat. The action of the heat vaporizes the speiter, which is entirely consumed. The vapor passes out of the mouth of the retort into large pipes, into which currents of air are forced. The vapor combines with the oxygen of the air, and becomes white, snowlike flakes. The current bears these flakes along through the pipes, which terminate in long chambers. At the mouth of the pipes bags are suspended, in which the flakes are caught. No further process is required. Meyer v. Arthur, 91 U. S. 570, 576, 23 L. Ed. 455.

OYSTER.

As fish, see "Fish."

As shell fish, see "Shell Fish."

OYSTER BED.

"Very few people know what is, or what constitutes, a natural oyster bed. Indeed, it is only a matter of opinion, at the best; and opinions are likely to be influenced largely by self-interest. A large number of persons make a distinction between oyster beds that ebb dry and those that are covered at all states of the tide; a distinction which, it is needless to say, does not have any sound foundation to rest upon. Many also appear to think that a natural bed is not a natural bed, in the meaning of the law, because it is a little one. On the other hand, there are some whose definition of natural bed is so liberal that it not only covers all places where oysters were in the past, or are in the present, but includes any area where they might, could, would, or should grow in the future. The best legal definition of what is an oyster bed is as follows: "A bed not made by man, and of sufficient area to have been profitably worked by the general public as common property within some recent period of time. A natural, as distinguished from an artificial, bed, is one not planted by man, and in any shoal, reef, or bottom where oysters are to be found growing, not sparsely, or at intervals, but in a mass or stratum, and in sufficient quantities to be valuable to the public." State v. Willis, 10 S. E. 764, 765, 104 N. C. 764.

OYSTER SPAT.

"Oyster spat" is the spawn or young brood of oysters. Borough of Maldon v. Woolvet, 12 Adol. & E. 12, 15.

OYSTERY.

"Oystery" is a particular species of fishing, and of course includes the common right of fishery. Moulton v. Libbey, 37 Ma. 472, 492, 59 Am. Dec. 57.

P

P. A.

"p. a." as used in a promissory note reciting "Int. @ 6% p. a." is an abbreviation for "per annum." Simmons v. Brooks, 84 N. E. 175, 177, 159 Mass. 219.

P. P. A.

The letters "p. p. a." added to an agent's signature should be construed as evidence that the agent professes to be acting "per power of attorney." Mt. Morris Bank v. Gorham, 48 N. E. 841, 842, 169 Mass. 519.

PA.

The fact that depositions were taken pursuant to a commission addressed "to any notary public within and for Dauphin Co., Pa.," was held not ground for suppressing such deposition. It is a matter of common knowledge that "Co." is used as an abbreviation of "county," and "Pa." is an abbreviation of "Pennsylvania," and proof of such facts was not required. Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Iowa, 499, 501, 43 N. W. 299, 300.

PAT.

"As part of plaintiff's registered label, there appeared in very small letters the words 'Pat. Aug. 13, 1872.' It is claimed that this must be taken as a false affirmation that the whisky was patented. I do not think it amounts to this. As used on the barrels of whisky, it is almost impossible that it could suggest to any one this idea. The words were not used in such a way as naturally to indicate the existing or present protection to the whisky of a patent. The words seem to indicate the date of registry of the trademark, and not to have been used for the purpose of deceiving the public." Held not to be a false affirmation that the whisky was patented, so as to deprive plaintiffs of relief for infringement. Cahn v. Gottschalk, 2 N. Y. Supp. 13, 17, 14 Daly, 542.

PACK.

The term "to pack," in its ordinary signification, especially when used in reference to carriage, means to place together and prepare for transportation, as to make up a bundle or bale. Keith v. State, 8 South. 353, 354, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430; State v. Parsons, 27 S. W. 1102, 1104, 124 Mo. 436, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457.

PACKAGE.

See "Original Package"; "Single Package."

The term "package" means a bundle or parcel made up of several smaller parcels, combined or bound together in one bale, box, crate, or other form of package. Haley v. State, 60 N. W. 962, 963, 42 Neb. 556, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718; Commonwealth v. Schoellenberger, 27 Atl. 30, 33, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L. R. A. 155, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32.

A package is a number of things done up conveniently for handling and convenience; a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling. State ex rel. Gelpi v. Board of Assessors, 15 South. 10, 11, 48 La. Ann. 145, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318 (cited and approved in May v. City of New Orleans, 25 South. 959, 960, 51 La. Ann. 1064).

A package is a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling. It is a thing in form to become as such an article of merchandise for transportation or delivery from hand to hand. It denotes a thing in form suitable for transportation or handling as an article of sale. United States v. Goldback (U. S.), 25 Fed. Cas. 1342.

A package is a bundle or bale made up for transportation. It usually consists of a single article; but, when separate articles are placed together and prepared for transportation in a bundle, bale, box, or other receptacle, they do not form as many separate and distinct packages as there are bundles, though they may be wrapped separately. State v. Parsons, 27 S. W. 1102, 1104, 124 Mo. 436, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457; Keith v. State, 8 South. 353, 354, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430.

A "package," within the meaning of a receipt given by a common carrier, providing that the company shall not be liable for any loss or damage to any box, package, or thing for over $50, means each separate package, although a number of such packages are included in one receipt. Boscovitz v. Adams Exp. Co., 93 Ill. 523, 524, 34 Am. Rep. 191.

Corn in bulk.

"Package," as used in a printed clause in a bill of lading, restricting a carrier's liability for the loss of packages, does not include 70,000 pounds of corn in bulk. Rosenstien v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 16 Mo. App. 225, 230.

On receiving certain corn for transportation from Chicago to Baltimore the carrier issued receipts partly in print and partly in writing. The printed part contained the language: "The following packages (contents unknown), in apparent good condition." Then followed in writing the number of bushels of corn, and printed conditions, including, "that the defendants are not to be held accountable for any damage or deficiency in packages after the same shall have been receipted for in good order by consignees or their agents at point of delivery." The court held that the term "package," as used in this receipt, referred to any package where the contents were unknown, and that it was not designed to be applied to corn. McCoy v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., 42 Md. 498, 509.

Cotton bales.

In a bill of lading limiting the liability of the carrier for loss or damage occurring to "packages" in transit, the word "package" should be construed as embracing cotton bales. Lamb v. Camden & A. Railroad & Transportation Co. (N. Y.) 2 Daly, 454, 480.

In a receipt given by a common carrier limiting its liability to a certain sum unless the value of each package is named and stated, the word "package" means small parcels or bundles whose appearance would give no adequate information of their value to the carrier. Bales of cotton and articles of a similar nature, the value of which can easily be seen by a casual inspection, are not packages. Southern Exp. Co. v. Crook, 44 Ala. 468, 475, 4 Am. Rep. 140.

Liquor.

"Package," as used in Rev. St. § 3449, providing that whenever any person ships any spirituous or fermented liquors or wines under any other than the proper name or brand known to the trade, as designating the kind and quality of the contents of the packages containing the same, he shall forfeit such liquors and "packages," etc., includes every box, barrel, or other receptacle into which distilled spirits have been placed for shipment or removal, either in quantity or in separate small packages, as bottles or jugs. United States v. 132 Packages of Spirituous Liquors and Wines (U. S.) 76 Fed. 864, 868, 22 C. C. A. 228.

Match box.

A match box of capacity to hold less than 100 matches, which contains two sliding drawers, which are open on the top when drawn out, is but one package, inasmuch as each drawer is not of itself a package in the mercantile sense. United States v. Goldback (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 1842.

Milk can.

Milk cans are "packages," within a fire policy on a creamery building, butter and cheese manufactured and in process of manufacture, and all materials and supplies for the same, including packages. Cronin v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 112 Mich. 106, 70 N. W. 448.

Oil.

The word "package" includes not only barrels, but casks and small tanks as well, as used in Rev. St. § 5842, fixing a fee for the inspection of petroleum oils, for gauging and branding each barrel or larger or smaller package. State ex rel. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Baggott, 8 S. W. 737, 738, 96 Mo. 68.

"Package," as used in the act of 1878, providing for the inspection of illuminating oils, the fees being at a specified rate per barrel, cask, or package, cannot be construed to include a storage tank in which the oil was put, not for the purpose of handling, transportation, or sale, but only for keeping. Willis v. Standard Oil Co., 52 N. W. 652, 653, 50 Minn. 290.

PACKET.

A packet is two or more letters under one cover. Chouteau v. The St. Anthony, 11 Mo. 226, 230; Dwight v. Brewster, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 50, 58, 11 Am. Dec. 138.

A letter is a message in writing. A packet is two or more letters under one cover. The merely covering a parcel of gloves, silk hose, or other merchandise with paper, and directing it to a person to whom it is sent, would not make such parcel a letter, nor is there any difference between such parcel and one containing bank notes. A parcel or bundle of merchandise is not a letter or packet, within St. U. S. 11th Cong. c. 54, § 18, making it unlawful for a carrier of the mail to take any letter or packet and deliver it to the person to whom it was sent. Dwight v. Brewster, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 50, 58, 11 Am. Dec. 138.

Rev. St. § 3891, providing for the punishment of any employé of the postal department who shall unlawfully detain, delay, or open any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which has come into his possession, and which was intended to be carried by mail, etc., means any packet which is mailable, such as merchandise, and not necessarily a bag of letters. United States v. Blackman (U. S.) 17 Fed. 837, 838.

PACKING HOUSE.

Packing houses are houses used for the purpose of packing meats. Ford v. State, 14 N. E. 241, 244, 112 Ind. 873.

PACKING HOUSE BUSINESS.

It is a matter of common knowledge that a part of the business of a packing house consists in the sale of products which it pre-wares for this purpose. It would be sticking in the bark to hold that a firm is doing a packing house business when it is engaged in slaughtering animals and dressing and preparing the products of their carcasses for food and other commercial purposes, but it is not carrying on a packing house business when it is selling fresh, cured, and salt meats, and other products that it has manufactured from the carcasses of slaughtered animals for this very purpose, so that a packing house company located in one state is doing a packing house business when it sells its products in another state. Stewart v. Kehrer, 41 S. E. 680, 682, 115 Ga. 184.

PACKING A JURY.

"Packing a jury," as used in an article in a newspaper charging a justice of the peace with malpractice in packing a jury, must be construed as clearly importing the improper and corrupt selection of a jury sworn and impaneled for the trial of a cause. Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 262, 289.

PAGANISM.

Paganism is the religion of those who have not the knowledge of the true God, but worship idols. Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 54, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

PAGE.

A page, when used as a measure of computation, shall mean 224 words. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 1738, c. 204, § 35.

PAID.

See "Sum Paid"; "To be Paid."

A statute in reference to mortgages executed as a security for the repayment of money to be hereafter lent, advanced, or paid, will be construed to mean "money so paid as to constitute a debt the repayment of which the mortgage is to secure." Wroughton v. Turtle, 11 Mees. & W. 561, 568.

A debt is paid when the contract is performed pursuant to the stipulation made; but if, on an agreement, something collateral is received in satisfaction, although the demand is extinguished, the debt, technically speaking, is not paid. Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 373, 390.

Gantt, Dig. § 2103, providing that no appeals shall be taken from a justice's judgment after it has been "paid or collected," does not include giving a mortgage for a fine adjudged to the state. Floyd v. State, 32 Ark. 200, 202.

In a deed stating that the same was executed "in consideration of our support during our natural lives and sixty dollars paid to us annually to our satisfaction," the words "paid to our satisfaction" refer to future payments to be made, and is not an acknowledgment that payment had then been made. Gage v. Hoyt, 3 Atl. 313, 319, 58 Vt. 536.

"Paid," as used in a will giving and bequeathing all the property, of whatsoever kind, to executors to hold and invest one-half of the principal of the estate "to be paid" to testator's son, is a term applicable exclusively to personalty, and is an indication that the principal of testator's estate should exist in the shape of personalty. Cook v. Cook (N. J.) 47 Atl. 732, 733.

The word "paid" is often very loosely used, and always liberally construed. In a will providing that the interest on certain sums should be paid to testator's children annually during life, and after the death of any child the principal should be paid over to such child's children, the direction that the principal should be paid over was obviously used as nothing more than an order of distribution, and the word "paid" was not descriptive of the subject-matter. In re Sheet's Estate, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 257, 268.

As contracted for.

In a stipulation in a charter party by which the owner should receive the highest freight which he could prove to have been paid for ships on the same voyage or passage by water, the word "paid" was used in the popular and ordinary sense, meaning "contracted for," and the word would be satisfied by proof of a contract for payment. Gether v. Capper, 15 C. B. 698, 701; Id., 29 Eng. Law & Eq. 242, 245.

As discharged.

In an action against a surety to recover on a bond, it was shown that when the surety had asked the owner of the bond what condition it was in, the holder had stated that the principal had paid or settled the bond, and he, the security, need give himself no further uneasiness about it. In considering this defense, the court said: "The words 'paid' and 'settled,' when used in common conversation in relation to a debt, are understood equally as conveying the idea that the debt is discharged, particularly when, in reply to the question of one so deeply interested in knowing as the security, it is said that the principal has settled the debt, and that he need give himself no further uneasiness about it." Waters v. Creagh (Ala.) 4 Stew. & P. 410-414.

As indicating acceptance.

"Paid," when stamped on a draft, does not indicate a promise. It implies none of the elements of an agreement, and does not amount to an acceptance of the agreement.

Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Gill, 54 Pac. 424, 436, 6 Okl. 580.

As indicating prior payment.

Where a telegraph message when delivered to the addressee is marked "Paid," it is evidence sufficient to warrant a finding that the telegraph company's charges had been prepaid, and that therefore the message should have been delivered with due diligence, as required by statute. Conyers v. Post Tel. Cable Co., 19 S. E. 253, 255, 92 Ga. 619, 44 Am. St. Rep. 100.

The word "Paid" stamped on a note, and erased by a line being drawn through it, was held not to give notice of a prior payment of the note, the court saying that the reasonable inference was that the word had been placed on the note by mistake. International Bank v. Bowen, 80 Ill. 541-546.

As obtained.

"Paid," as used in an information alleging that on false representations and pretenses of defendant certain liens and incumbrances were paid, is not equivalent to "obtained," as used in Comp. Laws 1879, c. 31, § 94, providing for the punishment of any one who has obtained money or goods under false pretenses. State v. Lewis, 26 Kan. 123, 129.

As satisfied.

"Paid," as used in a judgment directing that a certain person be imprisoned until a fine against him be paid, and providing that such imprisonment shall not exceed one day for a certain amount of a fine remaining unpaid, should be construed to mean satisfied. Ex parte Henshaw, 15 Pac. 110, 114, 78 Cal. 496.

The word "paid" embraces the meaning of the words "satisfied by payment, redemption, or sale," as used in Laws 1881, c. 185, § 7, providing that a judgment and sale for taxes shall be void upon proof that such taxes shall have been paid. This is within the proper signification of the word itself, among the primary definitions of which are to satisfy; to discharge one's obligation to. Forrest v. Henry, 23 N. W. 848, 850, 83 Minn. 434 (citing Webst. Dict.).

Pen. Code 1895, § 2224, permitted the court in every case where a defendant, on conviction of crime, was adjudged to pay a fine, to also imprison him "until the fine and costs were satisfied," not exceeding one day for every $2 of the fine and costs. Laws 1901, p. 167, § 2, provided for the punishment, on conviction of gambling, by a fine and "imprisonment until the fine and costs were paid." Held, that the word "paid" in the latter act was synonymous with the word "satisfied" as used in the general act, and hence a person convicted of gambling could be imprisoned not to exceed one day for every $2 of the fine and costs. State v. Towner, 67 Pac. 1004, 1005, 28 Mont. 339.

PAID IN.

"Paid in," as used in an affidavit stating that a person paid in to the common stock of a firm a certain sum, means paid in cash. The words "paid in" do not comprehend a promise or agreement to pay, but mean actual payment. Crouch v. First Nat. Bank, 40 N. E. 974, 979, 156 Ill. 342.

"Paid in" means a payment in money, and not a security by pledge of real estate, as used in Act July 18, 1868, § 31, providing that the certificate of a mining corporation filed with the Auditor General shall set forth the amount of capital already paid in. Bailey v. Pittsburgh & C. Gas, Coal & Coke Co., 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 324, 341.

PAID IN ADVANCE.

A recital in a life insurance policy that the first premium is to be "paid in advance" is held in Washington Life Ins. Co. v. Meneff's Ex'r, 53 S. W. 260, 261, 107 Ky. 244, not to be notice to the insured that the general agent of the company has no authority to accept a note for such premiums, the court remarking that in its opinion nine persons out of ten would assume that the execution and acceptance of the note by the agent was a compliance with the provision.

PAID UP.

In Acts 15th Gen. Assem. c. 60, § 28, providing that paid-up capital of savings banks shall be subject to the same rates of taxation as other taxable property, the words "paid up," used in connection with capital, distinguish the capital which has come into the actual possession of the bank, from that subscribed, but not paid, and they do not refer to the mode by which the capital was obtained, so as to exclude undivided profits. Iowa State Bank v. City Council of Burlington, 61 N. W. 851, 852, 98 Iowa, 737 (citing Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. City of New York, 8 N. Y. [4 Seld.] 241, 247).

A "paid-up insurance policy" is one reduced to an amount corresponding to the premiums paid, so that no further premiums are required. McQuitty v. Continental Life Ins. Co., 10 Atl. 635, 637, 15 E. I. 573.

A "paid-up life policy" is the equivalent of the insurer's bond to pay a sum definite at a time certain or upon the happening of an inevitable contingency. Such a policy has a specific money value, and is a tangible, definable interest in property, subject to the owner's debts. Planters' State Bank v. Wingham's Assignee, 63 S. W. 12, 14, 111 Ky. 64.

In the statute providing that in no instance shall a policy be forfeited for non-payment of premiums after the payment of three annual premiums thereon, but in all instances where three annual premiums shall have been paid on the policy of insurance a holder of such policy shall be entitled to paid-up insurance, the term "paid-up insurance" means insurance for life, fully paid up, and not paid up temporary insurance. Nichols v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 75 S. W. 664, 670, 176 Mo. 355, 62 L. R. A. 657.

"Paid-up" nonassessable stock means a very different thing from stock simply non-assessable. Stock upon which nothing has been paid may be called nonassessable, and may be so treated; but paid-up nonassessable stock can only mean stock that is made non-assessable by reason of the fact that the amount for which it calls has been fully paid. The use of the word "nonassessable" in the clause in question is unnecessary in the connection in which it is found; but that is usual not only in commercial contracts, but also in more solemn writings. The words "paid up" have a meaning which is precise, and they are not, therefore, open to construction; their signification being more specific than that of the word "nonassessable." By no rule of interpretation can they be expunged from the context. San Antonio St. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 87 Tex. 125, 26 S. W. 1040, 1042.

"Paid up in full," as used in a report of a corporation made according to the statutes of Massachusetts, stating that the capital stock of the company or corporation had been paid up in full, imports that the capital has been paid in cash, where it is not specified that the whole or some part has been paid in property. Bonnell v. Griswold, 89 N. Y. 122, 125.

The term "paid-up stock" in reference to a building association is really an anomaly. Strictly speaking, there can be no such thing, for the moment stock is matured the holder thereof is entitled to his money and his connection with the association ceases, and one who purchases from a building association stock called "fully paid up stock" merely becomes a creditor of the company. Cashen v. Southern Mut. Building & Loan Ass'n, 41 S. E. 51, 53, 114 Ga. 983.

PAIN.

Webster defines "pain" as mental distress, anxiety, grief, anguish, and does not necessarily mean physical pain, and will not be held to mean physical pain in an instruction in a breach of promise case that personal pain suffered by plaintiff might be considered by the jury. Robertson v. Craver, 55 N. W. 492, 495, 88 Iowa, 381.

In construing a pardon whereby a convict was released "from all pains, penalties, and forfeitures that might or would have been inflicted on him," the court said: "Payment of the costs of the prosecution cannot be regarded as a pain, penalty, or forfeiture, within the meaning of the pardon. The term 'pain' imports some bodily suffering or corporeal infliction, while the terms 'penalty' and 'forfeiture' are used to signify an involuntary transfer or surrender of a sum of money or of property imposed by way of punishment for the commission of an offense against the law." Anglea v. Commonwealth (Va.) 10 Grat. 696, 700.

PAINS AND PENALTIES.

See "Bill of Pains and Penalties."

PAINTER.

A "painter" is defined to be one who represents the appearance of natural or other objects on a surface by the means of colors. There is a marked distinction between a painter and a photographer, though both be artists, as more dexterity is required in the former than the latter. City of New Orleans v. Robira, 8 South. 402, 403, 42 La. Ann. 1098, 11 L. R. A. 141.

PAINTING.

Antique mythological paintings of great value, made of copper and enameled by a process not now understood, are within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, par. 454, Schedule N, § 1, c. 11, as paintings in oil or water color, the evidence appearing to show that although they were enameled the painting was done in water or lavender oil. Amerman v. United States (U. S.) 124 Fed. 298, 299.

Painted fans.

"Paintings," as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, par. 465, includes fans composed of silk and bone, upon which are executed artistic paintings in water colors of high value and merit, and which are displayed as ornaments, and not used as fans ordinarily are. Tiffany v. United States (U. S.) 86 Fed. 736, 737.

Glass windows.

The term "paintings" does not include plain glass windows containing representations of saints and other Biblical subjects, and imported in a fragmentary state for the use of a convent, as used in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, par. 677, exempting paintings from duty. While church windows are artistic in the sense of being beautiful, and require a high degree of artistic merit for their production, they are ordinarily classified in foreign exhibits as among the decorative and industrial rather than among the fine arts, and in the catalogues of manufacturers and dealers in plain glass no distinction is made between such windows and other plain or painted glass windows. United States v. Perry, 13 Sup. Ct. 26, 28, 146 U. S. 71, 86 L. Ed. 858 (reversing In re Perry [U. S.] 47 Fed. 110, 111.)

Paintings on porcelain.

The term "paintings," not otherwise provided for in a tariff act fixing a duty on such paintings, includes pictures painted by hand on porcelain, which does not by itself constitute any article of chinaware. Arthur v. Jacoby, 103 U. S. 677, 678, 26 L. Ed. 454.

Artistic paintings in oil upon a plain slab of porcelain, intended and used mostly for ornamental purposes, and not susceptible to any other use, and whose valuable and distinctive feature is the painting and not the porcelain, are dutiable as "paintings in oil or water color," under paragraph 465 of the tariff act of 1890, and not as "porcelain ware painted," under paragraph 100. In re Davis Collamore (U. S.) 53 Fed. 1006.

Painted wood ceilings.

"Paintings in oil," in Tariff Act 1897, par. 454, includes ceilings painted on wood taken from a palace in Italy. White v. United States (U. S.) 113 Fed. 855.

PAIR.

One pair of boots means two boots paired, matched, or suited to be used together, so that proof that defendant stole two boots, both for the right foot, does not support an indictment for the theft of one pair of boots. State v. Harris (Del.) 3 Har. 559.

The words "a pair of horses" will ordinarily be understood to mean a match pair, or at least a pair mated and used together. Golden v. Cockrill, 1 Kan. 259-266, 81 Am. Dec. 510.

By the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 530, a debtor engaged in the business of agriculture is entitled to select and hold as exempt from execution "a pair of horses." Under this statute he may exercise his own discretion in the selection of such horses, and is not limited to any particular ones; he may select from any horses owned by him. It does not mean a team. Conway v. Roberts, 38 Neb. 456, 56 N. W. 980.

A "pair of shoes," as used in an indictment for larceny describing the property stolen as a "pair of shoes," will be understood to mean a covering for the human foot—footwear used by mankind; so that an indictment charging the theft of a "pair of shoes" is sufficient, though shoes are used to protect the hoofs of horses. Palmer v. Stata, 36 N. E. 180, 181, 136 Ind. 393.

PALM OFF.

"To palm off" means to impose by fraud; to put off by inferior means. The language also imports that plaintiff must have been deceived and cheated by the representations, which he could not have been had he not relied upon them. Hobart v. Young, 21 Atl. 612, 613, 68 Vt. 363, 12 L. R. A. 693.

PALMISTRY.

"Palmistry" is a crafty science—that is, one by which the simple minded are apt to be deceived; and was so used by one accused of practicing it when from the lines on the palm of the complaining witness he foretold the age at which she would marry. State v. Kenilworth, 54 Atl. 244, 245, 69 N. J. Law, 114.

PALPABLE.

In a statute making the county superintendent of schools liable to removal by the county board for any "palpable" violation of law or omission of duty, the word "palpable" embraces the idea of an intentional and substantial failure to perform the duties imposed by law, partaking of the nature of a willful or gross neglect of the officer to attend to his duties. It would be a too restricted use of the word to give it the sense only of "easily perceived," "plain," or "obvious," as such a construction would make the officer liable to removal when he had omitted to perform any of the duties of the office, although his failure to perform the same may have occurred through accident, mistake, or some personal inability, arising from illness or other cause, for which he might not be in any degree responsible, which certainly could not have been contemplated by the Legislature as a cause for removing him. People v. Mays, 17 Ill. App. (17 Bradw.) 361, 366, 367.

PAMPHLET.

In construing the statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene books, pamphlets, pictures, papers, writings, print, or other publication, etc., the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Chase, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 185 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 117, say: "In the statute under consideration the word 'pamphlet' is used as one of a group or class of words, 'book,' 'pamphlet,' 'picture,' 'paper,' 'writing,' 'print,' each of which is ordinarily and prima facie understood to be a publication, and the enumeration concludes with the general phrase 'or other publication,' which applies to all the articles enumerated, and defines each with the common quality indicated. It must, therefore, according to a well-defined rule of construction, be a published writing which is contemplated by the statute, and not a private letter, on the outside of which there is nothing but the name and address of the person to whom it is written." United States v. Warner (U. S.) 59 Fed. 355, 356.

PANEL

See "Challenge to the Panel"; "Regular Panel."

The statute entitled "jurors" provides that the panel of a grand jury shall consist of 23 persons, 16 of whom shall constitute a grand jury. Held, that the word "panel" is used in its commonly accepted sense. It is equivalent with list, catalogue, inventory, schedule, register. Blackstone defines it as a schedule containing the names of persons whom the sheriff returns to serve on trials. Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571, 575.

Cr. Prac. Act, § 337, provides that a challenge may be made to the panel on account of any bias of the officer summoning them which would be good ground of challenge to a juror. Held, that the word "panel" includes the juror's return on a special venire to fill out a deficiency after the regular panel has been exhausted. People v. Coyo, 40 Cal. 536, 592.

The "panel" is a list of jurors returned by a sheriff to serve at a particular court, or for the trial of a particular action. Pen. Code Cal. 1903, § 1057; Rev. Codes N. D. 1890, § 8144; Code Crim. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 319; Pen. Code Idaho 1901, § 5416; Rev. St. Utah 1898, §§ 3183, 4818; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 5454.

By the word "panel" is meant the whole body of grand jurors. Code Crim. Proc. Tex. 1895, art. 899.

PANTOMIME

A species of theatrical entertainment, in which the whole action is represented by gesticulation, without the use of words, and is a dramatic composition, within the copyright laws. Daly v. Palmer (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 1182, 1186.

PANTS.

An indictment charging the larceny of a pair of pants was not misleading, and sufficiently described a thing which may be made the subject of larceny; for in common parlance the word "pants" has completely superseded the word "pantaloon," and is an appropriate designation of the same thing. State v. Johnson, 30 La. Ann. 904, 905.

PAPER.

See "Accommodation Paper"; "Approved Bill or Paper"; "Commercial Paper"; "Commonwealth Paper"; "Corporate Paper."

In construing the statute prohibiting the mailing of obscene books, pamphlets, pictures, papers, writings, print, or other publication, etc., the United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Chase, 10 Sup. Ct. 756, 135 U. S. 255, 34 L. Ed. 117, say: "In the statute under consideration the word 'paper' is used as one of a group or class of words—'book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print'—each of which is ordinarily and prima facie understood to be a publication; and the enumeration concludes with the general phrase 'or other publication,' which applies to all the articles enumerated, and defines each with the common quality indicated. It must, therefore, according to a well-defined rule of construction, be a published writing which is contemplated by the statute, and not a private letter, on the outside of which there is nothing but the name and address of the person to whom it is written." United States v. Warner (U. S.) 59 Fed. 355, 356.

"Paper," as used in Rev. St. § 3893, providing that every obscene, etc., book, pamphlet, picture, paper, etc., or other publication, of an indecent character, shall be nonmailable matter, etc., comprehends anything that has on it what is obscene or lewd. United States v. Gaylord (U. S.) 17 Fed. 433, 441.

Several depositions attached together and filed are a single paper, and not each a paper, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 523, allowing a certain fee for filing and entering every declaration, plea, or other paper. United States v. Barber, 11 Sup. Ct. 749, 751, 140 U. S. 177, 35 L. Ed. 398.

Rev. St. § 2503, reducing the duties on all "paper and manufactures of paper," excepting unsized printing paper, books, and other printed matter, cannot be construed to include books. No man of literary culture would call a book "paper" or a "manufacture of paper," any more than he would designate a masterpiece of Raphael as "canvas" or a "manufacture of canvas." By a license of speech, it is true, he might say that a particular book was mere waste paper or rubbish, or that a particular picture was nothing but a piece of spoiled canvas, but, speaking seriously and in accordance with good usage, he would not make such an application of terms. Pott v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 735, 26 L. Ed. 909.

Rev. St. 1881, § 1997, making it criminal to deposit any obscene or indecent paper in the post office, was construed to include a letter. "The word 'paper,' in its ordinary signification, may mean either a written or printed paper." Papers "may consist partly of writing and partly of print, or entirely of the one or the other." Thomas v. State, 2 N. E. 808, 810, 103 Ind. 419.

The term "paper," in a contract for the furnishing of apparatus to make paper, includes all the various qualities of the article thus denominated, including pasteboard, which is a paper of a coarse and inferior quality. Patteson v. Garet, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 112-115.

The word "paper" means any flexible material upon which it is usual to write. Rev. Codes N. D. 1890, § 5120; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2454; Rev. St. Okl. 1906, § 2793.

PAPER CURRENCY.

See "United States Paper Currency."

In a certificate of deposit containing a promise to pay a certain number of dollars, paper currency, the term "paper currency" was defined by the court to mean "the legal tender paper currency, which, under the United States laws and decisions, is money." Frank v. Wessels, 64 N. Y. 155, 158.

"Paper currency of the United States, commonly called greenbacks," designates notes or bills circulating by authority of the general government as money, and includes both United States treasury notes, and those issued for circulation by national banks. An indictment charging that accused took and carried away a certain number of dollars in "paper currency of the United States, commonly called greenbacks," is sufficient, without other averment of value, since the court judicially knows that such paper currency is of its face value. Turner v. State, 27 South. 272, 274, 124 Ala. 59.

PAPER HANGING MATERIAL.

16 Laws, c. 145, § 4, extending the scope of mechanics' liens to work and materials for plumbing, gas fitting, paper hanging, paving, etc., held not to include materials furnished for upholstering a hall. McCartney v. Buck (Del.) 12 Atl. 717, 719, 8 Houst. 34.

PAPER IN THE CASE.

A bill of exceptions, including a long-hand manuscript of the evidence, made a part of it, is, when filed, a "paper in the case." Hull v. Louth, 10 N. E. 270, 280, 109 Ind. 315, 58 Am. Rep. 405.

PAPER MONEY.

Throughout the resolutions of Congress and the acts of our Legislature, "paper money" and "bills of credit" are used as synonymous. State v. Billis (S. C.) 2 McCord, 12-17.

The common term "paper money" is, in a legal sense, quite as accurate as the term "coin money." Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 3 N. W. 357, 359, 47 Wis. 551, 32 Am. Rep. 773.

PAPER MILL.

A paper mill, insured as such against fire, and described as such in the policy, did not cease to be a paper mill when its use as such was discontinued, and a pair of millstones added for grinding grain, which were located in the place previously occupied by the rag cutter and duster, which were moved by the same gearing and by the power of the same water wheel, no other machinery being used for the grindstones, but all remained as it was, except the rag cutter and duster, which were dismounted, and all the other machinery might at any time have been employed in making paper, it was, to all intents and purposes, a paper mill ready for use. The character of the establishment was no more altered than if a grindstone had been attached by a band to the water wheel, and all the other machinery left at rest. Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 13 Conn. 583, 545, 35 Am. Dec. 92.

The term "paper mill," as used in all laws relative to the employment of labor, shall mean any premises in which the manufacture of paper is carried on. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 917, c. 106, § 8.

PAPERS.

See "Original Papers"; "Valuable Papers."

Within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 8, providing that "all people shall be secure in persons, houses, papers, and possessions from unreasonable searches and seizures," the word "papers" must be taken to mean writings, not pieces of paper, as mere inanimate goods, but papers on which are written or printed words that may be shown in evidence as words of a suspected man; and the court held that an envelope merely containing a picture was not "papers" within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution. State v. Griswold, 34 Atl. 1046, 1047, 67 Conn. 299, 33 L. R. A. 227.

A will by which the testatrix gave to a certain person "all my books and papers of every description" should be construed to include the Bible and other religious works, tracts, pamphlets, manuscripts, memoranda, etc., the account books of the deceased, and the promissory notes, bonds, certificates of stock, and other evidences of debt due to her, for in commercial usage, and to a very great extent in common parlance, all such securities as notes, bonds, certificates, bills of exchange, drafts, etc., are included under the definition of "papers." Perkins v. Mathes, 49 N. H. 107, 110.

The term "papers," from which the amount of the judgment is to be ascertained by a simple calculation, where defendant defaults, under Code, § 2952, was held to refer to the writing or other evidence upon which the action was founded, and not to the pleadings in the cause. Williams v. Inman, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 267, 269 (citing Masonic Educational Ass'n v. Cook, 40 Tenn. [3 Head] 813).

Under Code, § 2952, providing that a default judgment is final if the amount of the plaintiff's claim can be ascertained by a simple calculation from the papers, the term "papers," in a suit on a note, includes the note and protest thereof. Williams v. Bank of Tennessee, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 43, 46.

In evidence.

"Papers," as used in Code, c. 181, § 12, providing that papers read in evidence, though not under seal, may be carried from the bar by the jury, means documentary evidence, and not depositions. "Depositions," in legal parlance, are not known as "papers." State v. Cain, 20 W. Va. 679, 707.

The phrase "papers which have been received in evidence," in Pen. Code, § 1137, authorizing juries to take with them all papers which have been received as evidence, does not include a diagram not claimed or purported to be an actual representation; but used only to illustrate the testimony of a witness. People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548-553.

Civ. Prac. Act, § 231, declares that, on the retiring of the jury for deliberation, they may take with them, among other things, all papers which have been received as evidence at the trial, etc. Held, that since the intention of the Legislature was to authorize the admission in evidence of that which may be upon papers, rather than of the papers themselves, the writing, diagram, mark, or spot which under the section would be admissible to the jury room if on paper, according to the liberal construction of the Code, must also be admissible if on bone, wood, cloth, stone, metal, or any other substance; and, having gotten thus far, the spirit of the section requires the admission of any exhibit standing within the same reason, whether it be blank paper, or blank anything else, moist or dry, solid or liquid; and therefore the section may be construed to authorize the court to introduce to the jury room an article of personal attire, such as a hat, shirt, etc. Dr. Jack v. Territory, 3 Pac. 832, 835, 2 Wash. T. 101.

"Papers," as used in Cr. Prac. Act, § 254, providing that a new trial shall be granted when the jury receive in evidence papers or documents not authorized by the court, means written statements or documents, and not newspapers. State v. Jackson, 24 Pac. 213, 216, 9 Mont. 508.

Rev. St. § 868, providing that a subpoena duces tecum may be issued to compel the production of any "paper or writing or written instrument, or book or other document," should be construed to include only documentary evidence, and not to include patterns for a stove. In re Shephard (U. S.) 3 Fed. 12, 13.

"Paper," as used in Code, § 1105, authorizing a new trial when the jury has received any evidence, paper, document, or book not allowed by the court, to the prejudice of the substantial rights of the defendant, means a paper not in evidence, since it would be included in the term "evidence," as used in the statute, if it had been introduced in evidence. Dr. Jack v. Territory, 3 Pac. 832, 836, 2 Wash. T. 101.

PAPERS ON APPEAL.

The paper books and points and authorities are "papers on appeal" within Comp. St. c. 578, § 9, declaring that disbursement for printing papers on appeal may be recovered as costs, but long duplicate arguments are not. Hart v. Marshall, 4 Minn. 552 (Gil. 434).

PAPIER-MACHE.

Articles invoiced, known, and sold as "papier-maché" are dutiable as papier-maché. They cannot be relieved from payment of duty as such on the ground that every constituent of true papier-maché was not present in the composition of which they were made. Wanamaker v. Cooper (U. S.) 69 Fed. 465, 467.

PAR.

"Par" is the Latin word for "equal." It has been adopted in the English language, and continues to have the same meaning, and no other. Bills of exchange are at par, above par, or below par. Bills are at par when they are sold at their nominal amount for coin or its equivalent. Castle v. Kapena, 5 Haw. Rep. 27, 32.

The word "par" means equal, and to say that a bond is valued at par means that its value is equal to the face of the bonds. Village of Ft. Edward v. Fish, 50 N. E. 973, 974, 156 N. Y. 863.

"Par" is equal. The word is used to denote a state of equality or equal value. Bills of exchange, stocks, and the like, are at par when they sell at their nominal value; above or below par, when they sell for more or less. Under such definition, the par value of a bond is not merely the principal sum due, but that sum with the accrued interest added. Evans v. Tillman, 17 S. E. 49, 53, 88 S. O. 288 (citing Delafield v. Illinois [N. Y.] 2 Hill, 159; Appeal of Hogg, 22 Pa. [10 Harris] 479).

Under a statute imposing a penalty on banks for failing to keep their notes at par, it is held that that term signifies a currency ordinarily equal to gold or silver for all purposes, financial and commercial. Harrisburg Bank v. Commonwealth, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 451, 455.

"Par," within the meaning of the statute authorizing a city to subscribe to the stock of a railroad company, and to sell such stock as soon as can be at par, was construed to mean an amount equal to the amount subscribed. Town Council of Town of Newark v. Elliott, 5 Ohio St. 113-120.

"Par," as used in a note for so many dollars to be paid in currency that is at par, is to be construed, in the absence of evidence, to mean currency equal to gold. Orin v. Sellers, 37 Ga. 324, 326.

Where a note is payable in the notes of the chartered banks of Mississippi at par, it means that those notes are to be taken as at par; that is, without discount or premium. Smith v. Elder (Miss.) 7 Smedes & M. 507, 512.

The word "par," in the constitutional provision that until the bonds of the state shall be at par the General Assembly shall have no power to contract any new debt or pecuniary obligation in behalf of the state, except to supply a casual deficit, etc., means at par with gold and silver, or with the legal tender notes of the United States. It cannot mean at par with the work of the contractor, or at par with any piece of land or other property which the state may think proper to buy, because the value of these things is uncertain, and rests only in opinion and agreement. Such a construction would deprive the words "at par" of all definite meaning. Galloway v. Jenkins, 68 N. C. 147, 160.

PAR OF EXCHANGE.

The term "par of exchange" was a phrase formerly current among merchants and bankers, which meant the value of the pound sterling. Commonwealth v. Haupt, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 83, 44.

"Par of exchange" is the value of money of one country in that of another, and it may be either real or nominal. Blue Star S. S. Co. v. Keyser (U. S.) 81 Fed. 507, 510.

Rev. St. U. S. 1873, § 3565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2376], provides that "in all payments by or through the treasury, where it becomes necessary to compute the value of the sovereign or pound sterling it shall be deemed equivalent to $4.86 and 6½ mills, and this valuation shall be the par of exchange between Great Britain and the United States." By "par of exchange" is here meant the precise equivalent or value of the gold coins of the two nations—the relative melting value of each. Murphy v. Kastner, 24 Atl. 564, 566, 60 N. J. Eq. (5 Dick.) 220.

PAR VALUE.

As used in the statute authorizing commissioners to sell certain bonds or certificates of public stocks of the state at not less than par value, the term "par value" can mean nothing else than pound for pound or dollar for dollar. Delafield v. Illinois (N. Y.) 2 Hill, 159, 172.

The term "par value," as used to refer to the value of bonds, etc., means a value equal to the face of the bonds. Village of Ft. Edward v. Fish, 50 N. E. 973, 974, 156 N. Y. 868.

The state of Illinois authorized its Governor to issue and sell bonds in order to raise a certain amount of money, providing, however, that the bonds should not be sold for less than their par value. A loan was effected upon the promise that the money should be paid by installments and at deferred periods, but that interest should commence immediately upon the whole sum, and the bonds were issued and delivered to the lender. It was held that in selling the stock upon credit, and in agreeing that the interest thereon should commence running previous to the advance of the money, there was virtually a sale for less than the par value of the bonds. Delafield v. Illinois (N. Y.) 28 Wend. 192, 224; Illinois v. Delafield (N. Y.) 8 Paige, 527, 536.

Act Dec. 8, 1873, incorporating a railway company, and giving the company an authority to borrow money not exceeding in amount one-half of the "par value of the capital stock," means the amount of paid-up capital, only, and not the full amount of the authorized capital. Commonwealth v. Lehigh Ave. Ry. Co., 18 Atl. 498, 499, 129 Pa. 405, 5 L. R. A. 367.

The term "par value" has such a well-known meaning not only in commercial and financial circles, but as applied to ordinary and everyday business affairs, that resort to the authorities for a definition would appear to be needless. It is sufficient to say that the authorities hold that, in determining par value, the interest accrued up to the time of fixing the value must be included with the principal. People v. Miller, 82 N. Y. Supp. 621, 623, 84 App. Div. 168.

The par value of a treasury note or bank bill is the sum named on its face because the holder can demand and is entitled to receive that sum for it from the government, or the bank by which it was issued. The par value of a treasury note for $1 is $1, because that sum in coin can be had for it. Commonwealth v. Lehigh Ave. Ry. Co., 18 Atl. 498, 500, 129 Pa. 405, 5 L. R. A. 367.

The charter of a certain railroad company provided that the company should have power to borrow money in any sum not exceeding one-half of the par value of the capital stock. The authorized stock of the corporation was $1,000,000, but only 10 per cent. of this sum was ever paid in. Held that, for the purpose of determining the amount of money which might be borrowed, the capital stock must be measured, not by the nominal or authorized capital, but by the actual amount paid in, and that the expression "par value" did not change this rule. The par value of all the shares was the amount paid upon them—the value they represented. The construction making the words "par value" equivalent to "nominal value" overlooks the meaning of the word "value." The stock stands in the hands of the holders for so much and no more than the amount actually paid upon it, and its equivalent or par can only be ascertained by the value which it represents. Commonwealth v. Lehigh Ave. Ry. Co., 18 Atl. 498, 499, 129 Pa. 405, 5 L. R. A. 367, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 530, 533.

PARADOX.

A paradox is a proposition seemingly absurd, yet true in fact. An instance is that under the laws of Alabama, and under an indictment charging defendant with two distinct felonies, two verdicts rendered at different terms of the primary court, the first expressly finding him guilty of one of the felonies, the second expressly finding him guilty of the other, may, when accompanied by an unauthorized discharge of the second jury, amount to an acquittal, and operate as such. Bell v. State, 48 Ala. 684, 691, 17 Am. Rep. 40.

PARAGRAPH.

The term "paragraph," as used in code pleading, means the entire or integral statement of a cause of action. It is the equivalent of "count" at common law. It may embrace one sentence or many sentences, but, whether one or many, it constitutes a statement of a single cause of action. Bailey v. Mosher (U. S.) 63 Fed. 488, 490, 11 C. C. A. 304.

"Paragraph," as defined by Webster, is a distinct part of a discourse or writing—any section or subdivision of a writing or chapter which relates to a particular point, whether consisting of one or many sentences. This division is sometimes noted by the mark (1), but usually by beginning the first sentence of the new paragraph on a new line, and at more than the usual distance from the margin, and hence an instruction numbered 7 will be treated as a paragraph of that number. McClellan v. Hein, 77 N. W. 120, 123, 56 Neb. 600.

Paragraphs in a pleading are only convenient subdivisions of that larger and more comprehensive statement which the rules of good pleading require to embody the essential elements of fact which lead to a legal conclusion, sufficient for the purpose of the pleader. Paragraphs are rarely intended to be sufficient for the purpose of the statement of a cause of action on the ground of defense or reply. Hill v. Fairhaven & W. R. Co., 52 Atl. 725, 726, 75 Conn. 177.

In Act Cong. Oct. 1, 1890, reducing the revenue and equalizing duties, providing that certain duties shall be levied and collected according to the rights respectively prescribed by "the schedules and paragraphs," the word "paragraphs" is synonymous with the word "sections." Marine v. Packham (U. S.) 52 Fed. 579, 581, 8 C. C. A. 210.

PARALLEL

A provision in a paving ordinance that the surface of the concrete base on which the pavement is to rest shall be "parallel with the surface of the pavement" does not mean that such base shall be on a level with such surface, but means that the line of the surface of the concrete bed shall be parallel with a certain stated number of inches below the surface of the line of pavement when completed. Cunningham v. City of Peoria, 41 N. E. 1014, 1016, 157 Ill. 499.

Parallel boundaries.

By mathematical definition, parallel lines are straight lines, but, in common speech about boundaries, the words are often used to represent lines which are not straight, but photographs of each other; and courts, in passing on questions of boundaries, often use them in the latter sense. The term is used for the want of a better, and not because it in all respects affects the use to which it is applied. It is so used to avoid circumlocution, and, while such use is not exactly correct, there is no difficulty in understanding the meaning or intention. Fratt v. Woodward, 32 Cal. 219, 230, 91 Am. Dec. 573.

Parallel railroads.

"Parallel," as used in Const. Ill. art. 11, § 11, forbidding consolidation of parallel railroads, is not employed in its merely geographical sense. It does not mean two lines of railway that are equidistant from each other. It means lines of railway having the same general direction, and therefore likely to come in competition with each other. East St. Louis Connecting Ry. Co. v. Jarvis (U. S.) 92 Fed. 735, 742, 24 C. C. A. 639.

"Parallel railroads," as used in Const. art. 15, § 6, providing that no railroad corporation shall consolidate with any other railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line, etc., means railroads running in one general direction, traversing the same section of country, and running within a few miles of one another throughout their respective routes, and does not include exact parallelism. State v. Montana R. Co., 53 Pac. 623, 627, 21 Mont. 221, 45 L. R. A. 271.

The term "parallel line," in the clause of the Constitution forbidding any railroad corporation to in any way control any other corporation having in its control a parallel or competing line, is not limited in its operation to a railroad completely constructed, but includes a projected road surveyed, laid out, and in the process of construction. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 7 Atl. 868, 878.

The term "parallel and competing roads," within the meaning of Const. Ky. 1891, § 201, prohibiting the consolidation of a railroad with a parallel or competing road, applies to two roads which connect two important cities, and are natural competitors for the traffic between such cities. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 719, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. Ed. 849.

Parallel street railroads.

To constitute the parallelism meant by Sess. Acts 1859-60, p. 516, providing that no street railroad should thereafter be constructed in the city of St. Louis within a certain distance of a parallel road, it is not necessary that every portion of the road being built shall be parallel with the road already constructed, nor is it necessary that the greater portion thereof should be so parallel, for that would be to make the solution of the question depend, not upon the extent to which the roads are in fact parallel, but upon the length of those portions of the road which are not parallel. Railroads so constructed that their general direction is substantially the same for the distance of nearly two miles, and for one-half a mile of that distance they are exactly parallel, are substantially parallel roads. St. Louis R. Co. v. Northwestern St. L. Ry. Co., 69 Mo. 65, 71.

"Parallel," as used in Pub. St. c. 113, § 47, providing that commutation checks on street railways shall not entitle the holder to passage over the same road on which the check was issued, or a route parallel thereto, includes a road returning substantially to the same point as the road over which the check was bought, although by a circuitous route. Cronin v. Highland St. Ry. Co., 10 N. E. 833, 836, 144 Mass. 249.

Parallel telegraph line.

The word "parallel," as used in Code, § 1287, authorizing telegraph and telephone companies to erect lines along and parallel to railroads, cannot be taken in its primary and scientific meaning, as lines extending in the same direction, and in all parts equally distant, but, rather, is used in the sense of "conforming to," "having the same direction or tendency" with the railroad, in order to guard against any undue interference with or hindrance to the railroad company in the enjoyment of its property. If a telegraph company were not authorized to build its line along the railway's right of way, the building of the telegraph lines would be a matter of indifference to railroad companies, and the fact that they are mentioned in the statute leads one to the conclusion that they are entitled to build their lines over the rights of way of the railroad; and this construction is strengthened by section 1288, providing that a telegraph company may contract with any person or corporation or the owner of lands over which such line is proposed to be constructed. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Farmville & P. R. Co., 32 S. E. 468, 470, 96 Va. 661.

Code, § 1287, providing that telegraph companies may construct their lines along and parallel to any railroad, does not authorize the condemnation of a right of way along and upon the right of way of a railroad company. The lexicographers' definition of "along" is "by the length of," as distinguished from "across," and the words "parallel to," as used without it, would bear a signification dependent on the context or subject-matter, either as extended in the same direction, or having the same direction or tendency, or like and similar; but "parallel," when used with the word "along," means to run the line lengthwise, alongside, but equidistant from, the railroad right of way. Postal Tel. Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 14 S. E. 803, 805, 88 Va. 922.

PARAMOUNT.

The word "paramount," when used as descriptive of the rights which an electric car has in a street, means no more than that the right which such a car has in a street is only that other travelers shall turn off from its track in reasonable time to allow it to pass, but the car must be so managed as not to do any unreasonable injury to other travelers, and must be stopped if it appears that the other traveler is not turning out. Laufer v. Bridgeport Traction Co., 37 Atl. 879, 882, 68 Conn. 475, 87 L. R. A. 533.

PARAMOUNT TITLE.

The words "paramount title," in the rule that a tenant can only plead an eviction by a paramount title as an excuse for the non-payment of rent, are used in a general, and not technical, sense, to distinguish an eviction by one having lawful authority to hold, as against the tenant, from an eviction by a mere trespasser. The rule applies only where a tenant is evicted by one having the right of possession. Hoopes v. Meyer, 1 Nev. 433, 444.

PARANOIA.

"Paranoia" is the technical name of the form of insanity commonly known as "monomania." People v. Braun, 53 N. E. 529, 531, 158 N. Y. 558.

"Paranoia" is the name given to a group of mental conceits, of which the most characteristic is a sense of injury or unjust persecution, and consequently justifiable resentment or redress. Persons subject to paranoia are under a network of fixed and systematic delusions, and have impulses they do not resist, which at times take a form injurious to others, if the delusions so prompt. Winters v. State, 41 Atl. 220, 222, 61 N. J. Law, 613.

"Paranoia" is a form of mental distress known as "delusional insanity," and a person afflicted with such mental disease has a delusion or delusions which dominate, but do not destroy, the mental capacity, and, though sane as to other subjects, on that of the delusion and its direct consequences the person is insane. Flanagan v. State, 30 S. E. 550, 551, 108 Ga. 619.

PARAPHERNAL.

Code, art. 2383, provides that "all property which is not declared to be brought in marriage by the wife, or to be given to her in case of the marriage, or to belong to her at the time of the marriage, is paraphernal." This definition excludes donations given in case of the donor's intended marriage. Cambridge v. Grabert, 33 La. Ann. 246, 247.

PARAPHERNALIA.

"Paraphernalia," as used in the Spanish law, "is all the estate and things, whether movable or immovable, which the wife retains separately, and which are not comprehended in the dowry." Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 206, 255 (citing 1 M. & C. Paridas, 523).

At common law the paraphernalia of a wife was of two kinds—first, clothing, bedding, etc., suitable to her condition in life; and, second, her ornaments. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 Vt. 249, 251.

A wife's paraphernalia, which she is entitled to retain against the administrator of her husband, as exempt from the debts of the latter, comprise such apparel and ornaments as are suitable to her condition in life. A gold watch worth $100, the gift of a husband to his wife, cannot be considered as among the paraphernalia of the wife, when the husband at the time of the gift was a man of limited means or small property, and afterwards died insolvent. Vass v. Southall, 28 N. C. 301, 303.

The paraphernalia of a wife at common law consisted of such jewels, articles of luxury, or of personal ornament and decoration, as were used by the wife, and suitable to her condition. Such property could be disposed of by the husband during his lifetime, but he could not alienate it at his death; and the right of the widow to that portion of the estate was absolute and exclusive except as to creditors. A watch worn by a wife constitutes a part of her paraphernalia. Howard v. Menifee, 5 Ark. 668, 671.

PARCEL.

See "Separate Tracts or Parcels."

As a bundle or package.

"Parcel" signifies a part of the whole, taken separately, and has for one of its meanings "a small bundle." An indictment charging the theft of a parcel of oats, is sufficiently certain. State v. Brown, 12 N. C. 137, 138, 17 Am. Dec. 562 (citing Johns. Dict.).

Twenty ears of wheat constitute a parcel, but the word is not equivalent to "cock, mow, or stack"; and an indictment for setting fire to a parcel of corn is too indefinite, within 9 Geo. I, c. 22, making it a felony to set fire to any house, or any cock, mow, or stack of corn. Rex v. Judd, 2 Term R. 255, 256.

"Parcel," as used in Rev. St. § 3437, providing that friction matches in parcels or packages containing 100 matches or less shall be stamped with a one cent stamp on each parcel or package, means a small package. The word "parcel" being the diminutive of the word "package," it means a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling. The word "parcel" denotes a thing in form suitable for transportation or handling as an article of sale. A match box of capacity to hold less than 100 matches, which contains two sliding drawers, which are open on the top when drawn out, is but one parcel, inasmuch as each drawer is not of itself a parcel, in the mercantile sense. United States v. Goldback (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 1342.

A basket of fish may be described as a parcel, within St. 39 Geo. III, c. 58, requiring a forfeiture from every porter, or other person employed in the portage or delivery of boxes, baskets, packages, and parcels, who shall take for the same a greater sum than the prices fixed. Rex v. Douglass, 1 Camp. 212, 213.

As a tract of land.

A "parcel of land" or "parcel of real property" means a contiguous quantity of land in possession of, or owned by, or recorded as the property of, the same claimant, person, or company. State v. Jordan, 17 South. 742, 745, 36 Fla. 1.

The words "piece" and "parcel," as used in Acts 1891 (Ex. Sess.) c. 28, § 17, providing that, where taxes are collected for the filing of the bill for the collection of taxes, a fee of $1 to the attorney for each piece or parcel of land shall be paid by the owner, mean the same thing, and are used to designate that particular area of real estate which should be certified to the attorney as having been properly valued and taxed separate and apart from all other real estates. State v. Baldwin University, 37 S. W. 1, 2, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 358.

As used in 2 Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 4283, providing that unplatted lands shall be assessed for street improvement from the street line back 150 feet, and that when such land is subdivided or platted the land lying immediately upon such street, to the extent of 50 feet back therefrom, shall be primarily liable for the whole cost of the improvement, and, if insufficient therefor, then the second and other parcels in their order to the rear parcel of said 150 feet shall be liable in their order, "parcel," is synonymous with "lot," and does not refer to a strip of 50 feet. City of Terre Haute v. Mack, 38 N. E. 468, 470, 139 Ind. 99.

One of the many meanings of the term "parcel" is a number of things put up together. Where an auctioneer agreed to charge a fee of $25 for each parcel sold, and a number of lots of land were put up and sold for a gross sum, such sale constituted a sale of a parcel, within the meaning of the agreement, and he was not entitled to a separate fee for each lot sold. Miller v. Burke (N. Y.) 6 Daly, 171, 174 (citing Webster Dict.).

"Parcels," as used in an agreement to pay commissions for the sale of land, and, if the lands were sold in parcels, a part of the commission was to be paid as each parcel was sold, means portions, whether several or undivided. Johnson v. Sirret, 31 N. Y. Supp. 917, 918, 33 Hun, 317.

"Parcel," as used in Revision, § 781, directing the county treasurer "to make out a deed for each lot or parcel of land sold," at tax sales and in section 765 to "offer for sale separately each tract or parcel advertised," properly applies to a quarter, half section, and section, and a tax deed for a section is valid. In popular parlance, 40's and 80's are designated as fractions of a section, while sections, though they are constituent parts of a township, are never spoken of as fractions of it; a section being the unit of government subdivisions of land. Martin v. Cole, 38 Iowa, 141, 146.

A part of an estate may be described as a parcel. 1 Com. Dig. "Abatement," H, 51, "Grant," E, 10. Where the land comprised within a plat is by lines and figures thereon divided into separate tracts, each of them may properly be termed a parcel or tract, within Act March 2, 1874, § 2, providing that the fee of a recorder of deeds for recording plats shall be 8 cents for each tract, parcel, or lot therein. People v. Chase, 70 Ill. App. 42, 44.

O., as broker for four persons, bought a piece of land, which at their request was conveyed to three of them as tenants in common; one holding a quarter for the remaining purchaser, M., who was at that time unable to pay his share. Three of the purchasers, including M., then made a joint contract with O. to pay him $30 per acre on the sale of the land, or, if the same should be sold in parcels, to pay him proportionately. Subsequently, M. being still unable to pay his share, his undivided one-fourth interest in the land was conveyed to a stranger, who paid M.'s share of the purchase money, and stepped into his shoes. It was held that the conveyance of M.'s interest was not a sale of the parcel of the land, within the meaning of the contract, so as to entitle the broker to his commission. O'Brien, J., dissented, contending that the word "parcel," as used in the contract, was elastic enough to comprehend the sale made; he saying that it was a very narrow and most inequitable construction of the contract to hold that a part or parcel of the land was not alienated, that the contract should have a reasonable construction, and that the court had no right to say arbitrarily that the parties did not intend by the sale of the parcel the transfer of an undivided share, unless it could be shown that the word "parcel" necessarily means something different than "their share," in common language. The word "parcel" has a very wide and varied meaning, which clearly embraces such an interest as was conveyed in this case. Bouvier defines a parcel as part of an estate, and it is quite certain that a part of an estate was conveyed in this case. In the Century Dictionary it is defined as follows: "A part, either taken separately, or belonging to the whole; a share; a portion; a constituent or integral part; an indefinite quantity or value; a separate or separable part." It is obvious that the right and interest conveyed in this case was a share or a portion or a separable or integral part or an indefinite quantity, and therefore a parcel, within the fair import of the term. Johnson v. Sirret, 46 N. E. 1035, 153 N. Y. 51.

PARCEL OF MANSION HOUSE.

"Parcel," within the rule of the common law, which made it arson to burn a barn or outhouse which is a parcel of a mansion house, would not include a barn which is some 18 rods from the mansion house, and entirely disconnected and separated from the same by a highway. State v. Stewart, 6 Conn. 47, 48.

"Parcel," within the meaning of the rule of law which makes it burglary to break into a house which is a parcel of a mansion house, means a house which is somehow connected with or contributory to a mansion house, such as a kitchen, smokehouse, or other building which is usually considered a necessary appendage of a dwelling house. Palmer v. State, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 82, 89.

PARCEL SALE.

A parcel sale, as relating to the trade in grain, is of a definite quantity of grain placed in an ocean vessel with any other freight, to be delivered at a definite port, to which the vessel is bound by its charter. It is the ordinary sale transaction. Heyworth v. Miller Grain & Elevator Co., 78 S. W. 498, 499, 174 Mo. 171.

PARCENER.

The term "parceners" has a well-defined meaning at common law, and applies only to lands descended by inheritance. Elliot's Estate v. Wilson, 27 Mo. App. 218, 225, 226 (citing 2 Bl. Comm. 187).

PARDON.

See "Conditional Pardon."

A pardon is an act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. George v. Lillard, 51 S. W. 793, 794, 106 Ky. 820 (citing United States v. Wilson, 32 U. S. [7 Pet.] 150, 8 L. Ed. 640); People v. Court of Sessions of Monroe, 19 N. Y. Supp. 508, 510, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 355; State v. Peters, 4 N. E. 81, 87, 43 Ohio St. 629; Roberts v. State, 51 N. Y. Supp. 691, 692, 30 App. Div. 106; Territory v. Richardson, 60 Pac. 244, 245, 9 Okl. 579, 49 L. R. A. 440; In re Greathouse (U. S.) 10 Fed. Cas. 1057, 1061; People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 265, 50 N. W. 810, 14 L. R. A. 285.

A pardon is a remission of guilt. Carr v. State, 19 Tex. App. 635, 663, 58 Am. Rep.

395 (citing 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 898); State v. Page, 57 Pac. 514, 516, 60 Kan. 664; Territory v. Richardson, 60 Pac. 244, 245, 9 Okl. 579, 49 L. R. A. 440; Miller v. State, 49 N. E. 894, 896, 149 Ind. 810; United States v. Cullerton (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 717, 720; Moore v. State, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 203, 241, 39 Am. Rep. 558; Edwards v. Commonwealth, 78 Va. 39, 41, 49 Am. Rep. 877.

"Pardon" is defined as an act of grace which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. Moore v. State, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 203, 241, 39 Am. Rep. 558.

A pardon is an act of mercy flowing from the fountain of bounty and grace. Its effect, when it is a full pardon, is to obliterate every stain which the law attached to the offender; to place him where he stood before he committed the pardoned offense, and to free him from the penalties and forfeitures to which the law had subjected his personal property; to acquit him of all penalties annexed to the offense for which he obtains his pardon. United States v. Athens Armory, 35 Ga. 344, 362, 24 Fed. Cas. 878, 884.

A pardon, as the term imports, is an act of mercy and favor, and generally supposes its object guilty. A remission, on the contrary, is an act of justice, and cannot be obtained until the entire innocence of the petitioner be established. United States v. Morris (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1836, 1846.

A pardon is an act of Congress by which an offender is released from the consequences of his offense so far as such release is practicable and within the control of the pardoning power, or the officers under its direction. A pardon by the Governor is an act of sovereign grace, proceeding from the same source which makes conviction of crime a ground of exclusion from suffrage. The act of absolution is of as high derivation and character as the act of proscription. The pardon must be held to rehabilitate the person in all his rights as a citizen, and to deny to any officer of the state the right to impute to him the fact of his conviction. After the pardon he is as if he was never convicted. Jones v. Alcorn County Registrars, 56 Miss. 768, 769, 31 Am. Rep. 885 (citing Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. Ed. 442).

A pardon is an act of Congress, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. It is the private official act of an executive magistrate, delivered to the individual for whose benefit it is intended. Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436, 441, 62 N. W. 584, 585, 27 L. R. A. 573 (citing Chief Justice Marshall in United States v. Wilson, 32 U. S. [7 Pet.] 150, 8 L. Ed. 640).

Lord Coke says: "A pardon is a work of mercy, whereby the King either before attainder, sentence, or conviction, or after, forgiveth any crime, offense, punishment, execution, right, title, debt, or duty, temporal or ecclesiastical." According to Blackstone, the effect of a pardon is to make the offender a new man; to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to the offense for which he obtains his pardon; and not so much to restore his former as to give him a new credit and capacity. United States v. Oullerton (U. S.) 25 Fed. Cas. 717, 719. See, also, Dominick v. Bowdoin, 44 Ga. 857, 861.

Pardon is remission of guilt, amnesty, oblivion, or forgetfulness. The act of a board of managers, under the authority given them by a statute, in shortening the term prescribed by a sentence, and leaving the conviction of guilt unaffected, is not a pardon. Miller v. State, 49 N. E. 894, 899, 149 Ind. 607, 40 L. R. A. 109.

The effect of a pardon is to make the offender a new man, and to acquit him of all penalties and forfeitures. Cook v. Middlesex County Freeholders, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 326, 328.

The pardon of a treason or felony, even after a conviction or attainder, so far clears the party from infamy that he may not only have an action for a scandal in calling him traitor or felon after the time of the pardon, but he may also be a good witness notwithstanding the attainder or conviction. Hawk. P. C. A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender, and when the pardon is full it relieves the punishment and blots out the existence of the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching. If granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights. It makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity. There is only this limitation to its operation: It does not restore offices forfeited, or property or interests vested in others in consequence of the conviction and judgment. Edwards v. Commonwealth, 78 Va. 39, 41, 49 Am. Rep. 377.

The effect of a pardon is prospective, and not retrospective. It removes the guilt and restores the party to a state of innocence; but it does not change the past, or annihilate the established fact that he was guilty of the offense. The offender is purged of his guilt, and therefore is an innocent man, but the past is not obliterated, or the fact that he had committed the crime wiped out. In re Spenser (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 921, 923.

A pardon does not have the retroactive effect of determining that the judgment was erroneous, or the imprisonment under it unlawful, nor does it give the prisoner a right to sue for damages. Roberts v. State, 51 N. Y. Supp. 691, 692, 80 App. Div. 103.

A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It obliterates, in legal contemplation, the offense itself. In contemplation of law, it so far blots out the offense that afterwards it cannot be imputed to the offender to prevent the assertion of his legal rights. It gives him a new credit and capacity, and rehabilitates him, to that extent, in his former position. Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 377, 395, 48 Am. Rep. 462.

"A pardon, in its nature, is wholly exculpatory of the convict's criminality, remits the penalty, and, as it were, renews the man, and rehabilitates him in the garb of innocence." Young v. Young, 61 Tex. 191, 193.

A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense, and the guilt of the offender; and, when the pardon is full, it releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching. If granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights, and makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity. There is only this limitation to its operation: It does not restore offices forfeited, or property or interests vested in others, in consequence of the conviction and judgment. The power of the president of the United States to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment, is unlimited, with the exception stated; and it extends to every offense known to the law, and may be exercised at any time after its commission—either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment. This power of the president is not subject to legislative control. Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon, nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders. Thus an act of Congress requiring all attorneys to take the oath that they have not engaged in rebellion against the United States, or aided or assisted its enemies, as a condition to the right to practice law in the Supreme Court of the United States, is beyond the power of Congress, as affecting an attorney who has engaged in rebellion, and been pardoned by the president. Ex parte Garland, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 380, 18 L. Ed. 304.

The terms "pardon" and "reprieve" have been adopted into the Constitution of this state without defining or explaining them. The substance of the provisions of our Constitution relative to pardons and reprieves has been borrowed and adopted from the laws of England, and the construction or effect that is there given them was adopted with, and must be given to them here. The object sought to be accomplished by Cr. Code, § 214, providing "that whenever the Governor may deem it expedient and proper to reprieve any person under sentence of death, under any condition whatsoever, the condition on which such reprieve is granted shall be specified in the warrant, and the person accepting such conditional reprieve shall subscribe such acceptance on the warrant," etc., would, in my opinion, constitute a pardon, instead of a reprieve on condition. It would clearly have been so at common law. Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, 460, 28 Am. Rep. 762.

The effect of a pardon is to release from confinement; to restore to the status of citizenship and to the enjoyment of civil rights. A power to pardon is something more than a power to parole or a power to release from servitude. Pardon is the remission of guilt; amnesty; oblivion or forgetfulness. State v. Page, 57 Pac. 514, 516, 60 Kan. 604.

The word "pardon" is generic, and includes every character of pardon. Amnesty is a general pardon granted to a class of persons, by law or proclamation. The act in such case is as properly a pardon as if simply granted to an individual by deed. Indeed, it seems to be generally conceded in the United States that the word "pardon" includes amnesty. Thus Mr. Webster defines the latter word to be an act of oblivion; a general pardon of the offense of subjects against the government, or the proclamation of such pardon. So Worcester defines it as a general pardon granted to those guilty of some crime or offense. Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373. Pardon and amnesty are not precisely the same. A pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before, but usually after, conviction. But amnesty is to those who may be guilty, and is usually granted by Parliament or the Legislature, and to whole classes before trial. Amnesty is the abolition or oblivion of an offense. Pardon is its forgiveness. State ex rel. Anheuser Busch Brewing Ass'n v. Eby, 71 S. W. 52, 61, 170 Mo. 497 (citing State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242, 247).

The pardoning power, whether exercised under the federal or state Constitution, is the same in its nature and execution as that exercised by the English crown in this country in colonial times. One of the consequences of the executive pardon is to remove from the offender the disability which followed the conviction of a felony. An offender may be pardoned after he has suffered the punishment attached to his crime. An executive act restoring a convicted criminal to the rights of citizenship is not a pardon, and does not remove the legal infamy. People v. Bowen, 43 Cal. 439, 442, 13 Am. Rep. 148.

A pardon by the president of the United States, reciting that J. B. was convicted of passing a counterfeit bank note, and concluding as follows, "I do hereby remit unto him, the said J. B., the remainder of the said sentence, and order him to be liberated on payment of costs," restored competency to J. B. as a witness, since one of the consequences resulting from the sentence was the disability of the party to be sworn as a witness, and when all the sentence was removed, together with the consequences of the sentence, the disability was removed. Hoffman v. Coster (Pa.) 2 Whart. 453, 461.

The word "pardon," as used in the Constitution, authorizing the executive to grant pardons, does not authorize the executive to commute punishment, or nullify it, except by a pardon of the crime. The executive can relieve from punishment in no other way. A pardon therefore reaches the crime, and, when this is pardoned, the punishment ceases by operation of law. The executive cannot impose a condition in a pardon to the effect that the convict shall leave the state and never return. Commonwealth v. Hatfield, 2 Pa. Law J. 37, 40.

A pardon is a grant, a deed. It does not and cannot convey that which the grantor never had. The power of the President to grant and pardon all offenses against the United States does not extend to him the authority to release or destroy the rights of private individuals. Therefore he is not authorized to pardon for disobedience of a mandamus ordering certain county officers to levy taxes to pay a judgment recovered against the county. In re Nevitt (U. S.) 117 Fed. 448, 460, 54 C. C. A. 622.

The word "pardon" is generic, and embraces every character of pardon, including amnesty, which is a general pardon granted to a class of persons by law or proclamation. The constitutional power of the President of the United States to pardon includes amnesty. Davis v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373.

It is well settled that no technical words or terms are necessary to constitute a pardon, and in some of the ancient pardons a variety of language is to be found, such as "acquit," "pardon," "release," and "exonerate." In Pennsylvania the practice is to remit the sentence, and this is equivalent to a pardon of the offense. And in South Carolina an instrument signed by President Monroe, ordering "that the prisoner be forthwith released from prison," was decided to be a full pardon, on the ground that it accomplished all the benefit to the prisoner that is practicable, and seemed to be entitled to every liberty of construction that might not contravene any well-settled adjudications. Lee v. Murphy, 22 Grat. (Va.) 789, 799, 12 Am. Rep. 568 (citing Jones v. Harris [S. C.] 1 Strob. 160; Hoffman v. Coster [Pa.] 2 Whart. 453).

Amnesty distinguished.

Amnesty is a general pardon granted to a class of persons by law or proclamation. It is a general pardon of the offense of subjects against the Governor, or the proclamation of such pardon. Amnesty is included within the word "pardon," which is generic, and includes every character of pardon. Therefore the power of the President of the United States to pardon includes the right to grant an amnesty. Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373.

A pardon is a remission of guilt. An amnesty is an act of oblivion or forgetfulness. Ex parte Law, 85 Ga. 235, 296, 15 Fed. Cas. 3, 7.

A pardon relieves an offender from the consequences of an offense of which he has been convicted, while amnesty obliterates an offense before conviction, and in such case he stands before the law precisely as though he had committed no offense. United States v. Bassett, 13 Pac. 237, 239, 5 Utah, 131.

A pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before, but usually after, conviction, as distinguished from amnesty, which is granted to those who may be guilty. Amnesty is the abolition or oblivion of the offense. Pardon is its forgiveness. State v. Bialock, 61 N. C. 242, 247.

Conditional pardon or parol.

The word "pardon" includes remission of the offense, or of the penalties, forfeits, or sentences growing out of it, and may be a part or the whole of these things. Thus one may be pardoned of the imprisonment, and still be left to suffer the other penalties attached to the offense. In case of perjury this would still subject the convict to the disability of being a witness. The power conferred upon the executive by the Constitution to grant pardons includes the power of granting a conditional pardon. People v. Potter, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 177, 178.

The word "pardon," in a constitutional grant to the executive of power to pardon, was construed to include a conditional discharge, as such discharge is a conditional pardon. A pardon includes a parol. In re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 51 Atl. 10, 14, 73 Vt. 414, 56 L. E. A. 858.

A parole of a convict who remains in the legal custody, and under the control of the prison board, and subject at any time to be taken back within the inclosure of the penitentiary—such board having full power to enforce such rules and regulations, and to retake and reimprison any convict so on parole—is not a pardon. The prisoner is not discharged, or his term of service shortened; he only being allowed to go outside the building and inclosures of the penitentiary, and remaining in the legal custody and under the control of the board of managers of the penitentiary. State v. Peters, 4 N. E. 81; 87, 43 Ohio St. 629.

As requiring delivery.

The pardoning power, as exercised under our form of government, both federal and state, is essentially the same in its nature and effect as that exercised by the representatives of the British crown in the parent country, from whence we derive our system of common-law jurisdiction. A pardon alike under both systems of government has always been considered a mere act of grace or governmental forgiveness of an offense, by which the penalty of the crime is legally remitted. The proposition is undeniable that a pardon, in order to be complete, must, in contemplation of law, be delivered and accepted. In United States v. Wilson, 32 U. S. (7 Pet.) 150, 8 L. Ed. 640, it was said by Chief Justice Marshall that a pardon is a deed, to the validity of which delivery is essential, and delivery is not complete without acceptance. Ex parte Powell, 73 Ala. 517, 519, 49 Am. Rep. 71.

A pardon may be revoked at any time before its delivery. In re De Fuy (U. S.) 7 Fed. Cas. 506, 511.

As affecting forfeited property.

A pardon is an act of grace by which an offender is released from the consequences of his offense so far as such release is practicable and within the control of the pardoning power, or of officers under its direction. It releases the offender from all disabilities imposed by the offense, and restores to him all his civil rights. In the contemplation of the law it so far blots out the offense that afterwards it cannot be imputed to him to prevent the assertion of his legal rights. It gives him a new credit and capacity, and rehabilitates him to that extent in his former position. But it does not make amends for the past. It affords no relief for what has been suffered by the offender in his person by imprisonment, forced labor, or otherwise. It does not give compensation for what has been done or suffered, nor does it impose on the government any obligation to give it. The offense being established by legal proceedings, that which has been done or suffered while they were in force is presumed to have been rightfully done and justly suffered, and no satisfaction for it can be required. Neither does the pardon affect any rights which have vested in others directly by the execution of the judgment for the offense, or which have been acquired by others while that judgment was in force. If, for example, by the judgment, a sale of the offender's property has been had, the purchaser will hold the property notwithstanding the subsequent pardon. And if the proceeds of the sale have been paid to a party to whom the law has assigned them, they cannot be subsequently reached and recovered by the offender. So, also, if the proceeds have been paid into the treasury, the right to them has so far become vested in the United States that they can only be secured to the former owner of the property through an act of Congress. Where, however, property condemned, or its proceeds, have not thus vested, but remain under the control of the executive, or of officers subject to his orders, or are in the custody of the judicial tribunals, the property will be restored or its proceeds delivered to the original owner upon his full pardon. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 10 Sup. Ct. 281, 284, 188 U. S. 92, 83 L. Ed. 550.

As affecting liability for professional misconduct.

Though a pardon obliterates the offense against the public, and washes the offender white from the guilt that the criminal law saw in the act, it cannot take away the consequences of the act where private justice is principally concerned. If one had been indicted and convicted for arson, the pardon would not raise the building from its ashes, nor would it be a defense in a civil action. Consequently, where an attorney was convicted of forging the name of a third person to a note which he delivered to a client, and was afterwards pardoned for his offense against the criminal law, the pardon did not annul the act, or affect the right of the court to punish him for professional misconduct. In re An Attorney, 86 N. Y. 568, 564, 571, 574.

As a release from fines imposed.

The word "pardon" includes in itself the word "release," and it will therefore discharge an immediate debtor to the King, though it would not discharge process under which the King seized the goods of one who was a debtor to the King's debtor. Sid. 285; 17 Vin. Abr. 24. The effect of a pardon is to acquit the offender of all the penalties annexed to the conviction, and to give him a new credit and capacity. Where the King has nothing but a demand against the offender for a fine or a sum of money, a pardon of the offense, although after sentence, is a release of all fines imposed as punishment for it, for the reason that the word "pardon" includes in it the word "release." Cope v. Commonwealth, 28 Pa. (4 Casey) 297.

PARENT.

The words "parents and children," in Act April 26, 1855, authorizing actions by parents or children for the wrongful death of the parents of the children or children of parents, are used to indicate the family relation in point of fact as the foundation of the right of action, without regard to age. The only condition to recovery in such case is the existence of the family relation and a reasonable expectation to the person bringing the action of pecuniary advantage taken away by the death of the deceased. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Adams, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 499, 502.

The word "parent" or "parents" may be held to mean one or both parents. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 548—33.

The use in the Penal Code of any word expressive of relationship, state, condition, office, or trust of any person, as "parent," "child," "ascendant," "descendant," "minor," "infant," "ward," "guardian," or the like, or of the relative pronouns "he" or "they," in reference thereto, includes both males and females. Pen. Code Tex. 1895, art. 22.

Adopted parent.

"Parents," as used in statutes relating to the descent and distribution of estates of adopted children, should be construed to mean "natural parents," and not to include the adopted parents. Hole v. Robbins, 10 N. W. 617, 619, 53 Wis. 514, 519.

Ancestor.

"In England when the word 'issue' is used as the correlative of 'parent,' it is held that the word 'parent' means 'father and mother.' We think that, as a matter of verbal construction, it would be as easy and natural to say that, where the words 'parent' and 'issue' are used in connection with each other, the word 'parent' means 'ancestor'; and in the construction of any instrument it is always necessary to look beyond the literal meaning of the words." Jackson v. Jackson, 26 N. E. 1112, 1113, 153 Mass. 874, 11 L. R. A. 305, 25 Am. St. Rep. 643.

Father of bastard.

Father distinguished, see "Father."

In Gen. St. c. 110, §§ 1-10, regulating the adoption of children, and requiring notice of the proceeding to be given to the parents, "parent" is used in its legal significance, and is intended to designate only the lawful father or mother, and does not include the father of a bastard. Appeal of Gibson, 28 N. E. 296, 297, 154 Mass. 373.

"Parent," as used in a Pennsylvania statute to prevent the carrying away of and marrying young women without consent of their parents, etc., includes the putative or natural father. Macklin v. Taylor (Pa.) Add. 212.

Grandparent.

The definition of the word "parent," according to every lexicographer that we have had the opportunity to consult, is derived from "pario," to produce or bring forth, the regular participle of which would be "pariens"; but by some corruption it is usually written "parens," from which we have the word "parent" Anglicized, which is defined as "father or mother; he or she that produces young." This is the common understanding of the meaning of the term, and if it has ever been defined to embrace grandfather or grandmother we have not been able to meet with it. Smith's Ex'r v. Smith, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 520, 525.

The ordinary sense of the word is "father" or "mother," and it will not be held to include a grandfather. Silbey v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522, 530.

Mother.

"Parent," as used in Act Cong. Jan. 20, 1818, providing that no person shall be enlisted or held in the service of the United States without the consent in writing of his parent, guardian, or master first obtained, should be construed to include the mother. Commonwealth v. Callan (Pa.) 6 Bin. 255, 256.

"Parent," as used in the act of Congress requiring that a minor could not be enlisted in the army without the consent of his parent, would include the mother, where the father was not living. Ex parte Mason, 5 N. O. 336, 337.

"Parent" means one who still possesses some right to the custody or control of a child, which he or she can relinquish, as used in Rev. St. § 2279, providing that, in case the parent of any child is a nonresident at the time it is proposed to adopt the child, the written consent of such parent shall be filed with the probate judge, so that where the father had relinquished by his actions all custody of the child the mother will be considered the parent. Nugent v. Powell, 33 Pac. 23, 30, 4 Wyo. 173, 20 L. R. A. 199, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"Parent," as used in Code, § 2971, providing that a widow, or, if no widow, a child or children, may recover for the homicide of the husband or parent, and that if the suit be brought by the widow or children, and the former or one of the latter die pending the action, the same shall survive to the others, means mother, as well as father. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, 65 Ga. 55, 56.

The term "parent," in St. 1875, c. 99, § 15, giving the right to the parent of a minor to maintain an action for the selling of intoxicating liquors to such minor, includes both the mother and the father, and the mother may maintain such action without proof that the minor has no father. McNell v. Collinson, 130 Mass. 167, 169.

"Parent" means a father or mother, and under the express provision of the statute the word is made to include both males and females. A mother's written consent to the sale of intoxicating liquor to her minor child would absolve the seller from liability to the same extent as would the father's; and hence an indictment should negative the want of the written consent of the "parent," since the word includes both parents—male and female, father and mother. Lantaneser v. State, 19 Tex. App. 320, 321.

The term "parent," in Code 1890, § 1510, creating a liability for wrongful death of persons leaving widow, children, husband, or father, and providing that the action may be brought in the name of the widow for the death of her husband, or by the husband for the death of his wife, or by the parent for the death of a child, has reference only to the father of the deceased person, as he is the only parent expressly mentioned in the statute, and therefore a mother cannot sue. Amos v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 63 Miss. 509, 511.

Person in loco parentis.

The term "parent" includes a person standing in loco parentis, as used in Pen. Code, art. 490, providing that violence to the person does not amount to assault and battery when inflicted in the exercise of the right of correction given by the law to the parent over the child. Snowden v. State, 12 Tex. App. 105, 107, 41 Am. Rep. 667.

The word "parent" is understood in its strict sense, and does not extend to those who are sometimes said to stand in loco parentis, as used in a marriage act providing that an action may be maintained against a clergyman marrying a minor under the age of 21 years, unless a certificate in writing under the hand of the parent or parents, guardian or guardians, granting permission for such marriage, shall be filed. Castner v. Egbert, 12 N. J. Law (7 Hal.) 259, 260.

The strict legal signification of the term "parents" is the lawful father and mother of a child, but it may be questioned whether it does not mean more than this in the act of 1855, empowering the court to make a decreed of adoption with the consent of the parents of an infant, and whether the word ought not to be taken to mean those who stand in the relation of father and mother to the infant. Furgeson v. Jones, 20 Pac. 842, 847, 17 Or. 204, 3 L. R. A. 620, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808 (citing Hurley v. O'Sullivan, 137 Mass. 86).

Step-parent.

In the legal or ordinary acceptance of the term, "parent" does not include a step-father or stepmother, and a child has no right of action for the homicide of its step-father, under Civ. Code, providing that a widow, or, if no widow, a child or children, "may recover for the homicide of the husband or parent." Marshall v. Macon Sash, Door & Lumber Co., 30 S. E. 571, 572, 103 Ga. 725, 41 L. R. A. 211, 68 Am. St. Rep. 140.

Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2575, 2576, 2577, 2579, 2581, provide that where the parents of a minor live together the father is the natural guardian, but where the parents do not live together their rights are equal, and the guardianship may be assigned to either, etc. Under this statute it is held that the term "parent" does not include a step-father or stepmother. Heinemier v. Arlitt, 67 S. W. 1038, 1040, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 140.

PARENTAL AUTHORITY.

"Parental authority" implies restraint, not imprisonment. The Milwaukee Industrial School v. Milwaukee County Sup'rs, 40 Wis. 328, 337, 22 Am. Rep. 702.

PARENTAL INFLUENCE.

"Parental influence" is not terror and coercion, but kindness and affection, which may bias the child's mind and induce the child to do that which may be imprudent, and which, if the child were properly protected, it would never do. Appeal of Worrell, 1 Atl. 380, 385, 110 Pa. 349 (citing Turner v. Collins, 7 Ch. App. 329).

PARENTIS.

See "In Loco Parentis."

PARENTHESIS.

"A parenthesis is defined to be an explanatory or qualifying clause, sentence, or paragraph, inserted in another sentence, or in course of a longer passage, without being grammatically connected with it. Cent. Dict. It is used to limit, qualify, or restrict the meaning of the sentence with which it is connected, and it may be designated by the use of commas, or by a dash, or by curved lines or brackets; but the use of curves or of brackets unmistakably shows that the clause thus included was supposed by the author or by the scrivener to limit or restrict a general meaning of the language with which it is connected, or to be of importance in explaining the meaning." In re Schilling (U. S.) 53 Fed. 81, 83, 3 C. C. A. 440.

PARESIS.

The term "paresis" is used to designate the wasting away of the brain tissue, without softening. Lins v. Lindhardt, 29 S. W. 1025, 1028, 127 Mo. 271.

PARI DELICTO.

See "In Pari Delicto."

PARI MATERIA.

See "In Pari Materia."

PARIS GREEN.

"Paris green," as used in an indictment charging the offense of exposing a poisonous substance called "paris green," with intent that a certain animal belonging to another should take and eat the same, imports the poisonous nature of the substance exposed. State v. Labounty, 21 Atl. 730, 731, 63 Vt. 374.

PARIS MUTUAL.

"Paris mutual" is "also called 'French pool,' and is described to be a small machine containing the name of each horse to be run in the particular race, written or printed on the side, and printed numbers placed on the inside of a machine which can be seen through holes in it. It is used by the owner or person operating it, and by those engaged in betting on horse racing, in this way: The owner or operator sells the tickets for $5 each. They bear numbers corresponding with the number given the horse on the machine, and by turning a crank or screw attached to the machine the bettors are shown at once the number of tickets sold on each horse, as each of said tickets is sold, so as to enable him to bet intelligently and safely, and lessen the chance of disaster to himself." Commonwealth v. Simonds, 79 Ky. 618, 619.

PARISH.

Webster defines the word "parish" as a district of certain limits which can be altered without legal enactment. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Town of Oconto, 6 N. W. 607, 608, 50 Wis. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 840.

In France a parish was the ecclesiastical division of the territory—the spiritual, and in some particulars temporal, division; that is, the district in charge of a curate, and originally of the curati. The colonists of Louisiana became accustomed to similar divisions of territory in church matters. In the course of time it was used to indicate political divisions of the state. From the earliest days there were parishes in the territory—"paroisse" at first, and afterwards "parroquia," under Spanish rule; and when the state was admitted to the Union the French name was retained to indicate the civil divisions of the state. Sherman v. Parish of Vermillion, 51 La. Ann. 880, 882, 25 South. 538, 539.

"Parochia" or "parish" signifies, in a church sense, a competent number of Christians dwelling near together, and having one bishop, pastor, etc., or more, set over them. Therefore "parish," in this sense, is the same as a particular church or congregation. A whole diocese is one parish; it not exceeding in ancient times the bounds of a parish, or a small town, or a part of a town. Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 488, 490.

"A parish is one of the ecclesiastical subdivisions of the territory of England, and consists of that circuit of ground which is committed to the charge of one person, or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein, and the church therein is endowed with the tithes that arise within the circuit assigned." Wilson v. State, 34 Ohio St. 199, 201 (quoting 1 Bl. Comm. 111, 114).

In Pennsylvania the term "parish" has no special legal signification. It is used merely in its general sense. In English ecclesiastical law it has been used to designate the territory committed to the particular charge of a parson or priest. In the absence of a state church here, the status of a parish is rendered comparatively unimportant. If used in ecclesiastical divisions, it has just such importance and particular signification as may be given it under ecclesiastical regulations. Tuigg v. Treacy, 104 Pa. 498, 499, 499.

A parish is a corporation established solely for the purpose of maintaining public worship. Inhabitants of Milford v. Godfrey, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 91, 97.

A parish is understood to be the territorial jurisdiction of a secular priest, or a precinct, the inhabitants of which belong to the same church, or they may reside promiscuously, among people belonging to any church, and be resident in several villages. Hebert v. Lavoie, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 448, 454, 455.

The parish, or county, is denominated in the books and known in the law and in the decisions as a quasi or involuntary corporation, possessing some corporate functions and attributes; but they are primarily political subdivisions of a state merely. Fischer Land & Improvement Co. v. Bordelon, 27 South. 59, 62, 52 La. Ann. 429.

As city.

St. Vict. 9 & 10, c. 66, § 1, declares that no person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any pauper, from any parish in which he shall have resided for five years next before the application of the warrant. Held, that the word "parish" may be construed to mean city. Regina v. Inhabitants of Forncett, St. Mary, 12 Adol. & El. (N. S.) 160, 162.

County synonymous.

"Parish," as used in Rev. St. § 2011, providing that whenever two citizens of a city or town having more than 20,000 inhabitants, or ten citizens of a county or parish without reference to the number of inhabitants, may make known in writing to the judge of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Circuit wherein such city or town, county, or parish is situated, their desire to have the registration of voters of an election for a delegate in Congress, or the election of such representative, guarded and scrutinized, the judge shall open the Circuit Court at some convenient point in the Circuit for the appointment of supervisors, is synonymous with the word "county," and not with "town" or "township," which is the designation of a civil subdivision of a county. In re Supervisors of Election (U. S.) 28 Fed. 840, 841.

A parish, in Louisiana, is defined to be a civil division corresponding to a county in other states. Attorney General v. City of Detroit Common Council, 112 Mich. 145, 148, 70 N. W. 450, 87 L. R. A. 211 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

As coextensive with vill.

The laying of an indictment for maintaining a nuisance in a parish was sufficient. In the case of King v. Blower, Hill. 27 Geo. II, B. R., the court declared that it would take the vill and the parish to be coextensive, and they held that there were only two cases where it was necessary to lay a vill, which were upon the statute of additions and in appeal of death, under the statute of Gloucester, c. 9. Rex v. White, 1 Burrow, 838, 837.

As quasi corporation.

Towns, parishes, and proprietors of common lands who hold meetings and regulate their proceedings under divers provisions of statutes enacted upon those subjects are said to be quasi corporations. Hayden v. Middlesex Turnpike Corp., 10 Mass. 397, 400, 6 Am. Dec. 148.

PARISH CHURCH.

The expression "parish church" has various significations. It is applied sometimes to a select body of Christians forming a local spiritual association, and sometimes to the building in which the public worship of the inhabitants is celebrated; but the true local notion of a parochial church is a consecrated place having attached to it the rights of burial and administration of the sacrament. Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 18 U. S. (9 Cranch) 292, 326, 3 L. Ed. 735.

PARK.

See "Public Park."

The original meaning of the word "park," in law, was a tract of inclosed land, stocked with wild beasts of the chase, enjoyed by the owner through royal grant or immemorial prescription. In this definition a "park" is distinguished from a "chase" in the fact that the latter is not inclosed. So it is held that an act entitled "An act to incorporate the B. Park Association," and containing therein provisions punishing the killing of deer within the bounds of the land owned by the association, is not unconstitutional as defective in title, inasmuch as the title of the act gives notice of the intention to maintain a park, and that word indicates a purpose to do these things, which are included in the broadest definition of a park, so that provisions preventing such acts as the killing of deer may reasonably be expected to form a part of the legislation providing for the maintaining of a park. Commonwealth v. Hazen, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 487, 492, 498, 494.

The word "park," on a plat of land dedicated to the public, signifies a place open to every one, and it carries no idea of restriction to any part of the public, or to any specified number of persons. Restrictions as to time of entrance or behavior are conceivable, but that any class of people should be excluded is inconsistent with a park. Price v. Inhabitants of City of Plainfield, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 608, 618.

The word "park," written upon a block of land designated upon a map, carries with itself the idea of an open or inclosed tract of land for the comfort and enjoyment of the inhabitants of the city or town in which it is located, and is so defined by lexicographers. In England the word, when applied to an inclosed tract of land in the country, has a definite signification, and signifies that the lands inclosed are the private grounds of the proprietor. In this country, too, a man may inclose his own land and it may still be a park, or give that name to his place, without giving to the public any right to its use, for in such a case there would be no semblance of dedication; but the meaning of the word is to be determined by the circumstances connected with its use. In any city the term "park" signifies an open space intended for the recreation and enjoyment of the public, and this signification is the same, whether the word be used alone, or with some qualifying term, as "Central Park," "Hyde Park," etc. Archer v. Salinas City, 28 Pac. 839, 841, 93 Cal. 43, 16 L. R. A. 145; Steel v. City of Portland, 31 Pac. 479, 480, 23 Or. 176.

A park is variously defined to be a pleasure ground in or near a city, set apart for the recreation of the public; a piece of ground inclosed for purposes of pleasure, exercise, amusement, or ornament; a place for the resort of the public for recreation, air, and light; a place open for every one. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Schweickardt, 19 S. W. 47, 51, 109 Mo. 496 (citing Perrin v. New York Cent. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 120; Price v. Inhabitants of City of Plainfield, 40 N. J. Law [11 Vroom] 613).

"Park," as used in this country, means a tract of land in or near a city or town, and devoted to purposes of amusement, pleasure, or exercise, and a public use is implied by the term, in the absence of language or surrounding facts implying the contrary; and when the word "park" is marked on a city plat it implies a dedication to the public. Ehmen v. Village of Gothenburg, 70 N. W. 237, 238, 50 Neb. 715.

A municipal park is a tract of land set apart and maintained for public use, and laid out and planted and ornamented in such a way as to afford pleasure to the eye, as well as opportunity for open air recreation. Kleopfert v. City of Minneapolis, 95 N. W. 908, 909, 90 Minn. 158.

In discussing the decision in Wolbert v. City of Philadelphia, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 489, holding that "park" came within a provision relative to any public work erected or in progress of erection, the court said: "A park is made up in part of walks and roads, which are new constructions, and of ornamentation, with shrubbery and trees, which are set up in places in which they are planted, and of booths and summer houses, which are erected or built; and hence there is a sense in which to lay out and establish a public park may be held to be an erection or construction." City Sewerage Utilization Co. v. Board of Health (Pa.) 1 Leg. Gaz. 402, 403.

The term "park" or "square," as used in the act regulating the using of highways, etc., shall include any spaces under the control of park commissioners or a park board, or a special park department of a town or city having the power to make regulations relative to such places. Pub. St. N. H. 1901, p. 256, c. 93, § 2.

The terms "park" and "square," as used in the statutory provisions relating to the use of bicycles and tricycles, shall not include any spaces under the control of park commissioners, or of a park board, or a park department of a city or town having power to make regulations relative to such spaces. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 531, c. 52, § 12.

A municipal parkway is a street of special width, which is given a parklike appearance by planting its sides or center, or both, with grass, shade trees, and flowers. It is intended for recreation and for street purposes. In short, a parkway is essentially a boulevard, giving to the term its modern meaning. Kleopfert v. City of Minneapolis, 95 N. W. 908, 909, 90 Minn. 158.

A park is a piece of ground within a city or town, inclosed and kept for ornament and recreation. Withnell v. Petsold, 17 Mo. App. 669, 674.

Dedication.

The word "park," written on a block on a map of city property, indicates a public use, and conveyances made by the owner of the platted land by reference to such map operate conclusively as a dedication of the block. Rhodes v. Town of Brightwood, 48 N. E. 942, 943, 145 Ind. 21; Archer v. Salinas City, 28 Pac. 839, 841, 98 Cal. 43, 16 L. R. A. 145; Steel v. City of Portland, 31 Pac. 479, 480, 23 Or. 176; Price v. Plainfield, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 608, 612; People v. Green (N. Y.) 52 How. Prac. 440, 445; Ehmen v. Village of Gothenburg, 70 N. W. 237, 238, 50 Neb. 715.

The word "park," on a plat of a tract of land marking a certain territory as a "park," and adjoining territory as lots, which lots are sold by reference to the plat, operates as a valid dedication of the land designated as a park to the city; and this is true, even though following the word "park" are the words "now belonging to the person plotting the land." City of Bayonne v. Ford, 48 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 292, 293.

The word "park," written on a map of city property, appears conclusively as a dedication. Price v. Inhabitants of City of Plainfield, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom) 608, 613.

Common distinguished.

"Park" is not synonymous with "common." "Park" is defined by Worcester as "a piece of land inclosed for public recreation or amusement"; by Century Dictionary as "a piece of ground, usually of considerable extent, set apart and maintained for public use, and laid out in such a way as to afford pleasure to the eye as well as opportunity for open-air recreation;" and by Webster as "a piece of ground within a city or town inclosed and kept for ornament and recreation." A legal definition of a common is "an uninclosed piece of land set apart for public municipal purposes in many cities and villages of the United States." Goode v. City of St. Louis, 20 S. W. 1048, 1051, 113 Mo. 257.

Streets distinguished.

A park is a place of rest or recreation. It formerly denoted a private inclosure to restrain game; but it has acquired a much wider significance, departing from its original use, and is now ordinarily understood to mean, when applied to ground in a town or city, a tract of land set apart for ornament or to afford the benefit of air, exercise, or amusement. "Public parks," in the strictest sense of the term, cannot be said to be in any proper sense parts of a street. Streets and parks, while they are both devoted to the uses of the public, are set apart for widely different purposes; a street being a place of passage, while a park is a place of rest or recreation. Bennett v. Seibert, 35 N. E. 35, 38, 10 Ind. App. 369.

"A park," says Fancher, J., in People v. Green (N. Y.) 52 How. Prac. 440, 445, "is a piece of ground adapted and set aside for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement. It is not a street or road, though carriages may pass through it." Blair v. Granger (R. I.) 51 Atl. 1042, 1043.

Erection of buildings on.

In its ordinary and usual significance the word "park" imports a plot of ground in a city or town set apart for ornament; a place which the residents of the municipality may frequent for pleasure and exercise or amusement. It is, besides, conducive to health, furnishing to the citizens of crowded cities a place where they may breathe the pure air, untainted by smoke and noxious gases, so that the erection of a courthouse would be inconsistent with the dedication of land as a park. McIntyre v. El Paso County Com'rs, 61 Pac. 237, 240, 15 Colo. App. 78.

A park is a place to be kept open and ornamented for public uses, which may include anything conducing to the public pleasure, amusement, recreation, or health; and the building thereon of a public schoolhouse is inconsistent with such use and may be enjoined by the donor. Rowzee v. Pierce, 23 South. 307, 308, 75 Miss. 846, 40 L. R. A. 402, 65 Am. St. Rep. 625.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

"Parliamentary law," as generally understood, means the rules and usages of Par-filament or of deliberative bodies. Webst. Int. Dict. The recognized usages of Parliament and legislative assemblies by which their procedure is regulated. Bouv. Law Dict. A rule of parliamentary law is a rule created and adopted by the legislative or deliberative body it is intended to govern. Landes v. State, 67 N. E. 189, 198, 160 Ind. 479.

PARLIAMENTARY WILL

In the case of advancements, which we have seen only extend to what is undisposed of by will, the law steps in and makes what Lord Raymond calls a "parliamentary will." Arthur v. Arthur (N. Y.) 10 Barb. 925.

PAROL

"Parol," or, more properly, "parole," says Bouvier, "is a French word, which means literally 'word' or 'speech.' It is used to distinguish contracts which are made verbally, or in writing not under seal, from those which are under seal." Yarborough v. West, 10 Ga. 471, 473 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

PAROL AGREEMENT.

All contracts are by law distinguished into agreements by specialty and agreements by parol. If they be merely written, and not specialties, then they are parol. Jones v. Holliday, 11 Tex. 412, 415, 62 Am. Dec. 487.

"Parol agreements," within St. Me. Feb. 19, 1839, creating a lien in cases where work or labor are performed or materials are furnished by virtue of a written or parol agreement, includes all parol agreements, whether express or implied. Read v. Hull of a New Brig (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 354.

PAROL CONTRACT.

A contract not entirely in writing is a parol contract. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Reynolds, 118 Ind. 170, 173, 20 N. E. 711.

PAROL LEASE.

A parol lease is an agreement made verbally, not in writing, between the parties. In the common acceptance of the term, a parol gift of slaves would receive the same construction as a parol lease of land. Yarborough v. West, 10 Ga. 471, 473 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

PAROL LICENSE.

Mr. Freeman, in his note to Lawrence v. Springer, 24 Atl. 933, 49 N. J. Eq. 289, 31

Am. St. Rep. 713, 715, says: "A parol license is founded in personal confidence, and is defined to be an authority given to do some act or a series of acts on the land of another without passing any interest in the land. It is a complete answer and defense to a claim of adverse possession set up by the licensee, and is not assignable. At common law a parol license, to be exercised upon the land of another, creating an interest in the land, is within the statute of frauds, and may be revoked by the licensor at any time, no matter whether or not the licensee has exercised acts under the license or expended money in reliance thereon." The entry on the land of another and the expenditure of large sums of money in constructing a ditch, by a person having a mere personal license to enter on the land and construct and operate the ditch, will not estop the landowner or his successor from revoking the license, though the former knew when he granted the license that the licensee would make the improvements. Hicks v. Swift Creek Mill Co., 31 South. 947, 949, 133 Ala. 411, 57 L. R. A. 720, 91 Am. St. Rep. 38.

PAROLE.

Of convict as commutation of punishment; see "Commute—Commutation."

PARSON.

"Parson," as used in the ninety-first of the canons of 1603, providing that the parish clerk was to be appointed "by the parson or vicar, or, where there is no parson or vicar, by the minister of that place for the time being," describes the functionary, whatever title he may bear, who for the time being has the cure of the parish as principal. Pinder v. Barr, 4 El. & Bl. 105, 115, 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 235, 239.

PARSONAGE.

The ecclesiastical meaning of the word "parsonage" was "glebe (or land) and house" belonging to a parish appropriated to the maintenance of the incumbent or settled pastor of a church; but its modern general signification is in the sense of its being the residence of a parson, and it may be with land or without it. Wells' Estate v. Congregational Church, 21 Atl. 270, 271, 63 Vt. 116.

A parsonage house owned by a religious society stands upon a different footing than the church. There is no right of use in common in such parsonage house. It is not a sacred building, like a church edifice, but is, properly speaking, an endowment or source of pecuniary revenue to aid in support of the worship in the church proper. Its use is not spiritual, but temporal. Though it is ordinarily used as a residence for the pastor, there is nothing in its character or ownership to prevent its being used for other purposes, as circumstances may render it profitable or beneficial. It follows that the only right, legal or equitable, which any individual can have in such parsonage house, must be acquired either by a lease or grant from its legal or equitable owner, or from the enjoyment in common with other members of the society of the benefit of the pecuniary income derived from its occupation. The parsonage house is also called a "manse." Everett v. Trustees of First Presbyterian Church, 32 Atl. 747, 748, 53 N. J. Eq. (8 Dick.) 500.

"A parsonage is but a house in which a minister of the gospel resides, and has no more relation to public worship than the clothes he wears or the horse he rides." A church cannot receive a devise of property for a parsonage under a statutory provision authorizing it to hold a certain amount of land for purposes of public worship. Reeves v. Reeves, 78 Tenn. (5 Lea) 644-647.

A parsonage is not used for public worship, but is simply the residence of the pastor, who conducts public worship in another building devoted exclusively to that object. Where the buildings belong to a religious corporation, stand near each other, and on the same parcel of land, one being used for a church and the other for a parsonage, the latter is not exempt from taxation under the statute providing that every building for public worship shall be exempt from taxation. People v. Collison, 6 N. Y. Supp. 711, 712, 22 Abb. N. C. 5.

A parsonage is not a place for religious worship, within Const. art. 7, § 2, declaring that the Legislature may exempt "places of religious worship" from taxation. Wardens of St. Mark's Church v. City of Brunswick, 3 S. E. 561, 562, 78 Ga. 541.

PARSONAGE LANDS.

Parsonage lands are those of which a clergyman is seised in right of the town and by virtue of his office. Howard v. Witham, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 390, 393.

PART.

See "In Part"; "North Part"; "On the Part of."

Any part, see "Any."

"A part [Latin "pars"] is defined to be one of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided or regarded as divided; a piece; a fragment; division; a member; a constituent—and is synonymous with section." City of Cairo v. Bross, 9 Ill. App. (9 Bradw.) 403, 407.

6 Wds. & P.—20

The word "part" may mean section; share; division. Hand v. Hoffman, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 71, 79.

Rev. St. 337, providing that the inheritance of a son under certain conditions shall go to the father of the said person so seised of the inheritance, unless it came to the person so seised "on the part of his mother" by descent, means "from the line, the ancestors, the blood of the mother, as well as from the mother herself." Bante v. Demarest, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 431, 432.

As different pieces.

The term "part," in a deed conveying a tract of land, saving and excepting a small part of said tract, upon which rolling mill improvements now stand, has reference to quantity, as less than the whole, and, properly construed, is not to be taken as meaning necessarily that the part excepted is in one piece or parcel. This is the usual and ordinary signification of the word. As, when we say a part of Maryland is sandy, we are not to be understood that the sandy portion is to be found in one integral piece or parcel of the state's surface. Carroll's Lessee v. Granite Mfg. Co., 11 Md. 399, 409.

As half.

As used in a devise to testator's grandson of 350 acres of land, being the upper part of a tract of 700 acres, "part" was used as synonymous with "half." Williams v. Lane, 4 N. C. 246, 247, 6 Am. Dec. 561.

The word "part," in a will in which testator devised all the balance of his property to his sister for her life, and directed at her death that a part of it go to S., is to be construed as synonymous with "moiety," and in the absence of anything to indicate an unequal division it will be held to mean half of such property. Appeal of Lewis, 89 Pa. 509, 513.

The "westerly part of a street" means the westerly half of such street, as used in a notice by a city for the alteration of a street. Jones v. City of Portland, 57 Me. 42, 46.

A conveyance of the "west part N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ 20 acres," meant the west half of the 40-acre subdivision. Soukup v. Union Inv. Co., 51 N. W. 167, 168, 84 Iowa, 443, 35 Am. St. Rep. 317.

As interest.

A petitioner declared that he had succeeded to "a certain part" of the real estate left by said decedent by deed from S. It did not appear that any estate was left by decedent, except that described in the petition. Held, that the words quoted should be construed as meaning a certain interest in the property; the petition nowhere disclosing that petitioner claimed that his succession was to the entire interest in the property. In re Grider's Estate, 22 Pac. 908, 910, 81 Cal. 571.

As piece of machinery.

"Parts," as used in a contract of an agent of a sewing machine company to purchase from the company all parts and attachments, means portions or pieces of machinery, such as may be used for repairs. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Lyon (U. S.) 71 Fed. 374, 378.

As portion or share.

Where the testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, to be divided between a son and two daughters, the son to have a half part and the daughters the remainder, the word "part" means "share," and the son therefore takes one-sixth. Fulford v. Hancock, 45 N. C. 55.

The several words, "share," "part," and "portion," are very frequently used as synonymous. When applied to property acquired from one's ancestor, the word "portion" is the most comprehensive that can be used. It is broad enough to include, and is intended to cover, all the property or estate thus received. "Portion" is defined in Bouv. Law Dict. 350, to be that part of a parent's estate, or of the estate of one standing in the place of a parent, which is given to a child. Appeal of Lewis, 108 Pa. 133, 136.

As used in a will devising certain lands to testator's widow and children, at the death of the wife, and in case of the death of either of the children without a lawful heir begotten of his or her body, then "his or her part" should be equally divided among the survivors, "part" is broad enough in its obvious signification to cover everything bestowed on each child by the will, and must be so understood. Zollicoffer v. Zollicoffer, 20 N. C. 574, 575, 576.

As undivided part.

The term "part," in a statute providing that, if the verdict in ejectment be a part of the premises described in such declaration, which verdict shall particularly specify such part, may as appropriately be applied to an undivided as a divided part. Vrooman v. Weed (N. Y.) 2 Barb. 330-333.

Part of bill or statute.

"Part," as used in Const. art. 4, § 16, granting to the government power to disapprove of any item or items of any bill making appropriations of money, embracing distinct items, and the part or parts of the bill approved shall be the law, and the item or items of appropriation shall be void, is used interchangeably in the same sense with the word "item," which means the particulars, the details, the distinct and severable parts, of the appropriation. Commonwealth v. Barnett, 48 Atl. 976, 978, 199 Pa. 161, 55 L. R. A. 882.

The term "part," in a statute providing that all laws and parts of laws not inconsistent with certain other laws, shall be preserved, means a substantive member having such individual features that it can be treated as a distinct entity, and which might be imparted into the new law without marring its harmony or uniformity. Thus, where the statutory provision was in a general law providing a list of trades which should be licensed, and the repeal was of special charters given to license, tax, and regulate certain trades, to import one subject of taxation from the special charter and add it to the subjects embraced in the general law would not be warranted by the exception. City of Cairo v. Bross, 9 Ill. App. (9 Bradw.) 406, 407.

Parts of a day.

In a contract of employment for so much per day, and "proportionately thereto for parts of a day," such phrase does not include overtime. It refers evidently, not to something more than a day, but to something less; that is, to a part of a whole day. What was clearly meant was that plaintiff was to be paid so much for a whole day, and that, if he worked any part of a day, he was to receive only such part or portion of his day's wages as the time he worked bore to a whole day. The intention was that under certain circumstances the plaintiff might receive less than $5 per day, but there is no promise that he shall in any event be paid more. Gray v. Hall, 66 N. Y. Supp. 500, 501, 32 Misc. Rep. 683.

Part of a district.

The phrase "part of a district" does not mean a mere house or farm or tenement, but some recognized or new-formed division of property. Dorling v. Local Board of Health, 5 Ed. & Bl. 471, 483.

Parts of a dollar.

In Act Cong. 1793, declaring that "foreign silver coin shall pass current as money within the United States and be legal tender at the rates therein fixed: The Spanish milled dollar at the rate of 100 cents for each dollar. The actual weight whereof shall not be less than 17 pennyweights and 7 grains, and in proportion for parts of a dollar"—the "parts of a dollar" here adopted mean the same denomination in subdivision as established in domestic coin. United States v. Gardner, 35 U. S. (10 Pet.) 618, 622, 9 L. Ed. 556.

Part of goods sold.

Samples, if delivered as part of the bulk, are "a part of the goods sold," within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Talver v. West, 1 Holt, 178.

Part of the realty.

A stove, fitted, adapted, and designed for the use of the house built on a tract of land, passes by a conveyance of the land as part of the realty, in the absence of an agreement between the parties to the contrary. It is competent for the owner to sell the stove as personal property. A tree still standing is a part of the realty, and belongs to the owner of the soil on which it grew; but if he sells it for a valuable consideration, the purchaser may cut and carry it away, and the sale is a license for him to enter and to do so. A fence is a part of the realty, but it may be sold or reserved as personality. Folsom v. Moore, 19 Me. (1 App.) 252, 254.

Part of a stream.

The word "part," as used in a deed describing the premises as a certain part of a stream of water, and mentioning the two termini of the part, passes a right to use the whole water which flows between those termini. Bullen v. Runnels, 2 N. H. 255, 257, 9 Am. Dec. 55.

Part of a street.

Under the power to order the improvement of a street, or part of a street, the city council might order the improvement of one side. That is certainly a part of the street. State v. City of Portage, 12 Wis. 562, 566.

Part of a town.

"Part," as used in Laws 1895, c. 78, authorizing the use of voting machines, providing that, when adopted by a town, they shall be used at all elections in such town or in any part thereof, applies only to organized divisions of the town, and not to certain tracts of territory in the town which is unorganized. In re Taylor, 44 N. H. 790, 792, 150 N. Y. 242.

Part of trees.

The words "part of trees," as used in an act relating to diseased fruit trees, refers to black knot and pear blight only, and not to trees affected with yellows. 3 F. & L. Dig. 608, § 8.

Part of United Kingdom.

"Part," as used in St. 45 Geo. III, c. 92, § 3, enforcing the appearance of persons served with subpoena in one part of the United Kingdom to give evidence in another, means England, Scotland, and Ireland. Rex v. Brownell, 1 Adol. & Ell. 598.

PART DELIVERY.

See "Delivery in Part."

PART OWNERS.

The term "part owners," as used in Gen. St. c. 123, §§ 87, 88, in reference to the attachment of personal property belonging to two or more persons in a suit against one or more of the part owners thereof, is a term of common use in the law to denote a class of persons, distinct from partners, who own property jointly, but in a different manner and by a different tenure. The term does not aptly describe partners. Breck v. Blair, 129 Mass. 127, 128.

PART PAYMENT.

"Part payment," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 22, which provides that in any cause founded on contract, when any part of the principal or interest shall have been paid, an action may be brought in such case within the period prescribed for the same after such payment, means a voluntary payment made by the debtor himself or by some one authorized by him to make the payment, and does not include a payment made on a debtor's note by the sale of his property on execution or on any legal process whatever. Moffitt v. Carr, 67 N. W. 150, 152, 48 Neb. 403, 58 Am. St. Rep. 696.

In Brislin v. Farmer, 16 Minn. 215 (Gil. 187), it was remarked: "There is no doubt that a part payment, without words or acts to indicate its character, would not be construed as carrying with it an acknowledgment that more was due; i. e., it would not be evidence from which a jury would be warranted in inferring a new promise." A careful reading of the opinion of the court will make it evident that the words "part payment" are used as the equivalent of the words "payment of a part," and that the meaning of the court is that the payment of a part of a larger subsisting debt, as a part thereof, if unaccompanied by facts or circumstances of a contrary or inconsistent tendency, may be evidence from which a new promise can probably be inferred. Young v. Perkins, 12 N. W. 515, 516, 29 Minn. 173.

Payment of interest on a note by the maker, and indorsement thereof on the note by the holder is a "part payment," so as to take the note out of the statute of limitations. Yesler v. Koslowski, 8 Pac. 493, 2 Wash. T. 407.

The word "payment," as used in a statute providing that a part payment removes the bar of limitations, is used in its liberal and general sense. In an action on a note, it appeared that it was made in 1883, with the understanding that, if the amount named in it exceeded the true indebtedness of the maker, it should be made right; that in 1890 it was found that the amount was too large, and the difference was by direction of the maker indorsed on the note as a payment as of the date of the note. Held, that such indorsement was in effect a payment at the time it was made in 1890, and removed the note from the bar of limitations. Bouton v. Hill, 88 N. Y. Supp. 498, 501, 4 App. Div. 251.

PART PERFORMANCE.

The act of part performance of a verbal agreement for service must be such that it would be a fraud on the party performing for the other party to refuse to perform his part as agreed between them. Svanburg v. Fosseen, 78 N. W. 4, 8, 75 Minn. 850, 43 L. R. A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490.

In order to justify a decree of specific performance of a verbal agreement for the sale of real estate, the acts of part performance relied on to escape the operation of the statute of frauds must be clearly, definitely, and satisfactorily shown, and it must appear that such facts were done with reference to and in pursuance of the contract. Continued possession by a tenant is not such a part performance of a verbal contract for the purchase of land as to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Lewis v. North, 87 N. W. 312, 314, 62 Neb. 552.

The principle on which courts enforce oral agreements within the statute of frauds on the ground of part performance is that, when one of the parties has been induced to alter his situation on the faith of the oral agreement to such an extent that a refusal to enforce it would result, not merely in the denial of the rights which the agreement was intended to confer, but in the infliction of an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss to him, the other party will be held estopped by force of his acts from setting up the statute; but the acts constituting such part performance must have been in reliance on and in pursuance of the oral agreement, and must be related to and connected with it, though such acts are not confined to doing what the contract stipulates. Brown v. Hoag, 35 Minn. 373, 376, 29 N. W. 135.

PART THEREOF.

Within the meaning of the statute which makes it the duty of the auditor to transfer for taxation in the name of the owner lands, town lots, and parts thereof which have been conveyed, a building, whenever it is a permanent improvement, is "land," for the purpose of taxation, and the words "part thereof" may apply to the improvement, as well as to the lot on which it stands, and may consist of a part of the building by metes and bounds, or definite description of a separate part, or of an individual aliquot part of the whole, provided the conveyance in terms conveys the ownership in the estate which is liable to be assessed. And it is immaterial whether the building be divided by such conveyance by vertical lines or horizontal lines. On a conveyance of the second story of a building, it is the duty of the auditor to transfer such part of the building to the new owner. Cincinnati College v. Yeatman, 80 Ohio St. 276.

PART WITH.

In a covenant in a lease not to let, sell, assign, transfer, set over, or otherwise part with the premises or the lease, the words "otherwise part with" mean to assign, to part with the possession of; and the covenant was not broken by a deposit of the lease as security for goods supplied to the house. Pitt v. Hogg, 4 Dowl. & B. 226, 228.

In a devise of an estate to B., but, in case B. shall depart this life without leaving any issue and shall not have disposed and parted with his interest, then the same shall go to the use of C., the words "parted with" are used in opposition to the more generally used word "disposed," and mean parting with the estate by the devisee by a conveyance that was to have its complete effect and operation in his lifetime. Stevenson v. Glover, 1 Man. G. & S. 448, 459.

PARTLY.

An act of incorporation authorizing the purchase of any railroad partly or wholly completed does not apply to a private railroad built from iron to mine works, wherefrom the rails have been removed by an order of court. Appeal of McCandless, 70 Pa. (20 P. F. Smith) 210.

Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, prescribing a certain duty on "partly made cotton wearing apparel," does not include cotton hemstitched lawns, imported in pieces of from 28 to 80 yards in length and 45 inches wide, turned over and sewed down on one side of the fabric, the body of the goods being a homogeneous cotton cloth containing from 150 to 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, but open-work patterns and figures, made by drawing out threads, appearing continuously on certain parts of the goods; the merchandise being chiefly used for women's and girl's dresses, skirts, and aprons, the broad hem constituting a part of such garments when made up, but the material being also sold for sash curtains. It is dutiable as "manufactures of cotton," under another section of the act. In re Mills (U. S.) 58 Fed. 820, 821.

PARTAKER.

In a will providing that M. shall be partaker of my whole estate, both real and personal, and, again, that the issue, male or female, from the body of my daughter M., shall be next partaker, by the use of the word "partaker" the testator meant the same as though he had used the word "taker," and the will constituted a dispossession of the whole estate, subject to the conditions therein named. Eman v. Eman, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 967, 971, 972.

"Partaker" implies activity of one who has a part or interest in any action, matter, or thing; and where the sheet of a sail on a ship parted, injuring one of the crew, the owners of the vessel were not in that sense partakers in the cause of the injury to the same. Quinlan v. Pew (U. S.) 56 Fed. 111, 117, 5 C. C. A. 438.

PARTIAL

Of, pertaining to, or affecting, a part only; not general or universal; not total or entire. Webst. Dict.

PARTIAL ACCOUNT.

A partial or annual account of an administrator is only a judgment de bene esse, often rendered ex parte, and only prima facie correct. On final settlement it may be opened to correct errors due to fraud or mistake, although the error was not excepted to or appealed from when the partial account was rendered. Marshall v. Coleman, 58 N. E. 623, 632, 187 Ill. 556.

The term "partial accounts," in the orphan's court, implies ipso facto that nothing is settled by it but these matters constituting the items or accounts in the statement itself. Shriver v. Garrison, 30 W. Va. 458, 469, 4 S. E. 660, 668 (citing Appeal of Leslie, 63 Pa. [13 P. F. Smith] 355).

PARTIAL ASSIGNMENT.

A partial assignment for the benefit of creditors is one which omits some substantial portion of a debtor's property, and cannot be made to rest upon a mere colorable omission. An assignment which does not assign all the debtor's property, but substantially all, so that for the purpose of continuing his business or paying his debts or future subsistence he might just about as well include the part omitted, is not a partial assignment. If the property omitted was insignificant in amount with reference to the whole, or if it was mainly beyond the reach of process, or exempt from process, or of such a character as not readily to be made available either to the creditors or to the debtor, and the great mass of the debtor's available property, which constituted the basis of his business operations, and which could alone form any reliance to himself for support or to his creditors for payment, was in the deed, the deed should not be regarded as a partial assignment. Short of this, an assignment, being in terms partial, should be considered as a partial assignment, and not made in bad faith toward the statute of 1843, which provides that all general assignments made by debtors for the benefit of creditors shall be null and void as against the debtors of such creditors. Mussey v. Noyes, 26 Vt. 462, 474.

PARTIAL AVERAGE.

Partial or particular average arises where expenses are incurred for the benefit of only the ship or freight or cargo, and not all of them combined, in which case only the thing benefited is liable for the expense. For instance, if there should be a capture of a neutral ship, solely on account of a cargo which is owned by different persons, who are shippers, and no proceedings are had against the ship, but against the cargo only, the expenses occasioned thereby will be apportioned upon the owners of the cargo, and are only a partial loss thereof, and not a general average; for such expenses are not for the benefit of the ship or freight, which, therefore, do not contribute thereto. Peters v. Warren Ins. Co. (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 370, 371.

PARTIAL DEFENSE.

A partial defense is a defense which only tends to mitigate plaintiff's damages. Carter v. Eighth Ward Bank, 67 N. Y. Supp. 300, 303, 33 Misc. Rep. 128.

PARTIAL EVIDENCE.

Partial evidence is that which goes to establish a detached fact in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, subject to be rejected, as incompetent, unless connected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts. For example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remote occupant is partial; for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be afterwards connected with the fact in dispute. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1834; Ann. Codes & Sta. Or. 1901, § 687.

PARTIAL INSANITY.

"Partial insanity" is used to designate the condition of a man who is mad as to a particular subject, but sane as to all other subjects. In that species of madness it is plain that he is a responsible agent, if he were not instigated by his madness to perpetrate the act. He continues to be a legitimate subject of punishment, though he may have been laboring under a moral obliquity of perception, as much so as if he were morally laboring under an obliquity of vision. A man whose mind squints, unless impelled to crime by this very mental obliquity, is as much amenable as one whose eye squints. Commonwealth v. Mosler, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 264, 266; Commonwealth v. Wireback, 42 Atl. 542, 545, 190 Pa. 138, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. 508, 509; Commonwealth v. Barner, 49 Atl. 60, 64, 199 Pa. 335.

"Partial insanity" means, not some intermediate stage in the development of mental derangement, but disturbance at some particular point, not involving the mind at any other point. A person thus affected is said to be under the influence of a delusion. A will made under the influence of such delusion is the result of the peculiar form of insanity generally spoken of as "partial insanity." Partial insanity, according to Dr. Hammond, is a derangement of one or more faculties of the mind, which prevents freedom of action. Trich's Ex'r v. Trich, 80 Atl. 1053, 1056, 165 Pa. 586, 44 Am. St. Rep. 679.

"Experience and observation show that in almost all the cases involving insanity, where it is sufficiently apparent that disease has attacked the mind in some form and to some extent, it has not wholly obliterated the will, the conscience, and mental power, but has left its victim in some degree of ability in some or all these qualities. It may destroy, or it may only impair and becloud, the whole mind, or it may destroy, or only impair, the functions of one or more faculties of the mind. There seem to be cases where, as Erskine said in Hadfield's Case, reason is not driven from her seat, but where distraction sits down upon it along with her, trembling upon it, and frightens her from her propriety. The term "partial insanity" has been applied to such cases by writers and judges from Lord Hale to Chief Justice Shaw, where, as has been said, the mind may be clouded and weakened, but not incapable of remembering, reasoning, and judging; and it is here that the difficulty of the subject begins, and that confusion and contradiction in the authorities make their appearance. No one can say where twilight ends or begins, but there is ample distinction between night and day. State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 383, 9 Am. Rep. 242.

Lord Hale says: "There is a partial insanity of mind and a total insanity. In the first, as it respects particular things or persons, or in respect to degrees, which is the condition with very many, especially melancholy persons, who for the most part discover their defect in excessive fears and griefs, and yet are not wholly destitute of the use of reason." Partial insanity is frequently designated by the name "monomania." Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 192, 205.

PARTIAL LAW.

A "partial law" is a law which embraces within its provisions only a portion of those persons who exist in the same state and are surrounded by like circumstances. Hatcher v. State, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea) 368, 371.

PARTIAL LOSS.

"Partial loss," properly so called, is a total loss of a part of the interest insured. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold (N. Y.) 14 Wend. 399, 472.

A partial loss of an insured vessel arises where an injury results to the vessel from the peril insured against, but where the loss is neither actually or constructively total. Globe Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 50, 65.

The term "partial loss," as employed in an insurance policy, is to be understood in its natural and usual sense, subject to such modifications of its ordinary import as may be necessary to the ascertainment of the actual understanding and intent of the parties, and where plaintiff's loss was about $3,900, some $70 being saved from the wreck, the loss was not partial. Singleton v. Boone County Home Mut. Ins. Co., 45 Mo. 250, 254.

In an insurance policy covering a vessel and cargo, a provision that the underwriters are not liable for any partial loss upon vessel or freight under 5 per cent., excepting a general average, means by "partial loss" a damage sustained by the ship or cargo which falls upon the respective owners of the property so damaged, and, when happening from any peril insured against by the policy, the owners are to be indemnified by the underwriters, unless in cases of trifling demands within the exception; and where a vessel and cargo were injured by a peril insured against, the underwriters were not liable for partial loss occasioned by damage to the vessel of less than 5 per cent., but were liable to the owners for the amount of their contribution to the general average. Padelford v. Boardman, 4 Mass. 548, 549, 551.

A partial loss of freight is occasioned by the loss of the ship, after a part of the voyage is performed, which makes it necessary to hire another ship to carry on the cargo to the port of destination in order to earn freight; and when freight pro rata is earned this is a case of partial loss. Where a part of a voyage has been performed, and the master sends on the goods by another ship, at a price less than the whole freight, then freight pro rata is earned, and the loss is only a partial one. Where a steamboat, whose freight list is insured against a total loss merely, meets with a disaster upon the contemplated trip, and cannot be repaired in a reasonable time, so as to transport the cargo, and the master is unable to send the cargo forward to its place of destination for a sum less than the original freight, there is a total, and not a partial, loss within the meaning of the policy. Willard v. Millers' &

Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 80 Mo. 35, 38, 40 (citing Phil. Ins. § 1440).

Every loss which is not total is partial. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4566; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1912.

PARTIAL RESTRAINT.

A "partial restraint," in the law relative to contracts in restraint of trade, is that which is restricted in its operation in respect to place; and this may be made in express terms, or it may result from a construction of the contract, when viewed in the light of the environments and circumstances surrounding the contracting parties. An agreement not to engage in a certain business in a stated place or within a reasonable limited territory is not invalid because of a failure to specify any limitation of time as to its duration; and hence a contract where a physician, in consideration of the purchase of his practice in a certain city, agreed not to practice therein, was not against public policy. McCurry v. Gibson, 18 South. 806, 807, 108 Ala. 451, 54 Am. St. Rep. 177.

PARTIAL VERDICT.

A verdict which finds only one or two out of many facts, which are all necessary to constitute the offense, and saying nothing of the residue, is not a "partial verdict," in the technical sense of those words. United States v. Watkins (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 419, 421.

A partial verdict is one by which the jury in a criminal case acquit the defendant as to part of the accusation and find him guilty of the residue; and where the jury simply find defendant guilty under "the first and third counts" it is a complete, certain, and valid verdict, and if they add, "We disagree as to the second count," the additional words do not qualify the previous meaning, and are therefore to be regarded as surplusage, and the verdict is valid. State v. McGee, 33 S. E. 353, 355, 55 S. O. 247, 74 Am. St. Rep. 741.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

One who assists another in any manner in carrying out a fraudulent purpose is a "particeps criminis." It is utterly immaterial what means he resorts to. If he invokes and adopts them to aid in the perpetration of a fraud, he forfeits thereby the countenance of the law, and is a joint tortfeasor. Alberger v. White, 23 S. W. 92, 98, 117 Mo. 847.

PARTICIPATE.

The word "participate" is derived from two Latin words, "pars," meaning part, and

"capio," meaning to take; and hence it means to take part, to share in common with others. Reardon v. State, 4 Tex. App. 602, 611.

Expert evidence that the word "participate" has a technical significance or meaning in the business of life insurance, and when used in connection with a premium or policy means a sharing of any and all profits accruing to the company or class to which the individual or policy belongs, held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATING POLICY.

Expert evidence to show that the words "participating policy" mean the same as "participating premiums" held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATING PREMIUMS.

Expert testimony to show that the term "participating premiums," when used in connection with life insurance, means to share in all profits arising from the premiums paid by insured and by all others belonging to his class, and in all profits arising from the payment or derived from such payment of premiums, held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATION.

Participation in a crime does not include mere consent, where no aid is given and no encouragement rendered. State v. Orrick, 17 S. W. 176, 178, 106 Mo. 111.

PARTICULAR.

A will directed that testator's children agree among themselves to sell, on such time or for cash, as they may think best, the residue of all his property. No executor was named in the will. By the codicil testator appointed an executor, and desired him "to execute such will in every particular as therein I have set forth and expressed." In construing this clause, the court held that the power of sale vested in testator's children was revoked, and such power given to the executor named in the codicil, the sale of the property being an essential particular of the will to be executed, and that the executor could not execute the will in every particular without performing that duty. McKenzie v. Roleson, 28 Ark. 102, 109.

The authority given the board of public works by the charter of the city of Grand Rapids to determine the "particular kind and quality of materials to be used," when the council decides that any public work is a to crime by this very mental obliquity, is as much amenable as one whose eye squints. Commonwealth v. Mosler, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 264, 266; Commonwealth v. Wireback, 42 Atl. 542, 545, 190 Pa. 138, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. 506, 509; Commonwealth v. Barner, 49 Atl. 60, 64, 199 Pa. 335.

"Partial insanity" means, not some intermediate stage in the development of mental derangement, but disturbance at some particular point, not involving the mind at any other point. A person thus affected is said to be under the influence of a delusion. A will made under the influence of such delusion is the result of the peculiar form of insanity generally spoken of as "partial insanity." Partial insanity, according to Dr. Hammond, is a derangement of one or more faculties of the mind, which prevents freedom of action. Trich's Ex'r v. Trich, 30 Atl. 1053, 1056, 165 Pa. 586, 44 Am. St. Rep. 679.

"Experience and observation show that in almost all the cases involving insanity, where it is sufficiently apparent that disease has attacked the mind in some form and to some extent, it has not wholly obliterated the will, the conscience, and mental power, but has left its victim in some degree of ability in some or all these qualities. It may destroy, or it may only impair and becloud, the whole mind, or it may destroy, or only impair, the functions of one or more faculties of the mind. There seem to be cases where, as Erskine said in Hadfield's Case, reason is not driven from her seat, but where distraction sits down upon it along with her, trembling upon it, and frightens her from her propriety. The term "partial insanity" has been applied to such cases by writers and judges from Lord Hale to Chief Justice Shaw, where, as has been said, the mind may be clouded and weakened, but not incapable of remembering, reasoning, and judging; and it is here that the difficulty of the subject begins, and that confusion and contradiction in the authorities make their appearance. No one can say where twilight ends or begins, but there is ample distinction between night and day. State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 383, 9 Am. Rep. 242.

Lord Hale says: "There is a partial insanity of mind and a total insanity. In the first, as it respects particular things or persons, or in respect to degrees, which is the condition with very many, especially melancholy, persons, who for the most part discover their defect in excessive fears and griefs, and yet are not wholly destitute of the use of reason." Partial insanity is frequently designated by the name "monomania." Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 192, 205.

PARTIAL LAW.

A "partial law" is a law which embraces within its provisions only a portion of those persons who exist in the same state and are surrounded by like circumstances. Hatcher v. State, 80 Tenn. (12 Lea) 368, 371.

PARTIAL LOSS.

"Partial loss," properly so called, is a total loss of a part of the interest insured. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold (N. Y.) 14 Wend. 399, 472.

A partial loss of an insured vessel arises where an injury results to the vessel from the peril insured against, but where the loss is neither actually or constructively total. Globe Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 50, 65.

The term "partial loss," as employed in an insurance policy, is to be understood in its natural and usual sense, subject to such modifications of its ordinary import as may be necessary to the ascertainment of the actual understanding and intent of the parties, and where plaintiff's loss was about $3,900, some $70 being saved from the wreck, the loss was not partial. Singleton v. Boone County Home Mut. Ins. Co., 45 Mo. 250, 254.

In an insurance policy covering a vessel and cargo, a provision that the underwriters are not liable for any partial loss upon vessel or freight under 5 per cent., excepting a general average, means by "partial loss" a damage sustained by the ship or cargo which falls upon the respective owners of the property so damaged, and, when happening from any peril insured against by the policy, the owners are to be indemnified by the underwriters, unless in cases of trifling demands within the exception; and where a vessel and cargo were injured by a peril insured against, the underwriters were not liable for partial loss occasioned by damage to the vessel of less than 5 per cent., but were liable to the owners for the amount of their contribution to the general average. Padelford v. Boardman, 4 Mass. 548, 549, 551.

A partial loss of freight is occasioned by the loss of the ship, after a part of the voyage is performed, which makes it necessary to hire another ship to carry on the cargo to the port of destination in order to earn freight; and when freight pro rata is earned this is a case of partial loss. Where a part of a voyage has been performed, and the master sends on the goods by another ship, at a price less than the whole freight, then freight pro rata is earned, and the loss is only a partial one. Where a steamboat, whose freight list is insured against a total loss merely, meets with a disaster upon the contemplated trip, and cannot be repaired in a reasonable time, so as to transport the cargo, and the master is unable to send the cargo forward to its place of destination for a sum less than the original freight, there is a total, and not a partial, loss within the meaning of the policy. Willard v. Millers' &

Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 80 Mo. 35, 38, 40 (citing Phil. Ins. § 1440).

Every loss which is not total is partial. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4586; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1912.

PARTIAL RESTRAINT.

A "partial restraint," in the law relative to contracts in restraint of trade, is that which is restricted in its operation in respect to place; and this may be made in express terms, or it may result from a construction of the contract, when viewed in the light of the environments and circumstances surrounding the contracting parties. An agreement not to engage in a certain business in a stated place or within a reasonable limited territory is not invalid because of a failure to specify any limitation of time as to its duration; and hence a contract where a physician, in consideration of the purchase of his practice in a certain city, agreed not to practice therein, was not against public policy. McCurry v. Gibson, 18 South. 806, 807, 108 Ala. 451, 54 Am. St. Rep. 177.

PARTIAL VERDICT.

A verdict which finds only one or two out of many facts, which are all necessary to constitute the offense, and saying nothing of the residue, is not a "partial verdict," in the technical sense of those words. United States v. Watkins (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 419, 421.

A partial verdict is one by which the jury in a criminal case acquit the defendant as to part of the accusation and find him guilty of the residue; and where the jury simply find defendant guilty under "the first and third counts" it is a complete, certain, and valid verdict, and if they add, "We disagree as to the second count," the additional words do not qualify the previous meaning, and are therefore to be regarded as surplusage, and the verdict is valid. State v. McGee, 33 S. E. 353, 355, 55 S. C. 247, 74 Am. St. Rep. 741.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

One who assists another in any manner in carrying out a fraudulent purpose is a "particeps criminis." It is utterly immaterial what means he resorts to. If he invokes and adopts them to aid in the perpetration of a fraud, he forfeits thereby the countenance of the law, and is a joint tortfeasor. Alberger v. White, 23 S. W. 92, 93, 117 Mo. 347.

PARTICIPATE.

The word "participate" is derived from two Latin words, "pars," meaning part, and

"capio," meaning to take; and hence it means to take part, to share in common with others. Reardon v. State, 4 Tex. App. 602, 611.

Expert evidence that the word "participate" has a technical significance or meaning in the business of life insurance, and when used in connection with a premium or policy means a sharing of any and all profits accruing to the company or class to which the individual or policy belongs, held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATING POLICY.

Expert evidence to show that the words "participating policy" mean the same as "participating premiums" held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATING PREMIUMS.

Expert testimony to show that the term "participating premiums," when used in connection with life insurance, means to share in all profits arising from the premiums paid by insured and by all others belonging to his class, and in all profits arising from the payment or derived from such payment of premiums, held admissible. Fry v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York (Tenn.) 88 S. W. 116, 126.

PARTICIPATION.

Participation in a crime does not include mere consent, where no aid is given and no encouragement rendered. State v. Orrick, 17 S. W. 176, 178, 106 Mo. 111.

PARTICULAR.

A will directed that testator's children agree among themselves to sell, on such time or for cash, as they may think best, the residue of all his property. No executor was named in the will. By the codicil testator appointed an executor, and desired him "to execute such will in every particular as therein I have set forth and expressed." In construing this clause, the court held that the power of sale vested in testator's children was revoked, and such power given to the executor named in the codicil, the sale of the property being an essential particular of the will to be executed, and that the executor could not execute the will in every particular without performing that duty. McKenzie v. Roleson, 28 Ark. 102, 109.

The authority given the board of public works by the charter of the city of Grand Rapids to determine the "particular kind and quality of materials to be used," when the council decides that any public work is a necessary improvement, has reference to detail, and not to the general character of the work. The use of the word "particular" in that connection is significant, and the evident intention of the Legislature was to empower the board to provide details where the same were necessary. When the council ordered a pavement of streets with gravel and cobble stones, the board could not refuse to do the work because it deemed such materials unsuitable. Common Council of City of Grand Rapids v. Board of Public Works, 87 Mich. 113, 120, 49 N. W. 481, 483.

In comparing Code Proc. § 883, subd. 2, requiring that the statement in writing made by a defendant on a confession of judgment, "if it be for money due or to become due, must state concisely the facts out of which it arose and must show that the sum confessed therefor is justly due or to become due," and Act 1818, requiring "a particular statement and specification of the nature and consideration of the debt or demand," the court said: "The word 'particular,' according to Webster, signifies 'a minute detail of things singly enumerated.' His definition of 'specification' is, among others, 'a written statement containing a minute description or enumeration of particulars.' The word 'concise' is defined 'brief; short; containing few words, or the principal matters only.' And the requirement in the first section that the statement 'state concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose' is not equivalent to requiring that 'a particular statement and specification of the nature and consideration of the debt be made.'" Curtis v. Corbitt (N. Y.) 25 How. Prac. 58, 62, 63.

PARTICULAR ACCOUNT.

A provision in a fire policy that insured should deliver to the insurer a "particular account of the loss or damage" only required the insured to furnish a statement as particular and full as he can make under the circumstances. Bumstead v. Dividend Mut. Ins. Co., 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 81, 94.

PARTICULAR AGENT.

A "particular agent" is one authorized to do one or two particular things. Ruby v. Talbott, 21 Pac. 72, 77, 5 N. M. 251, 3 L. R. A. 724.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE.

See "Free from Average unless General."

Upon a policy of insurance on flax valued at so much and warranted "free from particular average," if the vessel be wrecked, and the assured do not abandon, but labor to save, the cargo, and in fact save a part (one-sixteenth), though much damaged, they are entitled to recover as for a total loss of that part which was in fact totally lost, but not for the rest, which was saved to them in specie, though deteriorated. Davy v. Milford, 15 East, 559.

The expression "free of particular average," unless the vessel be stranded, etc., as used in marine insurance policies, means that if a loss occurred during the adventure, although from a cause not related in any way to the stranding of the ship, the insurers were liable upon the general language of the policy. London Assur. v. Companhia De Moagens Do Barreiro, 17 Sup. Ct. 785, 790, 187 U. S. 149, 42 L. Ed. 113. It is equivalent to the phrase "free from any claim for damage for partial loss." Devitt v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. Supp. 654, 656, 61 App. Div. 390.

The words "free from particular average," in a marine policy on a cargo free from particular average, "are understood to mean free from particular loss, and are equivalent to free of average, or free of average except generally." Wallerstein v. Columbian Ins. Co., 26 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Rob.) 523, 536.

The phrase "free from particular average," in a marine policy on cargo free from particular average, means that the assurer shall be accountable only for a total loss of the property insured. Chadsey v. Guilon, 97 N. Y. 333, 336; Wallerstein v. Columbian Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 204, 216, 4 Am. Rep. 664; Devitt v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. Supp. 654, 656, 61 App. Div. 390; Wallerstein v. Columbian Ins. Co., 26 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Rob.) 523, 536; Hernandez v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. (U. S.) 12 Fed. Cas. 84, 85.

"Particular average" is the loss or damage, short of total, falling directly on a particular property. Bargett v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 885, 895.

"Particular average," as used in a marine policy warranting the insurer free from particular average, means partial loss, and is equivalent to a policy against total loss only. Thus, if goods of one kind in one ship are insured by one description and valuation against total loss only, the total loss of some of them, though in separate packages, is only a partial loss of the entire subject of insurance, and gives no right to recover against the insurer as for a total loss of that part. Pierce v. Columbian Ins. Co., 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 320, 321.

PARTICULAR CAUSE OF CHALLENGE

Particular causes of challenge are of two kinds: (1) For such a bias as, when the existence of the facts is ascertained, does in judgment of law disqualify the juror, and which is known in this Code as "implied bias"; (2) for the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror, in reference to the case or to either party, which satisfies the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that such juror cannot try the issue impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging, and which is known in this Code as "actual bias." But the previous expression or formation of an opinion or impression in reference to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, or a present opinion or impression in reference thereto, is not a sufficient ground of challenge for actual bias to any person otherwise legally qualified, if he declare on oath that he believes that such opinion or impression will not influence his verdict, and that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, and the court is satisfied that he does not entertain such a present opinion or impression as would influence his verdict. Crim. Code N. Y. 1908, § 876.

PARTICULAR CUSTOMS.

Particular customs are such as prevail in some county, city, town, parish, or place. Their existence is to be determined by the jury on proof, and in this they differ from general customs, which are to be determined by the court. Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 90, 95, 39 Am. Dec. 611.

PARTICULAR ESTATE.

A particular estate is an estate for life or for years. This is called a "particular estate," for the reason that it is only a small part or portion of the inheritance. Bunting v. Speck, 21 Pac. 288, 289, 41 Kan. 424, 3 L. R. A. 690.

PARTICULAR LENGTHS.

Where, in an action on a logging contract, which required the contractor to place the logs on skids at the mill, keeping those of particular lengths by themselves, it was shown that the logs were cut into 13 different lengths, but that lumber was generally sawed and classed into two general classes, that of general lengths and of special lengths, the contract required only the separation of logs into these two classes, and not the separation of logs of precisely the same lengths. Maltby v. Plummer, 40 N. W. 3, 8, 71 Mich. 578.

PARTICULAR LIEN.

A particular lien is the right to retain the property of another on account of labor bestowed or money expended on the same property. Crommelin v. New York & H. R. Co., 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 77, 80.

A particular lien exists when the claim arises in respect to the very property retained. It differs from a general lien, which exists when the debt results from a general balance of account. Butcher's Union Slaughter House & Live Stock Landing Co., v. Crescent City Live Stock Landing & Slaughter House Co., 6 South. 508, 511, 41 La. Ann. 855.

A particular lien of a factor is confined to the debt for a specific article, as we see in ordinary sales for cash, and is distinguished from a general lien, which is a right the factor has to hold all the goods of his principal which come into and remain in his hands as such factor until the general balance—that is to say, all debts which have arisen and become payable in the course of his business as factor—have been paid. Brooks v. Bryce (N. Y.) 21 Wend. 14, 18, 17.

PARTICULAR MALICE.

"Particular malice" is ill will; grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. Brooks v. Jones, 38 N. C. 280, 281; State v. Long, 23 S. E. 431, 117 N. C. 791.

PARTICULAR PARTNERSHIP.

A "particular partnership" is defined as one where the parties have united to share the benefits of a single individual transaction or enterprise. Two persons who buy land for immediate sale, purely as a speculation, on an agreement for a division of the profits, constitute a particular partnership. Spencer v. Jones (Tex.) 47 S. W. 665.

A partnership doing a commission business as factors in the city of New Orleans is not a particular partnership. Ward v. Brandt (La.) 11 Mart. (O. S.) 831, 18 Am. Dec. 352.

PARTICULAR POWER.

By "particular power" is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed creating the power. Thompson v. Garwood (Pa.) 3 Whart. 237, 305, 31 Am. Dec. 502.

PARTICULAR PROPOSITION.

Two universal propositions—and it is immaterial whether their universality be metaphysical, physical, or moral—whose subjects are taken according to their entire extension, because the propositions are universal, can never be equivalent to a particular proposition. If one be the contrary of the other, they may be mutually nullified; but they cannot, by being used together, result in a particular proposition. Drennen v. Banks, 30 Atl. 655, 657, 80 Md. 810.

PARTICULAR QUESTION OF FACT.

The phrase "particular questions of fact," as used in the statute providing that in all cases, when requested by either party, the court shall require the jury, if it return a general verdict, to find specially upon particular questions of fact to be stated in writing, means something less than an issue in the case. The particular facts should be pertinent to and involved in the issue, and such as are impliedly covered by the general verdict. The purpose of such special findings is to test the correctness of the general verdict. McCullough v. Martin, 89 N. E. 905, 908, 12 Ind. App. 185; Gale v. Priddy, 64 N. E. 437, 66 Ohio St. 400. The phrase does not mean a conclusion drawn from all the evidence submitted to the jury, but means something less than the whole issue. Salem-Bedford Stone Co. v. Hilt, 59 N. E. 97, 99, 26 Ind. App. 543.

The question as to how general or how particular the questions of fact to be submitted to the jury in any particular case should be rests very largely in the sound judicial discretion of the trial court; but, of course, such questions of fact should be sufficiently particular, so that they might fairly be denominated "particular questions of fact," within the statute. The jury, in giving answers to particular questions of fact, may sometimes be required to state the facts themselves, to the extent of giving amounts, dates, weights, sizes, speed or velocity, time, distance, etc. Poster v. Turner, 1 Pac. 145, 147, 81 Kan. 58.

PARTICULAR RECITAL.

A particular recital states some fact definitely. Particular and definite recitals are conclusive evidence of the material facts stated. A recital which states that a mortgage is a lien on the premises conveyed by the deed is what the law defines a "particular recital." Kellogg v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. Supp. 172, 175, 38 Misc. Rep. 82.

PARTICULAR SERVICES.

The term "particular services," as used in the constitutional provision that no man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation being made therefor, means "peculiar services," not the ordinary or general services of an individual. "It is not an easy matter," says the court, "to draw the distinction between particular and ordinary services in every instance. Still some general rules may be given to mark the line. It seems clear that ordinary services, such as may be required of all citizens or officials by general or valid special laws, are not particular services. For example, a physician cannot be required to give his time and services and skill in making an examination to qualify him to speak as an expert witness. If, however, the same physician may have already made an examination, or come into the possession of facts material to be disclosed to attain justice and administer the law, he may be required to testify to them as any other witness may be." In Indiana the constitutional provision is: "No man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation." In Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467, it was held that the services of witnesses in criminal suits were not particular services, within the meaning of the provision, but were general services, such as every individual was bound to render when called upon for the public welfare, as well as his own individual good. It has been held that services of a witness in a criminal prosecution, services of a lawyer in defending the same, service on a jury, etc., are not particular services. State v. Henley, 41 S. W. 352, 355, 98 Tenn. 685, 39 L. R. A. 126 (citing Daly v. Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20, 12 Pac. 11; Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 12, 26 Am. Rep. 75; Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 18; Washington v. City of Nashville, 31 Tenn. [1 Swan] 180; Wright v. State, 50 Tenn. [3 Heisk.] 256; House v. Whitis, 64 Tenn. [5 Baxt.] 692; Neely v. State, 63 Tenn. [4 Baxt.] 174).

PARTICULAR STATE.

Act Cong. 1790, providing a punishment for crimes committed out of the jurisdiction of any particular state, means out of the jurisdiction of any particular state of the Union. United States v. Pirates, 18 U. S. (5 Wheat.) 184, 200, 5 L. Ed. 64.

PARTICULARS.

See "Bill of Particulars"; "Full Particulars."

A statement that one has not heard the particulars of a transaction is contradicted by showing that he had heard the details. The words "particulars" and "details" are in fact synonymous, and in ordinary parlance convey the same meaning. Baltimore City Pass. Ry. Co. v. Kneen, 34 Atl. 252, 254, 83 Md. 77.

PARTIES.

See "Party."

PARTITION.

A partition is a separation between joint owners or tenants in common of their respective interests in land, and setting apart such interests, so that they may enjoy and possess the same in severalty. Meacham v. Meacham, 19 S. W. 767, 768, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 532.

The word "partition," in its legal sense, means the act or proceeding through which two or more co-owners cause the thing to be partitioned to be divided into as many shares as there are owners, and which vest in each of such persons a specific part, with the right to possess it, free from a like right in other persons, who before partition had an equal right to possess. Hudgins v. Sansom, 10 S. W. 104, 105, 72 Tex. 229.

The object of partition is a division of an estate between the legal owners of it, regardless of equitable claims. Longley v. Longley, 42 Atl. 798, 799, 82 Me. 395.

Partition simply permits each owner to enjoy his or her share in severalty, instead of in common; and hence partition of land will not be delayed until the establishment on an accounting in a pending suit in equity of the amount of a possible lien in favor of one of the co-owners upon the shares of the others. Pomeroy v. Pomeroy, 37 Atl. 754, 757, 55 N. J. Eq. 568.

Partition implies an interest in different persons in the property to be divided. Brady v. McCosker (N. Y.) 1 Comst. 214, 222.

The right of compulsory partition in the case of coparceners was the gift of the common law, but in the case of joint tenants and tenants in common it was first given by statute. The common law, having established this right in favor of coparceners because of the relationship being created by it, and not by an act or choice of their own, as in the case of joint tenants and tenants in common, thought it reasonable that it should endure no longer than the parties should be pleased with it, but at the same time deemed it expedient, as well as just, that they should not be placed in a worse condition by the partition than if they had continued to enjoy their respective interests in the land or property without a division. Therefore, after the partition a warranty was annexed by the common law to each part, so that, if any one should be impleaded, she might vouch her sisters, or those who had been her coparceners at the time of the partition, or their heirs, and by this means also have their aid to deraign the warranty paramount, if any existed, annexed to the purchase of their ancestors. Weiser v. Weiser (Pa.) 5 Watts, 279, 280, 30 Am. Dec. 813.

The "writ of partition" is considered as an adversary suit, in which the title may be contested. Brownell v. Bradley, 18 Vt. 105, 107, 42 Am. Dec. 498.

Distribution distinguished.

Distribution neither gives a new title to property nor transfers a distinct right in the estate of the deceased owner, but is simply declaratory as to the persons upon whom the law casts the succession and the extent of their respective interests; while partition, in most if not all of its aspects, is an adversary proceeding, in which a remedial right to the transfer of the property is asserted, and resulting in a decree which either ex proprio vigore or as executed, accomplishes such transfer. Robinson v. Fair, 9 Sup. Ct. 80, 84, 128 U. S. 53, 32 L. Ed. 415.

In Sess. Laws 1882, p. 202, § 1, providing that the court may, during the settlement of an estate, order a partition where any person dies owning real estate or any interest therein, the term "partition" does not apply to an ordinary case of distributing the goods among the heirs entitled thereto; but a partition in the ordinary legal sense is meant, and its purpose is to separate the interest of the estate from a common ownership with other persons who are strangers to the estate. Appeal of Staple, 52 Conn. 421, 424.

A decree on final distribution in a probate court is a "partition," within the meaning of Gen. St. 1878, c. 58, § 1, providing that, before partition of an estate, an allowance shall be made for children under seven years of age. Wood v. Myrick, 16 Minn. 494, 499 (Gil. 447, 451).

As an equitable action.

Partition was cognizable either at law or in equity before the adoption of the Constitution. It is, and has been for centuries, a well-recognized branch of equity jurisprudence. When, therefore, a statutory proceeding for partition cannot be heard in a United States court on the law side, without affording a jury trial and thereby doing violence to the forms of procedure provided in the state statute, it seems to us to be the duty of the court to decline to take jurisdiction of it as a court of law, and to direct that it be brought in equity, where no jury need be had, and where every remedy provided by the statute may be amply administered. Klever v. Seawall (U. S.) 65 Fed. 393, 396, 12 O. C. A. 661.

As a matter of right.

Partition in equity, where there are no legal objections to the complainant's title, is a matter of right, and not discretionary within the court; and where all the conditions prerequisite to a partition exist, any hardship incidental to the exercise of such right arising out of the particular circumstance of a given case cannot prevent the complainant from enforcing it. It is well settled that the difficulty of making a partition and the inconvenience resulting to the other tenants furnished no sufficient reason for not making a division. Updike v. Adams, 48 Atl. 384, 385, 22 R. I. 482.

Partition at law and in equity distinguished.

Partition at law and in equity are different things. The first operates by judgment in a court of law, and delivering up possession in pursuance of it, which concludes all the parties to it. Partition in equity proceeds upon conveyances to be executed by the parties, and if the party be not competent to execute the conveyance the partition cannot be effectually had. Gay v. Parpart, 1 Sup. Ct. 456, 466, 106 U. S. 679, 27 L. Ed. 256.

As a proceeding in rem.

Proceedings in partition or to quiet title are not strictly proceedings in rem, for they are not taken directly against property; but they are regarded, so far as they affect property, as proceedings in rem sub modo, in respect of which, while there must be reasonable notice to the parties, personal service is not essential to jurisdiction, and constructive service may be substituted. Meyer v. Kuhn (U. S.) 65 Fed. 706, 712, 13 C. C. A. 298.

As purchase sale or transfer.

See "Judicial Sale"; "Purchase"; "Sale"; "Transfer."

As equivalent to livery of seisin.

The act of partition, accompanied by an open possession in severalty, is an act of notoriety equivalent to livery of seisin at common law, and is notice to the world. Woodhull v. Longstreet, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 405, 421.

As suit.

See "Suit (Noun)."

As affecting title.

A decree in partition does not create any new title. It is not necessarily the province of a proceeding for a partition to establish or quiet title, but simply to make division of the land. While it is true that in partition proceedings title may be put in issue and determined under proper pleadings, yet, if this is not done, the title, as between the parties to the proceedings, is left where it was. Fordice v. Lloyd, 60 N. E. 367, 369, 27 Ind. App. 414.

Partition makes no degree. It only adjusts the rights of the parties to the possession. Each does not take the allotment by purchase, but is as much seised of it by descent from the common ancestor as of the undivided share before partition. The deed of partition destroys the unity of possession, and henceforward each holds his share in severalty, but such deed confers no new title or additional estate in the land. In Yancey v. Radford, 86 Va. 638, 10 S. E. 972, the court says: "It has been often said that partition between coparceners neither amounts to nor requires an actual conveyance. It is less than a grant. Its operation is not to pass land by a fresh investiture of the seisin, for coparceners are supposed to be already in possession of the whole lands." Whitsett v. Wamack, 59 S. W. 961, 963, 159 Mo. 14, 81 Am. St. Rep. 339.

PARTITION FENCE.

A lawful partition fence is any structure, hedge, or ditch in the nature of a fence, used for the purpose of inclosure, such as a good husbandman generally keeps, and as shall on the testimony of skillful men appear to be sufficient. Enders v. McDonald, 31 N. E. 1056, 1057, 5 Ind. App. 297.

A "partition fence," as used in Code 1873, § 1495, providing that, when one uses his land otherwise than in common, he can be compelled to contribute to the erection of partition fences, means a fence on the land between two proprietors, where there is no road, alley, or something else which would prevent the erection of such fence, so that, where neither the plaintiff nor the defendant were using their premises in common, neither could be compelled to join in the erection of a partition fence on the line between their lands. Hewitt v. Jewell, 59 Iowa, 37, 38, 12 N. W. 738, 739.

Under a statute relating to "partition fences" it is held that a fence of one smooth wire and two barbed wires, or of five smooth wires, constitutes a legal partition fence. Oxborough v. Boesser, 30 Minn. 1, 3, 13 N. W. 906.

PARTITION OF SUCCESSION.

The "partition of succession" is the division of the effects of which the succession is composed among all the coheirs according to their respective rights. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 1293.

PARTITION WALL.

By usage the words "party wall" and "partition wall" have come to mean a solid wall. Bonney v. Greenwood, 52 Atl. 786, 790, 96 Me. 335.

PARTITIONS.

In a building contract, making the second payment come due when the building was ready for lathing, roof on, and partitions set, the term "partitions" did not include coal partitions in the cellar, but which were not in themselves partitions of the building, but mere subdivisions of the cellar to make coal boxes for different tenants. Tibbitts v. Phipps, 51 N. Y. Supp. 954, 955, 30 App. Div. 274.

As contract, see "Contract."

A partnership is a contract of two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain proportions. Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Ross, 29 Ohio St. 429, 431; Richardson v. Carlton, 80 N. W. 532, 534, 109 Iowa, 515; Winter v. Pipber, 64 N. W. 663, 664, 96 Iowa, 17; Wheeler v. Lack, 61 Pac. 849, 850, 87 Or. 238; Kelley v. Bourne, 16 Pac. 40, 43, 15 Or. 476; Cogswell v. Wilson, 4 Pac. 1130, 1132, 11 Or. 371; Danforth v. Hertel (Del.) 49 Atl. 168, 169, 3 Pennewill, 57; Omaha & Grant Smelting & Refining Co. v. Rucker, 40 Pac. 853, 854, 6 Colo. App. 334; Goldsmith v. Eichold, 10 South. 80, 81, 94 Ala. 118, 33 Am. St. Rep. 97; Vail v. Winterstein, 94 Mich. 230, 233, 53 N. W. 932, 18 L. R. A. 515, 34 Am. St. Rep. 334; Artman v. Ferguson, 40 N. W. 907, 908, 73 Mich. 146, 2 L. R. A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572; Hirbour v. Reeding, 3 Mont. 15, 25.

A partnership is a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together the money, goods, labor, and skill of either or all of them upon an agreement that the gain or loss shall be divided proportionably between them. Macomber v. Parker, 80 Mass. (13 Pick.) 175, 181; Howze v. Patterson, 53 Ala. 205, 207, 25 Am. Rep. 607; McClung v. Hughes (Va.) 5 Rand. 453, 459; Bucknam v. Barnum, 15 Conn. 67, 71. And having for its object the advancement and protection of fair and open trade. McMahon v. McClerman, 10 W. Va. 419, 461; Beecham v. Dodd (Del.) 3 Har. 485.

Judge Story defines a partnership to be a voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a communion of the profits thereof between them. Carter v. McClure, 38 S. W. 585, 586, 98 Tenn. 109, 36 L. R. A. 282, 60 Am. St. Rep. 842; Bigelow v. Elliott (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 349, 351; In re Gibb's Estate, 27 Atl. 383, 384, 157 Pa. 59, 22 L. R. A. 276, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 120, 122; Eshbach v. Slonaker, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 32, 33; Potter v. Morris & Cummings Dredging Co., 46 Atl. 537, 538, 59 N. J. Eq. 422; Wild v. Davenport, 7 Atl. 295, 296, 43 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 129, 57 Am. Rep. 532; Strader v. White, 2 Neb. 843, 862; Kelley v. Bourne, 16 Pac. 40, 43, 15 Or. 476; Woods v. Ward, 37 S. E. 520, 525, 48 W. Va. 652; Setzer v. Beale, 19 W. Va. 274, 287; Parchen v. Anderson, 5 Pac. 538, 539, 599, 5 Mont. 438, 51 Am. Rep. 65; Bishop v. Everett, 6 Haw. 157, 158; Owners of Waihee Plantation v. Kalapu, 3 Haw. 760, 761; Allen v. Davis, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 23, 31.

Parsons defines a partnership to be a combination of two or more persons of capital or labor or skill for the purpose of business for their common benefit. Evans v. Warner, 47 N. Y. Supp. 16, 19, 20 App. Div. 230; Kelley v. Bourne, 16 Pac. 40, 43, 15 Or. 476; Eshbach v. Slonaker, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 32, 33.

A partnership exists when two or more persons combine their property, labor, and skill, or one or more of them, in the transaction of business. Johnson v. J. J. Douglass Co., 58 Pac. 743, 745, 8 Okl. 594.

Lindl. Copartn. § 12, says an agreement to share profits and losses may be said to be the type of a partnership contract. Bishop v. Everett, 6 Haw. 157, 158; Owners of Waihee Plantation v. Kalapu, 3 Haw. 760, 761.

A partnership is a combination by two or more persons of capital, or labor, or skill, or some or all of these, for the purpose of business for their common benefit. Morse v. Pacific Ry. Co., 61 N. E. 104, 106, 191 Ill. 356.

A contract of partnership is where parties join together their money, goods, labor, or skill for the purpose of trade or gain, and where there is a community of profits. Ward v. Thompson, 63 U. S. (22 How.) 330, 331, 18 L. Ed. 249.

A partnership exists when two or more persons contribute their property or services to be employed jointly in some enterprise or business, the profit or loss of which is to be shared among them in some fixed proportion. Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Ross, 29 Ohio St. 429, 431.

A partnership is the voluntary association of two or more persons in sharing the profits and bearing the losses of a general trade or a specific adventure. O'Donohue v. Bruce (U. S.) 92 Fed. 858, 890, 33 C. C. A. 52.

A partnership is a joint understanding to share in the profit and loss. Eastman v. Clark, 53 N. H. 276, 311, 16 Am. Rep. 192 (citing Saville v. Robertson, 4 Durn. & E. 720, 727, 728).

A partnership is an association of persons united in a common object, business, or pursuit. Osborne v. Holland (Tex.) 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. §§ 1087, 1088.

There seems to be an agreement of authorities that, where persons associate themselves together to carry on a joint business for their common benefit, to which each one contributes either property or services, and the profits arising therefrom are to be shared between them, the essential elements of a contract of partnership are made out. McMurtre v. Guiler, 67 N. E. 358, 183 Mass. 451 (citing Ryder v. Wilcox, 103 Mass. 24; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835).

A partnership is a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, or labor, etc., upon some agreement respecting them. Post v. Kimberly (N. Y.) 9 Johns. 470, 488.

A partnership is a contract relation subsisting between persons who have combined their property, labor, or skill in an enterprise or business as principals for the purpose of joint profit. Van Housen v. Cope-land, 54 N. E. 169, 172, 180 Ill. 74.

A partnership has been defined to be "a contract in which two or more persons agree to put in something in common with a view of dividing the benefits which result from it." Strader v. White, 2 Neb. 348, 362 (cited in Flower v. Barnekoff, 25 Pac. 370, 373, 20 Or. 132).

A partnership is an agreement entered into by two or more persons to unite their labor, skill, money, and property, or either or all of them, in a lawful enterprise for their mutual account. Willis v. Crawford, 38 Or. 522, 63 Pac. 985, 987, 64 Pac. 866, 53 L. R. A. 904 (cited in Hanthorn v. Quinn, 69 Pac. 817, 819, 42 Or. 1).

A partnership is defined as a voluntary contract between two or more persons agreeing to put their money, effects, labor, and skill, or either or all, in some lawful enterprise or business with a view of dividing the profits or sharing the losses which result therefrom. Flower v. Barnekoff, 25 Pac. 370, 373, 20 Or. 132, 11 L. R. A. 149 (cited in Hanthorn v. Quinn, 69 Pac. 817, 819, 42 Or. 1).

A partnership is the combination by two or more persons of capital, or labor, or skill for their common benefit, and is usually constituted, as between the parties themselves, by an agreement between them to share the profits and losses of their joint undertaking, whether it have reference to a trade or business or merely to some particular venture. Stone v. Boone, 24 Kan. 337, 340.

A partnership is a voluntary association by which, in all the affairs connected with the business, authority is impliedly given to every member to dispose of the partnership property as if it were his own personal effects. Holmes v. Gilman, 19 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 64 Hun. 227.

A contract of partnership is one by which two or more persons agree to carry on a business for their common benefit, each contributing property or services and having a community of interest in the profits. It is, in effect, a contract of mutual agency, each partner acting as a principal in his own behalf and as agent for the other. Kirrick v. Hannaman, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 138, 168 U. S. 323, 42 L. Ed. 484.

Partnership is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing its profits between them. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 2395; Krasky v. Wollpert, 66 Pac. 309, 124 Cal. 338; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4370; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1723; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 3180; Grigsby v. Day, 70 N. W. 881, 883, 9 S. D. 585.

Partnership is a synallagmatic and commutative contract made between two or more persons for the mutual participation in the profits which may accrue from property, credit, skill, or industry furnished in determined proportions by the parties. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2801.

A partnership, while often called a contract, is rather a relation, a status, somewhat as marriage is a relation or status. Haggett v. Hurley, 40 Atl. 561, 562, 91 Me. 542, 41 L. R. A. 362 (citing Parsons on Partnership, § 101).

Where one person advances funds and another furnishes his personal services and skill in carrying on a trade or operation, the parties to share in the proceeds, this constitutes a partnership. Bearce v. Washburn, 43 Me. 564, 565.

A partnership is not necessarily an entire merger of the individual, his labor, energy, or estate in the firm. The extent of the merger is determined by the agreement entered into, and the purpose the partners have in view. Goldsmith v. Elchold, 10 South. 80, 81, 94 Ala. 116, 33 Am. St. Rep. 97.

The essential elements of a partnership are a common stock, an intention to prosecute unitedly one or more branches of industry, and authority and power, mutually interchanged or specially delegated, to manage and control the common stock for the common benefit. The last-named feature may be regarded as the leading characteristic of a partnership. Rose v. Izard, 7 S. C. (7 Rich.) 442, 467.

The essential characteristics of a partnership seem to be the joint ownership of property, and authority of each partner to bind the other partners by his acts with reference to the partnership property and also to impose upon the other partnership liability. Hoaglin v. C. M. Henderson & Co., 94 N. W. 247, 249, 119 Iowa, 720, 61 L. R. A. 756, 97 Am. St. Rep. 335.

Partnerships are of different kinds. Some are general, and others are limited to a particular transaction. One essential element of a partnership is a community of interest in the whole subject-matter. Another element is that on a dissolution of a partnership by the death of one of the partners the survivor becomes entitled to retain and dispose of the partnership assets for the purpose of distributing the remaining fund. A similar participation of profit and loss does not necessarily constitute a partnership. Dwinnel v. Stone, 80 Me. (17 Shap.) 384, 385.

As an artificial person.

A partnership is considered in law as an artificial person or being, distinct from the individuals composing it, and is treated as such in law and in equity. Hollingshead v. Curtis, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 402, 410.

Partnership is defined as being a contract creating a distinct person from those who compose it. A moral being; a civil person. Partners, under our law, are not tenants in common. Stothart v. William T. Hardie & Co., 84 South. 740, 742, 110 La. 696.

Association.

A partnership is an association with certain incidents recognized by law for the convenient transaction of legitimate trade and business. It cannot, therefore, be formed for an illegal purpose, or one contrary to public policy. Jackson v. Akron Brick Ass'n, 41 N. E. 257, 258, 53 Ohio St. 308.

An association in which the conditions of membership are the payment of an entry fee and of pro rata assessments, but which does no business involving profit or loss, is not a partnership. Burt v. Lathrop, 17 N. W. 716, 52 Mich. 106.

An unincorporated association of individuals formed for a public purpose, who received money from the public as a gift, is not a partnership as between themselves, whatever may be its relation as to third persons; but where the association is for private and individual profit or pleasure, with no public object, it is a copartnership, and where the association is for private emoluments or for benevolence, confined exclusively to the association, and in which none others participate, it is, as between the members, a partnership. Thomas v. Ellmaker (Pa.) 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 98.

While the mere calling an association a partnership cannot make it such when there are none of the essential elements of the partnership present, yet where there is a joint undertaking, a union of labor or a union of capital and labor, or where some of the essential elements of a partnership are present, and not one party, but both, distinctly agree among themselves to become partners, there is no reason why the law should not take them at their word, even though that agreement falls short of the facts from which the law would otherwise have inferred a partnership. Huggins v. Huggins, 48 S. E. 759, 760, 117 Ga. 151 (citing Beecher v. Bush, 45 Mich. 188, 7 N. W. 785, 40 Am. Rep. 465).

An association which does business under an unsuccessful attempt to incorporate is a partnership composed not only of the directors, but of all the subscribers to the articles. Coleman v. Coleman, 78 Ind. 344, 346.

A "voluntary association," unincorporated, formed for social and charitable purposes, and not for trade or profit, is not a partnership entitling the members thereof to a proportionate share of the association's property on withdrawal. Local Union No. 1, Textile Workers v. Barrett, 36 Atl. 5, 6, 19 R. I. 668.

A partnership includes an association of separate owners of several steamboats into a joint concern to run their boats and collect and receive the earnings in a common fund, out of which expenses of all the boats are to be paid. The Swallow (U. S.) 23 Fed. Cas. 491, 492.

An agreement forming an association stated that it was formed for the mutual benefit and profit of the parties; that the business should be buying, selling, renting, leasing, and mortgaging real estate, and that each of the parties thereto should have a specified interest therein. Held, that the legal effect of the agreement was to constitute the parties partners. Kelley v. Bourne, 16 Pac. 40, 43, 15 Or. 476.

Community of interest in property.

A mere joint ownership in property does not constitute a partnership. State Bank v. O. S. Kelley Co., 66 N. W. 619, 620, 47 Neb. 678.

A community of interest in land does not make men partners, nor does a mere community of interest in personal property.

There must be some joint adventure, and an agreement to share in the profits and losses of the undertaking. Porter v. McClure (N. Y.) 15 Wend. 187, 192.

Mere joint ownership in a patent does not constitute a partnership. Boeklen v. Hardenbergh, 60 N. Y. 8, 9.

The proprietors of a vessel are ordinarily considered as part owners in the nature of tenants in common, and not as partners. Williams v. Sheppard, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 76, 78.

The relation of partnership arises out of contract between the parties, while a joint ownership in property may be created where there are no contractile relations. Hackett v. Multnomah Ry. Co., 6 Pac. 659, 662, 663, 12 Or. 124, 53 Am. Rep. 827.

Two persons buying shares of stock, where each own one-half of it, are tenants in common, rather than partners, since it is purely an investment, and not an engagement in a business venture, which is the element of a partnership. Morse v. Pacific Ry. Co. (Ill.) 61 N. E. 104, 106, 191 Ill. 856.

The joint ownership of real estate does not create a partnership therein. A special contract in writing is necessary for that purpose. Benton v. Roberts, 4 La. Ann. 216, 218.

Partnership and community are not to be confounded. The first is based in the contract of the parties, which thus creates the community. The last may exist independently of any contract whatsoever. Pickrell v. Fisk, 11 La. Ann. 277, 278.

Joint purchasers, without an agreement of partnership, are not entitled to the remedies, nor subject to the responsibilities, of partners. Brady v. Colhoun (Pa.) 1 Pen. & W. 140, 147.

Joint ownership of a vessel does not create a partnership, nor are the interests of all the joint owners barred by a sale on execution against part. Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 84, 38, 53 Am. Dec. 513.

A joint interest in the partnership property or a joint interest in the profits and losses of the business constitutes a partnership as to third persons. Brandon v. Conner, 45 S. E. 371, 372, 117 Ga. 759, 63 L. R. A. 260.

A joint interest in the partnership property, or a joint interest in profits and losses of the business, constitutes a partnership as to third persons. The common interest in profits alone does not. Civ. Code Ga. 1896, § 2629.

As a company.

See "Company."

As determined by intent of parties.

To determine whether the relations between partners constitutes a partnership, their intention in forming it governs. Hughes v. Ewing, 62 S. W. 466, 474, 162 Mo. 261.

Whether a partnership is created by a contract depends on the intention of the parties. Where no question of estoppel is involved, persons cannot be held to be partners despite their intention not to form that relation. Sharing the profits of a business is not conclusive evidence of the existence of a partnership. A contract by the terms of which the owner transfers to another the exclusive use and control of property and is to receive as rent therefor a portion of the profits arising from such use, is not a partnership contract. Garrett v. Republican Pub. Co., 85 N. W. 537, 538, 61 Neb. 541; Omaha & Grant Smelting & Refining Co. v. Rucker, 40 Pac. 853, 854, 6 Colo. App. 334.

In 1 Bates, Partnership, § 17, it is said: "To determine whether the relation between persons constitutes a partnership, their intention in forming it governs. * * * The declarations of the parties themselves on the subject, if not inconsistent with the other terms of the contract, will control. * * * The intention of the parties will be determined from the effect on the whole contract, regardless of any special expressions." In a note to Colly. Partn. (6th Ed.) p. 33, § 19, it is said: "Whether persons are partners or not is a question of intention, to be decided by the citation of the whole agreement into which they have entered, and ought not to be made a portion of one or two only of the clauses in it." Hughes v. Ewing, 62 S. W. 466, 474, 162 Mo. 261.

The question of whether or not a partnership exists is not always dependent upon the personal arrangement or understanding of the parties. Where men so act as to induce an honest belief in the public mind that they are partners, and when they deliberately hold themselves out to the world as partners, and obtain credit thereby, the law will often imply that they are partners, and hold them accountable as such. Johnson v. J. J. Douglass Co., 58 Pac. 743, 745, 8 Okl. 594.

Equality of contribution.

A partnership may well exist with a right to an equal participation in the profits, although the parties may contribute the funds or stock in unequal proportions. Caldwell v. Leibler (N. Y.) 7 Paige, 483, 494.

Executed agreement essential.

To constitute a partnership, there must be a valid agreement to enter into a partnership, and this contract must be executed. Unless something is done, or unless the agreement operates in present, the contract is executory only. Sabel v. Savannah Rail & Equipment Co., 33 South. 663, 664, 185 Ala. 380.

A partnership is a contract imposing certain liabilities upon its members, but a mere agreement to constitute a partnership in futuro does not make the contracting parties liable as partners. Atkins v. Hunt, 14 N. H. 206, 208, 209.

Formal requisites of agreement.

In the state of Montana no written articles are necessary to constitute a copartnership to be entered into immediately. Hirbour v. Reeding, 3 Mont. 15, 25.

As head of family.

See "Head of a Family."

Joint-stock company.

A partnership association commonly but inaccurately called a "joint-stock company" is the creation of the statutes, and, while it is assimilated in some respects to a corporation, it is nevertheless essentially a partnership. Carter v. Producers' Oil Co., 50 Atl. 167, 168, 200 Pa. 579.

Joint-stock companies are generally treated as, and have all the attributes of, a common partnership, yet a mere joint ownership or community of interest in property does not necessarily constitute a partnership, though the income from it is divided. Consolidated Canal Co. v. Peters (Aris), 46 Pac. 74, 76.

These associations formed for business purposes were at common law, and as a general rule still are, considered merely as partnerships, and their rights and liabilities are in the main governed by the same rules and principles which regulate commercial partnerships. Adams Exp. Co. v. Schofield, 64 S. W. 903, 904, 111 Ky. 332.

Joint-stock company distinguished.

See "Joint-Stock Company."

As a legal entity.

A partnership is a distinct legal entity, and as such is the real party in interest in an action to recover a claim for goods sold and delivered. It alone must seek the remedy. Sullivan v. Nicoulin, 84 N. W. 978, 980, 113 Iowa, 76.

A partnership is a legal entity, formed by the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits. Pennville Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Thomas, 51 N. E. 351, 352, 21 Ind. App. 1.

A "partnership" is a legal entity, known and recognized by the law, and for judicial purposes it may be considered as having a residence in every county in which it does business, though neither partner resides in such county. Fitzgerald v. Grimmell, 64 Iowa, 261, 20 N. W. 179. Under Code Iowa, § 2585, providing that when a corporation, company, or individual has an office or agency in any county for the transaction of business any suits connected with such office or agency may be brought in such county, an attachment may be sued out against a partnership in any county in which it does business, on the ground that it is about to permanently remove therefrom, though none of the partners reside in such county. Ruthven v. Beckwith, 51 N. W. 153, 154, 84 Iowa, 715.

A partnership is a separate legal entity from the individual members composing it. Clarke v. Laird, 60 Mo. App. 239. Therefore where one agrees to indemnify a partnership, he does not become liable for loss to an individual member of the firm. Kelley v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 71 S. W. 711, 97 Mo. App. 623.

A partnership is not a legal entity, having a domicile, although for the purposes of taxation and for other purposes it may be treated by statutes as having a locality. Faulkner v. Hyman, 6 N. E. 846, 848, 142 Mass. 53.

A copartnership is a distinct entity, entirely separate from that of any of its members, and we know of no reason why it may not assign its property for the payment of its debts, without including the individual property of the different partners. Armstrong v. Hurst, 39 S. C. 498, 504, 18 S. E. 150, 153 (Trumbo v. Hamel, 29 S. C. 520, 8 S. E. 83).

Nature of business.

There is nothing in the nature or essence of a partnership which requires that it should be confined to ordinary trade and commerce or to dealings in personal property. Hence two or more persons may become partners in buying and selling land. Hirbour v. Reeding, 3 Mont. 15, 25.

Open board of brokers.

The Open Board of Brokers in the city of New York is not a copartnership, not being engaged in any business, and not devoting its funds to the prosecution of any undertaking to produce profit or gain for its members. There are no profits to be divided among the members, nor are there losses to be borne. White v. Brownell (N. Y.) 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 313, 325.

As ordinary partnership.

The term "partnership," as used in a rule that corporations are not impliedly authorized to enter into partnership with other companies or with other individuals, is used in its general sense, and is qualified in most authorities by the word "ordinary." Clearly, that character of partnership is meant where the element of mutual agency is present whatever else may be lacking, for it is against that element that the rule is mainly directed. Markowitz v. Greenwall Theatrical Circuit Co. (Tex.) 75 S. W. 74, 77.

Sharing profits.

The tendency of the more modern authorities is towards the doctrine that the sharing of profits is evidence that he who shares them is a partner, but not conclusive evidence; the true test being whether there is such a participation in or sharing of the profits as to constitute the relation of principal and agent between the person taking the profits and those actually carrying on the business. The intention of the parties must control. The relation of partners is formed by contract, or by the acts of the parties which amount to a contract. If there is no partnership inter se, there can be none as to third parties, unless a party by his acts has put himself in such a position that he is estopped from denying that he is a partner. Parchen v. Anderson, 5 Pac. 588, 590, 5 Mont. 438, 51 Am. Rep. 85; Johnson v. Rothschilds, 41 S. W. 996, 997, 63 Ark. 518.

It is clear that the old rule that to share the profits as profits made one a partner is overthrown. It seems to be true that the real test is that there must be a community of interest, a joining as principals in carrying on a business for their joint profit. Hughes v. Ewing, 62 S. W. 465, 474, 162 Mo. 261.

An agreement between two or more persons to divide the profits resulting from the transaction of a business venture in which they have a common interest was once regarded as affording an accurate test of partnership, but such standard is not now deemed conclusive evidence of the existence of such relation. Willis v. Crawford, 63 Pac. 985, 987; 38 Or. 522, 58 L. R. A. 904.

In the absence of a partnership in fact, merely sharing in profits does not create one as to third persons who have not been legitimately led to believe that such relation existed. Colwell v. Britton, 26 N. W. 538, 59 Mich. 350; Kelly v. Gaines, 24 Mo. App. 508, 512; Parchen v. Anderson, 5 Pac. 588, 590, 5 Mont. 438, 51 Am. Rep. 65.

The test of partnership is a community of profit, a specific interest in the profits as profits in contradistinction to a stipulated portion of the profits as a compensation for services. Demuth v. Sternheimer (N. Y.) 1 City Ct. R. 443, 446.

In order to constitute a partnership, each person must have an interest in the profits as a principal trader. A mere reception of a portion of the profits is insufficient. Campbell v. Dent, 54 Mo. 325, 334; Beudel v. Hettrick, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Jones & S.) 405, 410.

A right to a share of the profits, as such, is essential to constitute a person a partner. Griffen v. Cooper, 50 Ill. App. 257, 280; Hallet v. Desban, 14 La. Ann. 529; Heimstreet v. Howland (N. Y.) 5 Denio, 68, 70.

To constitute a partnership there must be an agreement to share not only in the profits of a joint venture, but in the losses as well. McBride v. Ricketts, 67 N. W. 410, 411, 98 Iowa, 539; Martin v. Same, Id.

An agreement between two persons to share in the profits of an adventure or concern does not necessarily constitute them copartners in respect to the concern or adventure from which the profits arise. Rice v. Austin, 17 Mass. 197, 205, 206.

An agreement to share in the profits of a business does not necessarily constitute a partnership. Meserve v. Andrews, 104 Mass. 360, 362.

An agreement between two persons to share the profits of a business is, inter se, prima facie proof only that they are partners. Koots v. Tuvian, 24 S. E. 776, 777, 118 N. C. 393.

An agreement between several persons to apportion, when recovered, the reward offered for the apprehension of a fugitive from justice, does not constitute a partnership in the legal sense of the term. Dawson v. Gurley, 22 Ark. 381, 383.

The foundation of a partnership is a contract express or implied, and it results from the acts of the parties, and not from the act of the law. Merely showing that one has received profits from a business conducted by an association, without showing whether it is a partnership or not, does not render him liable as a partner. In re Gibbs' Estate, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 120, 122, 27 Atl. 883, 157 Pa. 59, 22 L. R. A. 276.

Defendant authorized plaintiff to solicit loans for him, the commissions being divided between them, and a second mortgage to defendant being taken to secure such commissions. Each application for a loan, when accepted by defendant, was returned with a separate letter of instructions and the sum necessary to make the loan, and when it was made all papers were sent to defendant. The parties lived in different states, had no partnership name, and each carried on other business. Held, that as between themselves there was no partnership. Grigsby v. Day, 70 N. W. 881, 883, 9 S. D. 585.

Where two persons agree to join forces and cultivate a corn crop and divide the product, it is a partnership. Allen v. Davis, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 23, 31.

Same—As compensation for services.

A laborer, who receives as compensation for his services a share of the net profits of his employer's business, but has no other interest in the capital or profits, is not a partner with his employer, as between themselves. Bigelow v. Elliot (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 349, 353; In re Pierson (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 661, 685; Reed v. Murphy (Iowa) 2 G. Greene, 574; Heran v. Hall, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 159, 35 Am. Dec. 178; Miller v. Chandler, 29 La. Ann. 88, 92; Chaffraix v. Price, 29 La. Ann. 178, 181; Bull v. Schuberth, 2 Md. 38, 56; Atherton v. Tilton, 44 N. H. 452, 456; Hargrave v. Conroy, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 281, 283; Brookway v. Burnap (N. Y.) 16 Barb. 309, 310; Smith v. Bodine, 74 N. Y. 80, 83; De Cordova v. Powter, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 431, 432; Edwards v. Dooley, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 593, 602; Delise v. Palladino, 37 N. Y. Supp. 705, 706, 16 Misc. Rep. 74; Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. (12 P. F. Smith) 374, 381; Bell v. Hare, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 615, 617; Sodiker v. Applegate, 24 W. Va. 411, 413, 49 Am. Rep. 252.

A party who, without any interest in the property, is, by agreement, to receive as compensation for his services, and only as compensation therefor, a certain proportion of the profits, and is neither held out to the world as a partner nor through the negligence of the owner, permitted to hold himself out as partner, is not a partner either as to the owner or third persons. Le Fevre v. Castagnio, 5 Colo. 564, 571; Loomis v. Manhall, 12 Conn. 69, 77, 30 Am. Dec. 596; Pond v. Cummins, 50 Conn. 372, 375; Burton v. Goodspeed, 69 Ill. 237, 243; Shepard v. Pratt, 16 Kan. 209, 213; Hallet v. Desban, 14 La. Ann. 529; Commonwealth v. Bennett, 118 Mass. 443, 453; Ogden v. Astor, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 311, 321; Conklin v. Barton (N. Y.) 43 Barb. 435, 438; Bendel v. Hettrick, 45 How. Prac. 198, 204, 35 Super. Ct. (3 Jones & S.) 405.

A stipulation that the compensation for the services of a person as a clerk shall be proportioned to the profits of the concern, without giving him a specific lien on such profits, does not constitute such person a partner. Lee v. Wimberly, 15 South. 444, 447, 102 Ala. 589; Goode v. McCartney, 10 Tex. 193, 195; Cothran v. Marmaduke, 60 Tex. 370, 372.

Where a merchant employs a person in his business, and agrees to pay him a stated salary, and, in addition, a certain percentage of the profits of the business, the contract does not constitute such merchant and the person so employed copartners, as a matter of law. Stockman v. Michell, 67 N. W. 336, 109 Mich. 343.

Where a person enters into a contract with another by which the latter is to receive a certain salary and a percentage of the profits, while the former is to own the entire capital, no partnership exists. Breman

Sav. Bank v. Branch-Crookes Saw Co., 16 S. W. 209, 213, 104 Mo. 425.

To constitute a partnership there must be an interest in the profits as appears, and such profits must be shared as the result of the adventure or enterprise in which both are interested, and not simply as a measure of compensation. Cogswell v. Wilson, 4 Pac. 1130, 1132, 11 Or. 371.

Community of profits is the true criterion whereby to determine whether or not an agreement for the carrying on of business constitutes a partnership. But if one receives as compensation for his services or as rent such a portion of the profits as a measure of the amount of his salary or as a mode of payment, he will not on that account be considered a partner. Bigelow v. Elliot (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 349, 351.

Equal shares in the profits do not always make the persons thus sharing partners. This court has decided that one may share in a profit without being a partner. Collom v. Bruning, 49 La. Ann. 1257, 22 South. 744. The relation of partners is not necessarily established between an employer and employé who stipulates that the employé will receive a proportion of the profits in lieu of salary. A servant sharing in a profit instead of wages is not a partner. Leonard v. Sparks, 33 South. 594, 596, 109 La. 543.

Where one has a contract to do work for another, and enters into an agreement with a third party that the latter shall do the work, and that they shall divide, such agreement constitutes a partnership between them, making them equal partners, entitled to share equally in the profits. Rogers v. Walts (Pa.) 12 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 180, 161.

An agreement between merchants to set up a store, and for one to superintend the business and to receive one-third of the profits realized (he putting in no stock), constitutes a partnership, and a loss sustained by fire is mutual. Simpson v. Feits (S. C.) 1 McCord, Eq. 213, 218, 16 Am. Dec. 602.

"The specific interest in profits which is to make a person a partner must be a proprietary interest existing before the division of them into shares. The test of a partnership is a community of profit, a specified interest in the profits in contradistinction to the stipulated operation of the profits as a compensation for services. An agreement by which one party agrees to pay all expenses in an ice-harvesting venture, sell the ice, and after deducting expenses pay one-fourth of the net profits to the other, who is to put in his time and furnish the necessary materials for doing the work, does not constitute a partnership between them." Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 62 N. Y. Supp. 786, 789, 32 App. Div. 92.

Same—As consideration for sale of property.

A broker bought goods with the money of two persons on an agreement that he would sell again and that the three would share the profits. Held, that he was neither a partner nor a joint owner of the goods. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 73, 75.

An agreement by several persons to unite in procuring a sale of property, each one to receive a specified part of the commission earned, does not constitute a partnership. Mason v. Sieglitz, 44 Pac. 588, 590, 22 Colo. 320.

A declaration of trust whereby the owner of land agrees to share the net profits of selling the land with certain persons does not give them an interest in the land itself, but constitutes all the parties copartners as to the profits. Roby v. Colehour, 25 N. E. 777, 778, 135 Ill. 300.

Same—As interest on loans or advances.

A loan to a person engaged in trade, on condition of a rate of interest in proportion to profits or a share of the profits, does not necessarily constitute the lender a partner. In re Ward (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 158, 159.

A loan of money for one year at the usual rate of interest, with a further provision that if there be a net profit in the business for which the loan was made in excess of a certain amount, the lender shall receive a specified per cent. of such excess, does not alone make the lender a partner in such business. Meehan v. Valentine (U. S.) 29 Fed. 276, 280.

It is a well-settled fact that when a party is only interested in the profits of a business as a means of compensation for money advanced he is not a partner. The receiving of a part of the profits of a commercial partnership in lieu of or in addition to interest, by way of compensation, for a loan of money, does not make the lender a partner with the borrower. Stevens v. McKibbin, 68 Fed. 406, 411, 15 C. C. A. 498.

The loan of money to be invested in trade, the lender to have one-half the net profits therefor, is not a partnership. Culley v. Edwards, 44 Ark. 423, 429, 51 Am. Rep. 614.

Where a person advances money to the owners of a vessel and cargo, who promise to pay him a share of the proceeds of the voyage in proportion to the sum advanced by him, he does not thereby become a partner. Gallop v. Newman, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 282, 286.

Where a person contributes a sum to the use and business of a partnership, on condition that he is to receive a part of the profits of the business, he is a partner as to third persons dealing with the firm. Leggett v. Henneberger (N. Y.) 1 Thomp. & C. 418, 419.

Where one lends money to another "expressly for use in" a certain business, "and for no other use whatsoever," and that other is to make regular statements of the condition of the business, the two dividing equally the yearly net profits, they are partners. Hackett v. Stanley (N. Y.) 14 Daly, 210, 218.

A partnership is created where several persons subscribe a certain sum each to establish a co-operative store, to be conducted under a firm name by the principal subscriber and three directors elected by the subscribers, profits being divided in proportion to the amounts subscribed, and stock certificates being issued to the subscribers, but there being no incorporation. Carter v. McClure, 88 S. W. 585, 586, 98 Tenn. 109, 36 L. R. A. 282, 60 Am. St. Rep. 842.

Same—As rent.

Community of profit is the true criterion whereby to determine whether any agreement for the carrying on of business constitutes a partnership; but, if one receives as rent a stated portion of the profits, he will not on that account be liable as a partner. Bigelow v. Elliott (U. S.) 3 Fed. Cas. 349, 353.

Where the owner of a vessel contributed it to be put into a line for freight and passengers, and another person contributed the good will of an established line, together with his care, skill, and experience, he to have the general management of the business and the selection of the officer and crew, but the receiving and disposing agent to be appointed by the owners and be under their control, the receipts of the steamer to be applied to pay expenses, insurance, a certain sum to the owners, a certain sum to the hirer, and the balance of the profits to be equally divided, there was a contract of partnership. Ward v. Thompson, 63 U. S. (22 How.) 830, 833, 16 L. Ed. 249.

A contract that the lessor of a hotel should receive one-tenth of the gross receipts for rent does not create a partnership as to third persons. McDonnell v. Battle House Co., 67 Ala. 90, 91, 42 Am. Rep. 96.

A contract by which one having no interest in land agrees to work it for a share of the crops does not constitute a partnership between him and the owner of the land. Romero v. Dalton, 11 Pac. 863, 864, 2 Ariz. 210.

An agreement between the owner of a lot of mules and a railroad contractor that the contractor is to use the mules and pay the owner for their hire half of what he makes out of the work on which the mules are used does not constitute a contract of partnership. Emberson v. McKenna (Tex.) 16 S. W. 419.

A contract between a tenant and a landlord, by which the latter is to furnish land and stock with which the former is to make a crop, does not constitute them partners. Holloway v. Brinkley, 42 Ga. 228, 228; Smith v. Summerlin, 48 Ga. 425, 430.

A contract by which a number of railroad companies "lease" their roads and other property to one company for 99 years, the latter company agreeing to operate and maintain the lines and pay to each of the other companies a certain proportion of 98 per cent. of the net profits from such operation, is a contract of partnership, and not a lease. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Davis, 28 S. W. 301, 304, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468.

A mere agreement to share in the profits and losses of an enterprise does not of itself create a partnership. Thus, where defendant leases fishery grounds to plaintiff, who agrees to establish and operate a fishery, advancing all money necessary therefor, and to pay defendant half the net proceeds as rental, and it is agreed that each shall bear half the cost of the improvements and of maintaining and operating the fishery, a partnership is not created. Hanthorn v. Quinn, 89 Pac. 817, 819, 42 Or. 1.

Though one is to receive from another, by way of rent, a portion of the profits of a farm and tavern, the agreement does not constitute them partners as between themselves, and therefore one may sue the other at law on the agreement. Perrine v. Hankinson, 11 N. J. Law (6 Halst.) 181, 184.

It is the law of New York that a right to a share in the profits in compensation of services rendered to the partnership does not involve a liability for the partnership engagement, and so of a loan of money to the partnership for a part of the profits. Thus, where a person hires a chattel to another, and agrees to accept a share of its earnings in the business in which it is employed in consideration thereof, he cannot be held liable on a note to which he is not a party, executed by the bailee, on the ground of a partnership arising from his partnership in the profits of the bailee's business. W. D. Wilson Printing Ink Co. v. Bowker, 15 N. Y. Supp. 293, 294, 27 Abb. N. C. 153.

Same—In addition to interest.

Where a person loans a merchant money, for which he is to receive, at a specified rate, interest, and in addition thereto a certain per cent. of the net profits of the business, he becomes a partner at common law. Weissels v. Weiss, 31 Atl. 247, 248, 166 Pa. 490, 86 Wkly. Notes Cas. 111.

The mere loaning of money to a partnership for a definite period, under an agreement that the debtor shall receive interest and also one-tenth of the excess in yearly profits over $10,000, which agreement is renewed for several successive years, does not make the lender liable as a partner. Meehan v. Valentine, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 975, 145 U. S. 611, 88 L. Ed. 835 (affirming [U. S.] 29 Fed. 276).

A. contracted with B. to invest money, which B. was to advance him for the purpose, in certain lands as an adventure, and to repay the money, with legal interest, and to divide with B. equally the profits of the speculation. Held, that this was a contract for the loan of money, and did not constitute the parties partners inter sese. Smith's Ex'r v. Garth, 32 Ala. 368, 374.

A contract that A. shall furnish money, and B. obtain title to the land purchased in his own name, and manage it for a commission on sales for their mutual benefit; that when enough land has been sold to repay A. his advances, with interest, the residue in land or money shall belong, 60 per cent. to A. and 40 to B., does not create a partnership. Blair v. Shaeffer (U. S.) 33 Fed. 218, 223.

An agreement between two persons for the joint purchase of land for improvement and sale, the money to be advanced by one who was to be repaid principal and interest, with two-thirds of the profits, and the loss to be borne equally, constitutes a partnership, and not simply a cover for usury under guise of a partnership. Plunkett v. Dillon, 3 Del. Ch. 496, 507.

Where, under a contract, one party was to furnish money and the other was to buy cattle for market, the party furnishing the money to have his capital returned, with 5 per cent. interest, together with one-half the profits, it did not constitute a partnership. Adams v. Funk, 53 Ill. 219, 222, 223.

Where one loans money to another to be used in a business enterprise, and the borrower agrees to pay legal interest thereon and one-third of the profits in addition, the lender thereby becomes a partner as to a creditor of the borrower, whose debt arose after a loan was made in the course of the business. Dille v. Abright, 48 S. W. 543, 549, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

Same—In addition to rent.

Where a contract provides that one of the parties shall contribute the use of a theater building, and is to pay certain expenses incident to the use thereof, and the other party shall contribute his time and skill in the management of the business, and pay a fixed sum per month for lighting and heating the building, a fixed sum for rent, and the "lessor" is to receive "as additional rent one-half of the net annual profits accruing from the business of the theater," and each party is to pay one-half of the losses of the business, this contract constitutes them partners, notwithstanding that it uses the terms "lessor" and "lessee." Leavitt v. Windsor Land & Investment Co. (U. S.) 54 Fed. 439, 442, 443, 4 C. C. A. 425.

A lease of a hotel for a certain sum per year and such additional contingent sum as shall equal one-half of the profits does not render the lessor liable to third persons as a partner of the lessee in the hotel business. Dake v. Butler, 28 N. Y. Supp. 184, 188, 7 Misc. Rep. 302.

Same—In addition to salary or compensation.

An agreement signed by W. and M. recited that the undersigned had formed a partnership for the transaction of business, "M. to be guaranteed $2,000 per annum, same to be and to come out of his half of the profits; but, should the one-half profits not amount to $2,000 in the year, he shall not be held for any deficiency in the salary account." Held, that it was a copartnership agreement, and that the supposition of M. that it guaranteed him a salary of $2,000 a year, and half the profits above that sum, but that he should not be liable as partner for any losses, was a mistake of law, for which he was not entitled to relief. Woolworth v. McPherson (U. S.) 55 Fed. 558-560.

A contract reciting that in consideration of a salary of a certain amount per annum paid by the party of the first part (a firm) to the party of the second part, and a further consideration of a certain share in the net profits of the business of the firm, the party of the second part agreed to devote his time to their business as engineer, is a contract of employment, not of partnership. Porter v. Curtis, 65 N. W. 824, 96 Iowa, 539.

A clerk who, besides his salary, is to share in the profits of a firm, is not as to it a partner. So, when sued for moneys of the firm he has collected, he cannot except that he must be sued as a partner for a settlement. St. Victor v. Daubert, 9 La. 814, 817, 29 Am. Dec. 447.

A contract for a stipulated sum per month, "and one-half the profits," for services to be rendered, does not constitute a contract of copartnership. Holbrook v. O'Berne, 9 N. W. 291, 56 Iowa, 324.

Same—In single transaction.

A single special venture, entered into by two persons on joint account, to purchase a tract of land and hold it for sale at a profit, each agreeing to pay one-half the purchase price and expenses, does not create a partnership in respect to the land, but merely makes them tenants in common. Clark v. Sidway, 12 Sup. Ct. 327, 330, 142 U. S. 682, 35 L. Ed. 1157.

A joint purchase, with a view to a joint sale and a communion of profit and loss, though for a single transaction, will constitute a partnership. In re Warren (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 266, 268.

A partnership may exist in a single shipment, or adventure; and persons owning merchandise in common, who ship it or joint account and risk for sale, are copartners in the adventure. 260 Hogsheads of Molasses (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 445, 447.

There may be a partnership, although one single transaction only is contemplated between the parties. Kayser v. Mongham, 6 Pac. 808, 805, 8 Colo. 282.

The fact that two or more persons are joined in a single adventure, in which the profits are to be divided equally, does not constitute them copartners in such a sense as will oust a court of law of its jurisdiction in respect thereto. Hurley v. Walton, 63 Ill. 260, 262.

An agreement between two persons to enter into a single transaction of purchase for the purpose of profit does not create a partnership, so as to prevent one from suing the other in assumpsit to recover the fruits of their purchase. Galbreath v. Moore (Pa.) 2 Watts, 88.

The intention of the parties in forming a particular relation governs in determining whether they are partners or not. Where two persons agree jointly to secure an option on a tract of land for the purpose of jointly selling it, and sharing in the profits of the transaction, they are partners, as between themselves, as to that transaction, and owe to each other the rights and duties of that relation, although the option may be taken in the name of one only of the parties. Flower v. Barnekoff, 25 Pac. 370, 373, 20 Or. 182, 11 L. R. A. 149.

Same—Or option of receiving profit as interest.

One who lends money to a merchant to enable the latter to carry on his business, and has the option to share the profits if successful, and, if not, to receive back the amount, with interest, is not a partner, where he has not elected to share in the profits. Moore v. Walton (U. S.) 17 Fed. Cas. 708, 709.

One furnished to another money, for which he was to receive, at his option, 30 per cent. per annum or one-third the net profits; the money to be repaid at all events. Held, that the parties were not partners, especially where they did not so consider themselves and the lender had not elected to take the profits. Williams v. Soutter, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 435, 445.

Sharing profits, but not losses.

An agreement between two firms to divide equally their net profits, their business, however, "to be conducted entirely separate," neither one to contribute to the expenses or losses of the other, does not constitute the two firms partners inter sese. Mayrant v. Marston, 67 Ala. 453, 457.

If parties agree to share profits they are partners as to such profits, although they do not agree to share in the losses. Robbins v. Laswell, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 365, 369.

A contract under which two persons are to share the profits of a business, but which fails to provide for a sharing of the losses, does not constitute a partnership inter se. Winter v. Pipher, 64 N. W. 663, 664, 96 Iowa, 17.

An agreement whereby one party is to furnish the capital necessary to carry on the business, is to share equally in the profits, and, in case of loss, is guaranteed the return of his investment does not constitute the parties partners, hence the rule of interest on overdrafts under partnership agreements does not apply. Orvis v. Curtiss, 33 N. Y. Supp. 589, 591, 12 Misc. Rep. 434.

Sharing in the profits, though not in the losses, of a business, will render one liable as a partner as to third persons. Sager v. Tupper, 38 Mich. 253, 265.

Sharing both profits and losses.

The true test of a partnership is that there must be a community of interest in the profits and losses. Where there is neither of these elements, there can be no partnership. Howze v. Patterson, 53 Ala. 205, 207, 25 Am. Rep. 607; Jones v. Call, 93 N. C. 170, 182; Chapman v. Lipscomb, 18 S. C. 222, 233.

A contract creates a partnership when it provides for a sharing of profits and losses in a business, and imposes the duty of accounting between the parties. Priest v. Chouteau, 12 Mo. App. 252, 256, affirmed 85 Mo. 398, 55 Am. Rep. 873; Brown v. Cook, 3 N. H. 64, 65; Belknap v. Wendell, 21 N. H. (1 Fost.) 176, 184.

A mere participation in profits and losses of a business does not necessarily constitute a partnership as to third persons. Clifton v. Howard, 1 S. W. 26, 27, 89 Mo. 192, 58 Am. Rep. 97.

An agreement by which two persons undertake to do a joint business, to be carried on in the name of one of them, the profits and losses to be divided between them, makes them partners as to third persons. Galway v. Nordlinger, 4 N. Y. Supp. 649, 650, 51 Hun, 639 (judgment affirmed Galway v. Same, 121 N. Y. 699, 24 N. E. 1100).

Participation in the profits and losses affords the best test of an intention to form a partnership, but there must be a share of losses. Winter v. Pipher, 64 N. W. 663, 664, 96 Iowa, 17.

A partnership is nothing more than a community of interest between two or more persons, and a sharing of a profit and loss either in relation to a general trade or a specific venture. To constitute a partnership in a particular purchase, as in a single concern, there must be either a joint undertaking to pay or an agreement to share in the profit and loss. Cumpston v. McNair (N. Y.) 1 Wend. 457, 463.

Where all the parties to an agreement shared in the conduct and risks of the business, and the ultimate division was to be of the profits as such, it constituted partnership. Smith v. Putnam, 82 N. W. 1077, 1079, 107 Wis. 155.

There must be an agreement to participate in the losses as well as the profits of the concern. This communion of profit and loss is what is essential to constitute a complete partnership as well between the parties as in respect to strangers who deal with them. Beecham v. Dodd (Del.) 3 Har. 485.

Two mercantile firms mutually agreed each to put out contracts for sale and delivery of produce at a future date, the profits of such adventures and losses to be equally divided between the firms. Held, that one firm was liable as a partner on a contract made and signed by the other firm. Smith v. Wright (N. Y.) 1 Abb. Prac. 243.

A participation in the profits of the business, as such, involving also a common liability for losses, unless this be excluded by evidence to the contrary, as in the exceptional cases in which the profits are looked to as a means only of ascertaining the compensation which under the contract is to be paid for the services of an employé, or some other specific obligation, seems to be the well-settled rule for determining the existence of a copartnership in the relation of its members to those who may deal with it and become members. Mauney v. Coit, 86 N. C. 463. The prominent feature in such an association is a common liability for losses and a common participation in the results or profits, as profits, ascertained after payment of expenses incurred in prosecuting the joint business. Day v. Stevens, 88 N. C. 83, 86, 48 Am. Rep. 732.

Sharing losses only.

Where several persons engage in an enterprise, one of them agreeing to assist by advancing money, and to share in the losses, if any, but not to receive any part of the profits, which are to be divided among the others exclusively, although such one is not to be deemed a partner as between the others and himself, nevertheless, if he holds himself out, or allows himself to be held out, as a partner to a third person, who, under the belief that he is such enters into a contract with them, he is liable on such contract. Moss v. Jerome, 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 220, 225.

Sharing gross receipts.

An agreement between two persons that each shall furnish a horse to do certain work, and one do the work, and the other pay all the expenses, and divide the earnings equally, constitutes a partnership. Gilbank v. Stephenson, 31 Wis. 592, 596.

A written agreement between the owner of land and another, described therein as a "contract," to farm such land, the latter to receive a certain share of the produce, is not a lease, but a contract creating a partnership for carrying on the farm. Bailey v. Ferguson, 89 Ill. App. 81.

An agreement between two parties to farm on shares, one of whom is to expend a certain sum in the farming operations, does not constitute a partnership, though one of the parties spoke of it as such. Rose v. Busher, 80 Md. 225, 80 Atl. 637.

A contract between agricultural laborers and their employer by which they share in the products of the farm and in the expense of conducting it, does not constitute a partnership between them. Randle v. State, 49 Ala. 14.

That one is to furnish land and the other materials for making bricks,—the bricks, when made, to be divided equally,—and there is no agreement as to profits and losses, does not constitute an agreement of partnership. La Mont v. Fullam, 133 Mass. 583.

A contract whereby one party is to furnish a certain number of laborers to work in a brickyard, and to receive therefor one-half of the bricks made, and to have the option of purchasing a fixed number at a stated price, the other party to make the brick and defray all other expenses, does not constitute a partnership. Chapman v. Lipscomb, 18 S. C. 222, 223.

Voluntary unincorporated association.

A "voluntary unincorporated association," composed of a great number of persons whose interests are evidenced by certificates of stock, and which transacts its business and manages its affairs through named trustees with prescribed powers, is uniformly held to be a partnership, subject to be sued as such, and governed by the laws fixing partnership responsibility. 1

Cook, Stock & S. § 508. They are distinguishable from "partnerships," as that term is ordinarily used, only in the respect that the death or withdrawal of one or more members does not effect a dissolution, and stock can be bought and sold without affecting the integrity of the concern. Industrial Lumber Co. v. Texas Pine Land Ass'n, 72 S. W. 875, 878, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 376.

PARTNERSHIP DEBT.

A partnership debt is a joint debt, and not joint and several, and an action upon it must be joint. Whitfield v. Hovey, 80 S. C. 117, 120, 8 S. E. 840, 842.

PARTNERSHIP INTEREST.

A partnership interest is one owned by several persons in partnership, for partnership purposes. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 684; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 1106; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3284; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 200.

PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY.

The property of a partnership consists of all that is contributed to the common stock at the formation of the partnership and all that is subsequently acquired thereby. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 4373; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1726.

PARTRIDGE.

Partridges are considered game birds within the law making it a misdemeanor to hunt any game on the Sabbath Day. Gunn v. State, 156 S. E. 458, 459, 89 Ga. 341.

PARTY.

See "Accommodated Party"; "Charter Party"; "Competent Party"; "Immediate Parties"; "Injured Party"; "Political Party."

Any party, see "Any."

Other party, see "Other."

Party "means as naturally a body composed of several individuals as a body sole and individually, and no more. It everywhere implies unity, but is properly used to signify a unit composed of many parts as an individual or one incapable of division, actual or speculative, if such a one can be." As used in a municipal ordinance, which provides that an estimate for a corporation contract shall be verified by the oath of the party making the same, the term is only satisfied in case of an estimate made by a partnership by the oath of each partner. People v. Croton Aqueduct Board (N. Y.) 5 Abb. Prac. 316, 319.

In school articles signed by several employers, providing that "either party" may discontinue the school at the end of any quarter, the term "either party" means the teacher or a majority of the employers. Bird v. Thornburgh, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 4, 5.

Contract of sale.

The word "party" in 2 Rev. St. p. 185, §§ 8, 9, making void every contract for the sale of lands unless subscribed by the party to whom the sale is to be made, means all the vendors when more than one are included in the contract of sale. Snyder v. Neefuss (N. Y.) 53 Barb. 63, 66.

Sess. Acts 1856-57, p. 669, providing that in all suits under this act the "parties" to the contract shall be made parties, means not only those persons who as contracting parties made the contract, but includes all those persons to and from whom a liability arising out of contract existed; that is, those sustaining the relation of debtor and creditor towards each other, without regard to how that relation was established. An assignee is a party to a contract by substitution, but none the less a party. Goff v. Papin, 34 Mo. 177, 180.

In the statute of frauds requiring a note or memorandum to be made in writing, and to be prescribed by the parties to be charged thereby, the term "parties" does not necessarily include, nor can it be construed to include, all the parties to the contract. It is, on the contrary, limited and restricted by qualifying words to such only of those parties as are to be bound and held chargeable and legally responsible on the contract, or on account of a liability created by or resulting from it. Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493, 501, 1 Am. Rep. 576.

The statute of frauds requiring a note or memorandum in writing of contracts for the sale of goods, etc., for the price of $50 or more to be subscribed by the "parties" to be charged therewith, is not to be construed as requiring the memorandum to be signed by both parties, but it is sufficient if it be signed by the one against whom it is sought to be enforced. Moran v. Martin, 13 Minn. 191, 198 (Gil. 180, 182).

Contract of labor.

Within the provisions of a statute relating to enticement of laborers, providing how the contract of labor shall be entered into, to wit, duly entered into between the "parties" before one or more witnesses, whether such contract be verbal or in writing, the word "parties" means the person contracting to serve and the person to be served; so that, where a parent entered into a contract with another contracting the service of his minor child, such child was not one of the parties to the contract, so as to render a person liable for enticing him from his service. State v. Aye, 41 S. E. 519, 520, 63 S. C. 458.

Deed.

A deed was made "between William McKnight and Nancy, his wife, of the first part, and James Hardenbergh, and Eliza, his wife, of the second part," and "grants, bargains, and sells" to the said "party of the second part, his heirs and assigns," the lands, etc., in controversy. Held, that the term "party" embraces both grantees, and is used for that purpose with strict grammatical accuracy; and the word "his" is as definite in its reference to only one of them. More formally expressed, this grant would read, "To the said James Hardenbergh and Eliza, his wife, and to the heirs and assigns of the said James Hardenbergh." Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 42, 43, 18 Am. Dec. 371.

Note.

The word "parties," as used in an indorsement on the back of a note, as follows: "Both parties agreed" that it shall be left in the possession of another, means the maker of the note and the payee. Hensley v. Tuttle, 46 N. E. 594, 595, 17 Ind. App. 253.

The word "parties," as used in Act March 11, 1861, § 16, providing that the holder of any note or bill of exchange may institute one suit against the whole or any number of the parties liable to such holder, but the holder shall not at any time institute more than one suit on such note or bill, means, as applied to joint notes or bills, all the makers as one party and all the indorsers as another, and therefore a suit and judgment on such joint note or bill against one maker or one indorser constitutes a bar to any other suit against any other maker or indorser. Archer v. Helman, 21 Ind. 29, 31.

Prochein ami as, see "Prochein Ami."

A party to an action or suit is one who is directly interested in the subject-matter in issue; who has a right to make a defense, control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment. United States v. Henderlong (U. S.) 102 Fed. 2, 4; In re Duchess of Kingston, 20 Howell, St. Tr. 538; Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 162, 169; Robbins v. City of Chi- cago, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 657, 672, 18 L. Ed. 427; Green v. Bogue, 15 Sup. Ct. 975, 985, 158 U. S. 478, 39 L. Ed. 1061; Theller v. Hershey (U. S.) 89 Fed. 575, 576; Oullen v. Woolverton, 47 Atl. 628, 627, 65 N. J. Law, 279; Hodde v. Susan, 58 Tex. 389, 393; Haney v. Brown (Tex.) 46 S. W. 55, 57; Bealor v. Hahn, 19 Atl. 74, 76, 132 Pa. 242; Walker v. City of Philadelphia, 45 Atl. 657, 195 Pa. 168, 78 Am. St. Rep. 801; State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson (Mo.) 25 S. W. 855, 857 (citing Greenl. Ev. 535); City of Springfield v. Plummer, 89 Mo. App. 515, 531; Boles v. Smith, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 105, 107; Wheeler v. Towns, 43 N. H. 56, 57.

Though, technically speaking, persons to whose use a suit is pending are not plaintiffs, yet in common parlance they might with propriety be both said to be parties, where such use appears in the suit. Jameson v. Kelly, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 479, 490.

A party is ordinarily one who has or claims an interest in the subject of an action or proceeding instituted to afford some relief to the one who sets the law in motion against another person or persons. Interest or the claim of interest is the test as to the right to be a party to legal proceedings almost without exception. Hughes v. Jones, 22 N. E. 446, 448, 116 N. Y. 67, 5 L. R. A. 637, 15 Am. St. Rep. 386.

A corporation may be a party as well as a natural person. South Carolina R. Co. v. McDonald, 5 Ga. 531, 535; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Shepherd (Ind.) 59 N. E. 849, 352; Id., 62 N. E. 300, 308, 29 Ind. App. 412.

The word "party" in a statute providing that under certain circumstances the court should give judgment for either party as the very right of the matter should seem to require, meant either plaintiff or defendant, and included all the persons belonging to the particular class, and did not mean that a judgment which was entire might be reversed as to one defendant and affirmed as to the other. Sheldon v. Quinlen (N. Y.) 5 Hill, 441, 443.

Under the amendment to the Constitution of 1857, providing that the Legislature shall not authorize any county, city, borough, etc., by virtue of a vote of its citizens or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any company, or to obtain money for or to loan its credit to any corporation, association, institution, or party, money paid to save a community from a draft is not obtained for a party, but is a direct appropriation for a public purpose, and raising money by the ordinary powers of borrowing and taxation, for a common purpose, affecting the interests, happiness, and welfare of a community, is not obtaining money or loaning credit to any party, within the terms of the amendment. The payment of bounties to volunteers to enable a borough to fill its quota under a call for troops and an anticipated draft is a legal payment as for a purpose of a municipal and public nature, and is not prohibited by the amendment. Speer v. School Directors of Borough of Blairville, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 150, 164.

The words "person" and "party," and other word or words importing the singular number, shall be held to include firms, companies, associations, and corporations. Civ. Code S. C. 1902, § 265; Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 2780.

Classification.

The Supreme Court of the United States divides parties in equity suits into three different classes: (1) Formal parties, who have no interest in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but have such an interest in the subject-matter as may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation; (2) necessary parties, who have an interest in the controversy but whose interests are separable from those of the parties before the court and will not be directly affected by a decree which does complete and full justice between them; (3) indispensable parties, who not only have an interest in the subject-matter of the controversy but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Hicklin v. Marco (U. S.) 56 Fed. 549, 552, 6 C. O. A. 10.

Attorney included.

The word "party" in a statute directing a thing to be done does not include an attorney, where, from the nature of the thing to be done, or the peculiar phraseology of the statute, it is manifest that the Legislature intended the act should be done in person. Yet a party may do by his attorney whatever he himself is authorized or required to do in the prosecution of a suit, unless restrained by statute. Ludlam v. Broderick, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 269, 270, 272.

An attorney in an attachment suit is no party to a suit, there being only two parties, the plaintiff and defendant. Mantz v. Hendley (Va.) 2 Hen. & M. 308, 317.

Abatement of suit.

The term "parties," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 680, subd. 3, providing for a demurrer to a complaint when there is another action pending between the same parties for the same cause, includes privies. Wetzstein v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 72 Pac. 865, 866, 28 Mont. 451 (citing Holloway v. Holloway, 103 Mo.

274, 15 S. W. 536; Crane v. Larsen, 15 Or. 845, 15 Pac. 826).

Action for causing death.

The word "party," as used in the statute giving a right of action for causing the death of a person where the party killed would have been entitled to bring suit for injury if death had not resulted, does not refer to the party in any technical or narrow sense, but looks to the cause of action, rather than to the particular party whose names it might have reason to use upon the record. The injured party, though a married woman, would be the substantial party. The action would survive in case of the husband's death, while it would abate in case of her death. She is the meritorious cause of action, however the husband may be entitled to the fruits of the litigation. Therefore an action may be maintained under the statutes by one as administrator of his deceased wife whose death was caused by defendant's negligence, on a complaint alleging that decedent left a surviving mother, who was her nearest of kin. Green v. Hudson River R. Co. (N. Y.) 81 Barb. 260, 266.

Allowance of costs.

The words "either party," as used in Rev. St. c. 125, § 85, providing that "in all cases that are contested either at a probate court of original or appellate jurisdiction the said courts respectively may, at their discretion, award costs to either party," mean the parties to the litigation, and therefore authorizes only the allowing of costs to the parties to the litigation. Reed v. Reed, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 242.

Appeal.

A statute providing that the party demanding an appeal shall file with the justice an affidavit made by the said party is to be construed as only requiring an affidavit by one of several appellants. Van Campen v. Ribble, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 433, 434.

The word "parties," in statutes relating to appeals, is to be construed as meaning parties to the judgment, and not merely parties to the action. Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138, 140.

"Party affected," as used in Code, § 825, authorizing any party affected by a judgment to appeal, means only such persons as are technically parties to the action, or their representatives. Martin v. Kanouse (N. Y.) 2 Abb. Prac. 890, 893.

The phrase "a party to the proceedings" as used in the statute providing that "from all decisions of the board of commissioners there shall be allowed an appeal by any person aggrieved; but, if such person shall not be a party to the proceeding, such appeal shall not be allowed unless he shall by * * * his affidavit set forth that he has an interest in the matter decided," etc., should be construed in its ordinary legal meaning, and be held to embrace such persons only as are parties in a legal sense, and who have been made or have become such in some mode prescribed or recognized by the law, so that they are bound by the proceeding. Robinson v. Vanderberg County Com'rs, 87 Ind. 838, 835.

Under Rev. Laws, p. 640, § 80, and page 642, § 47, providing that no appeals shall be granted or certioraries allowed unless the party demanding the one or applying for the other shall enter into bond, etc., an affidavit made by the president, secretary, or other officer or agent of a corporation, where the corporation is a party to the suit, is, in legal contemplation, an affidavit made by the party. New Brunswick Steamboat & Canal Transp. Co. v. Baldwin, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 440, 441.

Bankruptcy.

Rev. St. U. S. § 5010, authorizing a party to a bankruptcy proceeding to take the opinion of the district judge upon any point or matter arising in the course of the proceeding, does not apply to a witness summoned before the register on the application of the assignee to be examined. The only party to such proceeding is the assignee. The law gives him the right to examine this witness, and the witness is no more a party than if he were examined on behalf of the plaintiff or defendant in an ordinary action. In re Comstock (U. S.) 6 Fed. Cas. 252, 253.

Challenge of jurors.

The term "party," within the meaning of the statute giving each party to a civil suit the right to a certain number of peremptory challenges, cannot be construed to mean "persons," and therefore several plaintiffs or defendants in an action must join in exercising such right. Hargrave v. Vaughn, 18 S. W. 695, 82 Tex. 347; People v. O'Laughlin, 1 Pac. 653, 655, 3 Utah, 133.

The "parties litigant," within the meaning of a statute determining the number of challenges permitted to each party litigant in a civil action, means the antagonistic sides of the controversy. If there be a plurality of plaintiffs, they are all only one party litigant; so a plurality of defendants constitutes one, and but one, party litigant. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Ware's Adm'rs (Ky.) 74 S. W. 259, 262.

Where, in an action to recover lands, defendant impleaded his co-defendant on his warranty of title and prayed a judgment against him and such defendant denied liability on the ground that he had received no consideration for the land, the parties defendant, though they had a common interest to defeat, were varying on the issue of fact as between themselves, and were therefore entitled to six peremptory challenges, under Rev. St. art. 3218, declaring that each party to a civil suit in the district shall be entitled to six peremptory challenges. Waggoner v. Dodson, 69 S. W. 993, 994, 96 Tex. 6.

Undoubtedly, when several defendants in a civil action join in their defense, or severing in their answers, set out but one defense, common to them all, they constitute one party, limited to the statutory number of challenges given to a party. But when their defenses are essentially different—especially when these are hostile—defendants must necessarily sever in their answers; and, as each has a distinct issue to maintain, we think that each is to be considered a party, within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 118, § 37, providing that on the trial of any civil case each party shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges. Hundhausen v. Atkins, 36 Wis. 518, 526.

Rev. St. c. 82, § 74, gives to each "party" in criminal cases not capital two peremptory challenges, while in capital cases each "person" is entitled to his peremptory challenges. Held that, where there are several defendants jointly indicted and tried for an offense not capital, they are entitled to two challenges jointly, and no more, and that, if they do not agree upon the persons to whom they will object, they lose their challenge. State v. Cady, 14 Atl. 940, 941, 80 Me. 413.

Under Rev. St. p. 781, c. 110, § 49, providing that in civil actions each party shall be entitled to challenge three jurors without showing cause for such challenge, in a proceeding by a city for the confirmation of a special assessment, all the property owners appearing and opposing the application when tried as one case are to be treated as but one party, and are entitled to but three peremptory challenges. Gordon v. City of Chicago (Ill.) 66 N. E. 823, 201 Ill. 623.

In construing Rev. St. 1874, c. 110, § 49, p. 781, providing that "in all civil actions each party shall be entitled to a challenge of three jurors, without showing cause for such challenge," this court, in Cadwallader v. Harris, 76 Ill. 370, held that the word "party," when applied to the defendant, can only mean the person or persons named as defendant or defendants in the judgment. The definition given to the word by lexicographers is a plurality of persons—as, a political party; a select company invited to an entertainment; a company made up for a given occasion; in military affairs, a detachment or a small number of troops, etc. Thus it is seen that the word is applied as well to a number of persons as to a single individual; and under such statute the word "party" represents all the persons who may be plaintiffs or defendants. Schmidt v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 83 Ill. 405, 408.

Change of venue.

In the statute providing that a change of venue shall be granted upon the application of either party, the term "party" means all the parties on one side collectively. Peters v. Banta, 22 N. E. 95, 97, 120 Ind. 416; Leavell v. State, 44 N. E. 687, 691, 16 Ind. App. 72.

The word "party" in the statute providing that a change of venue may be made whenever "any party in any civil action shall apply," etc., signifies all of the defendants or all of the parties plaintiff in the action. The statute gives the right to a party plaintiff or defendant, not to one of several plaintiffs or defendants. Changes of venue may sometimes be hard on the opposite party. They might be hard on both parties if they should go on the application of a single plaintiff or defendant, where there are several, against the will of his co-plaintiffs or codefendants. It is true that we have held that each of several defendants severing in their pleadings and setting up different defenses is to be considered a party within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 118, § 37, for the purpose of challenging jurors, but none of the reasons applying in that instance are sufficient to overcome the difficulties in this, and there is no rule of construction requiring the same meaning to be given to the same word used in different connections in different statutes. We must give as reasonable a construction to the word "party" as to any other word in view of the connection in which it is used, and as often as it occurs. Rupp v. Swineford, 40 Wis. 28, 30.

The term "party," as employed in Const. 1867, art. 4, § 8, authorizing a change of venue "whenever any party to the cause" shall make a suggestion in writing, etc., when applied to civil cases, where there can be no severance, must be taken in a collective and representative sense, and where there are more persons than one as plaintiffs or defendants, all applications to remove must be taken as made on behalf of all the persons constituting the party plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be. In a suit at law all the plaintiffs and all the defendants have the same interests, the former to sustain and the latter to defeat the action. But in equity it is not unfrequent that a defendant has a common interest with the complainant, and the interests of the several defendants are often adverse; and as the parties in equity, and especially in creditors' bills, are very numerous, it would frequently happen that if any party could, under the statute, obtain a change of venue, a cause would travel all through the state, and never be terminated, so that the foregoing provision of the Constitution cannot be so construed as to authorize the removal in an equity case. Cooke v. Cooke, 41 Md. 362, 369.

The word "party," as used in the statutes permitting a change of venue, but declaring that only one change shall be granted to the same party from the county and only one from the judge, means a person or corporation, and refers either to plaintiff or defendant in the cause. Citizens' St. Ry. Co. v. Shepherd (Ind.) 59 N. E. 849, 852. In a statute providing that only one change of venue shall be granted to the same party from the county, and only one from the judge, the term "party" means a person or corporation, and refers to either a plaintiff or a defendant in the cause. Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Shepherd, 62 N. E. 800-808, 29 Ind. App. 412.

Conclusiveness of judgment or decree.

The conclusive effect of judgments respecting the same cause of action and between the same parties rests upon the just and expedient axiom that it is for the interest of the community that a limit should be opposed to the continuance of litigation, and that the same cause of action should not be brought twice to a final determination. "Parties," in that connection, include all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and who had a right to make defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses and appeal from the judgment. Robbins v. City of Chicago, 71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 657, 672, 18 L. Ed. 427; State ex rel. Kane v. Johnson, 27 S. W. 399, 402, 123 Mo. 43; Douthitt v. MacClusky, 40 Pac. 186, 189, 11 Wash. 601; Burr v. Bigler (N. Y.) 16 Abb. Prac. 177, 183; Bates v. Stanton, 8 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Duer) 79, 87.

The term "parties," as used in a statement that judgments are conclusive between parties and privies, includes all directly interested in the subject-matter who have a right to defend or control the proceedings on appeal; and courts will even look beyond nominal parties, and treat as the real party him whose interests are involved in the issue, and hold him concluded by any judgment that may be rendered. Strayer v. Johnson, 1 Atl. 222, 224, 110 Pa. 21.

Parties to a decree, who are concluded thereby, are those only who are known as such in the record, and are properly served with process or enter their appearance. Orthwein v. Thomas, 21 N. E. 430, 435, 127 Ill. 554, 4 L. R. A. 434, 11 Am. St. Rep. 159.

Under the term "parties" the law includes all who are interested in the subject-matter of litigation, who will be gainers or losers in its result, and for or against whom the record of the former proceeding may be adduced in another trial as res judicata.

Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. King, 78 S. W. 71, 78, 81 Tex. Civ. App. 636.

"Parties" include not only those whose names appear upon the record, but all others who participate in the litigation by employing counsel, or by contributing towards expenses therefor, or who in any matter have such control thereof as to be entitled to direct the course of proceedings therein. Theller v. Hershey (U. S.) 89 Fed. 575, 576.

Those are held to be parties, so as to be bound by the judgment rendered, who have a right to control the proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine the witnesses, and to appeal from the decision, if any appeal lies. The courts will look beyond the nominal party, and treat as the real party him whose interests are involved in the issue, and who conducts and controls the action or defense, and will hold him concluded by any judgment that may be rendered. Bachelder v. Brown, 11 N. W. 200, 201, 47 Mich. 363.

In McKinsie v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 28 Md. 161, which was action of replevin, the court, in speaking of the rule that a judgment, to operate as an estoppel, must be upon the same subject-matter and between the same parties, said "that the term 'parties' is not restricted to those who appear as plaintiff and defendant upon the record. It includes those who are directly interested in the subject-matter of the suit, knew of its pendency, and have the right to control and direct or defend it; or, as was said in Albert v. Hamilton, 25 Atl. 841, 76 Md. 304, persons who are directly interested in the suit, and have knowledge of its pendency, and who refuse or neglect to appear and avail themselves of their rights, are concluded by the proceedings as effectually as if they were parties named on the record." Fetterhoff v. Sheridan, 51 Atl. 123, 125, 94 Md. 445.

A suit was brought against several as partners in the steamship business to recover damages for the infringement of a patent and for an injunction. While the action was pending they sold out their business, ships, and property to a corporation, which assumed all their debts and liabilities. After the sale the corporation was not made a party to the suit, but the suit progressed, and an injunction was granted. Held, that the corporation, not having been a party, was not bound by the injunction. Bate Refrigerator Co. v. Gillett (U. S.) 80 Fed. 685, 687.

Where a judgment is rendered against a county, city, or town in its corporate name, or against a board or officer representing the municipality, in the absence of fraud or collusion it will bind the citizens or taxpayers. This is on the principle that they are represented in the litigation by agencies authorized to speak for them, and to protect their interests. So where, after the common council of a city has reconsidered and postponed indefinitely a resolution directing a public improvement to be made, a court of competent jurisdiction grants a peremptory writ of mandamus on application of some of the property owners compelling the proper officers to proceed on the resolution and award the contract, other property owners cannot, after the contract has been awarded and the work done, collaterally attack the judgment holding the resolution valid and still binding, though they may not have been parties to the record by name in the mandamus proceedings, since as taxpayers they were represented therein by the city through its officers. Ashton v. Rochester, 80 N. E. 965, 967, 133 N. Y. 187, 28 Am. St. Rep. 619.

Criminal prosecution.

"The parties to a criminal action are the people on one end and the defendant on the other, and where the record in the criminal case shows that the parties and their attorneys appear at every stage of the proceeding it must be presumed that the defendant was personally present." People v. Jung Qung Sing, 11 Pac. 755, 757, 70 Cal. 469.

The fact that Comp. Laws, § 5858, provides that no prosecution for adultery shall be commenced but on the complaint of the husband or wife, does not make the complainant in such a case a party to the prosecution. The complainant is no more than a complaining witness; the people and defendant are the only parties to the case. Parsons v. People, 21 Mich. 509, 514.

Examination as witness.

The word "party," as used in Code, § 390, declaring that a party to an action may be examined as a witness at the instance of the adverse party, means one who appears on the record as such, and hence, where the nominal defendant was the president of an unincorporated company, and the demand was against the company only, he might be required to submit to an examination. Woods v. De Figanlere (N. Y.) 16 Abb. Prac. 1, 4; Id., 24 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Rob.) 607, 610.

"Parties," under the Code of Civil Procedure, means only such persons as are parties to the record as either plaintiff or defendant. The term includes corporations. They are persons as against the opposite party. In the absence of authority, it would seem plain that the term "party" would not include a director in a corporation. He is not the party to the proceeding. He can make no admission to bind the corporation as a party. He is simply a witness. He may verify the pleadings, but this is by express statute. He is permitted to verify the answer because he is an officer of the party, and the party is incapable to make an affidavit. So that the term as used in Code Civ. Proc., relating to the examination of parties to an action before trial, does not include the agents, directors, or officers of a corporation as parties thereto. People v. Mutual Gas Light Co. (N. Y.) 14 Hun, 157, 158.

The term "party," as used in Prac. Act, § 159 (Revision, 1874), providing that any "party to an action" in the supreme or circuit court may be examined as a witness at the instance of any adverse party or parties after issue joined, means a party to the record, and hence, where a corporation alone is a defendant, and has no officer thereof, it may be examined under the statute at the instance of the plaintiff. Apperson v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 272, 278.

Jurisdiction.

It may be laid down as a rule which admits of no exception that in all cases where jurisdiction depends on the party it is the party named in the record. Osborn v. Bank of United States, 22 U. S. (9 Wheat.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204. In a case where the chief magistrate of a state is sued, not by his name, but by his style of office, and the claim made on him is entirely in his official character, the state itself may be considered a party in the record. State of Georgia v. Madrazo, 26 U. S. (1 Pet.) 110, 121, 7 L. Ed. 73.

Next friend.

A person acting as the next friend of minors in a suit is not such a party to the suit that his admissions or declarations out of court should be received, except on proper foundation, to impeach him as a witness. Buck v. Maddock, 47 N. E. 208, 167 Ill. 219.

The next friend of an infant is neither the agent nor attorney for his ward. An agent or attorney derives his authority as such from his principal, and an infant cannot appoint an agent and empower him to do an act which in contemplation of law he is himself incapable of doing. The next friend does not derive his authority from the infant, and his office does not rest on such authority, either express or implied. The next friend derives his authority from the court which appoints him, and, as he is appointed to institute and conduct the suit, it follows that he has authority to do every act which the interest of the infant demands and the law authorizes. It is because the law regards an infant incapable of conducting a lawsuit in his own behalf that it has made provision for the appointment of a next friend to act for him. The next friend is a party within Rev. St. 1889, § 2261, requiring the application for a change of venue to be made by the party. Raming v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 268, 275, 157 Mo. 477.

The prochein ami or next friend is not a technical party to the cause, but he is a party within the meaning and contemplation of the Constitution and the acts of the Assembly "relating to the removal of causes," and therefore capable of making the affidavit and suggestion for removal. And we can see no reason why a guardian ad litem should not be so far considered a party to the suit as to have the right of appeal on behalf of the infants for the purpose of protecting or advancing their interests; otherwise, not being themselves able or competent, in contemplation of law, to take any step in the cause, they would be compelled, in the absence, as here, of a regularly appointed guardian, to submit, however unjust or oppressive a judgment or decree might be. Thomas v. Safe-Deposit & Trust Co., 23 Atl. 3, 4, 73 Md. 451.

Objecting to jurors.

The term "party," as used in Rev. St. c. 82, § 88, providing that if a party knows any objection to a juror in season to propose it before trial, and omits to do so, he shall not afterwards make it unless by leave of court, includes the attorney of the party as well as the party himself. Brown v. Reed, 16 Atl. 504, 506, 81 Me. 158.

Production of books and papers.

A grantor in whose name ejectment is prosecuted by his grantee under Code Civ. Proc. § 1501, is not a party to the action who may be compelled to produce books and papers under section 808. The grantee, and not the grantor, is the real party. Adrianse v. Sanders (N. Y.) 11 Abb. N. C. 422.

Qualification of judge.

When a corporation sues or is sued, a stockholder thereof is in no sense a party to the suit, so as to disqualify the judge because a relative to such stockholder. Lewis v. Hillsboro Roller Mill Co. (Tex.) 23 S. W. 388.

Where a statute declared that a justice of the peace should not have jurisdiction of a case when related within the fourth degree by affinity or consanguinity to either of the parties, in a suit by a corporation it was no valid objection to the jurisdiction of the justice that he was related to a stockholder, since, although it may be correct to treat the members of a corporation as parties to a cause to which the corporation is a party, it is not proper to consider the stockholders parties for all purposes. Searsburg Turnpike Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315, 320.

The word "party," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 170, providing that no justice, judge, or justice of the peace shall sit or act in any action or proceeding to which he is a party, or when he is related to either party by consanguinity or affinity, is not confined to the parties to the record by name, but includes all persons represented by parties to the record. Therefore in an action by an alleged daughter of a decedent to revoke letters of administration granted to decedent's grandnephew the sons of a judge who have contracted to try the case for the nephew on condition of receiving one-fourth of the estate if they succeed are parties within the spirit of the section, and their father cannot act as judge. Howell v. Budd, 27 Pac. 747, 750, 91 Cal. 842.

The word "party," as used in Code, § 2637, providing that no judge shall sit in any proceeding in which he is related to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, includes not only the parties to the record, but any person interested in the judgment or decree. Therefore a judge of a probate court is disqualified from determining the settlement of an administrator's account, where the judge's cousin is a surety on the administrator's bond; a bondsman, though not a party to the record, being a party in interest. Crook v. Newborg, 27 South. 432, 433, 124 Ala. 479, 82 Am. St. Rep. 190.

Rev. St. p. 275, § 2, enacts that no judge of any court shall sit in any cause in which he would be excluded from being a juror by reason of consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties. Held, that where an overseer of the poor commenced proceedings before a justice who was his son-in-law, and whose wife was still living, which justice associated another with himself, the overseer was a party in such sense that the proceedings were void. Rivenburgh v. Henness (N. Y.) 4 Lans. 208, 209.

The word "party," as used in a statute providing that no judge shall be permitted to sit in any cause in which he was peculiarly interested or related to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, will not be construed in the technical and narrow meaning of one who is a party to the record, and absolutely bound by the judgment, but in the more liberal sense of including any one peculiarly interested in the result of the case. Thus a judge who is related within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity to counsel for the applicant in an application for alimony is disqualified from presiding in the case. Roberts v. Roberts, 41 S. E. 618, 617, 115 Ga. 259, 90 Am. St. Rep. 108.

Const. art. 5, § 11, declares that no judge shall sit in any case wherein he may be interested, or where either of the parties may be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within such degree as may be prescribed by law. Held, that the word "party" is a technical word, having a precise meaning in legal parlance, meaning to or for, by or against whom a suit is brought, whether at law or in equity, a party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal person; and hence it does not include an attorney, and a judge is not disqualified because his brother, who is attorney for one of the parties, is contingently interested in the result. Winston v. Masterson, 27 S. W. 768, 87 Tex. 200.

A surety on a claimant's bond in proceedings for the trial of the right of property is in legal contemplation such a party to the cause as that his relationship within the prohibited degrees to the magistrate before whom the case is pending will disqualify the magistrate from trying the case. Hodde v. Susan, 58 Tex. 889, 893.

Within the meaning of a statute (Code, § 540) providing that no judge can sit in any cause in which he is related to either party within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, a judge who was related within the fourth degree to the person whom the defendant in a criminal case is charged with having murdered is not related to either party to the action. Gill v. State, 61 Ala. 169, 171.

Removal of cause.

The word "party," as used in the Removal Act (Act Cong. March 3, 1875, c. 137 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509]) § 2, cl. 1, means all jointly on the one side or the other. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Champlin (U. S.) 21 Fed. 85, 90.

A party defendant to an action within the meaning of the removal act is one who is named as such, and appears in the record as a defendant at the time the writ of removal exists. Walker v. Richards (U. S.) 55 Fed. 129, 180.

The prochein ami or next friend is not a technical party to the cause, but he is a party within the meaning and contemplation of the Constitution and the Acts of the Assembly "relating to the removal of causes," and therefore capable of making the affidavit and suggestion for removal. And we can see no reason why a guardian ad litem should not be so far considered a party to the suit as to have the right of appeal on behalf of the infants for the purpose of protecting or advancing their interests; otherwise, not being themselves able or competent, in contemplation of law, to take any step in the cause, they would be compelled, in the absence, as here, of a regularly appointed guardian, to submit, however unjust or oppressive a judgment or decree might be. Thomas v. Safe-Deposit & Trust Co., 23 Atl. 3, 4, 73 Md. 451.

Security for costs.

The word "party" is held to be synonymous with the word "plaintiff," as used in Sayles' Civ. St. art. 1436, providing that the plaintiff in any civil suit may be ruled to give security for the costs. Gulf, C. & S. Ry. Co. v. Scott (Tex.) 28 S. W. 457, 458.

Service of writ.

The word "party" in the statute requiring writs in suits to which a sheriff or his deputy is a party to be served by a coroner, means a party of record, and not a mere party in interest. Douglass v. Gardner, 63 Me. 462, 464; Walker v. Hill, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 481, 482.

The term "party," as used in Rev. St. Minn. p. 456, § 47, providing that summons may be served by the sheriff or by any other person "not a party to the action," extends only to parties named in the proceedings, and not to a party of interest whose name does not appear. Owens v. Gotsian (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 927, 928.

In the statute providing "that the coroner shall serve all writs, etc., when the sheriff or either of his deputies shall be a party," the word "party" is unquestionably a technical word, and has a precise meaning in legal parlance. By it is understood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether at law or in equity, the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons. They are parties to the writ and parties on the record, and all others who may be affected by the writ indirectly or consequentially are persons interested, but not parties. Merchants' Bank v. Cook, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 406, 407, 411.

The word "party," as used in Comp. Laws, § 4849, providing that summons may be served by the sheriff where the defendant may be found, or by any other person not a party to the action, was evidently used by the lawmaking power in its technical sense, and a person, therefore, not strictly a party to the record, is competent to serve a summons in a civil action; and the fact that the person serving it was the collecting agent of the plaintiff did not disqualify him. Plano Mfg. Co. v. Murphy (S. D.) 92 N. W. 1072, 1073.

Taking of deposition.

The term "party," as used in New Code, § 870, providing for the taking of the deposition before trial of a party to an action, must be construed as meaning party to the record, and not party in interest, such being the legal and ordinary meaning of the phrase

"party to an action"; and hence the deposition of one who is not a party to the record, but only a party in interest, cannot be taken before trial under the statute. Seeley v. Clark, 78 N. Y. 220, 221.

The term "party," when used in a statute in reference to court proceedings, must be understood in its technical sense, and limited to those who are parties to the record, unless the context shows that the Legislature used it in a more popular sense. An officer of a defendant corporation is not a party within the statute authorizing a litigant to propound ex parte interrogatories to, and secure the deposition of, the opposing party. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. White (Tex.), 82 S. W. 322, 324.

Testimony as to transaction with decedent.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], providing that in actions by executors or administrators in which judgment may be rendered for or against them neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the intestate, etc., the word "party" was intended to include both parties who, according to the established rules of pleading and evidence, are parties to the issue, and not those who, not being parties, have an interest in the result of the issue. A witness may be interested in the issue without being a party thereto, and in an action against an executor in his representative capacity one who is interested in the issue, but not a party, was competent as a witness for plaintiff as to the statements of the testator. Potter v. Third Nat. Bank, 102 U. S. 163, 164, 26 L. Ed. 111.

The term "parties" comprehends all persons standing in the relation of privies in blood, privies in estate, or privies in law. The bare fact that two persons held different parcels of what was once an undivided tract of land, and derived the title from the same grantor, constituted no privy of estate, so that the testimony of a deceased witness on trial of an action of ejectment against one for the premises in his possession could be given in evidence in an action of ejectment against the other for the premises possessed by him, though both actions were by the same claimant. Jackson v. Orissey (N. Y.), 3 Wend. 251, 252.

A prochein ami is not a party to the suit within the meaning and clause of the evidence act which declares that, where an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, or where an executor or administrator is a party to the suit, neither party shall be admitted to testify in his own behalf or on the call of his co-complainant or codefendant otherwise than now by law allowed, etc. Trabern v. Colburn, 63 Md. 99, 103.

6 Wds. & P.—22

The word "party," as used in Gen. St. p. 413, c. 37, § 22, providing that "no party shall be allowed to testify, by virtue of section 22, in any action or special proceeding, where the adverse party is * * * an administrator or executor of a deceased person," is equivalent to the word "person" in section 22 of the same Code. To restrict the word "party" to parties to the record would be inconsistent with the whole tenor and spirit of the act, its intention being to put parties as nearly as possible upon an equal footing, and the language should be liberally construed. Manion's Adm'r v. Lambert's Adm'r, 74 Ky. (10 Bush) 295, 296.

The term "party," as used in the statute excluding the testimony of a party when the other party is an administrator, may be fairly held to mean the legal party to the action. In fact, this is the common meaning of "party" in law instruments and proceedings. English v. Porter, 68 N. H. 206, 215.

The word "party" has a precise meaning in legal parlance. By it is understood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether in law or in equity. They are parties in the writ and parties in the record, and all others who may be affected by the writ indirectly or consequentially are persons interested, but not parties. The assignor of a claim against the estate of a decedent is not a party within the meaning of Gen. St. p. 1407, § 53, providing that any party to an action shall not be permitted to testify as to any transaction with or statement made by any testator or intestate represented in an action in a suit by the assignee of the claim against the representative of the decedent. Cullen v. Woolverton, 47 Atl. 628, 627, 65 N. J. Law, 279.

The widow of a testator, named as the administratrix of his will, and presenting the same for probate, is not a "party" in the sense in which that term is used in the statute prohibiting any party to a civil action from testifying as to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in any such action. Mackin v. Mackin, 37 N. J. Eq. (10 Stew.) 523, 533.

In an action by a tenant against the executors of his former landlord for the unlawful seizure of crops for rent alleged to be due it is competent for a legatee, who also claims to own the land by gift from deceased, and to whom the tenant has attorned, to testify as a witness to the arrangement between himself and the deceased landlord whereby he became entitled to the rents; he not being a party to the action, and having no interest therein, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 400, which prohibits parties from testifying as to transactions with a deceased person in an action to which the executor is a party. Huff v. Latimer, 11 S. E. 758, 759, 33 S. C. 255. We therefore hold that where a warrantor has been made a party to the suit in such a way as to render the judgment binding upon him in favor of his vendees he is a "party" thereto, within the meaning of our statute, which prohibits parties from testifying against the heirs or legal representatives of decedents. Bennett v. Virginia Ranch, Land & Cattle Co., 21 S. W. 123-128, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 321.

The term "party to the action," as used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, providing that "it shall not be competent for any party to an action, or interested in the event thereof, to give evidence therein of or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane party or person, relative to any matter at issue between the parties," means a party to the issue to which the testimony relates, and not merely a party to the record. Bowers v. Schuler, 55 N. W. 817, 54 Minn. 99.

Where, in an action brought by an executrix, a person was made a party defendant in the summons and complaint, but the summons was never served on him, and he never appeared, his testimony was not governed by Comp. Laws, § 5260, providing that in actions by or against executors neither "party" shall testify against the other as to any transaction with testator. Bunker v. Taylor, 74 N. W. 450, 452, 10 S. D. 528.

In an appeal from the decree of the judge of probate allowing the probate of a will, the heirs of the deceased and the legatees in the will, not being appellants, though interested, are not parties in interest, so as to be excluded from testifying under a statute forbidding parties in interest from testifying. Wheeler v. Towns, 43 N. H. 56, 57.

Under Const. Schedule, § 2, providing that no witness shall be excluded because a party or interested in the issue, provided that in actions against executors or administrators "neither party" shall testify against the other as to transactions with or statements of the decedent, unless called by the opposite party, the original plaintiff in a suit against an administratrix, in which a receiver for the benefit of creditors was substituted as plaintiff, though contingently interested, was not incompetent as a witness. The competency or incompetency of the witness has to be determined relatively to his status at the time he was proposed and passed upon as a witness, without any reference to his previous relation to the record. Stanley v. Wilkerson, 63 Ark. 556, 560, 39 S. W. 1048, 1044.

The term "party," as used in sections 498, 499, Rev. St. 1881, providing that in certain cases a party shall be a competent witness, means a party to the issue, and heirs of a decedent, who had not only parted with their interest in his estate, but have also been defaulted, and are no longer parties to any issue, are not incompetent. Scherer v. Ingberman, 12 N. E. 804, 805, 110 Ind. 428.

Verification of affidavit of pleading.

The word "party" in Code, § 157, permitting the verification of a pleading, embraces the party in interest or person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, though not named on the record. The terms "party," "party to the action," and "party in interest" were at the time the Code was enacted in general use among the people and lawyers; the word "party" being applied as well to the party in interest not named on the record as to the party named therein. Taber v. Gardner (N. Y.) 6 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 147, 149.

Within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 525, requiring verification of a pleading to be by a party, except that in an action by a domestic corporation it may be made by an officer, or in an action by a foreign corporation it may be by the agent or attorney for the party, "party" does not embrace an officer of a corporation. "The terminology shows that an officer of a corporation party is not to be deemed a party. If otherwise, this distinction between a corporation party and its officer would be a contradiction of terms." An officer of a foreign corporation is an agent thereof in law and within the meaning of the Code provisions. Robinson v. Ecuador Development Co., 65 N. Y. Supp. 427, 428, 32 Misc. Rep. 106.

A local agent of a railroad company in the county where the action is pending, and on whom, under the statute, process may be served for the company, is competent to make an affidavit to support an application by the company for a change of venue under Rev. St. art. 1271, providing that a change of venue may be granted on the application of either party supported by the affidavits of credible persons; such agent not being a party. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Allen, 26 S. W. 434, 435, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

Rev. St. 1858, c. 120, § 8, authorizes a change of venue in a civil action, and provides that the party shall verify the application by his oath or affidavit. Held that, while the word "party" was sufficiently broad to include a foreign corporation which was a party to a suit, the word could not be extended to include the attorney for such foreign corporation, so as to authorize him to execute and verify the affidavit required. Western Bank of Scotland v. Tallman, 15 Wis. 92, 93.

The term "party," as used in Rev. St. 1859, § 2201, requiring an application for a change of venue to be made by the party, means the party in his own person, and not by agent or attorney, and in the case of an infant suing by his next friend it includes the next friend, the next friend being neither the agent nor attorney for his ward. Rambling v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 268, 275, 157 Mo. 477.

The word "party," in Practice Act, § 55, providing that where a pleading is verified it shall be by affidavit of the party, unless he be absent from the county where the attorney resides, refers to the party who by law is made primarily the proper person to verify the pleading, rather than the party plaintiff or defendant. Heintzelman v. L'Amoroux, 8 Nev. 377, 379.

PARTY CAST.

In North Carolina, if the defendant in a sci. fa. against him as bail surrender the principal, he subjects the plaintiff to costs as the "party cast." Peace v. Person, 5 N. C. 188.

PARTY CONCERNED.

See "Concern."

PARTY INTERESTED.

See "Interest."

PARTY OF THE FIRST PART.

A deed must be read according to the manifest intention of the parties, and if by mistake the words "party of the first part" are written where "party of the second part" should have been written, the mistake will not be permitted to defeat the intention of the parties, but the court will give effect to the deed so as to carry out their intentions. Huyler's Ex'rs v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. (11 C. B. Green) 504, 507.

Where the words, "party of the first part" were inserted by mistake in a deed executed subject to a certain mortgage, which the purchaser was to assume and pay as part of the price, the court said: "There is no ambiguity in the words, but there is a mistake. The manifest intent was that whoever was to pay the consideration was to pay the mortgage. * * * If it is necessary to give a rule to justify this conclusion, that rule is: 'Verba intentioni, non e contra, debent inservire, ut res magis valeat quam pereat.' This requires that the whole of the instrument should be examined, and any part which is inconsistent with or repugnant to the intent of the whole instrument, as is shown with certainty by the other parts, is to be rejected or modified according to the intent." Fairchild v. Lynch, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Jones & S.) 285, 278.

Insolvent Act 1890, § 17, provides that the clerk of court shall assign and convey to the assignee all the estate, real and personal, of the debtor. The clerk, in an assignment, after styling himself "party of the first part," proceeded to convey all the property, etc., of the said party of the first part. The instrument was entitled "In the matter of A. B., an insolvent debtor." It recited the steps in the insolvency proceedings, and that the instrument was made by the assignor as clerk of the court; also that it was in obedience to the insolvent act. Held, that the words "party of the first part" meant the clerk acting under the statute as assignor of the insolvent's estate. Mogk v. Peterson, 17 Pac. 446, 448, 75 Cal. 496.

PARTY TO BE CHARGED.

See "Signed by the Parties to be Charged."

PARTY TO CONTROVERSY, SUIT, OR PROCEEDING.

In sales made by commissioners under decrees and orders of the court of equity the purchasers who have bid off the property and paid their deposits in good faith are "parties to a controversy," within the meaning of that term as used in a statute providing that a party to a controversy may obtain an appeal, etc.; it being held that the phrase in question is not restricted in its meaning to a party to the original suit. Kable v. Mitchell, 9 W. Va. 492, 507.

The term "party to a suit or action" applies as properly to persons seeking by writ of habeas corpus to vindicate their right to personal freedom and to the adverse parties who are restraining them of it as to contestants upon the record in any other suit. The former are persons seeking to establish their legal rights; the latter persons on whom it is sought to impose an immediate duty or liability to recognize such rights. The statutory and judicial policy which prevents a private attorney from appearing for the state in a criminal case except by special appointment for that purpose does not apply to habeas corpus proceedings, and, though an attorney cannot appear on the side of the state in a habeas corpus suit at public expense, he may appear by request of the proper officer at private expense to represent the interests of the state. State v. Huegin, 85 N. W. 1046, 1053, 110 Wis. 189, 62 L. R. A. 700.

The phrase "party to the proceeding," as used in Gav. & H. St. § 31, providing that from all decisions of commissioners there shall be allowed appeals from the circuit or common pleas court by any person aggrieved, but, if such person shall not be a party to the plea, such appeal will not be allowed, etc., embraces such persons only as are parties in a legal sense, and who have been made or become such in some mode prescribed or recognized by the law, so that they are bound by the proceeding. Robinson v. Vanderberg County Com'rs, 87 Ind. 333, 335.

PARTY-RATE TICKET.

"Party-rate tickets" is a name given to designate railroad tickets for the transportation of 10 or more persons at a reduced rate. They are issued in the form of one ticket for all the persons in the party to be so transported. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 845, 145 U. S. 283, 36 L. Ed. 699.

A party-rate ticket is a ticket for the transportation of a party of persons from a place in one state or territory to a place situate in another state or territory at a rate less than that charged to a single individual for a like transportation on the same trip. Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Swanson, 23 S. E. 601, 602, 102 Ga. 754, 39 L. R. A. 275.

PARTY WALL.

As an incumbrance, see "Incumbrance (On Title)."

A party wall is ordinarily a wall built partly on the land of one and partly on the land of another for the common benefit of both in supporting timbers used in the construction of contiguous buildings. Brown v. Werner, 40 Md. 15, 19; Barry v. Edlavitch, 85 Atl. 170, 171, 84 Md. 85, 33 L. R. A. 294. A party wall is a wall erected on the boundary between adjacent landowners, part being on the property of the one, and part on the other, and which is or can be used for the mutual support of adjacent buildings. Musgrave v. Sherwood (N. Y.) 54 How. Prac. 338, 339.

The term "party wall" is commonly applied to a wall of which, if divided longitudinally, the two parts rest on land belonging to different owners, built solidly of materials not easily divided, or whose parts cannot be taken down without danger to the whole structure. In such case either party may remove the half on his own land, if it does not injure the other's half, unless one or other owner has an easement by grant to have his neighbor keep up his half to support his own. Sherred v. Cisco, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 480; Eno v. Del Vecchio, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 53; Bradbee v. Christ's Hospital, 4 Man. & G. 714; 2 Car. & P. 250; Fettretch v. Leamy, 22 N.

Y. Super. Ct. (9 Bosw.) 510, 525; Nash v. Kemp (N. Y.) 49 How. Prac. 522, 527.

A party wall is the division wall between two connected and mutually supporting buildings, either both actually erected or one contemplated, of different owners, commonly, but not necessarily, standing half on the land of each, ordinarily maintained at mutual cost, and always with the right of each owner to insert therein his timbers. Duscomb v. Randolph, 64 S. W. 21, 23, 107 Tenn. (23 Pickle) 89, 89 Am. St. Rep. 915.

A party wall has been defined to be a structure for the common benefit and convenience of both the tenements which it separates, and either party may use it. Such a wall is a substitute for a separate wall to each adjoining owner, and neither may impair its value to the other. Each adjoining proprietor is the owner in severalty of his part, both of the wall and of the land on which it stands, subject to the gross easement of support, and for other common needs in favor of the other proprietor. Fidelity Lodge, No. 59, I. O. O. F., of New Castle, v. Bond, 45 N. E. 338, 339, 147 Ind. 437.

A party wall is a wall erected on the line between two adjoining estates belonging to different persons, for the use of both estates. Lukens v. Lasher, 51 Atl. 887, 889, 202 Pa. 327; Odd Fellows' Hall Ass'n of Portland v. Hegele, 82 Pac. 679, 681, 24 Or. 16. A party wall is a wall between two estates, used for the common benefit of both. Glover v. Meraman, 4 Mo. App. 90, 91. See, also, Harber v. Evans, 14 S. W. 750, 101 Mo. 661, 10 L. R. A. 41, 20 Am. St. Rep. 646.

A party wall is a dividing wall between two houses, to be used as an exterior wall for each. Ensign v. Colt, 52 Atl. 829, 831, 75 Conn. 111.

A common or party wall is one which has been built at a common expense, or one which has been built by one party, but in which another has acquired a common right. Every wall or separation between two buildings is presumed to be a common or party wall. Campbell v. Mesier (N. Y.) 4 Johns. Ch. 334, 340, 8 Am. Dec. 570.

A party wall is one in which there is community of use. Rector, Wardens, and Vestrymen of Church of Holy Communion v. Paterson Extension R. Co., 43 Atl. 696, 697, 63 N. J. Law, 470.

A dividing wall between two buildings owned by different parties, the foundations of which rest both on the ground of each, is a party wall. It is immaterial that the foundation is not equally laid on the lot of each party, and that the wall itself above the foundation is fully within the lot of one of the adjoining owners. Appeal of Western Nat. Bank, 102 Pa. 171, 182.

A party wall is a wall constructed upon the line of lands of two adjoining proprietors, and partly upon each, or it may be that the wall and the land upon which it stands are held in common. Hunt v. Ambruster, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 206, 213.

A party wall, in the legal sense of the term, can only exist in one of two ways—either by contract or by statute—for the common law creates no such right. It is possible that such a right may arise by prescription. List v. Hornbrook, 2 W. Va. 340, 342.

Solid structure.

By usage the words "party wall" and "partition wall" have come to mean a solid wall. Bonney v. Greenwood, 52 Atl. 786, 790, 96 Me. 335. And the owner of land, in building a party wall, has no right, against objections of the adjoining owner, to leave openings for windows. Normille v. Gill, 84 N. E. 543, 544, 159 Mass. 427, 33 Am. St. Rep. 441.

A party wall is understood to be ordinarily a solid or dead wall, but when a party wall is erected without limitations by either party, except as to its strength, then, if the party erecting it meets the requirements of the other in this respect, he may leave openings therein, provided that said openings shall not interfere with the right of the other to the use of the party wall as a party wall, and provided further that such openings would not greatly increase the hazard by fire to the property of such other. Everly v. Driskill, 58 S. W. 1046, 1049, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 418.

There is no rule in this state which requires a wall to be absolutely solid, under all circumstances, in order to be a party wall. The term does not, as matter of law and necessarily, imply a solid structure; and evidence as to the general custom in New York in regard to fences, when party walls are erected, may be some evidence of the meaning of the term as used in an agreement for such a wall. Hammann v. Jordan, 29 N. E. 294, 295, 129 N. Y. 61 (reversing Hammann v. Jordan, 13 N. Y. Supp. 228, 229, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. [27 Jones & S.] 91).

Wall belonging entirely to one owner.

A wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing line between two tenements, is a party wall. Spero v. Shultz, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 1018, 14 App. Div. 423.

Wall entirely on land of one owner.

A wall built entirely on one man's land may acquire by grant the characteristics of a party wall. Brondage v. Warner (N. Y.) 2 Hill, 145, 148; Fettretch v. Leamy, 22 N.

Y. Super. Ct. (9 Bosw.) 510, 526; Nash v. Kemp (N. Y.) 49 How. Prac. 522, 527. Evidence showed that the wall had been built by defendant's ancestor, as a part of his residence, when there was no building on plaintiff's lot, which extended to the line, and that the building was occupied for 24 years before plaintiff purchased it. Held, that the wall, as a boundary, had been established by acquiescence. Pearsall v. Westcott, 51 N. Y. Supp. 663, 666, 80 App. Div. 99.

A division wall may become a party wall by agreement, either actual or presumed; and, although such wall may have been built exclusively upon the land of one, if it has been used and enjoyed in common by the owners of both houses for a period of 20 years, the law will presume, in the absence of evidence showing that such use and enjoyment were permissive, that the wall is a party wall. In such cases the law presumes an agreement between the adjacent owners that the wall shall be held and enjoyed as the common property of both. Barry v. Edlavitch, 35 Atl. 170, 171, 84 Md. 96, 33 L. R. A. 294.

The wall of a building wholly upon the land of one of such owners does not, from the fact that it is built up to the divisional line, become a party wall, to the extent that the other may build his timbers into it, or rest them upon it. Simonds v. Shields, 44 Atl. 29, 80, 72 Conn. 141.

PASS.

See "To be Passed."

The word "pass," as used in Act Aug. 13, 1813, c. 56, making it an offense to use a British pass or protection, will include a piece of cloth. It is as much a pass as if a ring or a watch seal or any other symbol had been given, upon the exhibition of which the party would be permitted to go unmolested. United States v. Briggs (U. S.) 24 Fed. Cas. 1232.

Canal or railroad.

Where a person subscribes to the stock of a railroad company upon condition that the road should pass through a certain county, and on a certain designated route, the word "pass" should be construed to mean "runs" or "is located"; and it is not a condition precedent to the right of the company to demand the amount subscribed that it should actually construct and complete the road along the route designated. North Missouri R. Co. v. Winkler, 29 Me. 313, 320.

"Passing through the town," as used in a contract to pay a certain sum of money in six months after the canal passing through the town be put under contract, on condition that it shall pass through the town, means,

"not the completion, but the final location and establishment, of the line of canal." State v. Collins, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 126, 142.

"Pass through," as used in Gen. St. p. 2680, par. 83, providing that railroad companies may, before or after the completion of the main line, construct branches within the limits of any county through which such road may pass, should not be construed in the sense of going from one boundary to another. The words "pass through," as used in reference to the main line, may be considered as used in the sense in which an arrow is said to pass through air; the notion of motion or location in a body or space being referred to. Passage through a county at the point of departure of the branch road from the main line was the object of the reference to the main line, and the fixing of the terminus quo and the terminus ad quem of the main line, which could construct branches by a reference to its passing through a county, was not intended. Grey v. Greenville & H. Ry. Co., 46 Atl. 638, 642, 59 N. J. Eq. 372.

Coin or bank note.

Utter distinguished, see "Utter."

The word "passing," used of notes, includes any delivery of a note to another, for value, with intent that it shall be put into circulation as money, and does not necessarily import that the notes are transferred as genuine. United States v. Nelson (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 80, 82.

"To pass counterfeit money" means delivery as money, or as a known and conventional substitute for money, and does not necessarily mean to transfer for a valuable consideration received from the person to whom the bill is given. Commonwealth v. Starr, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 301, 303.

"Pass," as used in St. 1804, c. 120, § 4, providing that if any person shall have in his possession within the state any counterfeit bank bill, etc., for the purpose of rendering the same current as true, or with intent to pass the same, knowing it to be counterfeit, etc., he shall be punished, should be construed in a technical sense, meaning to deliver bank notes as money, or as a known and conventional substitute for money, and was intended to prohibit the passing of counterfeit bank bills as money, or to be used or passed as money, by any person, at any rate of discount or otherwise, whether, as between the party passing them and the immediate receiver, they were passed as true or not. Hopkins v. Commonwealth, 44 Mass. (8 Metc.) 460, 464.

The word "pass," as used in Act June 30, 1864, making it an offense to utter, pass, publish, sell, or counterfeit United States notes, may include, in a proper case utter, publish, and sell. United States v. Nelson (U. S.) 27 Fed. Cas. 80, 82.

"The plain or ordinary and usual sense of the word 'pass,' as applied to coin or bank notes, is to deliver in exchange for something else, and is equally expressed by the words 'sell, exchange, or deliver.'" State v. Watson, 65 Mo. 115, 119.

"Pass," as used with relation to the crime of forgery, is the putting of a paper off, or giving it in payment or exchange. United States v. Mitchell (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1276.

As used in Act April 22, 1794, § 5, providing a punishment for every person convicted of having falsely uttered, paid, or tendered in payment any counterfeit or forged coin, knowing it to be forged or counterfeit, or who shall be concerned in printing, forging, or passing any counterfeit notes of the Banks of Pennsylvania and North America or the United States, knowing them to be such, "passing" is not synonymous with "uttering and publishing," for to offer a false or forged bank note in payment would be an uttering or publishing, but there would not be a passing of such note until it was received by the person to whom it was offered. Commonwealth v. Searle (Pa.) 2 Bin. 332, 338, 4 Am. Dec. 446.

Same—Gambling.

The term "passing," in the act prohibiting the passing of counterfeit money, includes the losing of counterfeit money at gambling. State v. Beeler (S. C.) 1 Brev. 482, 483.

Same—Pledging.

"Passing," as used in a statute prohibiting the felonious and fraudulent passing of counterfeit money, etc., does not include the pledging of such a note with the understanding that it was to be redeemed at a future date. Gentry v. State, 11 Tenn. (3 Yerg.) 451.

Passing of papers.

In a written agreement for an exchange of real estate and other property, and providing that one of the parties should pay the taxes on his land, and interest on a mortgage thereon to date, and that taxes and ground rent must be paid on the property of the other up to passing of papers, the "passing of papers" meant the execution and delivery of formal conveyances securing to each the title contracted for. Linthicum v. Thomas, 59 Md. 574, 577.

Real estate.

"Pass," as used in Wag. St. p. 541, § 15, providing that if any testator shall by will pass any real estate, means "devise." Gant v. Henly, 64 Mo. 162, 163.

The term "pass," as used in Rev. St. § 2189, providing that, if any testator shall by will "pass any real estate to his wife, such devise shall be in lieu of dower," etc., means only "devise." Young v. Boardman, 97 Mo. 181, 185, 10 S. W. 48, 50.

Statute.

The terms "make," "ordain," "constitute," "establish," and "pass," as used with relation to a grant of legislative authority to a municipal corporation to enact business ordinances, mean the same thing. Kepner v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 124, 129.

Const. art. 3, § 18, provides that no member of the Legislature shall be interested directly or indirectly in any contract with the state, or any county thereof, authorized by law, and passed during the term for which he should have been elected. Laws 24th Leg. p. 50, § 5, fixed the rate that publishers should receive for publishing delinquent tax lists, which law was amended and re-enacted by the Twenty-Fifth Legislature, and whether or not the latter law made any material change in the rate to be paid for the publication of the tax lists under the law passed by the Twenty-Fourth Legislature, it was a law passed at the Twenty-Fifth Legislature, within the meaning of the constitutional provision, preventing a member of the latter Legislature from making a contract for publishing the delinquent tax list. Lillard v. Firestone County, 57 S. W. 388, 840, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 363.

Ordinarily a bill is said to have passed one of the houses of the state Legislature when the final vote in its favor in that house has been taken and announced; but it is held that under the last clause in section 11, art. 4, Const., authorizing the Governor to sign certain bills within three days after the adjournment of the Legislature, bills that were finally voted upon more than three days before the day of adjournment, if forwarded within the last three days, are deemed to be passed within that time, and may be signed by the Governor. Burns v. Sewell, 43 Minn. 425, 430, 51 N. W. 224.

PASS AND REPASS.

The privilege of "passing and repassing," as used in a grant of dower to certain rooms on the floors of a building, a room on the second floor, and a room in the garret, and the privilege to pass and repass to such rooms and the well, as is most convenient, includes a right of passing to and from the public street. Miles v. Douglas, 34 Conn. 393, 394.

A deed giving the grantee a right to use a specified portion of an adjoining lot as an alley in common, for the purpose of passing and repassing from the lot conveyed, gives a right to use the alley for the passage of foot travelers, teams, and vehicles, and does not authorize the grantee to erect any permanent structure on the alley. Gillespie v. Weinberg, 42 N. E. 676, 677, 148 N. Y. 238.

PASSAGE.

See "On a Passage."

PASSAGE OF ACT.

See "Final Passage."

As date of passage by Legislature.

The "passage" of an act, within the meaning of an act laying duties on goods imported from and after the passage of the act, means the day on which it is passed, and not the time of its being signed by the President. United States v. Williams (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 677, 678.

The phrase "after the passage of this act," as used in Gen. St. c. 860, § 1, providing that arrest or imprisonment for any action accruing "after the passage of this act for the recovery of debt or of state or town taxes is hereby abolished," which act was passed on the 31st day of March, and to take effect on the 1st day of July, must be construed to refer to March 31st, and not to July 1st; and hence arrest is prohibited in every case where the cause of action occurred after the 31st of March, and from that time no arrest could be made, and no writ could command it. Elliot v. Cranston, 10 R. I. 88, 89.

A provision that an act shall take effect from its passage means from and including the whole day it actually passed—not even deferred until the day of its approval by the executive. Ex parte Lucas, 61 S. W. 218, 221, 160 Mo. 218.

The word "passage," in Const. art. 6, providing that no act of the Legislature, except, etc., shall take effect until the expiration of 90 days after its passage, unless, etc., means the date of the passage of the act by the two houses, and not to the date of its approval by the Governor. State v. Mounts, 14 S. E. 407, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L. E. A. 248.

As time of becoming a law.

An act of the Legislature is passed only when it has gone through all the forms made necessary by the Constitution to give it force and validity as a binding rule of conduct for the citizen. Whether it receives the signature of the Governor, or remains in his hands unreturned for 10 days, or, being vetoed, is carried by two-thirds of both houses, its passage is dated from the time it ceased to be a mere proposition or bill and passed into a law. Wartman v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 202, 208.

The time of the passage of an act is the time when it has passed through the various stages rendered necessary by the provisions of the Constitution to make it a valid statute, and been approved and signed by the Governor, and not the time when it was to take effect. Johnson v. Fay, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 144, 145.

The word "passage," in Const. art. 2, § 20, declaring that no law of a general nature shall take effect until 40 days after its passage, means the time when it becomes a law by the signature of the Governor, or by final passage over his veto. Logan v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 442, 445.

As time of taking effect.

The words "passage of the act," and similar expressions, in statutes, have legal reference to the time of their taking effect. Rogers v. Vass, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 406, 408.

The term "passage of the act," in a limitation statute to take effect at a date subsequent to its passage, which provides that, in case the cause of action has accrued at the time of the passage of the act, a party may have the whole period prescribed by the statute in which to commence action, means the time when the act actually takes effect. Schneider v. Hussey, 1 Pac. 843, 844, 2 Idaho (Hask.) 8.

The term "passage of the act," as used in a statute which provides that the State Board of Medical Commissioners, within 90 days after the passage of the act, shall receive through its president applications for certificates and examinations, taken in connection with Const. art. 5, § 19, which provides that no act shall take effect until 90 days after its passage, unless in case of an emergency, is to be construed, in the absence of an emergency clause, as meaning after the act goes into effect. Harding v. People, 15 Pac. 727, 729, 10 Colo. 387.

Where the Constitution provides that, unless otherwise provided by the Legislature, an act shall not take effect until three calendar months after the adjournment of the Legislature, for that session, in the absence of an emergency clause the expression "after the passage of this act," as used in a law, can have but one meaning, namely, after the law goes into effect. State v. Bemis, 64 N. W. 848, 852, 45 Neb. 724.

PASSAGE OF MAIL.

A statute providing that any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the "passage of the mail," etc., means the transmission of mail matter from the time the same is deposited in a place designated by law or by the rules of the Post-Office department, up to the time the same is delivered to the person to whom it is addressed. "Mail matter in the post office, ready for delivery, and there for that purpose, is on its passage, within the meaning of the statute." United States v. Claypool (U. S.) 14 Fed. 127, 128.

PASSAGEWAY.

Where a statute imposed a penalty on any person who should smoke or have in his possession any lighted pipe or cigar in any street, lane, or passageway, it was held that the terms "street, lane, or passageway" include any way which was actually open and used for the ordinary purposes of an open way. Commonwealth v. Thompson, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 231, 232.

The word "passageway," as used in Greater New York Charter, § 762, punishing the obstruction of the passageways of a theater, means that portion of the building through which persons going to or from their seats are accustomed to, or must of necessity, pass. Sturgis v. Grau, 79 N. Y. Supp. 843, 844, 39 Misc. Rep. 330.

PASSBOOK.

A passbook used by a depositor in a savings bank is not negotiable paper, such as to justify the payment of the amount of the deposit to one having possession of the passbook. Smith v. Brooklyn Sav. Bank, 4 N. E. 123, 101 N. Y. 58, 54 Am. Rep. 653.

A passbook is a book of the buyer or usually debtor party, in which he allows the other party to enter their mutual transactions, and thus these entries become in a great degree the written admissions of both parties. Whatever is entered there by one party is entered with the other's consent, and therefore is presumed to be right, whatever may be the subject of the entries, for parties may make their passbooks evidence of every transaction. Ruch v. Fricke, 28 Pa. (4 Casey) 241, 245.

PASSENGER.

See "Carrier of Passengers"; "Emigrant Passengers."

A "passenger," in the legal sense of the word, is one who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier, as the payment of fare, or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor. Bricker v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 18 Atl. 983, 132 Pa. 1, 19 Am. St. Rep. 536; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 98 Pa. 256, 258, 23 Alb. Law J. 69; Fitzgibbon v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 477, 479, 108 Iowa, 614; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 42 S. E. 522, 523, 116 Ga. 284, 59 L. R. A. 107, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125; Stalcup v. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co., 45 N. E. 802, 803, 16 Ind. App. 584.

A passenger is a person who undertakes, with the consent of the carrier, to travel in a conveyance provided by the latter, otherwise than in the service of the carrier as such. Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Mont. 90, 99, 85 Am. Rep. 450; Denver, S. P. & P. Ry. Co. v. Pickard, 6 Pac. 149, 152, 8 Colo. 163; Berry v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 124 Mo. 223, 247, 25 S. W. 229.

A "passenger" has been defined to be a person whom a railway, in the performance of its duty as a common carrier, has contracted to carry from one place to another place for a valuable consideration, or whom the railway, in the course of the performance of that contract, has received at its station, or in its car, or under its care. Schepers v. Union Depot R. Co., 29 S. W. 712, 713, 126 Mo. 665; Simmons v. Oregon R. Co., 69 Pac. 440, 441, 41 Or. 151.

A passenger is one whom a common carrier has contracted to carry from one place to another, and has, in the course of the performance of that contract, received under his care either on the means of conveyance, or at the point of departure of that means of conveyance. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Field, 84 N. E. 408, 407, 7 Ind. App. 172, 52 Am. St. Rep. 444; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256.

The word "passenger" ordinarily conveys the idea of one who, for hire, has taken a place in a public conveyance for the purpose of being transported from one place to another. De La Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. McLeroth, 60 Ill. App. 523, 534 (citing Webst. Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; And. Law Dict.).

Webster defines "passenger" as one who travels in some conveyance, as a stagecoach or steamboat; a passer or passer-by; one who is making a passage; a traveler, especially by some established conveyance; a person conveyed on a journey. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256, 258, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 183, 189.

Worcester defines "passenger" to mean one who passes; is on his way; a traveler; a wayfarer. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 183, 189, 96 Pa. 256.

The term "passenger" is said to include all persons who pay freight for their persons, apart from their merchandise. The Main v. Williams, 14 Sup. Ct. 493, 497, 152 U. S. 122, 38 L. Ed. 381.

A passenger is one who enters the vehicle of a carrier with the intention of paying in money the usual fare for his transportation, or is supplied with a ticket or pass entitling him to ride to a given point. Holt v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 74 S. W. 631, 633, 174 Mo. 524.

It is not easy to construct a definition of the term "passenger," which, on the one hand, includes all persons entitled to the rights of passengers, and, on the other, excludes all those who are not. In a great majority of cases there can be no question on this score, because a person riding on a passenger coach, who has prepaid his fare, is necessarily a passenger. The purchase of a ticket or the prepayment of the fare is not necessary to create the relation of passenger and carrier. Rawlings v. Wabash R. Co., 71 S. W. 534, 97 Mo. App. 515 (citing Fett Carr. § 210).

A passenger may be said, in general terms, to be any person whom the carrier is, as carrier, transporting. The carrier's servant going on his master's business is not a passenger, but one riding on a free ticket may be such. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Tanner, 41 S. E. 721, 722, 100 Va. 379 (citing Blah. Non-Cont. Law, § 1092).

Rev. St. § 4492 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3058], requiring a barge carrying passengers while in tow of a steamer to be equipped with fire buckets, does not apply to a canal boat laden with coal for transportation, having on board the wife and children of the captain. Transportation Line v. Cooper, 99 U. S. 73, 79, 25 L. Ed. 382.

The wife and neighbors of the owner of a tugboat, going on a tug during a trial trip merely to witness the operation of the machinery, are not passengers, within the meaning of the statute requiring boats for passengers to be inspected and licensed. United States v. Guess (U. S.) 43 Fed. 537.

Children on board a vessel and persons not paying are not to be excluded, in estimating the number of passengers on a vessel, under Act March 2, 1819, subjecting a vessel to forfeiture where there was an excess of two to every five tons of the vessel. United States v. The Louisa Barbara (U. S.) 26 Fed. Cas. 1000, 1001.

"Passenger," as used in Rev. Code 1855, p. 647, providing that, when any passenger shall die from any injury by the defects in any railroad, the latter shall forfeit the sum of $5,000, refers exclusively to passengers carried as such; and in this respect, and so far as the principles of law governing the liability are concerned, it makes no change in the previous law of carriers or passengers. Schultz v. Pacific R. R., 86 Mo. 13, 24.

Person about to take passage.

A person who has purchased a ticket from a common carrier's agent, paid him therefor, and is in waiting at the depot, intending thereafter, as soon as possible, to take passage, or one who has gone to the depot with the intention in good faith to procure a ticket to take passage on the carrier's train at the first opportunity, and for this purpose has placed himself in the care of the carrier, and its servants and agents, preparatory to taking passage on its train, is a passenger. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Franklin (Tex.) 44 S. W. 701, 702.

One becomes a passenger when he puts himself into the care of the railroad company to be transported under a contract, and is received and accepted as a passenger by the company. There is hardly ever any formal act of delivery of one's person into the care of the carrier, or of acceptance by the carrier of one who presents himself for transportation, and so the existence of the relation of passenger and carrier is commonly to be implied from circumstances. These circumstances must be such as to warrant an implication that the one offered himself to be carried on a trip about to be made, and that the other has accepted the offer, and has received him to be properly cared for until the trip is begun, and then to be carried over the railroad. Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co., 87 N. E. 165, 167, 161 Mass. 298, 24 L. R. A. 521.

One who enters upon depot grounds by the approaches furnished by the carrier is a passenger. The fare does not have to be paid, nor the train entered, but the person must merely enter within the control of the carrier at the depot through the usual channels of business, with intention of becoming a passenger by either paying fare before or after entering the train. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 82 Atl. 201, 202, 81 Md. 371.

It is not necessary to create the relation that the passenger should have entered a train, but, if he is at the place provided for passengers—such as the waiting-room or platform at the station—with the intent of taking passage, and has a ticket, he is entitled to all the rights and privileges of a passenger. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wilson, 63 Ill. 167; Gordon v. Grand St. & N. R. Co. (N. Y.) 40 Barb. 546, 550.

Same—Going to train with ticket.

One who has a railroad ticket, and is present to take the train at the ordinary point of departure, is a passenger, though he has not entered the cars. Central R. & Banking Co. v. Perry, 53 Ga. 461, 467.

A person who walks across a track at a railway station to take passage on a train is a passenger, for whose safety the railroad company is bound to exercise the highest degree of diligence. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Chancellor, 60 Ill. App. 525, 526.

One who goes upon the gang plank of a steamboat for the purpose of taking passage thereon is a passenger. Rogers v. Kennebec Steamboat Co., 29 Atl. 1069, 1070, 86 Me. 261, 25 L. R. A. 491.

One who had purchased a ticket, and was crossing the track under the direction of an agent of the company, was a passenger, and entitled to all the rights as such. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135, 136.

A person, in possession of a ticket, who while running from the street, across the company's tracks, outside the passenger station, apparently to catch a train about to start, is struck and killed by another train, has not become a passenger. Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co., 87 N. E. 165, 166, 161 Mass. 298, 24 L. R. A. 521.

Where one runs to catch a train as it is starting, and is not seen by any of the trainmen, and, without any negligence on their part, is injured while attempting to board it while moving, he is not a passenger, and the company is not liable. Jones v. Boston & M. R. R., 89 N. E. 1019, 1020, 168 Mass. 245.

A person, having purchased a ticket of a railroad company with the intention of becoming a passenger on one of its trains, passed through a turnstile provided by the company for that purpose, and onto its depot platform. Held, that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between the parties when the purchaser of the ticket passed through the turnstile onto the platform. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Treat, 75 Ill. App. 827.

Same—Going to train without ticket.

One in good faith coming to the depot to take passage on the cars is a passenger, though he have not bought a ticket. Grimes v. Pennsylvania Co. (U. S.) 86 Fed. 72, 73.

Where one in good faith inquired of a railroad agent for a ticket for passage in the caboose of a freight train, and was referred to the conductor, but was injured before getting upon the train, held, that the relation of passenger was established. Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 87 Iowa, 264, 267.

Same—Going to purchase ticket.

A man walking towards a railroad station, with the intention of buying a ticket and taking a train, is not a passenger before he reaches the station. June v. Boston & A. R. Co., 153 Mass. 79, 26 N. E. 238.

One who was injured while riding to a railroad station, with intent to take passage on the train, in a stage run by the company to bring passengers to their trains, held to be a passenger, and entitled to claim damages for negligence of the driver, although he had not yet bought his ticket, nor made any formal announcement of his purpose to do so. Buffett v. Troy & B. R. Co., 40 N. Y. 168, 171, affirming (N. Y.) 36 Barb. 420.

It is the lawful right of every citizen prima facie to become a passenger on a railway train, and neither the purchase of a ticket nor the entry into the car is essential to create the relation of carrier and passenger, and where a person enters the ticket office of a railway company to buy a ticket he is entitled to the protection of a passenger, even though the agent refuses to sell him a ticket. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Galiber, 16 S. E. 985, 986, 89 Va. 639.

Same—Signaling car to stop.

The facts that plaintiff signaled defendant's street car to stop for her to get on board, and that the driver intended to stop the car for that purpose, are not sufficient to establish the relation of carrier and passenger. Donovan v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 82 Atl. 850, 351, 65 Conn. 201, 29 L. R. A. 297.

One who attempts to board a street car moving six miles an hour is not a passenger, though he signaled the car to stop, and is entitled only to such care on the part of the trainmen as is due to any person in the street. Baltimore Traction Co. v. State, 28 Atl. 397, 399, 78 Md. 409.

Same—Boarding car or train.

One is a passenger in a street car who is in the act of stepping on the platform, the car having stopped for him, and, in case of an accident when stepping on, his rights are those of a passenger. McDonough v. Metropolitan R. Co., 187 Mass. 210, 211.

Where defendant's train stops before crossing the track of another road, where there is no depot, but where defendant allows passengers to take trains, one who enters the train there becomes a passenger after entering the car, and his rights and duties are the same as other passengers. Dewire v. Boston & M. R. Co., 19 N. E. 523, 524, 148 Mass. 343, 2 L. R. A. 163.

Plaintiff had hailed a street car, and the car had stopped for the purpose of enabling him to take passage, and while he was in the act of boarding it he was injured by another car, approaching it from behind. Held, that even though he was not actually on the platform of the car, but was only in the act of carefully and prudently attempting to step upon the platform, he was to be regarded as a passenger. Smith v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 32 Minn. 1, 18 N. W. 827, 50 Am. Rep. 550.

The rear car of an electric railway train was just passing over the further crosswalk at a street crossing, at which the city ordinance required it to stop for passengers, and was running three miles an hour, when plaintiff came on the street. Plaintiff, intending to board the train, ran towards the motor car, but was not seen by the conductor until within 10 feet of the car. There was no slackening of speed or other act showing any intention on the part of the conductor or motorman to accept him as a passenger. Held, that by his attempt to board the train he did not become a passenger so as to require of the railway company the highest degree of care to avoid injuring him. Schepers v. Union Depot R. Co., 29 S. W. 712, 713, 126 Mo. 665.

The relation of carrier and passenger may be implied from an attempt to enter in a proper manner a street car as a passenger, with the intention of being transported therein. North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 29 N. E. 672, 675, 140 Ill. 275.

The relation of carrier and passenger may be implied from slight circumstances, but one who intends to take passage on a street car cannot be regarded as a passenger while he is in the act of entering it, unless he does so with a proper degree of care and prudence, so that until such a person enters the car, or is in the act of prudently entering it, he has not placed himself in the charge of the street car company, so as to become a passenger. Baltimore Traction Co. v. State, 28 Atl. 397, 399, 78 Md. 409.

A person may become a passenger on a street car before he has actually entered the car, as otherwise he might, in good faith, and in the exercise of due care, place himself in a position of peril while in the act of taking passage upon the invitation of the carrier, and the latter be bound to the exercise of ordinary care only. Thus a person who has hailed a car, which has stopped for him, and who is in the act of carefully and prudently attempting to step on the platform, is to be regarded as a passenger. Smith v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 18 N. W. 827, 32 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550.

Where a street car had stopped for a person at a crossing, and he was endeavoring to enter it when he was hurt, as the car had actually stopped for the purpose of enabling him to take passage, and he was in the act of stepping on the platform, he was a passenger, he having accepted defendant's invitation to take passage, which had been signified by its stopping the car and waiting for him to enter. Smith v. St. Paul City Ry. Co., 18 N. W. 827, 32 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550.

Same—Transferring from one car to another.

One who, having received a transfer from one line of a street railway company to its other line, is proceeding from the sidewalk to her car on the latter line, which is standing at the end of the route, when she is struck by a piece of the trolley which breaks while being changed, as usual at such point, from one end of the car to the other, is entitled to recover, as a passenger, for her injuries. Keator v. Scranton Traction Co., 43 Atl. 86, 87, 191 Pa. 102, 44 Wkly. Notes Cas. 128, 129, 44 L. R. A. 546, 71 Am. St. Rep. 758.

Person on conveyance.

As a general rule, every one on a passenger train of a railroad company, and there for the purpose of carriage, with the consent, express or implied, of the company, is presumptively a passenger, but there must be some form of acceptance by the company of the person as a passenger. This acceptance need not be direct, or expressed to him, and generally is implied from the circumstances; and if the train be a regular train, or a train carrying passengers in general, or a special train fitted for the carriage of persons in general, and a person boards such a train without notice that it is reserved for particular persons, no doubt the presumption will arise that he was a passenger. If the train is not designed for the use of passengers in general, there is no implied acceptance of one who enters upon it, without right, as a passenger. Fitzgibbon v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 477, 479, 108 Iowa, 614.

Where one enters a street car as a passenger, his status is not affected by the fact that no demand was made for his fare, nor any paid. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Muhling, 80 Ill. (20 Peck.) 9, 24, 81 Am. Dec. 386; Buck v. People's Street Ry., Electric Light & Power Co., 46 Mo. App. 555, 558; Bartlett v. New York & S. B. F. & S. Transp. Co., 8 N. Y. Supp. 309, 312, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. (25 Jones & S.) 348; Cogswell v. West St. & N. E. Electric Ry. Co., 5 Wash. 46, 31 Pac. 411, 418.

Where a party is properly on a car (although one of a freight train) in which a railroad company allows people to travel, with the knowledge of the agents of the company, for the purpose of being transported, he is a passenger, and the company is liable for any negligence on its part whereby he is not transported safely, whether he has a ticket or not. Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co. (U. S.), 18 Fed. 221, 223.

A child nine years of age, who was carried several blocks on a street car, the driver and conductor knowing him to be on board, was a passenger, whether he intended to pay fare or not, and was entitled to the diligence due to passengers of his age and discretion. Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Moore, 10 S. E. 730, 731, 83 Ga. 453.

Payment of fare is not necessary to create the relation of carrier and passenger. Rose v. Des Moines Val. R. Co., 89 Iowa, 246, 252.

Children of such an age that they are carried free, if accompanied by adults, are within 1 Pub. St. c. 112, § 212, making a railroad company liable in damages to passengers whose lives are lost in railroad accidents, etc., though the accompanying adults are riding on free passes. Littlejohn v. Fitchburg R. Co., 20 N. E. 103, 105, 148 Mass. 478, 2 L. R. A. 502.

The term "passenger" includes a person entering a passenger train without the consent or knowledge of the conductor, and allowed to remain thereon, without the payment of fare, after the conductor has knowledge that he is on the train. Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 72 Mo. 62, 65, 37 Am. Rep. 423.

One on a railroad train by the invitation and permission of the conductor is not a passenger, so as to entitle him to recover, as a passenger, for injuries received. Stalcup v. Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co., 45 N. E. 802, 803, 16 Ind. App. 584.

Where a person goes aboard a railway train in good faith for the purpose of being carried from one place to another, and is permitted by the conductor to ride, the company is liable, in the absence of a special contract, for an injury arising from the carrier's negligence. Simmons v. Oregon R. Co., 69 Pac. 440, 441, 41 Or. 151.

One who has secured a ticket, and entered a railroad train standing at a station, with the intent to be transported, is a passenger. Choate v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 67 Mo. App. 105, 109.

A person who refuses to pay his fare, and threatens to resist expulsion, is not a passenger, though he is not expelled. Higley v. Gilmer, 8 Mont. 90, 99, 85 Am. Rep. 450; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Headland, 33 Pac. 185, 188, 18 Colo. 477, 20 L. R. A. 822.

One who fraudulently evades the payment of his fare on a railway train is not a passenger. Condran v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (U. S.), 67 Fed. 522, 523, 14 O. C. A. 503, 28 L. R. A. 749; Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Brooks, 81 Ill. 292, 293; McVeety v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 47 N. W. 809, 45 Minn. 268, 11 L. R. A. 174, 22 Am. St. Rep. 728.

A person fraudulently traveling on a pass issued to another person is not a passenger. Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 613; Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 19 N. W. 823, 64 Iowa, 48, 52 Am. Rep. 431; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 8 N. E. 18, 20, 107 Ind. 442, 57 Am. Rep. 120. But the fact that a free pass is used by a passenger in violation of a statutory prohibition does not destroy his rights as a passenger. Buffalo,

P. & W. Ry. Co. v. O'Hara (Pa.) 12 Wkly. Notes Cas. 473.

It is not necessary that a person should be on a train of a railroad, in order to be regarded as a passenger. As a passenger, he has the right to stand or walk on the platforms provided at stations for the convenience of passengers while the train is stopping for refreshments, and on a street alongside of the platform. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 538, 585.

Same—Employé of carrier.

Where an employé of a railroad company, whose duties are not connected with the running of its trains, rides on one of its trains on a free pass, and is injured, the company is liable to him as to a passenger. Central R. R. v. Henderson, 69 Ga. 715, 716.

A person in the employment of a railway company, riding from his home to his employment in a caboose car attached to a freight train, without paying fare, according to the custom and the understanding of the parties, from which car and trains all persons except employés of the company are excluded, of which exclusion such person has full knowledge, is not a passenger, but only an employé of the company, as between whom and the company a presumption of negligence, on the part of the latter, is not varied by the fact of a collision. Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Salmon, 11 Kan. 83, 91.

A painter, employed by a railroad company, painting depots, etc., along the line of the road, and transported over the road, to discharge his duties, in a small steam hand car used only by the officers and employés of the railroad company, is not a passenger, nor entitled to the rights of a passenger. McQueen v. Central Branch U. P. R. Co., 30 Kan. 689, 1 Pac. 189.

A person traveling on a railroad train, under a contract with the corporation that, in consideration of his making certain quarterly payments, and supplying the passengers with iced water, he shall receive quarterly season tickets, and be permitted to peddle refreshments on the train, is a passenger, and not a servant. Commonwealth v. Vermont & M. R. Co., 108 Mass. 7, 8, 11 Am. Rep. 301.

Where an employé of a railroad travels to and from his work on the cars of the company, and his transportation constituted part of the contract of service, while so traveling he is an employé, not a passenger, and hence the company is not liable for an injury to him through the negligence of a co-employé. Vick v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 267, 271, 47 Am. Rep. 36.

A railroad employé who is ordered to go to a certain point on the railroad, and travels thither on an employé's pass, is during the trip a passenger. McGucken v. Western New York & P. R. Co., 28 N. Y. Supp. 298, 299, 77 Hun. 69.

One may be both a passenger and an employé of a railroad company—an employé when passing over the road at a time when actually engaged in performing duties for the company, but a passenger while not so engaged, but riding from one place to another, even though continuing all the while, in a popular sense, in the employ of the company. Thus a paymaster of a railroad company, traveling upon the business of the company from station to station, and stopping between stations for the purpose of paying off employés of the company wherever they may be, is not while so doing a passenger, within the meaning of a clause in a policy of accident insurance granting double indemnity to the insured if injured while riding as a passenger on a passenger car using steam as a motive power. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 42 S. E. 522, 523, 116 Ga. 264, 59 L. R. A. 107, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125.

Where an employé of a railroad company had not for several days been in the actual service because the trains were interrupted by guerrillas, but took his place in the baggage car among other employés, and was received by the conductor as an employé who was passing from one point to another on the train, and engaged no passage, paid no fare, and did not expect to pay any, he was an employé, and not a passenger, within Act 1856, § 647, allowing damages to a passenger resulting from defects or insufficiency in any railroad. Higgins v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 36 Mo. 413, 433.

A railroad employé riding in the baggage car with other employés without the payment of fare, though not traveling in the master's service, was not a passenger. Higgins v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 36 Mo. 413, 433.

Same—Express messenger.

An express messenger who is injured, while engaged in his duties as such, by the derailing of the express car, has the same right of action against the railway company as any passenger would have under the same circumstances. Fordyce v. Jackson, 56 Ark. 594, 20 S. W. 523.

Where an express company hires its freight transported by steamer or railroad, and hires an agent to take charge of such freight, whose passage is paid for in the contract, such agent occupies the position of an ordinary passenger, as to the liability of the common carrier, for injuries he may sustain, caused by the negligence of its employés. Yeomans v. Contra Costa Steam Nav. Co., 44 Cal. 71, 72.

An express messenger riding in a baggage car is entitled to the same care as a passenger, so far as is consistent with his position in such car. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 24 S. W. 839, 841, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 102.

Same—Postal clerk.

A United States railway postal clerk, who has finished his regular run, and is on a train returning home, riding free on the strength of his photograph commission, in accordance with the custom of the railroad company under its contract to carry the mails, is a passenger, and entitled to damages resulting from the negligence of the railroad's employees, whether he is riding in a passenger car or is in the postal car assisting his fellow clerks in handling the mails. Cleveland, O., O. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ketcham, 88 N. E. 116, 119, 183 Ind. 846, 36 Am. St. Rep. 550, 19 L. R. A. 839.

A mail agent traveling on a railroad under a contract between the government and the railroad company is a passenger. Arrowsmith v. Nashville & D. R. Co. (U. S.) 57 Fed. 166, 167; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kingman (Ky.) 35 S. W. 284, 285; Mellor v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 14 S. W. 758, 105 Mo. 455, 10 L. R. A. 36; Nolton v. Western R. Corp. (N. Y.) 10 How. Prac. 97, 101 (affirmed in 15 N. Y. 444, 69 Am. Dec. 623); Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 562, 570, 81 Hun, 100, 101, 47 Am. Rep. 75; Hammond v. Northeastern R. Co., 6 S. C. (6 Rich.) 180, 139, 24 Am. Rep. 467; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Shott, 22 S. E. 811, 812, 92 Va. 84.

Under Act April 4, 1868, providing that when any person shall sustain an injury or loss of life while lawfully employed in or about the premises of a railroad, or in or about any train, and such person is not an employé of the company, the right of action shall be only such as exists in case of an employé, provided that the act shall not apply to passengers, a government mail agent, who is injured while traveling in charge of the mail, is not a "passenger," within the meaning of the exception in the act. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256, 257, 23 Alb. Law J. 69, 2 Ky. Law Rep. 183, 189; Price v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 113 U. S. 218, 219, 5 Sup. Ct. 427, 428, 28 L. Ed. 980; Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Bishop, 7 O. C. D. 73, 75, 76.

The relation of carrier and passenger exists in every case in which the carrier receives and agrees to transport another not in its employ, whether this be by contract between them, or between the carrier and some other person in whose employment the person to be carried is, for the purpose of transacting on the train the business of his employer, as in cases of mail and express agents, or messengers and others. So it is held that a United States postal clerk is a passenger. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 15 S. W. 280, 281, 79 Tex. 371, 11 L. R. A. 486, 23 Am. St. Rep. 845.

Same—Palace car porter.

A porter of a Pullman car, who is given free transportation by the railway company on whose line he runs, under a contract between the Pullman Company and the railway company, is not a passenger of the latter, so as to create the usual legal presumption of negligence through the mere happening of an accident causing him personal injuries. Hughson v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 2 App. D. C. 98, 106.

A porter of a palace car, whose duties are to collect fares and wait on passengers in such car, is entitled to the rights of a passenger, in respect of the careful running and management of the train. Jones v. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co., 125 Mo. 668, 28 S. W. 883, 28 L. R. A. 718, 46 Am. St. Rep. 514.

Same—Person in charge of stock.

A drover traveling on a railway on a free pass is, in effect, a passenger for hire. Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Miles, 40 Ark. 298, 320, 48 Am. Rep. 10.

A person accompanying stock on a railroad train without any right of transportation, and who has not paid his fare at the time by an accident, though intending so to do, is not a passenger. Gardner v. New Haven & Northampton Co., 51 Conn. 143, 50 Am. Rep. 12.

When a railroad company is in the practice of granting a drover's ticket to the owners of live stock transported over their road, that they may take care of their stock, upon their releasing the company from any risk on account of it and paying the rate of freight which is much less than where they do not take care of their stock, such ticket authorizing them to travel on the freight train without any further fare than that included in the freight, a drover who is on a freight train for the purpose of seeing to his stock, and who has paid the freight therefor, stands in the relation of a passenger to the company, and not of an employé or servant, and the company is liable to him for injuries resulting from a collision, as though he were a passenger in a passenger train, and it is immaterial whether he has received a drover's ticket or not. Flinn v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 1 Houst. 469, 494.

A person who is riding on a freight train in charge of stock in shipment, with the consent of the railroad company, whether on a regular ticket or on a drover's pass, is a passenger, and the carrier owes him the same duty as other passengers traveling on passenger trains, which requires it to use the highest reasonable and practicable skill and diligence to protect him from injury. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 43 N. E. 809, 811, 160 Ill. 40 (affirming 57 Ill. App. 538).

Where a farmer, traveling with stock, rode in a caboose car, for riding in which fares were usually collected, and through the carelessness of a brakeman the caboose went off the track and was turned over, and plaintiff's leg was broken in consequence, held, that the plaintiff was a passenger, and, though not entitled to comfort, he was entitled to the usual safety of a passenger, and should receive compensatory damages. Indianapolis, B. & W. Ry. Co. v. Beaver, 41 Ind. 498, 494.

A person traveling with the consent of a railroad company on a freight train in charge of stock or goods carried by the company for him is a passenger. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Winters, 51 N. E. 901, 904, 175 Ill. 293.

A stock drover traveling on a freight train upon a ticket called a "stock pass," for the purpose of taking care of his stock on such train, and for which stock he has paid freight, is a passenger for hire, and not a gratuitous passenger. Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 473, 17 Am. Rep. 719.

A drover transported over a railroad, on a pass, for the purpose of taking care of his stock on the train, is a passenger. Carroll v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 88 Mo. 239, 243, 57 Am. Rep. 832.

A drover riding on a pass, while accompanying cattle, is a passenger, and has the same right of action for injuries suffered by him. Hanover Junction, H. & G. R. Co. v. Anthony (Pa.) 8 Walk. 210, 212.

It is well settled that one who is carried by a common carrier, on condition that he is to care for stock carried, does not thereby cease to be a passenger, but is entitled to the same care as other passengers carried on the same train or conveyance. Memphis & C. Packet Co. v. Buckner, 57 S. W. 482, 483, 108 Ky. 701.

Same—Riding in place not intended for passengers.

The mere boarding of a train with intention to ride thereon and to pay the required fare does not necessarily make a person a passenger, but one who, without a ticket, boards a passenger train, prepared to pay his fare, and with a bona fide intention of paying it, is not a passenger if he takes passage on a part of a train not intended for passengers—as, for instance, the front end of the baggage car. This holding is not grounded upon the fact that the person is without a ticket, since if one who has no ticket enters the coach of a railroad company with the intention and ability to pay his fare, and, being called upon, does pay it, he thereby becomes a passenger, and there is an implied contract on the part of the carrier to carry him safely; but, if passage is taken upon a part of the train not intended for passengers, a holding that a person so situated was in fact a passenger would place upon the carrier the highest obligation to one with whom it did not know it sustained the relation of carrier. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 42 S. W. 855, 91 Tex. 255.

The particular place where a person may be on a passenger train does not necessarily and conclusively determine whether or not such person is a passenger. One who has paid his fare and secured his ticket may disregard some rules prescribed by the carrier, and yet such conduct on his part would not change the fact that he was a passenger. A person who boards a passenger train, having the means and intending in good faith to pay his fare as soon as he has an opportunity to do so, is as much a passenger as though he had paid his fare and procured a ticket before getting on the train. So, though the position on the train of a person who has boarded it without purchasing a ticket may be important in determining whether or not he intended to pay his fare, it does not conclusively fix his status as to being a passenger or trespasser. In consonance with these doctrines, it is held that a person who boarded a passenger train, able to and intending in good faith to pay his fare, was a passenger, though, in his hurry, the train being already in motion, he got on the front platform of an express car, which the conductor could not reach without stopping the train. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Williams (Tex.) 40 S. W. 350, 351.

Where a person got on the platform of an express car without having procured a ticket, and remained there in violation of the company's rules, the fact that a brakeman accepted from him the required fare from the point where he got on to his destination did not constitute the person a passenger. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Field, 34 N. E. 403, 407, 7 Ind. App. 172, 52 Am. St. Rep. 444.

Same—Riding on engine.

The term "passenger," as used in an insurance policy providing for certain payments if the insured is injured while riding as a passenger in a conveyance using steam, etc., as a motive power, is used to designate the character or relation the insured sustains to the proprietor of the conveyance; and a passenger, by going upon an engine, does not thereby lose his character as passenger. Berliner v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 53 Pac. 918, 921, 121 Cal. 458, 41 L. R. A. 467, 66 Am. St. Rep. 49 (citing Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Brown, 123 Ill. 186, 14 N. E. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 510; McGee v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 92 Mo. 208, 216, 4 S. W. 789, 1 Am. St. Rep. 706; and Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Erwin, 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 466).

One who rode a part of his journey on an engine, and, while the train was at a station, got off, and, after it had started, got on the front platform of a crowded passenger car, and soon after, and without having entered the car, fell off and was killed, was not a passenger, and had not acquired the rights of such. Merrill v. Eastern R. Co., 1 N. E. 548, 549, 189 Mass. 238.

One may become a passenger of a common carrier without ever being actually on a train of the common carrier. It is not easy to lay down a rule defining what in all cases constitutes one a passenger of the carrier on whose train such person is. But it is essential to constitute one a passenger riding on a train of the carrier operating such train that such person should be rightfully on such train, or should be thereon with the knowledge or consent of the carrier or his agent in charge of the train. One riding on the engine of a freight train, in accordance with an arrangement with the fireman of the engine, to shovel coal in return for the privilege of riding, is not a passenger of the carrier operating the train; the conductor thereof not having knowledge of his presence or consented thereto. Woolsey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 58 N. W. 444, 445, 89 Neb. 798, 25 L. R. A. 79.

Same—Riding on freight train.

Generally speaking, a passenger is one who travels in a public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier. It is obvious that in this sense a person riding on a freight train in pursuance of the rules of the company, and by its consent, is a passenger. He may be a passenger with restricted rights, as against the company, because of the terms of the contract under which he is being carried, but he is none the less a passenger. Simmons v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 69 Pac. 1022, 1023, 41 Or. 151.

Where a railroad company is in the habit of carrying passengers on its freight trains, and shortly before the starting of a freight train, at a particular time, leaves the caboose open on a side track, where passengers have been in the habit of taking it, the company impliedly invites passengers to enter, so that one entering the caboose there becomes a passenger. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Axley, 47 Ill. App. 807, 808.

Where a person wrongfully gets on a freight train which is not used for carrying passengers, and remains on it without the consent of the servants of the company in charge of the train, he cannot claim the rights of a passenger; and, if injured while being thus carried, the company is not liable unless the injury was caused by the gross or willful neglect of its servants. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Moss, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 684.

One who, without knowing that such permission has been forbidden, goes on a freight train by permission of the engineer, who is acting as conductor, and pays the usual fare, is entitled to the privileges of a passenger. Hanson v. Mansfield Ry. & Transp. Co., 38 La. Ann. 111, 114, 58 Am. Rep. 162.

A brakeman employed on a freight train in charge of a conductor has no implied authority to bind the company by a contract of passage, and his permission to a person to ride does not make such a person a passenger. Candiff v. Louisville, N. O. & T. Ry. Co., 7 South. 601, 42 La. Ann. 477.

If a railroad company permits one paying fare to ride on a freight train, he becomes a passenger, and is entitled to the same degree of care as though the train were a passenger train. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Irvine, 64 Tex. 529, 534.

A person having a ticket for passage on a railroad, who boards a freight train which does not carry passengers, believing the ticket good on that train, is to be treated as a passenger, and is not a trespasser. Bogges v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 16 S. E. 525, 87 W. Va. 297, 23 L. R. A. 777.

Person leaving train.

Where a person had a ticket giving him a right to ride as a passenger, and had no opportunity to surrender it or pay his fare, but left the train after it had stopped at a station where passengers were accustomed and had a right to leave the train, and was injured while so doing by a train on another track, he still continued a passenger up to the time of the injury. McKimble v. Boston & M. R. R., 2 N. E. 97, 98, 189 Mass. 542.

While it is undoubtedly true that one who has bought a ticket, or otherwise become entitled to transportation on a train of cars of a railroad corporation, is ordinarily a passenger from the time when he reasonably and properly starts from the ticket office or waiting room of the station to take his seat in the car of the train until he has reached the station to which he is entitled to be carried, and has had an opportunity by safe and convenient means to leave the train or roadway of the corporation at that station, he loses his character as a passenger by getting off the train at his destination before the train stops. Commonwealth v. Boston & M. R. R., 129 Mass. 500, 501, 87 Am. Rep. 382.

A person ceases to be a passenger when he has alighted from a train, gone on the sidewalk of the highway, and thence started to cross the track, on his way from the station. Allerton v. Boston & M. R. R., 15 N. E. 621, 623, 146 Mass. 241.

A passenger on a street car, who steps from the car into a public street, ceases to be a passenger the moment he leaves the car. Creamer v. West End St. Ry. Co., 156 Mass. 320, 81 N. E. 391, 16 L. R. A. 490, 82 Am. St. Rep. 456.

An approach to a railway depot on premises belonging to the company constitutes a part of such premises, and the relation of carrier and passenger continues until the passenger has passed beyond such approach. Gulf, O. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Glenk, 30 S. W. 278, 279, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599.

While one is passing from one train to another, as required by the conditions of his ticket, he remains a passenger, and is entitled to all rights as such. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 60 Md. 449, 462.

Plaintiff, a married woman, while traveling alone with her baby, was transferred to a station of defendant's railway, over which she had a valid ticket, purchased from a connecting line, and which included her transfer from one road to the other. The station was kept open at all times, both day and night, for the use of passengers; and plaintiff remained there to await her train, which would not arrive for 10 hours, with the assent of defendant's agent. While alone in the waiting room at night, she was assaulted by defendant's night agent. Held, that she was a passenger, and that defendant was liable for the act of its employé. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Griffith, 35 S. W. 741, 743, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 681.

PASSENGER CAR.

A coach specially equipped and used as a pay car, and not as a vehicle for the transportation of passengers, is not, in contemplation of a policy of accident insurance granting double indemnity to the insured if injured while riding as a passenger on a passenger car using steam as a motive power, a passenger car; and this is so although it had been formerly used as a passenger car, and was capable of being so used again. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Austin, 42 S. E. 522, 524, 116 Ga. 264, 59 L. R. A. 107, 94 Am. St. Rep. 125.

PASSENGER STATION OR DEPOT.

"Passenger station" means nothing less than a place at which passenger tickets are ordinarily sold, as used in Gen. Laws, c. 163, § 22, providing that no railroad corporation shall eject any person from its cars for non-payment of fare, excepting at some passenger station. Baldwin v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 15 Atl. 411, 412, 64 N. E. 596.

A store on a railroad's right of way, where railroad tickets were sold, and which was resorted to by passengers while waiting for the cars, and over which the company had no control, was not a passenger depot, within the meaning of the separate coach act (Sand. & H. Dig. § 6219), requiring the maintenance of separate waiting rooms in passenger depots. The expression "passenger depot," as employed in the act, means a depot building used for the reception of passengers. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 61 Ark. 9, 11, 31 S. W. 570, 571.

PASSENGER TRAIN.

See "Regular Passenger Train."

A passenger train consists of passenger, baggage, express, and mail cars; and hence, as used in Laws 1891, p. 103, fixing the rate of fare on railroads according to the gross earnings of passenger trains, the earnings of the baggage, express, and mail cars must be included. Commissioner of Railroads v. Wabash R. Co., 82 N. W. 526, 527, 123 Mich. 689.

Mixed trains, made up in part of a passenger equipment and in part of freight cars, used for the transportation of passengers, are passenger trains, within the meaning of the terms of a contract giving a railroad company depot facilities for passenger trains. Chicago G. W. Ry. Co. v. St. Paul Union Depot Co., 71 N. W. 23, 68 Minn. 220.

PASSION.

See "Sudden Heat and Passion"; "Sudden Passion."

"Passion," as used in a charge defining manslaughter as voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate cause, means any of the emotions of the mind known as "anger," "rage," "sudden resentment," or "terror," rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection. Stell v. State (Tex.) 58 S. W. 76, 76.

"Passion" presupposes absence of malice. "Malice" excludes passion. State v. Johnson, 23 N. C. 354, 362, 35 Am. Dec. 742.

PASSIVE TRUST.

"Passive trusts," as used in the statute of uses and trusts (Rev. St. c. 84), abolishing passive trusts, mean those which are express, or created by the words of some deed or other instrument in writing, and not those trusts arising or resulting by implication of law, which in most instances still continue to exist, and which may, in the broadest sense, be denominated passive. Every express passive trust is abolished, and the deed or instrument by which it is created, or attempted to be, takes effect as a conveyance directly to the cestui que trust, in whom the legal title vests, and the trustee acquires no estate or interest whatsoever. A conveyance of land from A. to B. to the use or in trust for C., the trustee having no active duties to perform, constitutes a passive trust, and the trustee takes no title, but the same vests immediately and absolutely in the cestui que trust to the extent of the estate granted. Goodrich v. City of Milwaukee, 24 Wis. 422, 429.

Where a special duty is to be performed by the trustee in respect to the estate, such as to collect the rents and profits, to sell the estate, etc., the trust is called "active." All other trusts are denominated "passive trusts," because there is no duty imposed on the trustee. He simply acts as the reservoir of the legal estate, because from the terms and character of the conveyance and limitation the statute cannot transfer the legal estate to the cestui que use or trust. Perkins v. Brinkley (N. C.) 45 S. E. 541, 542.

The prime requisite of a passive trust is that the trustee is made, in form, a mere holder of the legal title; the right to the possession and profits being in another. If there are no active duties for the testator to perform with respect to administering the property, and the primary use be expressly or impliedly by reason of such active duty vested in the trustee, the trust is necessarily active, and not affected by the statute which would otherwise execute the use, and thus vest the legal title in the equitable owner. Holmes v. Walter, 95 N. W. 880, 882, 118 Wis. 409, 62 L. R. A. 988.

PAST CONSIDERATION.

A past consideration is an act done before a contract is made, and, though beneficial to the defendant, is not such a consideration as will support a contract, unless done on request. Chaffee v. Thomas (N. Y.) 7 Cow. 358, 360.

PAST DUE.

"Past-due interest" means interest which is collectible on demand. Coquard v. Bank of Kansas City, 12 Mo. App. 261, 265.

PASTEBOARD.

Pastebord is paper of coarse and inferior quality. It is included within the term "paper," in a contract for the furnishing of apparatus with which to make paper. Patteson v. Garret, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 112-115.

PASTILLE.

Webster defines "pastille" as an aromatic or medicated drop or losenge of sugar confectionery, so that an indictment charging the advertisement of a pastille which will prevent pregnancy, without setting out its ingredients, so as to show whether they are of a quality calculated to corrupt the morals of youth, is insufficient. Abendroth v. State, 30 S. W. 787, 788, 24 Tex. Cr. R. 325.

PASTIME.

Money staked on the event of an election is not money bet on a game, sport, or pastime. Hickna v. Littlepage (Ky.) 2 Dana, 844; Graves v. Ford, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 113, 114.

PASTOR.

A pastor is one who has been installed, according to the usages of some Christian denomination, in charge of a specific church or body of churches, and a person who has been called as pastor of a congregation does not accept such call by merely acting as minister. First Presbyterian Church v. Myers, 50 Pac. 70, 75, 5 Okl. 809, 38 L. R. A. 687.

PASTURE.

See "Common of Pasture."

The term "pasture" includes not only the grass, but also the ground or sod from which it grows. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Jones, 21 S. W. 145, 146, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 872.

PASTURAGE.

Pasturage is the right of grazing one's cattle on the estate of another. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 728.

PATENT.

Under sections 1 and 2 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1885, c. 355, 23 Stat. 443 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 571, 572], limiting appeals to the United States Supreme Court from the Supreme Courts of territories to actions when the value of the matter in dispute exceeds $5,000, or the case involves the validity of a patent, the word "patent" refers to a patent of an invention, and not to a patent of land. Street v. Ferry, 7 Sup. Ct. 231, 119 U. S. 885, 30 L. Ed. 439.

PATENT (Of Invention).

See "Combination Patent"; "Foreign Patent"; "Letters Patent"; "Reissued Patent."

The word "patent" means the exclusive privilege granted by the sovereign authority to an inventor with respect to his invention. Atlas Glass Co. v. Simonds Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 102 Fed. 643, 647, 42 C. C. A. 554.

A patent is a grant to the patentee, his heirs or assigns, for a stated period, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the territory of the United States. Ft. Wayne, C. & L. R. Co. v. Haberkorn, 44 N. E. 322, 15 Ind. App. 479. A patent is a grant to the patentee, his heirs and assigns, for a stated period, of the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention or discovery throughout the territory of the United States. Eclipse Wind Engine Co. v. Zimmerman Mfg. Co., 44 N. E. 1115, 1116, 16 Ind. App. 496.

A patent implies a grant from the sovereign power, securing to the vendor for a limited time the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention. It conveys to the inventor substantive rights, and secures to him a valuable monopoly, which he can enforce for his own advantage, either by using it himself, or by conveying the privilege to others. He receives something tangible; something which has a present, existing value, which protects him from competition, and is the source of gain and profit. An instrument which falls short of this, which gives one limited and temporary protection, which is but a condition precedent to the definitive grant, and which conveys no monopoly or the right to proceed against infringers, is not a patent contemplated by the statute. Société Anonyme pour la Transmission de la Force par l'Électricité v. General Electric Co. (U. S.) 97 Fed. 604, 605.

A patent protects the first producer or inventor of an article against the manufacture, production, and sale of any such article without his consent. Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Co. v. Le Boutilier, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 117, 119.

A patent is prima facie evidence that the patentee was the first and original inventor of the improvements described in the specifications, and a reissued patent granted under authority of the act of 1836 is prima facie evidence that the machine described in the specifications thereof is substantially the same as the machine intended to be patented by the original drawing. Sloat v. Spring (U. S.) 22 Fed. Cas. 330, 334.

A patent is not a regulation of commerce, nor a license to sell the patented article, but a grant that no one else should manufacture or sell the patented article, and therefore a grant simply of an exclusive right in the discovery, which the national authority could protect against all interference. Minnesota v. Barber, 10 Sup. Ct. 362, 366, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. Ed. 453.

A patent to an original inventor of a machine which first performs a useful function protects him against all mechanisms that perform the same function by equivalent mechanical devices, but a patent to one who has simply made a slight improvement on a device that performed the same function before as after the improvement is protected only against those who use the very improvement that he describes and claims, or mere colorable evasions of it. McBride v. Kingman (U. S.) 97 Fed. 217, 219, 38 C. C. A. 123.

A patent must be for a method, detached from all physical existence whatever. Whitney v. Carter (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 1070, 1071.

A patent must combine utility, novelty, and invention. It may in fact embrace utility and novelty in a high degree, but still be only the result of mechanical skill, as distinguished from invention. A person, to be entitled to a patent, must have invented or discovered some new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or some new and useful improvement thereon. The fact that a device has gone into general use and displaced other devices, while in some cases evidence of invention, is not conclusive of patentability, and is not sufficient to support a patent where the changes made from the prior art are mere changes of mechanical construction, or form, size, or materials. Klein v. City of Seattle (U. S.) 77 Fed. 200, 204, 23 C. C. A. 114.

The word "patents" found in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 544, § 70a, 30 Stat. 535 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3451], providing that a trustee in bankruptcy shall, by operation of law, be vested with the bankrupt's title to interests in patents and patent rights, includes cases wherein the title in the letters patent, in whole or in part, is vested in the bankrupt, either by the issuance of letters in his name, or by proper assignment in writing from the patentee. In re McDonnell (U. S.) 101 Fed. 239, 240.

As a contract.

A patent is a contract by which the government secures to the patentee the exclusive right to vend and use his invention for a few years in consideration of the fact that he has perfected and described it, and has granted its use to the public forever after. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co., 106 Fed. 693, 701, 45 C. C. A. 544.

As a monopoly.

See, also, "Monopoly."

A patent is a mere monopoly or exclusive right to an invention not existing at the common law, but by special grant from the government. Deane v. Hodge, 27 N. W. 917, 919, 35 Minn. 146, 59 Am. Rep. 321.

A patent is a monopoly, as generally denominated, the consideration for which is the disclosure by the patentee of something not then within the domain of public knowledge, or the ability or mechanical skill of persons in the art having personal knowledge of anything which was then old, to produce as the result of such mechanical skill, when called upon to do so by the necessity of the trade. Farmers' Mfg. Co. v. Spruks Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 119 Fed. 594, 596, (citing Dunbar v. Meyers, 94 U. S. 187, 24 L. Ed. 34; Hollister v. Benedict & Burnham Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 59, 5 Sup. Ct. 717, 28 L. Ed. 901; Mast, Foos & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co., 177 U. S. 485, 20 Sup. Ct. 708, 44 L. Ed. 856).

A patent secures to the patentee the right to debar others from making the thing patented, but it does not confer upon him the right to make it. That he could do, though not exclusively, without a patent. Consequently his right of property in the patented article, when made, is not founded on government grant, and may as legitimately be subjected to state legislation as any other tangible property. But the monopoly which it does grant is a property right created under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and is assignable; and a state law providing that notes shall not be given for an assignment of the patent itself is as plainly obstructive of the exercise of a right founded by federal law as would be the inhibition of payment in the current funds on the sale of a patent for cash. Pegram v. American Alkali Co. (U. S.) 122 Fed. 1000, 1006.

As property.

See "Property."

Reissued patent.

Under Rev. St. § 4916 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3898], authorizing the reissue of any patent, a reissue of a reissued patent is included. Selden v. Stockwell Self-Lighting Gas Burner Co. (U. S.) 9 Fed. 390, 397.

PATENT (Of Land).

The word "patent," as used in 24 Stat. 388-390, relating to the allotment of lands to Indians, and providing for the conveyance of land by patent to an Indian after a certain time in discharge of any trust, means nothing more than an instrument or memorandum in writing, designed to show that for a period of 25 years the United States would hold the land allotted in trust for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, or his heirs, and subsequently, at the end of that time convey the fee discharged of the trust and free of all charges or incumbrances. United States v. Rickert, 23 Sup. Ct. 478, 480, 188 U. S. 432, 47 L. Ed. 532.

A patent of the government to land vests in the patentee the perfect legal title, which relates back to the entry of the land. Rankin v. Miller, 43 Iowa, 11, 17.

As a deed.

A patent to land is the deed of the government. United States v. Mullan (U. S.) 10 Fed. 785, 792.

A patent is the instrument by which the government, whether state or national, passes its title. Hayner v. Stanley (U. S.) 13 Fed. 217, 223.

A patent is an instrument which, under the law of Congress, passes the title of the United States. It is the government conveyance. If other parties possess equities superior to those of the patentee, a court of equity will, on proper proceedings, enforce such equities; but in an action in the federal court in which the legal title is involved the patent when regular on its face is conclusive. Bedfield v. Parks, 10 Sup. Ct. 83, 86, 182 U. S. 239, 33 L. Ed. 327.

A patent is simply a deed of a state to its grantee. Its execution and delivery are an admission that all previous proceedings have been had, and all necessary formalities have been complied with. Bushey v. South Mountain Mining & Iron Co., 136 Pa. 541, 552, 20 Atl. 549, 550.

A patent from the commonwealth is simply a deed of land by her to a purchaser. The term, though seldom used except in grants from the state to individual purchasers under the land laws, is just as applicable to any grant of land by the commonwealth under any other laws. Reilly v. Mountain Coal Co., 54 Atl. 29, 35, 204 Pa. 270.

The term "patent" in the act of Congress exempting certain lands held by patentees or their heirs from state taxation for three years from the date of the patents, referred to the instrument executed by the principal officers of the government as evidence of the title transferred to the patentee. Fisher v. Wisner, 34 Iowa, 447, 450.

A patent of land issued on a grant, made in 1846, is a deed of the United States. As a deed its operation is that of a quitclaim, or rather of a conveyance of such interest as the United States possesses in the land, and it takes effect by relation at the time when proceedings were instituted by the filing of the petition before the board of land commissioners. Beard v. Federy, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 478, 491, 18 L. Ed. 88 (cited in Manning v. San Jacinto Tin Co. [U. S.] 9 Fed. 726).

A patent is nothing more nor less than a deed from the state, and an innocent purchaser of land covered by a patent stands just as an innocent purchaser of land from one who holds title by a deed. Nickels v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 64 S. W. 448, 450.

"Patent" is sometimes used in the United States to mean the title deed by which a government, state or federal, conveys its land; so that under Rev. St. 1889, § 5441, providing that a debtor's homestead shall be subject to execution on all causes of action existing at the time of acquiring such homestead, and for that purpose such time shall be the date of filing for record the deed of such homestead, the term "deed" is held to include a patent under the federal homestead act. Stinson v. Call, 68 S. W. 729, 730, 168 Mo. 823.

As evidence of title.

A patent is the highest evidence of title, and is conclusive as against the government and all claiming under junior patents or titles until it is set aside or annulled by some judicial tribunal. United States v. Stone, 106 U. S. 525, 535, 27 L. Ed. 163; United States v. Mullan (U. S.) 10 Fed. 785, 792; Hayner v. Stanley (U. S.) 13 Fed. 217, 223.

A patent for land from the government is the highest evidence of title. It is evidence that all prerequisites have been complied with, and cannot be questioned either in a court of law or equity, unless it be on the ground of fraud or mistake. Carter v. Spencer, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 42, 53, 34 Am. Dec. 103.

"A patent of the United States issued to a conferee of a Spanish or Mexican grant under the act of Congress of March 8, 1851, treated simply as the deed of the United States, is, in its operation, like the deed of any other grantor, and passes only such interest as the United States possessed; the deed taking effect by relation at the date of the presentation of the petition of the patentee to the board of land commissioners. But such patent is not merely a deed of the United States. It is a record of the government—of its action and judgment with respect to the title of the patentee existing at the date of the cession of California—and as such record is conclusive evidence of title in the patentee at the time the jurisdiction of the subject passed from the Mexican government to the United States." Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387, 412.

A patent is the instrument by which the government, whether state or national, passes its title. It is the government conveyance. But, if the government possess at the time no title, none passes by its execution. It is of itself evidence of title only, because, the government being the original source of title, the presumption of law is that the title remains with the government until some other disposition of it is shown; but, if an earlier patent is produced, a subsequent one ceases to have any operation. Patterson v. Tatum (U. S.) 13 Fed. Cas. 1331, 1334.

As a judgment.

A patent or certificate of title to land within its jurisdiction, issued by the Land Department is a judgment of that tribunal, and a conveyance of the legal title. United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. (U. S.) 67 Fed. 948, 956, 15 C. C. A. 96.

As a record.

In the legislation of Congress a patent has a double operation. It is a conveyance by the government when the government has any interest to convey; but where it is issued upon the confirmation of a claim of a previously existing title it is documentary evidence, having the dignity of a record of the existence of that title, or of such equities respecting the claim as to justify its recognition and confirmation. Langdeau v. Hanes, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 521, 530, 22 L. Ed. 606; Wright v. Roseberry, 7 Sup. Ct. 985, 988, 121 U. S. 483, 30 L. Ed. 1039; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Price County, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 346, 133 U. S. 496, 33 L. Ed. 687; Miller v. Tobin, 16 Pac. 161, 164, 16 Or. 540.

"A patent for land has, in the legislation of Congress, a twofold operation. It conveys the title where previously that remained in the United States; but where issued upon the recognition and confirmation of a claim to a previously existing title it is evidence of the record of the existence of that title, or of equities respecting the land requiring recognition by a quitclaim from the government. It always imports that the government conveys, or has previously conveyed, interests in the lands—something which it at the time owns, or its predecessor once owned. And by the proceedings previous to its issue there is created in the claimant an equitable right to the conveyance of the legal title, or his right to such title is so established that he can enforce it against others who, with notice of his claims, may have obtained the patent." Marsh v. Nichols Shepherd & Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 163, 170, 123 U. S. 605, 32 L. Ed. 538.

PATENT AMBIGUITY.

See "Ambiguitas Patena."

A patent ambiguity is that which appears ambiguous on the face of the deed or instrument. Harris v. Kelly (Pa.) 13 Atl.

523, 526; Lycoming Mut. Ins. Co. v. Saller, 67 Pa. 108, 112 (citing Bac. Max. Reg. 23); Brown v. Guice, 46 Miss. 299, 302; Deery v. Gray, 77 U. S. (10 Wall.) 263, 269, 19 L. Ed. 887; Stokeley v. Gordon, 8 Md. 496, 506; Chambers v. Ringstaff, 69 Ala. 140, 143; Mudd v. Dillon, 65 S. W. 973, 975, 166 Mo. 110; Lathrop v. Blake, 23 N. H. (3 Post.) 46, 60; Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. 297, 312.

"An ambiguity is patent that is apparent on the face of an instrument, where the mere reading of it shows that something more must be added before the reader can tell which of certain things or persons is meant." Dorr v. School Dist., 40 Ark. 237, 241; McNair v. Toler, 5 Minn. 435, 439 (Gil. 356, 358).

A patent ambiguity is one which remains uncertain after all the evidence of surrounding circumstances and collateral facts admissible under the proper rules of evidence is exhausted. McRoberts v. McArthur, 62 Minn. 310, 311, 64 N. W. 908; Kretschmer v. Hard, 32 Pac. 413, 419, 18 Colo. 223.

"A patent ambiguity is an uncertainty that arises at once on the reading of the contract. We do not have to wait until some other fact is brought to our knowledge before the uncertainty is apparent, but the doubt is suggested at once, and by the phrase itself." Strong v. Waters, 50 N. Y. Supp. 257, 258, 27 App. Div. 299.

A patent ambiguity is one that appears on the face of the instrument, and that which occurs when the expression of an instrument is so defective that a court of law which is obliged to put a construction on it, placing itself in the situation of the parties, cannot ascertain what they meant. Grimes' Ex'rs v. Harmon, 35 Ind. 198, 208, 9 Am. Rep. 690.

When a doubt exists as to the intention of the party or parties to an instrument, it is called a "patent ambiguity." Breckenridge v. Duncan, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 50, 12 Am. Dec. 359.

Latent ambiguity distinguished.

A patent ambiguity is one which arises solely from the terms of the instrument, while a latent ambiguity is one not appearing on the face of the instrument, but which is developed by extrinsic evidence. Conlan v. Doull, 9 Pac. 563, 569, 4 Utah, 267.

A patent ambiguity is an ambiguity appearing on the face of an instrument in question, and differs from a latent ambiguity, which is an ambiguity arising from the fact that the words of the instrument apply equally well to two different things or subject-matters. Thus where there was a conveyance of the water in a certain brook, and it appeared that there were two branches of it which crossed the grantor's land, there was a latent, and not a patent, ambiguity. Petrie v. Trustees of Hamilton College, 53 N. E. 216, 217, 158 N. Y. 458.

The artificial distinction of patent and latent ambiguity is thus enunciated by Lord Bacon (Rules & Maxims, Regula, 23): "Ambiguities patens is that which appears to be ambiguous on the deed or instrument; latens is that which seemeth certain and without ambiguity for anything that appeareth upon the deed or instrument, but there is some collateral matter out of the deed that breedeth the ambiguity." This definition is cited by Mr. Taylor, more, as he says, out of respect to that great man than in the expectation that it will afford much practical information; and Judge Story, over 70 years ago, in Felsch v. Dickson (U. S.) 19 Fed. Cas. 123, declared that he had endeavored in vain to reconcile the conflicting authorities as to latent and patent ambiguity. In re Hastings (N. Y.) 6 Dem. Sur. 307, 318.

PATENT DANGER.

"Patent dangers" are those seen, or by their presence perceptible to the senses. Williams v. Walton & Whann Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 726, 729, 9 Houst. 322.

PATENT DEFECT.

A "patent defect" is one that may be discovered by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Where it appeared that an animal sold was affected with spavin, and slightly lame from that cause, and that there was a knot on the leg affected which could be plainly seen, but the buyer took the animal without seeing it in motion, the defect was a patent one, and there could be no recovery in an action for deceit. Lawson v. Baer, 52 N. C. 461, 462.

PATENT FLOUR.

Every flouring mill separates its product into two or more grades. Into the first grade it puts its best quality, which is called its "patent flour," and is the best product obtained in that mill from wheat handled by it. What is left of that wheat goes into inferior grades of flour. The skill of the miller is directed to getting the largest percentage, compatible with desired excellence, of patent flour out of a given quantity of wheat. All patent flour in the market is not of the same quality. The quality may be influenced by the percentage of the product the miller sees fit to set apart for that grade.—Nordyke & Marmon Co. v. Kehlor, 56 S. W. 287, 289, 155 Mo. 643, 78 Am. St. Rep. 600.

PATENT FUEL.

The term "patent fuel" was said in a case involving the issue whether the term

"coal" in a marine policy included a substance called "patent fuel" to be capable of being aptly applied to coal broken by a patented machine, and having a peculiar shape, and it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show whether the substance in question was included in the term "coal." Howard v. Great Western Ins. Co., 109 Mass. 384, 388.

PATENT HAVING SHORTEST TERM.

Rev. St. § 4887 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3382], providing that every patent granted for an invention which has been patented in a foreign country shall be so limited as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one, at the same time with the one having the "shortest term," means the foreign patent which at the time the United States patent was granted has then the shortest term to run, irrespective of the fact that the foreign patent may afterwards lapse or become forfeited by the nonobservance of a condition subsequent, prescribed by the foreign statute. Pohl v. Anchor Brewing Co., 10 Sup. Ct. 577, 579, 124 U. S. 381, 38 L. Ed. 958.

The provision of Rev. St. § 4887 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3382], that patents shall be so limited as to expire with any foreign patent for the same invention "having the shortest term," means the expiration of such term of the foreign monopoly as the patentee is by the grant of the foreign patent given power over and control of. So that the United States patent does not cease when a foreign patent ceases because of nonpayment of patent fees for a part of the term for which the patent might, on payment of all the fees, remain in force. Diamond Match Co. v. Adirondack Match Co. (U. S.) 65 Fed. 803, 804.

PATENT INSIDE.

Sheets of paper the size of a newspaper, partly printed and partly blank, it being intended that the blank portions should be used by a newspaper in printing local news, etc., on the same. Palmer v. McCormick (U. S.) 30 Fed. 82, 84.

PATENT LEATHER.

"Patent leather" is a trade term used in the leather trade to designate glazed calfskin. Keutgen v. Lawrence (U. S.) 14 Fed. Cas. 484.

PATENT MEDICINES.

Patent medicines are medicines prepared for immediate use by the public, put up in packages or bottles labeled with the name and accompanied with wrappers containing directions for their use and the conditions for which they are specifics. State v. Donaldson, 42 N. W. 731, 41 Minn. 74.

PATENT RIGHT.

Case or suit touching patent rights, see "Touching Patent Rights."

A "patent right" is the exclusive liberty conferred by letters patent from the sovereign on an inventor or his assignee of making and vending articles according to the invention. Avery v. Wilson (U. S.) 20 Fed. 856, 858.

A patent right, in its usual significance, means a privilege granted by the government to the first inventor of a new and useful discovery or mode of manufacture that he shall be entitled during a limited period to the exclusive use and benefit thereof. Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. State, 40 Atl. 1074, 1078, 87 Md. 687, 67 Am. St. Rep. 371.

A patent right is the right protected by the patent laws to use the process, combination, or appliance discovered by the patentee for the production of a certain result. It is an incorporeal right conferred by the government by way of encouragement due and as compensation for the improvement of time and labor and money in the discovery of new and useful things to minister to the comfort and aid in the progress of the public. Commonwealth v. Central District & Printing Telegraph Co., 22 Atl. 841, 842, 145 Pa. 121, 27 Am. St. Rep. 677.

In construing the act of May 4, 1869, regulating the execution and transfer of notes given for "patent rights," the courts say: "To construe the phrases 'patent right,' 'patent inventions,' and 'inventions claimed to be patented' as used in the act to mean machines manufactured under letters patent by the patentee or his assigns, would give them an unusual, forced, and unnatural import." The statute does not apply to negotiable paper given for machines built under letters patent, nor to negotiable paper given to procure the agency to sell machines so built in certain specified territory. State v. Peck, 25 Ohio St. 26, 29.

The phrase "patent rights," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 30 Stat. 565 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 8451], providing that a trustee shall be vested by operation of law with the bankrupt's title as of the date of bankruptcy to interests in patents and patent rights, includes rights acquired under a patent to a third party, such as a license or manufacturing right. In re McDonnell (U. S.) 101 Fed. 239, 240.

The words "patent right" shall, for the purpose of the act relating to the sale of patent rights, be construed to include any instrument, article, or thing whatsoever having as part thereof, or attached thereto, or connected therewith any devise, combination, or mechanism whatever upon which letters patent may have been granted and in force, or printed or represented to have been granted and in force, or either, at the time of the making of the note or other instrument upon which an action is or may be brought. Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 8054.

As monopoly.

A patent right is a monopoly of a certain way of doing a thing. Vose v. Singer, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 228, 230, 81 Am. Dec. 696.

A patent right is an exclusive right; it is a monopoly. The owner may prevent the use of the article patented by every other person unless the right is purchased of him. In re Gilbert El. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 861, 870; Gilbert El. Ry. Co. v. Anderson (N. Y.) 8 Abb. N. C. 434, 442.

The monopoly granted by the patent laws of the United States government is one entire thing, and cannot be divided into parts except as authorized by those laws. The patentee or his assigns may, by instrument in writing, assign, grant, and convey, either (1) the whole patent, comprising the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention throughout the United States; or (2) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right; or (3) the exclusive right under the patent within and throughout a specified part of the country. Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252, 261, 11 Sup. Ct. 834, 34 L. Ed. 923, 927.

As property.

See "Property."

PATENTABILITY.

Patentability may exist where combination of old elements produced a new and useful result or an old result in a new and useful manner, provided always that the conception and embodiment of the combination must involve the exercise of the inventive faculty, and not merely the skill of a mechanic familiar with the art. Invention must exist in every case. Invalidity and identity, standing alone, are not involved. Goss Printing-Press Co. v. Scott (U. S.) 103 Fed. 650, 657.

Mere utility does not establish patentability, and it is not every slight improvement in a mechanism that is the result of the exercise of the inventive faculty. In the progress of the arts such improvements are constantly developing themselves, but are, at any rate, clearly the result of obvious mechanical suggestion. Shoe v. Gimbél (U. S.) 96 Fed. 96, 99.

PATENTABLE COMBINATION.

A combination, to be patentable, must produce a single new and useful result, or an old result in a better or cheaper manner, as the product of the combination. If the combination produces an aggregate of several results, each the complete result of one of the combined elements, it does not constitute a "patentable combination." S. F. Heath Cycle Co. v. Hay (U. S.) 67 Fed. 246, 249. A combination, to be patentable, must produce a single new and useful result, or an old result in a better and cheaper manner, as the product of the combination; and where the combination produces an aggregate of two or more results, each the result of one of the combined elements, it does not constitute a patentable combination. Wellman v. Midland Steel Co. (U. S.) 106 Fed. 221, 224.

In a "patentable combination," the old elements must so co-operate with each other as to produce a new and useful result. A mere duplication of old elements may be useful, but it does not produce a result differing from what would be produced by the elements separated, except in quantity or degree. While this may be a useful result, it is not a new or patentable result. Maler v. Bloom (U. S.) 95 Fed. 159, 166.

PATENTABLE INVENTION.

The combination of old elements, whereby all the constituents so enter into it as that each qualifies every other, and thus form either a new machine of a distinct character and function or produce a result due to the joint and co-operating action of all the elements, and which is not the mere adding together of separate contributions, constitutes "patentable invention." On the other hand, the assemblage of old devices, without securing some new and useful result as the joint production of the combination—something more than a mere aggregation of old results—is not such invention, but is a mere matter of mechanical judgment, the natural outgrowth or development of mechanical skill as distinguished from invention. J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Hoffmann & Billings Mfg. Co. (U. S.) 110 Fed. 772, 775.

PATENTABLE NOVELTY.

There is no patentable novelty or invention in producing a college badge by placing different shades of color in divided stripes upon a guidon floating from a staff. Caldwell v. Powell (U. S.) 71 Fed. 970.

Novelty is not negated by prior structures in another art which were not designed or used prior to the new invention to do its work. Binns v. Zucker & Levett Chemical Co. (U. S.) 70 Fed. 711, 713.

The application of a well-known method to a new use in an art analogous to that to which it had been applied does not involve patentable novelty. Falk Mfg. Co. v. Missouri R. Co. (U. S.) 91 Fed. 155, 156.

PATENTABLE PROCESS.

By "patentable process" is meant the application or operation of some element or power of nature or of one subject to another; as, for example, the art of tanning, dyeing, smelting ores, or the like. In such cases invention consists in the application of old and well-known principles to new and useful purposes. There can be no patent upon an abstract philosophical principle. The laws of nature and properties of matter are presumed to be known to and subject to be utilized by all alike. But the application of any one or more of these laws or principles to a practical object, and so as to secure a useful result not previously attained, is patentable process. Boyd v. Cherry (U. S.) 50 Fed. 279, 282.

A driven well is held to be a "patentable process," although it does not consist of any new instrument, machine, or mechanical device. The difference between the new process and the old is that the pressure of the atmosphere, which, in the ordinary well, projects at the sides and bottom of the well pit to maintain an equal atmospheric pressure upon the water, whereby the flow of water into the well is made dependent upon the force of gravity, in the new process is removed from within the well pit, and ceases to operate against the inward flow of water, so that the pressure of the atmosphere operates with its full force to force the water from the earth into a well pit, and without any opposition caused by meeting in its flow the pressure of the atmosphere at the sides or bottom of the pit. Andrews v. Carmen (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 868, 870, 871.

PATENTABLE SUBJECTS.

"Patentable subjects," as defined by the patent law, are "any new and useful art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement on any art, machine, manufacture or composition of matter." Act 1836, § 6. Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 78 U. S. (9 Wall.) 788, 796, 19 L. Ed. 568.

PATENTED.

See "Thing Patented."

In determining whether an invention has been previously patented in a foreign country, so as to cause the American patent to expire with the foreign one, under Rev. St. § 4887 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3382], the date of the actual sealing and the issuance of the foreign patent is to be taken as the date when the article is patented; in other words, the term "patented," as used in the statute, does not mean the preliminary proceedings, but the actual issuance of the patent under the seal of the government. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Waring Electric Co. (U. S.) 59 Fed. 358, 364.

The word "patented," as used in Rev. St. § 4886 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3382], providing that "no person shall be debarred from receiving a patent for the invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented in a foreign country," may well be construed as applying to foreigners obtaining patents in their own country, and the phrase "caused to be patented," in such section, as applicable to such persons, not citizens of the same country, including Americans, as should cause their inventions to be introduced or patented there. It does not include either foreigners or citizens who first obtained their patents in this country. Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 15 Sup. Ct. 508, 513, 187 U. S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 601.

PATH.

See "Bicycle Path"; "Private Path."

"Path" is constantly used in our old acts as synonymous with 'road,' and until within a few years it was the custom for large portions of the population of this state to use the term 'path' to the exclusion of 'road.' Singleton v. Commissioner of Roads (S. C.) 2 Nott & McC. 526, 527.

PATHOLOGY.

"Pathology," as used generally, means that part of medicine which explains the nature of diseases and their causes and symptoms. Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 25 N. E. 399, 400, 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748.

PATHOLOGICAL CONDITION.

"A pathological condition means neither more nor less than a diseased condition of the body." Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 25 N. E. 399, 400, 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748. And therefore, where a policy of insurance against bodily injuries expressly excepted any disease or bodily infirmity, there could be no recovery where a pathological condition existed. Dozier v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York (U. S.) 46 Fed. 446, 449, 13 L. R. A. 114.

PATIENT.

The word "patient," in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 834, 836, providing that a physician shall not be allowed to disclose any information acquired in attending a patient, unless the provisions thereof are expressly waived by the patient, includes persons under disabilities, such as infancy, lunacy, etc., as such persons are patients, within the ordinary meaning of the term. Corey v. Bolton, 68 N. Y. Supp. 915, 916, 81 Misc. Rep. 138.

In the chapter relating to insane persons other than paupers and indigents, the word "patient" means any person detained and taken care of as an insane person. Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 2735.

PATRIMONY.

See "Separation of Patrimony."

PATROLMAN.

The word "patrolman," in the statement of facts in a mandamus proceeding to compel the reinstatement of a patrolman to the police force, was said to have been used as meaning "policeman," and not "police officer," within the meaning of the statute creating a distinction between policemen and police officers. State ex rel. Chapman v. Walbridge, 54 S. W. 447, 448, 153 Mo. 194.

PATRONAGE.

To state "that a loose woman is under the patronage of a man is a technical statement that she is supported by him for the purpose of sexual indulgence." Such a statement is libelous. More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472, 475.

PATRONIZE.

In construing Cr. Code, § 57, providing that "whosoever keeps or maintains a house of ill fame or a place for the practice of prostitution or lewdness, or whoever patronizes the same," etc., shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, the court said: "The primary meaning of the word 'patronize' is to act as a patron toward. To say a person patronized a house of ill fame, and to say that such a person was a patron of a house of ill fame, are synonymous expressions, and the words, 'being a patron of a house of ill fame,' found in the second count of the information, add nothing to the charge made therein that plaintiff in error did patronize a house of ill fame, and are to be regarded as mere words of surplusage." Raymond v. People, 9 Ill. App. (9 Bradw.) 844, 845.

PATTERN.

A pattern is a mere model, which may be used to construct machinery and create working implements. Brewer v. Ford, 12 N. Y. Supp. 619, 624, 59 Hun, 17.

PAUPER.

See "Foreign Paupers"; "State Pauper"; "Town Pauper."

A pauper, as defined by Webster, is a poor person, especially one so indigent as to depend on charity for maintenance, or one supported by some public provision; by Bouvier, as one so poor that he must be supported at public expense. The words "pauper" and "poor" have nearly the same meaning, and they both embrace several classes. In re Hoffman's Estate, 36 N. W. 407, 409, 70 Wis. 522; Town of Saukville v. Town of Grafton, 31 N. W. 719, 720, 68 Wis. 192; In re Whiting (Pa.) 3 Pittsb. R. 129, 133 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. tit. "Pauper").

The term "pauper and indigent," as used in an act to provide additional accommodations for the insane, means that the lunatic has neither money nor estate. Chosen Freeholders of Camden County v. Ritson, 54 Atl. 839, 840, 68 N. J. Law, 666.

A prisoner on execution may be a "pauper," and, if so, the selectmen are bound to provide for his relief. Amherst v. Hollis, 9 N. H. 107, 110.

Inmate of poor farm.

A contract made pursuant to a call for "sealed proposals for a superintendent of the manual labor and poorhouse farm for the year 1937. Bids will state (1) how much they will give for the land; (2) how much per head for taking care of the blind and helpless paupers per month; (3) how much per head for taking care of all other paupers per month"—was construed to refer only to such paupers as were supported and maintained on the poorhouse farm, and not to include all poor persons in the county to whom partial relief was granted at their homes. Kirk v. Brazos County, 73 Tex. 56, 60, 11 S. W. 143.

Person legally declared a pauper.

The term "paupers," used in reference to the support of paupers by the overseers of the poor, only applies to persons whom a justice of the peace has by a previous order declared to be paupers. Sayres v. Inhabitants of Springfield, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 166, 169.

Person needing relief.

The word "pauper," in Rev. St. c. 46, §§ 5, 6, relative to the payment by towns of expenses necessarily incurred for the relief of paupers and poor persons, is not used in its strict technical sense, as confined to persons who have been a public charge, but includes all poor and indigent persons standing in need of relief. Hutchings v. Thompson, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 238, 239.

"Pauper," as used in Gen. St. c. 20, § 19, providing that the kindred within a certain degree of any poor person who shall become chargeable to any town shall be bound to support such pauper in proportion to their respective abilities, does not necessarily imply a person who has actually received support from a town, as the word in this chapter is used indiscriminately to designate poor and indigent persons standing in need of relief and poor persons likely to become chargeable, as well as such poor persons as actually have received such support from the town. Walbridge v. Walbridge, 46 Vt. 617, 625.

A person who is in want of immediate relief by reason of sickness or insanity, or in immediate need of food, clothes, and shelter upon the principles of common humanity, is a pauper; and the aid and assistance furnished by public authority and according to law to the child or wife of any person liable for such support and in present need of relief, at his request or with his consent, are equivalent to like aid and assistance furnished to the party himself, and for the time during which they are furnished render the person a pauper. City of Charleston v. Inhabitants of Groveland, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 15, 17.

Every person unable to provide for and maintain himself is prima facie a pauper, entitled to relief; and although some other township, or some other person, as in the case of parent and child, or master and slave, provided for by statute, may be subjected to his maintenance, yet the township in which he may be must provide for him, and permanently, or at least until his disability is removed, unless they can find some other township or some person legally chargeable, and this, although such pauper may not have any legal settlement within the state. Overseers of Poor of South Brunswick v. Overseers of Poor of East Windsor, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 64, 67.

A "pauper," within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 46, §§ 113, 116, providing for the relief and support of persons standing in need of aid, is one residing or found in any town where he falls into distress and stands in need of immediate relief. Shearer v. Inhabitants of Shelburne, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 3, 5.

Person receiving public aid.

The word "paupers," in Const. Amend. art. 3, providing that every male citizen of 21 years and upwards, except paupers and persons under guardianship, who shall reside, etc., shall be entitled to vote, etc., means persons receiving aid and assistance from the public for themselves or their families under the provisions made by law for the support and maintenance of the poor. Opinion of the Justices, 124 Mass. 596, 597.

The term "pauper," as so used, does not include persons who are exempted from taxation by the assessors on the ground of their poverty, as authorized by statute, though in a certain loose and indefinite sense the persons in question may be called paupers. Opinion of Judges, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 538, 543.

Person with money or property.

No man is to be considered as a pauper who has credit or property with which he can, under the circumstances in which he is placed, immediately relieve his wants if he will; but, when a man with a house and a little real estate is by sickness or other accident reduced to want, he is not to be compelled to sell his house and clothing, and turn himself and family out of doors, sick and naked, in order to entitle him and his family to relief. It is not the interest of those who may be chargeable with his support that he should be compelled to do this. Town of Poplin v. Town of Hawke, 8 N. H. 306, 307.

A party who is the owner of unincumbered real estate of the value of $400 or $500 is not a pauper, within a statute defining "pauper" as a poor and indigent person, so as to charge the town in which he is lawfully settled with his support. Town of Ludlow v. Town of Weatherfield, 18 Vt. 39, 40.

Gen. St. p. 190, § 1, provides that all persons who have not estate sufficient for their support shall be provided for and supported at the expense of the town where they belong. A man who was partially blind, and nearly incapacitated for work, occupied with his wife a basement of a small house with an acre of ground, having a life interest in the land and basement, which interest was not worth over $200 and was all the property he owned. It was held that it was not necessary that his interest in the property should be disposed of, and the proceeds expended, before he could be regarded as a pauper, so as to be entitled to help from the town under the statute. Fish v. Perkins, 52 Conn. 200, 202.

The fact that an alleged pauper might have obtained $5 upon a demand in his favor at the time when he received relief from a town was not conclusive evidence that he was not a pauper at the time such relief was furnished, since there might be circumstances rendering it necessary for a person to have immediate supplies, not admitting of even a little delay, and this necessity would constitute the person a pauper, within the meaning of the poor laws, if the means at such person's command were not at hand at the time of his necessity, and his distress was of such a sudden nature as to prevent him from going after such means. Inhabitants of Sturbridge v. Inhabitants of Holland, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 459, 461.

The fact that an alleged pauper owned two promissory notes, the dates and value not ascertained, one of them for $25 and one for $1.50, and that $7 was collected and paid over to such pauper after his admission to the poorhouse, was not conclusive evidence that he was not a pauper at the time of his reception into the poorhouse. Town of New Milford v. Town of Sherman, 21 Conn. 101, 112.

A man and his wife were each over 70 years old. He had no work, if he had been able to do it. They were very scantily and poorly clothed, and had no provisions and no income. They had two cows, which had ceased giving milk, and therefore furnished no support at the time. It was midwinter, and the weather was cold. It was held that such parties were paupers. It was not necessary that they should have sold their cows, which would aid them to a living the following summer, and eaten the last morsel of food, and reached the point of starvation, before the supervisor of the poor was required to aid them. Town of Big Grove v. Town of Fox, 89 Ill. App. 84, 86.

The term "pauper" does not include one who is the proprietor of a promissory note of $96 against a person able to make payment, though the alleged pauper has no knowledge of the existence of the note during the time support is being furnished him, and therefore the town is not liable for such support. Stewart v. Inhabitants of Town of Sherman, 4 Conn. 553, 556.

The Massachusetts courts have said that selectmen in their capacity as overseers of the board are to act in the exercise of sound discretion in determining who is a pauper and what is necessary for his relief, though their heirs are subject to the revision of courts and juries. Inhabitants of Monson v. Williams, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 416, 417. One may be a pauper, though he has some property. The rule as laid down by Richardson, C. J., in Town of Poplin v. Town of Hawke, 8 N. H. 305, is that one who is in possession of such credit or property that he might relieve himself without disposing of what must be immediately replaced in order to enable him to live is not a pauper, and one not in possession of such credit or property is entitled to relief under the statute. Moultonborough v. Tuftonborough, 43 N. H. 316, 319.

Person unwilling to support himself.

Whether a man who was able, but unwilling, to provide for himself by labor is a pauper, will be a question only between himself and the place of his proper settlement, in an action against him for money paid for his use, if it should turn out that he was not in fact a pauper; but the town where he happens to be has only to inquire whether he is in actual distress, and, if he is, such town is obliged to relieve him. Inhabitants of Paris v. Inhabitants of Hiram, 12 Mass. 262, 267.

Sick person.

As used in Gen. St. §§ 1891-1991, relating to paupers and nonresidents who may fall sick within the state, not having money or property, the term "pauper" included poor persons unable to earn a livelihood in consequence of bodily infirmity, idiocy, lunacy, or other cause, and whose disability was likely to be more or less permanent. Lander County v. Humboldt County, 32 Pac. 849, 21 Nev. 415.

A pauper is a poor person, particularly one so indigent as to depend on the parish or town for support. A laboring man, who had always been able to make a living until his last sickness, is not a pauper, though without money or property with which to pay the expenses of that sickness. Lee Co. v. Lackie, 30 Ark. 764, 763.

A poor person, smitten with a contagious disease, is not included in that class of paupers which a county is obliged to maintain in its poorhouse. La Salle County Sup'rs v. Reynolds, 49 Ill. 186, 190.

In a general sense all poor persons may be said to be paupers, but not as the word is used in Rev. St. § 1953, wherein it has been defined to be poor persons, particularly those so indigent as to depend upon the proper authorities of the county charged with the support of the poor. In a technical sense the word "pauper" does not apply to a poor person smitten with a contagious disease, who on account of his sickness receives aid from the county, though under a pauper act. Sweetwater County Com'rs v. Carbon County Com'rs, 44 Pac. 63, 68, 6 Wyo. 254 (citing La Salle County Com'rs v. Reynolds, 49 Ill. 186).

Slave entitled to support from master.

The term "pauper," in the sense of the statute providing that it shall be the duty of the selectmen to provide for all paupers, does not include a negro slave, who is entitled to support from the estate of her master. Town of East Hartford v. Pitkin, 3 Conn. 393, 397.

Weak-minded person.

Within the meaning of a contract whereby a person agreed to care for all paupers belonging to his town and to receive all their labor and services, a person of weak mind, small mental capacity, and regarded as non compos mentis, yet under no guardianship, and capable of making contracts for necessaries, and having good bodily health and strength, and capable of performing many kinds of labor on a farm, thus being able to earn enough to support himself, was held not to be a pauper. Wilson v. Brooks, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 341, 344.

Wife of one able to support her.

The term "pauper" does not include the wife of a man who is bound by law to support her, and who is abundantly able so to do, though he has maltreated her and expelled her from his house without just cause, and refuses to provide for her; and therefore the superintendents of the poor cannot maintain an action against the husband for board, clothing, and medical aid furnished the wife as a pauper. Norton v. Rhodes (N. Y.) 18 Barb. 100, 101.

Wife of sick pauper.

Where a pauper is sick and needs the assistance of his wife, who is otherwise able to maintain herself, both may, by the necessity of such assistance, become paupers and liable to support. Town of South Hampton v. Town of Hampton Falls, 11 N. H. 134.

PAVE—PAVEMENT.

See "Asphalt Paving."

To pave is to lay or cover with stone or brick, so as to make a level or convenient surface for horses, carriages, or foot passengers. Buell v. Ball, 20 Iowa, 282, 290, 291; Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa, 31, 36; City of Harrisburg v. Segelbaum, 24 Atl. 1070, 1073, 151 Pa. 172; Morse v. City of Westport, 19 S. W. 831, 833, 110 Mo. 502; In re Phillips, 60 N. Y. 16, 22.

A pavement is not limited to uniformly arranged masses of solid material, as blocks of wood, brick, or stone, but it may be as well formed of pebbles or gravel, or other hard substances, which will make a compact, even, hard way or floor. City of Little Rock v. Fitzgerald, 23 S. W. 32, 33, 59 Ark. 494, 23 L. R. A. 496 (citing Burnham v. City of Chicago, 24 Ill. [14 Peck] 496). In criticism of this definition it may be said that "paving" is the generic term, under which "graveling" is the specific, and that, while the generic includes the specific, as the greater the less, the reverse does not follow. McNair v. Ostrander, 23 Pac. 414, 415, 1 Wash. St. 110.

No particular material is necessary to constitute a pavement. It may be made of anything which will produce a hard, firm, smooth surface for travel. City of Philadelphia v. Eddleman, 32 Atl. 639, 169 Pa. 452, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 433.

Paving is defined to be the laying of streets with pavement. Ten Eyck v. Di- rectors of Protestant Episcopal Church, 20 N. Y. Supp. 157, 159, 65 Hun. 194.

As the word "building" is a synonym of "paving," a town has power to pave with asphalt under a power to macadamize, build, gutter, and curb streets. Morse v. City of Westport, 19 S. W. 831, 833, 110 Mo. 502.

The power to pave city streets, conferred upon the common council by charter, includes curbs, sidewalks, gutters, trimmings, and grading. Jacquemin v. Finnegan, 80 N. Y. Supp. 207, 209, 39 Misc. Rep. 623.

Where a lease requires the lessee to pay for paving, it refers to the time when it is paved the first time, and not to any subsequent paving. Ten Eyck v. Rector, 65 Hun. 194, 197, 20 N. Y. Supp. 157.

Excavating and removing obstacles.

In a charter authorizing a city to require the owner of lots to pave and repair one-half the width of the streets contiguous to the respective lots, the word "pave" is used as a comprehensive, ultimate term, and includes all things necessary to make a level and convenient surface for horses, carriages, and foot passengers, of any convenient common or practical material, and includes all necessary excavation or filling to prepare the surface and the removal of obstacles, as well as laying the paving stones or other surface material. Buell v. Ball, 20 Iowa, 282, 290, 291.

Flagging.

A sidewalk is paved, when it is laid or flagged with flat stones, as well as when paved with brick, as is frequently done. If the laying of a sidewalk or footway with brick would be a paving, or, if done a second time, a repaving, and it would certainly, come within the ordinary signification of that term, then a relaying of the same surface with flat stones would be well designated under the general term as a pavement. The difference in the material could not change the character or general identity of the work, as embraced in the generic term, which includes a process for covering a street or walk or public place with stone or brick or concrete, so as to give a level surface convenient for use in the manner and for the purpose for which it is intended. In re Phillips, 60 N. Y. 16, 22.

In a general sense paving includes flagging, whether on a street or sidewalk. In re Burmeister, 76 N. Y. 174, 181; Id. (N. Y.) 56 How. Prac. 418, 425. "Paving" is a more comprehensive word than "flagging"; the word including flagging, as well as other modes of making a smooth surface for streets and sidewalks. City of Schenectady v. Trustees of Union College, 21 N. Y. Supp. 147, 151, 66 Hun. 179.

"Pavement" is a more comprehensive word than "flagging." It includes flagging, as well as other modes of making a smooth surface for streets, including sidewalks. In re Burmeister, 76 N. Y. 174, 181.

Construction of gutters or curbing.

The term "pave" will apply to and describe the construction of gutters. The fact that the stone was deposited in a manner different from that on the rest of the street does not deprive it of the character of a pavement. Warren v. Henly, 81 Iowa, 81, 86.

The term "pave" includes curbing, which is a necessary part of paving a street, to support and separate the footway from the cartway. Wistar v. City of Philadelphia, 80 Pa. (30 P. F. Smith) 505, 511, 21 Am. Rep. 112.

Macadamizing.

The term "paving," within the meaning of the statute giving a city the power of paving its streets, includes macadamizing the gutters and streets. Hudekoper v. City of Meadville, 88 Pa. 156, 158.

Within the meaning of the charter authorizing special assessments to be made for paving streets, the term "pavement" is not limited to uniformly arranged masses of solid material, as blocks of wood, brick, or stone; but it may be as well formed of pebbles or gravel or other hard substance, which will make a compact, even, hard way or floor. So is the work defined by lexicographers, and so is it understood by well-informed persons in ordinary intercourse. Macadamizing is one mode of paving, deriving its name from the man who invented that particular mode. Burnham v. City of Chicago, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 496, 499, 500.

Any substance which is spread upon the street, so as to form a compact, hard, or level surface or floor, may be properly designated as a pavement. The term may be aptly used to describe either a stone or a macadam pavement. Lillenthal v. City of Yonkers, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 1038, 6 App. Div. 138.

"Paving," as used in Act 1857, enacting that certain city councils might by ordinances establish such regulations in regard to a certain railway as might be required for the paving along certain streets, does not include macadamizing. A macadam road is not paved, in the meaning of the term "paved," as used in the statutes. Such a road is artificial; improved it may be, but not paved, in the technical or natural sense of the word. Leake v. City of Philadelphia, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 263, 265; Id., 24 Atl. 351, 353, 150 Pa. 643.

"Paving," as used in Act April 23, 1889 (P. L. 44), authorizing boroughs to require the paving, curbing, and macadamizing of streets, is more general than the word "macadamizing," though in the legislative mind macadamizing was regarded as a species of paving. As popularly understood, a macadamized street is a paved street, but every paved street is not necessarily a macadamized street. According to Webster, "pave" means "to lay or cover with bricks or stone, so as to make a level or convenient surface for carriage or foot passengers; to floor with brick or other solid material." The same author defines "macadamize" as "to cover, as a roadway or path, with small broken stones, so as to form a smooth laid surface." City of Harrisburg v. Segelbaum, 24 Atl. 1070, 1073, 151 Pa. 172.

"Paved," as used in an ordinance, providing that the requirement that a street railroad company should construct tracks and begin running its cars within a specified time after approval of the ordinance should not apply if the streets were not graded and paved, cannot be construed to include a street macadamized with broken stone in a strip in the middle to make a solid road for winter, while the remainder of the bed was what is ordinarily termed a "dirt road." United Railways & Electric Co. v. Hayes (Md.) 48 Atl. 364, 365, 92 Md. 490.

There can be no doubt but that macadam is a species of pavement, and may well be called a pavement. Belcher Sugar Refining Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co., 101 Mo. 192, 206, 18 S. W. 822, 826, 8 L. R. A. 801.

Repaving.

A power to pave implies a power to repair and repave, when the condition of the streets requires it. Wistar v. City of Philadelphia, 80 Pa. (30 P. F. Smith) 505, 511, 21 Am. Rep. 112.

Laying of sidewalk.

The term "paving" includes the laying of a sidewalk, within the meaning of Laws 1856, c. 338, § 1, authorizing assessments by the city for paving. In re Burke, 62 N. Y. 224, 229.

"Pavement" and "sidewalk improvement," as used in an act giving a city power to build and maintain suitable pavement or sidewalk improvement, are convertible terms. City of Little Rock v. Fitzgerald, 28 S. W. 32, 33, 59 Ark. 494, 28 L. R. A. 496.

The flagging of a sidewalk of a street is a "pavement," within the meaning of that term as used in Acts 1873, c. 335, relating to assessments for the pavement of streets. In re Grube (N. Y.) 20 Hun, 303, 304.

PAVING TILES.

Plain glazed tiles of different colors, used for hearths, bathrooms, walls, dados, wainscoting, and ornamental purposes, are not "paving tiles," within the meaning of Tariff Act 1883, but are properly enumerated as "earthenware glazed, composed of earthy or mineral substances, not enumerated or provided for in this act," under another section of the act. Rossman v. Hedden (U. S.) 87 Fed. 90, 102.

PAWN.

A pawn is that sort of bailment in which goods or chattels are delivered to another as a pawn, to be a security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor. Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 918.

A pawn is defined to be a bailment or delivery of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept until the debt is discharged. It is the "pignori acceptum" of the civil law, according to which the possession of the pledge ("pignus") passed to the creditor therein, differing from the "hypotheca," where it did not. Barrett v. Cole, 49 N. C. 40, 41.

A pawn arises when a movable thing is given as security. Livingston v. Story, 86 U. S. (11 Pet.) 851, 888, 9 L. Ed. 748.

A pawn is a mere collateral security for the payment of a debt. Johnson v. Smith, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 896, 898.

Pothier defines a pawn or pledge to be a contract by which a debtor gives to his creditor a thing to be detained as security for his debt, which the creditor is bound to return when the debt is paid. Judge Story says the definitions of pawns and pledges as given by some of the writers are limited in terms to cases where a thing is given as mere security for debt, but a pawn may be given as security for any other engagement. The definition of "domat" is therefore more accurate, because it is more comprehensive, namely, that it is the appropriation of the thing given for the security of an engagement. Surber's Adm'r v. McClintic, 10 W. Va. 236, 242.

A thing is called a "pawn" when it is pledged for money lent, and is delivered into the actual possession of the creditor. Wolff v. Farrell (S. C.) 8 Brev. 68, 70.

A thing is said to be pawned when a movable thing is given as security, and the antichresis when the security given consists in immovables. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 8133.

A pledge or pawn is property deposited with another as security for the payment of a debt. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2956.

In Georgia a pledge or pawn is declared to be property deposited with another as security for the payment of a debt. Jones, Pledges, § 1. Lord Holt, who was the first to make a systematic statement of the general law of bailment, defined a pawn to be that sort of bailment "when goods and chattels are delivered to another to be a security to him for money borrowed of him by the bailor." First Nat. Bank v. Harkness, 42 W. Va. 156, 164, 24 S. E. 548, 552, 32 L. E. A. 408.

As requiring delivery.

Under Code, § 2110, delivery is essential to constitute a pawn. At common law, therefore, incorporeal things, though they might be sold or mortgaged, cannot be pawned. First Nat. Bank of Macon v. Nelson, 38 Ga. 391, 402, 95 Am. Dec. 400.

A pawn is property deposited with another as security for the payment of a debt. Delivery of property is essential to this bailment; for the warehouse receipts, bill of lading, or other commercial paper symbolical of the property may be delivered in pledge. Commercial Bank of Jacksonville v. Flowers, 42 S. E. 474, 475, 116 Ga. 219.

PAWNBROKER.

As broker, see "Broker."

Pawnbrokers are brokers who loan money in small sums on the security of personal property. City of Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 480, 444.

A pawnbroker has none of the characteristics of a broker, and is not an agent at all. He contracts in his own name, has no employer, charges no brokerage, and always takes possession of the property. Neither does he deal in money, notes, and bills of exchange, like brokers, and his business is to lend money on the security of personal property pawned or left with him. The verbal coincidence of the last two syllables of the longer word being "broker" is purely fortuitous, for a pawnbroker is not a broker at all. Schau v. City of Charlotte, 24 S. E. 526, 527, 118 N. C. 733.

Under Act June 4, 1879 (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 1869), providing that every person or company engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge or as security for money or other thing advanced to the pawnor or pledgor is a pawnbroker, two important elements are required to constitute a pawnbroker: (1) The person must be engaged in the business of receiving property in pledge for money advanced. An occasional loan will not be sufficient, but the person must so engage in the occupation that it will be known as his regular business or occupation. (2) The person must be engaged in receiving property in pledge or as security for money or other thing advanced to the pawnor or pledgor. City of Chicago

v. Hulbert, 8 N. E. 812, 813, 118 Ill. 632, 433, 59 Am. Rep. 400.

A person who had formerly taken in goods upon pledge, but who had ceased to do so, still continuing to sell the unredeemed pledges, is a pawnbroker, and as such subject to the bankrupt laws. Rawlinson v. Pearson, 5 Barn. & Ald. 124.

Any person or persons who loan money upon deposits or pledge of personal property or other valuable thing, or any person, persons, or corporations who loan money upon chattel property for security, and require possession of the property so mortgaged, on condition of returning the same upon payment of a stipulated amount of money, is a pawnbroker or chattel loan broker. Cobbe's Ann. St. Neb. 1903, § 3910.

Whoever loans money on deposit or pledges personal property, or who purchases personal property or choses in action, on condition of selling the same back again at a stipulated price, is hereby defined and declared to be a pawnbroker. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, § 4387.

Any person who loans money on deposit of personal property, or who deals in the purchase of personal property on condition of selling the same back again at a stipulated price, or who makes a public display at his or their place of business of the sign generally used by pawnbrokers to denote their business, to wit, three gilt or yellow balls, or who publicly exhibits a sign of "Money to loan on personal property or deposit," is a pawnbroker. Ky. St. 1903, § 3787.

A pawnbroker is one who pursues the business of lending money upon interest, and receiving upon deposit as security for the payment of such loan and interest any personal property. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3636.

Every person, firm, or company, whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker within the meaning of the war revenue act of 1898. U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2287.

The definition in Ordinance No. 1894 of the city of St. Paul providing (section 1): "Any person or persons, or corporation or firm, who loans money on deposit or pledge of personal property or any valuable thing, or who deals in the purchasing of personal property or other valuable thing on condition of selling the same back again at a stipulated price, whether he does the same for himself or as an agent of some person or firm or corporation, or who by any means, method, or device loans money on personal property when the same is deposited for security or is deposited for any other purpose, is hereby defined and declared a pawnbroker, for the purpose of this ordinance"—is not necessarily any broader than the general and ordinary meaning of the word "pawnbroker," for every part of the definition contains the essential element of a loan of money on pawn or pledge deposited with the lender. But, even if the definition is broader than the ordinary meaning of the word, the ordinance would not be invalid. The attempted broader definition alone would be invalid. City of St. Paul v. Lytle, 69 Minn. 1, 2, 71 N. W. 703, 704.

The business of a pawnbroker consists in the lending of money on interest. The repayment of the loan and the payment of the interest are secured by an adequate pledge of goods on the part of the borrower to the lender. It is an essential requisite to the carrying on of the two businesses of auctioneer and pawnbroker by the same person at the same time that the proprietor should obtain a license for each. City of Philadelphia v. Hunt (Pa.) 8 Phila. 440, 441.

A licensed auctioneer in the city of Philadelphia, who advances money on goods and charges commissions on such advances, is liable to the payment of a pawnbroker's license under the city ordinance. Hunt v. City of Philadelphia, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 277, 279.

PAWNBROKER'S TICKET.

As contract, see "Contract."

PAY.

See, also, "Paid."

A decree of distribution, distributing property to be held in trust by the trustees, that they should manage such property and "pay over and deliver" the same, indicates that, as far as is consistent with the nature of the property, the beneficiaries are entitled to receive it in the same condition in which it was received by the trustees. Goad v. Montgomery, 51 Pac. 681, 684, 119 Cal. 552, 68 Am. St. Rep. 145.

As apply.

"Paid," as used in a will giving a life estate to the children, and providing that on the decease of either the share belonging to the one so dying be paid to her children, is used in the sense of "applied," and not in the sense of requiring the estate to be sold in order to pay the children money. Salisbury v. Slade, 48 N. Y. Supp. 55, 58, 22 App. Div. 348.

Bequest imported.

The words "to pay," in a will devising a portion of an estate in trust to executors to pay the income to a grandson during his life and the principal at their discretion, and, in case he should die without issue, then on his death to pay said principal to W. and S., being without special reference to any technical meaning, was equivalent to a direct bequest of the amount of the principal to W. and S., subject to the contingency. Rossa v. Harrington, 64 N. E. 1, 2, 171 N. Y. 341.

Borrow distinguished.

There is a difference between "paying an indebtedness" and "borrowing money." It is not a "borrowing of money" to purchase a lot, agreeing to pay the consideration therefor. City of Richmond v. McGirr, 78 Ind. 192, 193.

As creating a charge.

"Paying," as used by a testator in devising a freehold and copyholds to his son for life and after his decease to his first and other sons, paying £10 a year to M. C. for life, created a charge, and not a trust. Hodge v. Churchward, 16 Sim. 71.

As compensation for services.

As used in a promise by a contractor that he would see that the men at work for a subcontractor should have their pay in the spring, "pay" means not only that which was subsequently earned, but all that would be due them whenever earned. McDonald v. Fernald, 88 Atl. 729, 68 N. H. 171.

"Pay," as a military term, means a fixed and direct amount given by law to persons in the military service, in consideration of and as compensation for their personal services. Sherburne v. United States (U. S.) 16 Ct. Cl. 491, 493.

Conversion into personality implied.

The words "to pay," in a will giving a devise in trust of real estate to certain beneficiaries and directing the trustee to pay a particular sum to a beneficiary on the latter attaining a certain age, is insufficient to warrant the implication of an intention to convert the real into personal estate. A direction to convert is sometimes implied, but only when the design and purpose of the testator is equivocal, and so strong as to leave no substantial doubt. In re Tatum, 69 N. Y. Supp. 501, 503, 34 Misc. Rep. 25.

A will gave the residue of the property of the testatrix to her husband and children, to be shared equally between them; her husband to hold the shares of the children in trust until their majority or arrival at a certain age, and then to pay over the whole sum. Held, that the words "pay over" evidenced an intention on the part of the testatrix that her estate should be converted into money, and such money then paid to the legatees. Clarke v. Clarke, 24 S. E. 202, 207, 46 S. C. 230, 57 Am. St. Rep. 675.

The word "paid," as used in a will bequeathing an interest in real and personal property to one person, and directing that after such person's death the principal and interest thereof be paid to another, indicates an intention to have such first person's share converted into money. Terry v. Smith, 3 Atl. 886, 888, 42 N. J. Eq. (14 Stew.) 504.

As deposit.

A statute relating to partition sales, and providing that the highest bidder, on being declared a purchaser, should sign the conditions and pay 10 per cent. of the purchase money in cash, means, not a deposit to secure further fulfillment of his contract, but an actual payment, on account of the purchase money, of a part of the purchase money. Bailey v. Dalrymple, 19 Atl. 840, 841, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 81.

Distribution or transfer of property.

The word "pay," as used in a will directing that the testator's executors shall divide and pay certain amounts raised by a mortgage on certain real estate to certain legatees, is not used to denote the distribution or division of the real estate. Weeks v. Cornwell, 10 N. E. 431, 434, 104 N. Y. 325.

The words "pay, assign, and transfer," in their more ordinary sense, apply rather to personal than to real estate; but they are not necessarily confined to personal estate. Real estate may be said to be transferred by any conveyance by which it passes from one owner to another. Stokes v. Salomons, 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 183, 187.

"Pay and deliver over," as used in wills in connection with devises and bequests, in directing the executors to pay and deliver over the same, appropriately apply to a disposition of the personal estate and have influence in determining whether or not that is the character of the fund which the testator intended the beneficiary should receive. In re Thompson's Estate, 1 N. Y. Supp. 213, 215.

Gift imported.

The use of the word "pay" might be consistent with an intention to make a gift, but, when used with reference to the discharge of an obligation, will not be held to be used with that intention; so that the handing of a bank book, with the order to draw out money and pay it, "as I wish to have it done," to different parties, will not constitute a gift. Hart v. Ketchum, 53 Pac. 981, 982, 121 Cal. 426.

Payable on demand.

Where a complaint stated that defendant made its order in writing requiring the treasurer "to pay" to bearer a certain sum, with interest from date, out of any money belonging to the school fund, the same having that day been allowed for salary as a teacher, a fair and clear import of the language was that the orders were payable on demand. Terry v. City of Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 490, 491.

As discharge of obligation.

The word "pay" indicates the discharge of an obligation, rather than an investment of money. Hopson v. Xetna Axle & Spring Co., 50 Conn. 597, 601.

Payment in money.

The term "pay bills" implies the use of money. Clafin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27, 43, 11 S. E. 721, 723 (citing Abb. Law Dict. tit. "Bill").

"Paid," as used in a statute providing that the amount for which any building is insured against fire shall be paid to the insured or his personal representatives, should be construed in its appropriate legal sense of satisfaction in money of a debt due from one to another. The rebuilding of the destroyed building by the insurance company is not a payment, within the meaning of the statute, though it would be a satisfaction of the insurer's liability, and in a sense payment. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Russell, 62 N. E. 838, 840, 65 Ohio St. 230, 56 L. E. A. 159.

An insurance policy provided that any loss should be paid at the actual cash value of the property destroyed, within 60 days after due notice, etc., but that, in case of any loss or damage, it should be optional with the company to replace the articles lost or damaged with others of the same kind and quality, and to rebuild or repair the building within a reasonable time, etc. It was held that the insurer might settle a loss under the policy, either by paying in cash or by rebuilding, etc.; the court saying: "Standing alone, no doubt, this [the agreement to pay] would mean a payment in money, but it cannot be deemed to create a conflict between the policy and the condition. The provisions are entirely in harmony. Tolman v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 73, 76. In that case the policy contained a proviso allowing the defendants, instead of paying in money, to replace the property lost with other of like kind and quality at the option of the defendants. After a loss the insured indorsed on the policy: 'Pay the loss under the within policy to J. T.'—to which the defendants assented in writing. The plaintiff claimed that the defendants had thereby lost their option and must pay in money. The court held otherwise; saying: 'To pay is defined by lexicographers as to discharge a debt; to deliver a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, to his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged.' We consider the effect of this indorsement to be as if written out in this manner: 'Pay or discharge the obligation arising from the loss under the policy to J. T.' It was held that the company still retained the right to pay in money or to replace in kind, at their option. In the present case, by its just construction, the contract reserves to the defendants the right to pay the loss in money or to indemnify the party by furnishing him with a building of like character and of equal value with the one destroyed." Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 522, 527.

The word "pay," while often in commercial transactions meaning satisfaction in money, has a much wider signification in its ordinary usage, and includes satisfaction, discharge, or compensation. The term is so used in Acts 1898, c. 280, providing that all tickets or scrip issued to laborers for labor done shall be paid to the person holding the same, and therefore a person holding an order payable in merchandise is not entitled to payment in money. Marriner v. John L. Roper Co., 16 S. E. 906, 907, 112 N. C. 164.

The word "pay," as used in a resolution of the congress of the republic of Texas providing for the pay of volunteers, is not to be restricted to pay in money alone. It is not so limited. In the resolution itself, and therefore includes land thereafter granted to a soldier who has served for a term of three months. While the grant by the republic may have been but a bounty in a sense, yet it was in substance a recompense or payment for duties performed in the military service of the republic in a more adequate sense and forth than the money payment provided by the then law. Halsted v. Allen (Tex.) 73 S. W. 1068, 1069.

As receive and apply.

A direction to trustees to pay the cestui que trust the rents and profits of real estate or the income of personal estate is in legal effect the same as a trust to receive such rents and profits or income and to apply the same to the use of the cestui que trust. Mason v. Jones (N. Y.) 2 Barb. 229, 248.

Sale and indebtedness implied.

In an instrument obligating the maker to pay a certain amount for certain merchandise, the word "pay" implies an indebtedness; and, it being expressed that the payment is to be for a specified merchandise, a sale of such merchandise will be understood. Lent v. Hodgman (N. Y.) 15 Barb. 274, 278.

As transfer.

"Pay," as used in a will directing the executors to pay over the whole sum belonging to each child's share upon her attaining a certain age, should be construed in the sense of "transfer." Appeal of Clarke, 89 Atl. 155, 161, 70 Conn. 195.

Though the word "pay" is generally a word of transfer, when used in an order, it cannot be construed in such sense in a written order by a defendant in execution, directing the sheriff to pay to defendant's son whatever surplus remains of the proceeds of an execution sale of defendant's land after paying the executions against him, which order does not express any consideration, and is not shown to have been given for valuable consideration. Such an order is merely an authority to the son to receive the money, and not a transfer or an assignment of it to him. Robinson's Adm'r v. Tip-ton's Adm'r, 31 Ala. 595, 611.

The use of the word "pay," in an order by one having money in possession of the drawee, which recited that the drawer owed the payee a less sum and directing the drawee to pay the sum due the drawer to the payee, though generally a word of transfer, was not used in that sense; for, if it was, it would assign over the whole of the money due, which was certainly not intended. The order in question was held not to be an equitable assignment of any portion of the money in the possession of the drawee. Clayton v. Fawcett's Adm'rs (Va.) 2 Leigh, 19, 23.

Vesting of trust estate indicated.

"Pay," as used in a will devising property to a trustee, and directing the latter to hold the fund until he finds it prudent to pay it to the beneficiary for which it is intended, construed in its ordinary and natural signification as to render what is due, and to show that the provision only affected the possession, and did not prevent the property from vesting in the beneficiary, since, when one pays, he gives up what belongs to another. Lippincott v. Stottsburg, 20 Atl. 360, 363, 47 N. J. Eq. (2 Dick.) 21.

PAYABLE.

The word "payable" is a descriptive word, meaning "capable of being paid; suitable to be paid; admitting or demanding payment; justly due; legally enforceable." First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat. Bank, 19 S. W. 334, 335, 84 Tex. 40 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The word "due" is only equivalent to "payable." Ball v. Northwestern Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 56 Minn. 414, 419, 57 N. W. 1063, 1064.

Bankr. Act 1867, § 19, providing that all debts due and payable from the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy may be provable against his estate, includes "all debts, no matter how long standing. No debt can be considered due and payable which is barred by limitation, and a debt so barred cannot be proved in bankruptcy." A debt, to be barred by limitations, and hence not provable, must be one which is barred throughout the United States. In re Ray (U. S.) 20 Fed. Cas. 322, 324.

Wag. St. p. 216, § 15, providing that every promissory note for payment of money to the payee therein named, or order, or bearer, and expressed to be for value received, shall be "due and payable" as therein expressed, cannot be construed as meaning that such notes fall due on the day mentioned on their face; but days of grace are allowable on such paper. Turk v. Stahl, 53 Mo. 437, 438.

Where a corporation pledged its stock to a trustee to secure a corporate debt, and then issued certificates, each of which recited the pledge, and declared that the holder was entitled to a certain sum of money, payable in said pledged stock at par at any time after the said stock should come into the possession of the corporation, the word "payable" should be construed to refer to the legal satisfaction of the equitable demand, and to entitle the holder or the equitable holder of the stock to be made the legal owner, whenever the pledged stock should be returned to the company and new certificates issued therefor. Higgins v. Lasingh, 40 N. E. 362, 372, 154 Ill. 301.

A bond payable in 20 years after date is, by the common acceptance of those terms, a bond which matures at the expiration of 20 years, the payment of which neither the payor nor the payee can enforce until a lapse of that period. City of Alma v. Guaranty Sav. Bank (U. S.) 60 Fed. 203, 205, 8 C. C. A. 564.

As importing promise.

Where a bank issued a paper writing which recited that a certain person had deposited in the bank a certain sum, payable to the order of another, the word "payable" should be construed as an express promise to pay on demand. Cate v. Fatterson, 25 Mich. 191, 194.

In certificates of deposit there is sometimes an express promise to pay, but the promise is most frequently implied from the word "payable." The acknowledgment by a banker of the deposit of money by another, nothing further showing that it was a special deposit, is sufficient to show the relation of debtor and creditor between the banker and depositor or person for whose benefit the deposit was made; and the word "payable," used in such a connection, must be understood to be used with reference to that relation, and can mean nothing less than that the maker of the paper intends thereby to be understood to promise to pay the sum acknowledged to have been received. First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat. Bank, 19 S. W. 834, 835, 84 Tex. 40.

The word "payable" in an instrument issued and signed by the officer of a bank certifying that A. has deposited a certain sum in the bank payable to order upon the return of the certificate, naturally expresses no more than the thing on which it is predicated is the subject of payment. The instrument is merely a certificate of deposit, and is not made a promissory note by the use of such word. Patterson v. Poindexter (Pa.) 6 Watts & S. 227, 232, 40 Am. Dec. 554.

As to be paid.

The word "payable," as used in a certificate of deposit which recited that the owner had deposited a certain sum with the maker, payable to their order, etc., is equivalent to the expression "to be paid," or "which the maker agrees to pay." Easton v. Hyde, 18 Minn. 90, 91 (Gil. 83, 85).

"Payable," as used in commercial transactions, means "to be paid," rather than "which may be paid"; so that a promise in an instrument to pay $1,000 and interest, "payable" in certain bonds, is an absolute condition for the payment in such bonds, and the payee, on the maker's default, is entitled only to damages to the extent of the value of the bonds. Johnson v. Dooley, 44 S. W. 1032, 1033, 65 Ark. 71, 40 L. R. A. 74.

Rev. St. art. 2201, provides that an administrator appealing from an order of removal shall give a bond, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, payable to the county judge. Held, that the word "payable" indicated that a sum should be named in the bond to be paid. Munzesheimer v. Wickham, 12 S. W. 751, 752, 74 Tex. 638.

In Johnson v. Dooley, 44 S. W. 1032, 65 Ark. 71, 4 L. R. A. 74, it was held, in construing a clause in a note payable in levee bonds of the state of Arkansas at par, that the word "payable," when so used in commercial transactions, means "to be paid," rather than which "may be paid," and that a note payable in the manner indicated does not become payable in money on the failure of the maker to pay or tender the bonds on the day the note is due, since it does not give him the mere privilege or option to pay in bonds, but makes a promise to pay in the specific funds named. Poppleton v. Jones, 69 Pac. 919, 922, 42 Or. 24.

As paid.

The word "payable" is not equivalent to the word "paid." Its legal meaning is that a specified amount becomes due, and its payment can be enforced. The statement, filed in the organization of a joint-stock company, designating the capital stock as "payable on the execution thereof," does not imply that the stock was all paid in before recording. It simply designates the beginning of liability. Hill v. Stetler, 4 Pa. Com. Pl. 119, 122.

As vested.

By a marriage settlement stock was settled, subject to life interests in the husband and wife, in trust for their children, share and share alike, the shares to be paid them at 21 or marriage, and the shares of children dying, leaving issue, before their shares had become payable, were to be in trust for their issue; but, in case any of the children should die before their shares should become payable, without leaving any issue, then their shares were to be in trust for the surviving children. There were six children of the marriage, who all attained 21. Two of them died in the lifetime of their surviving parents. Held, that the word "payable" meant vested, and consequently the representatives of the deceased children were entitled to shares of stock. Mocatta v. Lindo, 9 Sim. 58.

Testator bequeathed £10,000 in trust for his son J. for life, remainder in trust for the children of J. when and as they should attain 21, as tenants in common, and if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving issue, their shares to be paid to their issue, but if any of them should die before their shares became payable, leaving no issue, their shares to be paid to the survivors at the same time as their original should become payable. J. had four children, all of whom attained 21, but one of them died in his lifetime without issue. Held, that the word "payable" meant "attain 21," and consequently one-fourth of the fund vested in the deceased child. Jones v. Jones, 13 Sim. 561, 568.

PAYABLE AS CONVENIENT.

See "Convenience—Convenient."

PAYABLE IN THIS STATE.

Gen. St. c. 230, §§ 21-23, providing that a trustee may be charged "for any negotiable promissory note or other instrument on which he is liable, made or payable in this state," does not mean that the same must be specifically made payable within the state, but refers to notes made within the state and payable there generally. Orcutt v. Hough, 54 N. H. 472, 473.

PAYABLE IN TRADE.

"Payable in trade," as used in a written contract for services, the compensation to be a certain sum payable in trade, is equivalent to saying "payable in such articles as the defendant dealt in, and cannot be limited to one particular article." Dudley v. Vose, 114 Mass. 34, 36.

A contract payable in trade generally, and which specifies no time or place for its delivery, imports that the promisee, before bringing suit, shall notify the promisor what kind of trade he will have and when he is ready to receive it. Woods v. Dial, 12 Ill. 72, 73.

PAYABLE MONTHLY.

An averment that certain sums agreed to be paid were "payable monthly" was inconsistent with the idea that the payments were to be made in advance. Webster v. Cook, 38 Cal. 423, 426.

PAYEE.

The term "payee," in a nonnegotiable note providing that the failure to pay interest when due, at the election of the payee, should make the principal and interest at once due, was construed to include an assignee of the instrument. Seatrunk v. Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. (Tex.) 84 S. W. 466, 467.

PAYING.

See "Yielding and Paying."

A bill of lading stating goods to have been shipped on account of the defendant, and that they were to be delivered in London, the consignees "paying freight" for the same, did not compel the master of the ship to look to the consignees for the payment of the freight, but he might deliver without insisting on payment, and look to defendant, the owner, for payment. Domett v. Beckford, 5 Barn. & Adol. 521.

A lease, with a proviso of re-entry if the rent should be in arrears 21 days, and by which the lessee covenanted to pay the rent, and the landlord covenanted that the lessee, "paying the rent" at the appointed times, should quietly enjoy, etc., did not make the payment of the rent a condition precedent to the performance of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Dawson v. Dyer, 5 Barn. & Adol. 584.

As creating estate in fee.

The word "paying," in a will devising certain lands to testator's son, he paying a legacy to his sisters as thereafter specified, is undoubtedly in some instances amply sufficient to carry the fee, where the other parts of the will do not give such an estate in express words or by necessary implication. It will sometimes enlarge an estate which the testator has in so many words called "an estate for life," when a reasonable doubt exists as to what may be called the general intent of the testator. In this case the words of the first devise carry a fee. If they are clear and express, and not limited by any subsequent expressions, they can derive no additional strength by inference from the circumstances of the charge. If the subsequent words are sufficient to control and narrow down the express devise in fee to an estate in tail, they surely must have the same force in qualifying that which is built wholly upon inference and conjecture. It is only in doubtful cases, and to ascertain an uncertain intention, that this circumstance can be permitted to weigh. Wortendyk v. Wortendyk, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 363, 373.

PAYING MONEY INTO COURT.

The phrase "paying money into court" is of more frequent occurrence in the law of tender than elsewhere. When the fact of a tender is relied on to defeat recovery of costs for damages and delay, the money necessary to keep the tender good must be brought into court; and in order to constitute a sufficient payment into court, Code, § 2685, requires that there must be a delivery of the money to the clerk of the court. Warren v. Matthews, 11 South. 235, 236, 96 Ala. 133.

PAYING QUANTITIES.

The term "paying quantities," as used in an oil lease for a given term and as much longer as oil can be produced in paying quantities, means paying quantity to the lessee. If the well pays a profit, even small, over operating expenses, it produces in paying quantity, though it may never repay its cost, and the operation as a whole may result in a loss. The phrase "paying quantities," therefore, is to be construed with reference to the operator, and by his judgment, when exercised in good faith. Lowther Oil Co. v. Miller-Sibley Oil Co., 44 S. E. 433, 434, 53 W. Va. 501, 87 Am. St. Rep. 1027 (citing Young v. Forest Oil Co., 194 Pa. 243, 45 Atl. 121).

PAYMENT.

All payments, see "All."

A payment is defined to be the performance of an obligation for the delivery of money. Green v. Hughitt School Tp., 59 N. W. 224, 226, 5 S. D. 452.

Payment is defined to be the act of paying; the delivery of money as payment in the course of business. Haun v. State, 54 Pac. 130, 132, 7 Kan. App. 509.

Payment is defined to be the act of paying, or that which is paid; discharge of a debt, obligation, or duty; satisfaction of a claim; recompense; the fulfillment of a promise or the performance of an agreement; the discharge in money of a sum due. Stokes v. Stokes, 54 N. Y. Supp. 819, 826, 34 App. Div. 423.

"Payment of money," in its general sense, means a delivery of money by one person from whom it is due to another to whom it is due. Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161, 166.

In legal contemplation payment is the discharge of an obligation by the delivery of money or its equivalent, and is generally made with the assent of both parties to the contract. Commercial Bank v. Toklas, 56 Pac. 927, 928, 21 Wash. 36; Brady v. Wasson, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 131, 135.

Payment is a mode of extinguishing a debt. Bradford v. Richard, 16 South. 487, 489, 46 La. Ann. 1530.

"Payment" is a mode of extinguishing obligations. It is not only the delivery of a sum of money, but the performance of an obligation. It is an act calling for the exercise of the will or consent, without which it has not the characteristics of that mode of extinguishing obligations. Bloodworth v. Jacobs, 2 La. Ann. 24, 26.

The word "payment" has a specified and clear meaning, which is that a claim has been paid. Ridings v. McMenamin (Del.) 39 Atl. 463, 464, 1 Pennewill, 15.

The defense of payment, in its most restricted sense, is the discharge in money of a sum due (Bouv. Law Dict.); but in its most general acceptance it is the fulfillment of a promise, the performance of an agreement, the accomplishment of every obligation, whether it consist in giving or doing. It is not a technical term, and has been imported into law proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises. Root v. Kelley, 80 N. Y. Supp. 482, 483, 39 Misc. Rep. 530 (citing Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 522, 527). See, also, Bantz v. Baasett, 12 W. Va. 772, 780; Scott v. Gilkey, 49 Ill. App. 116, 122; Exchange Bank of Virginia v. Cookman, 1 W. Va. 69, 77.

Comp. Laws, § 3456, defines payment as the performance of an obligation for the delivery of money. Green v. Hughitt School Tp., 59 N. W. 224, 226, 5 S. D. 452.

Payment of money is delivery by a debtor to his creditor of the amount due. Bron- son v. Rodes, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 229, 250, 19 L. Ed. 141.

The term "payment," when used voluntarily and with full knowledge of the facts, excludes the idea of an implied promise to refund. Morton v. Chandler, 6 Me. (8 Greenl.) 142, 144.

A payment is a transfer of property from one person to another. While the delivery to the owner of his own property does not affect the property—that is, the right—but merely the possession, it cannot, without an abuse of terms, be regarded as a payment. Hence it is held that where lands are leased, reserving a part of the crops in lieu of rent, the contract takes effect by way of reservation, and the crops thus reserved remain the property of the landlord, and their delivery to him cannot be regarded as a payment. Moulton v. Robinson, 27 N. H. 550, 554.

"Payment," as well as "discharge," is used in two senses: First, performance of a contract to pay money according to its stipulation; second, extinguishment of a cause of action arising from breach of a contract. "Payment," as generally used in the books, has the latter meaning, and "the defense of payment" is usually of the same import, denoting a new, affirmative, and independent fact set up by the defendant in confession and avoidance, and not in denial of the breach. Kendall v. Brownson, 47 N. H. 188, 208.

Performance of an obligation for the delivery of money only is called "payment." Civ. Code Cal. 1903, § 1478; Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 3797; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 1149; Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 2005.

By payment is meant, not only the delivery of a sum of money, when such is the obligation of the contract, but the performance of that which the parties respectively undertook, whether it be to give or to do. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2131.

Acceptance required.

Payment is a mode of extinguishing obligations. It is an act calling for the exercise of a will or consent. To constitute a payment, money or some other valuable thing must be delivered by the debtor to the creditor for the purpose of extinguishing the debt, and the creditor must receive it for the same purpose. Jenkins v. Mapes, 41 N. E. 137, 138, 53 Ohio St. 110 (citing Kingston Bank v. Gay (N. Y.) 19 Barb. 459). The payment must be received, as well. Bardsley v. Sternberg, 52 Pac. 251, 252, 18 Wash. 612 (citing Cushing v. Wyman, 44 Me. 121).

To have the delivery of money by a debtor to a creditor operate as a payment of indebtedness, there must be an acceptance of the money by the creditor. When the debtor delivers the money as payment, and the creditor accepts it as such, the minds of the parties meet, and a payment is effected. If the payment is made on Sunday, and is accepted, each party violates the statute prohibiting the doing of secular business on the Lord's day. Because of such prohibition a Sunday payment is illegal, and the law will not aid the parties either in enforcing or undoing it, but will leave them where it finds them. Jameson v. Carpenter, 36 Atl. 554, 68 N. H. 62.

It is an impeachment on the common sense of the jury and of mankind to suppose that they do not understand that payment in money or anything else by one party always implies an acceptance of the money or goods as payment by the other party. Oliver v. Phelps, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 180, 195.

As conveyance.

See "Conveyance."

Delivery required.

"Payment," as used in Code, § 2099, providing that, when a contract for labor or for the payment or delivery of property other than money does not fix a place of payment, the maker may tender it, etc., the word "payment" includes in its meaning both payment and delivery, as otherwise the section is meaningless. Holts v. Peterson, 62 N. W. 19, 20, 96 Iowa, 741.

"Payment," as used in Act Va. Dec. 19, 1792, which provides a punishment for the passing of counterfeit money in payment of obligations, does not include a delivery of the counterfeit money to a person to be passed off generally for the benefit of the party so delivering it. United States v. Venable (U. S.) 28 Fed. Cas. 368.

"Payment," in its largest sense, is the actual accomplishment of the thing that the party obliges himself to give or to do, whatever that may be, although in our acceptance it is ordinarily confined to money engagements. It is therefore the natural manner in which obligations are extinguished. When the obligation is to give something, the payment is accomplished when the property in the thing to be given is actually transferred to the creditor; and of course, in order to constitute the transaction a payment, there must be both a delivery by the debtor and an acceptance by the creditor, with a purpose on the part of the former to part from and of the latter to accept of the immediate ownership of the thing passed from the one to the other. In a payment we ordinarily look only to the act of the party making it; but yet its legal import is an act in which the debtor tenders and the creditor accepts that which is offered. Thompson v. Kellogg, 23 Mo. 281, 285.

Debt implied.

Payment implies the existence of a debt, of a party to whom it is owed, and of a satisfaction of the debt to the party. Tuttle v. Armstead, 22 Atl. 677, 678, 53 Conn. 175.

The term "payment" implies a debt from him who pays to him who is to receive, and that when the payment is complete the debt will be discharged. In re Tennessee Bond Cases, 5 Sup. Ct. 974, 985, 114 U. S. 663, 29 L. Ed. 281.

Voluntary act implied.

The term "payment" ex vi termini implies that the act is voluntary on the part of the debtor, and, if so, he may annex such conditions to the act as he sees fit. Robinson v. Doolittle, 12 Vt. 246, 249.

Medium of payment.

"Payment" means the full satisfaction paid by money, and not by an exchange or compromise, or an accord and satisfaction, and it is only where the words used in connection with it plainly manifest a different intention that such legal import can be rejected. Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Duer) 426, 441.

The term "payment," in its legal import means the satisfaction of a debt by money, not by exchange or compromise, or an accord and satisfaction. City Sav. Bank v. Stevens, 15 N. Y. Supp. 189, 69 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 549; Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Duer) 426, 441.

The term "payment" is now applied in a dual sense. In the restricted or common use it signifies a discharge in money of a sum due, and in such sense would not embrace a satisfaction of a debt otherwise than by the transfer of money from the payor to the payee; but in a broader or more general sense it is defined to be the performance of an agreement or the fulfillment of a promise or obligation, whether it consists in giving or doing, and would include the discharge of a contract or obligation in money, or its equivalent, by the assent of the parties. Clay v. Lakeman, 74 S. W. 391, 392, 101 Mo. App. 568.

Bouvier defines "payment" as the discharge in money of a sum due, and we understand it to be elementary law that it can be made only in money, or that which the creditor accepts as money or in lieu of it. Scott v. Gilkey, 49 Ill. App. 116, 122 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

The word "payment" conveys the idea of a money transaction. Howe v. Mittelberg, 70 S. W. 396, 397, 96 Mo. App. 460.

Payments are not always made in money. Anything may be accepted as a payment. It is only necessary that the parties so agree. Cleveland v. Rothschild (Mich.) 94 N. W. 184, 188.

Payment of a debt is not necessarily a payment of money, but that is payment which the parties contract shall be accepted as payment. In re Thompson (N. Y.) 5 Dem. Sur. 898, 898.

Payment sometimes includes payment in other things than money. And. Dict. Law, tit. "Payment"; Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 87. Yet the ordinary meaning of the word in commercial usage is the more restricted one of payment in money. Para. Merc. Law, 80. Thus the term "payment" in its legal import means the full satisfaction of a debt by money, not by an exchange or compromise, or an accord and satisfaction, and it is only where the words used in connection with it plainly manifest a different intention that the legal import of the term can be rejected. Clafin v. Continental Jersey Works, 85 Ga. 27, 43, 11 S. E. 721, 723 (citing Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. [3 Duer] 426).

"In Huffmans v. Walker (Va.) 26 Grat. 814, 816, the court held that payment of a debt is not necessarily a payment of money, but that is payment which the parties contract shall be accepted in payment." Bants v. Bassett, 12 W. Va. 772, 780.

A payment is said to be a mode of extinguishing obligations. Where the contract calls for money, ordinarily it is money which must be paid, unless the creditor agrees to accept something else as its equivalent. Bullock v. Horn, 44 Ohio St. 420, 428, 7 N. E. 787.

A payment ordinarily implies the delivery and receipt of money by agreement of the parties to the transaction in extinguishment of an existing debt. Coughtry v. Levine (N. Y.) 4 Daly, 835, 837.

Payment may be in any mode which the parties agree shall be treated as the equivalent of a money payment. It may be by means of anything of value which by mutual consent is given and accepted on account of or in satisfaction of the debt. Blair v. Harris, 42 N. W. 790, 794, 75 Mich. 167; Weir v. Hudnut, 18 N. E. 24, 25, 115 Ind. 525.

Where defendant, in the ordinary course of business, passed to the plaintiff notes of a bank that had previously stopped payment, he was held liable to the plaintiff for the amount of the bill, though neither party knew that the bank had stopped. Frontier Bank v. Morse, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 88, 99, 88 Am. Dec. 284; Ontario Bank v. Lightbody (N. Y.) 13 Wend. 101, 105, 27 Am. Dec. 179; Thomas v. Todd (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 340; *Westfall v. For every purpose in the ordinary transaction of business bank notes are considered as money. Bradley v. Hunt (Md.) 5 Gill & J. 54, 58, 23 Am. Dec. 597; Morrill v. Brown, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 178, 177; Morris v. Edwards, 1 Ohio (1 Ham.) 189, 204; Edwards v. Morris, Id. 524, 532.

The payment of a debt, in Confederate money, made and accepted in good faith, at the time and place where it was current, discharged the debt. Ponder v. Scott, 44 Ala. 241, 246; *Berry v. The note of a third person is not payment of a debt, unless it is expressly so agreed. Allen v. King (U. S.) 1 Fed. Cas. 483, 484; Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317, 322; Rawlings v. Robson, 70 Ga. 595, 597; Price v. Barnes (Ind.) 31 N. E. 909, 910; Bank of Monroe v. Gifford, 79 Iowa, 300, 44 N. W. 558; Patapasco Ins. Co. v. Smith (Md.) 6 Har. & J. 166, 169, 14 Am. Barber, 3 Cow. 272, 280; Chaloner v. Boyington, 91 Wis. 27, 64 N. W. 422.

In the absence of an agreement to that effect, the acceptance of a debtor's note is not payment of a claim. Bank of the United States v. Daniel, 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 82, 83, 9 L. Ed. 989; Lyman v. United States Bank, 53 U. S. (12 How.) 225, 245; Weed v. Snow (U. S.) 29 Fed. Cas. 572, 573; In re Ouimette (U. S.) 18 Fed. Cas. 913, 916; Lawrence v. United States (U. Where a debtor executes his note for a balance due, it will operate, prima facie, as a payment of the account. Hill v. Sloan, 59 Ind. 181, 187; Scott v. Ray, 85 Mass. (18 Pick.) 860, 866; Haley v. Jewett, 43 Mass. (2 Metc.) 168, 173. Contra, see McCoy v. Hazlett, 14 Kan. 480, 481; Hornbrooks v. Lucas, 24 W. Va. 493, 501, 49 Am. Rep. 277.

Taking a note from one of several joint debtors for a pre-existing debt is no payment, unless it be expressly agreed that it shall be so regarded. Lingenfelter v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82, 92; Muldon v. Whitlock (N. Y.) 1 Cow. 290, 303, 13 Am. Dec. 533; Bowers v. Still, 49 Pa. (18 Wright) 65, 71; Schollenberger v. Seldonridge, Id. 83, 85; Rosseau v. Oull, 14 Vt. 83, 84.

The taking of a debtor's note does not extinguish the debt, in the absence of any agreement to that effect, or of circumstances from which an intent to discharge the debt may be inferred. May v. Gamble, 14 Fla. 467, 498; Davis & Rankin Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Montrose Butter & Cheese Co., 59 Ill. App. 573, 575; Matteson v. Ellsworth, 83 Wis. 488, 501, 14 Am. Rep. 768.

The taking of the debtor's or another's note for a pre-existing debt is not a payment of the debt, unless the creditor expressly so agreed to take it. Higgins v. Wortell, 18 Cal. 830, 833; Medley v. Specker, 58 Ill. App. 157, 158; Gardner v. Gorham (Mich.) 1 Doug. 507, 510; Commiskey v. McPike, 20 Mo. App. 82, 84; Coxe v. Hankinson, 1 N. J. A bill, acceptance, or promissory note, either of the debtor or a third person, is not a payment or extinguishment of a debt, unless accepted as such. Wyllie v. Collins, 9 Ga. 223, 241; Herring v. Sanger (N. Y.) 3 Johns. Cas. 71, 72; Tobey v. Barber (N. Y.) 5 Johns. 68, 72, 4 Am. Dec. 828. Contra, see Smith v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254, 256, 34 Am. Rep. 256.

Where selectmen give a person whose sheep have been injured by dogs an order on the town treasurer, which was given and received in satisfaction of the claim, it constitutes a payment within Sess. Laws 1878, p. 825, § 5, providing that, when damages done by dogs to sheep have been paid by the town, it may recover the same from the owner of the dog. Town of Wilton v. Town of Weston, 48 Conn. 325, 328.

The mere acceptance of a note of a subscriber for stock, to apply upon a stock subscription, does not constitute payment; and while the transaction is valid, the note is not a payment for the stock, but a mere evidence of the debt incurred by the subscription and of a contract postponing payment of such indebtedness till the due date of the note. Williams v. Brewster, 93 N. W. 479, 483, 117 Wis. 370.

Same—Checks.

The delivery of the debtor's check of face value equal to the amount of the debt does not discharge the debt. Phillips v. Bullard, 58 Ga. 258; Cromwell v. Lovett, 1 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Hall) 58, 78; Franklin v. Vanderpool, Id. 88, 91; Collins v. Colmay, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 444, 446.

A payment is not shown by the mere receipt of a check, but it constitutes a payment if it is accepted as such and in due course actually paid. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549, 553, 38 Am. Rep. 544.

A check is not considered absolute payment of a debt unless it is expressly agreed to be taken as such, and in case of such agreement the creditor takes the risk of the payment of the check from the time he accepted it. Payment does not necessarily mean absolute payment. Where a check or note is accepted in payment of an antecedent debt, the presumption is that it is taken as conditional or provisional payment; that is, payment founded on condition that the check or note is paid. If the check is not paid when regularly presented, or the note is not paid when it matures, there is no payment of the debt. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 20 Pac. 28, 82, 78 Cal. 15.

Same—Goods.

Proof of payment of a note by delivery of wood is not admissible under an allegation of payment; but the delivery and acceptance of wood as satisfaction of the contract must be substantially alleged. Ulsch v. Muller, 9 N. E. 786, 787, 143 Mass. 379.

Mode of payment.

A debt is not extinguished by accepting an obligation of equal dignity. Bowers' Adm'x v. State (Md.) 7 Har. & J. 32, 36; Clopper's Adm'r v. Union Bank (Md.) 7 Har. & J. 92, 102, 16 Am. Dec. 294; Yates v. Donaldson, 5 Md. 389, 399, 61 Am. Dec. 283; Morrison v. Welty, 18 Md. 169, 176; Hart v. Boller (Pa.) 15 Serg. & R. 162, 163, 16 Am. Dec. 536.

Payment of collaterals held as security for a debt operates a satisfaction of the debt. Reeves v. Plough, 41 Ind. 204, 208; Farnsley v. Anderson Foundry & Machine Works, 90 Ind. 120, 121; King v. Hutchins, 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 561, 574; Bell v. Weir, 8 N. Y. Supp. 661, 662, 55 Hun, 611.

Payment is the fulfillment of a promise, and it must be made to the creditor himself or his assigns, or to some person authorized by him to receive it, either expressly or by implication, and, when properly made, discharges the debtor from his obligation. Exchange Bank v. Cookman, 1 W. Va. 69, 77 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

One cannot pay his own debt simply by paying a debt due to some one else by his creditor, which was not embraced in his own undertaking, or which his creditor should not agree might be discounted as payment. Hill v. Austin, 19 Ark. 230, 232.

Payment or tender, to be valid, must be made to the creditor, or to some person duly authorized to receive it, or to one who, although he may have no actual authority, has an apparent authority to act for the principal. Hale v. Patton, 60 N. Y. 233, 237, 19 Am. Rep. 163.

Redemption distinguished.

See "Redemption."

Set-off distinguished.

The distinction between a "payment" and a "set-off" is that a payment is, by consent of the parties, express or implied, appropriated to the discharge of the debt, whereas a set-off is an independent demand, calling for its own action, which the parties have not applied on the debt. Kennedy v. Davison, 33 S. E. 291, 292, 46 W. Va. 433; St. Louis & T. R. Packet Co. v. McPeters, 27 South. 513, 520, 124 Ala. 451.

A payment is by consent of the parties, either expressed or implied, appropriated to the discharge of the debt. A set-off is a mutual pending claim, which still continues to exist as such, and one which the parties do not intend shall be appropriated to satisfy the existing demands, but that each shall have mutual causes of action, and, of course, mutual actions, if they please, against each other. McDowell v. Tate, 12 N. C. 249, 251.

Evidence of payment.

A mere indorsement of payment on a note does not amount to a payment, but is simply evidence thereof. Bond v. Wilson, 40 S. E. 182, 183, 129 N. C. 387.

Time of payment.

The term "payment," used with reference to commercial paper, means payment in due course, and not by anticipation. So it is said that a payment of a bill before it becomes due does not extinguish it, any more than if it was merely discounted. Eckert v. Cameron, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 120, 127.

Payment to attorney.

Payment to the plaintiff's attorney, employed to collect a debt, is as effectual as payment to the plaintiff himself. Wilson v. Russ, 20 Me. 421, 424.

PAYMENT DOWN.

In construing a contract for the sale of land, in the absence of special words or circumstances indicating a different intent, a stipulation for "immediate payment," or "payment down," will be held to mean payment at the time when the deed is made out and executed. Bruner v. Wheaton, 46 Mo. 363, 367.

PAYMENT IN NOTES.

The words "payment in notes," in a writ whereby a vendor acknowledges receipt of the price of goods sold, "payment being satisfactory and in notes," did not imply an absolute payment, but the giving of notes merely to represent the price. Adler v. Burton Lumber Co., 15 South. 156, 157, 46 La. Ann. 379.

PAYMENT INTO COURT.

A payment into court is an admission of an indebtedness to the extent of the payment. Orth v. Zion's Co-op. Mercantile Inst., 5 Utah, 419, 423, 16 Pac. 590.

PAYMENT MORE THAN ONCE.

The phrase "payment more than once," in Pol. Code, § 3804, as amended by Act March 9, 1889, providing that any tax paid more than once may be refunded by the county treasurer by order of the board of supervisors, applies to taxes on property which has been paid by the owner, and the property afterwards erroneously sold therefor, and the taxes again paid by the tax sale purchaser. Hayes v. Los Angeles County, 33 Pac. 703, 99 Cal. 74.

PAYMENT OF MONEY.

See "Contract for Payment of Money Only"; "Instrument for the Payment of Money."

PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST.

See "Protest."

PAYMENTS BY THE DEBTOR.

Where a debtor makes an assignment, and in such assignment makes an express direction to his assignee to sell the property assigned and apply the same in payment of certain scheduled debts, and the assignee does as directed, the payments so made are "payments by the debtor," and avoid the bar of the statute of limitations. Letson v. Kenyon, 1 Pac. 562, 564, 81 Kan. 301.

PAYMENTS AND OFFSETS.

"Payments and offsets," as used in a claim filed by a mechanic for the purpose of establishing a mechanic's lien, which recites that the amount therein is a true statement of his demands after deducting all payments and offsets, is equivalent to all "credits and offsets," as used in a statute requiring such notice should show a true statement of the mechanic's demands after deducting all just credits and offsets. Preston v. Sonora Lodge, No. 10, L. O. O. F., 39 Cal. 116, 119.

PE. CEN.

"Pe. cen.," when used in a note for a certain sum of money at 10 pe. cen., was construed to mean "per cent." Gramer v. Joder, 65 Ill. 314, 315.

PEACE

See "Against the Peace"; "Bill of Peace"; "Breach of the Peace"; "Conservator of the Peace"; "Public Peace."

A "time of peace," as defined by Lord Coke, is "when the courts of justice be open, and the judges and ministers of the same may by law protect men from wrong and violence, and distribute justice to all." Skeen v. Monkelmer, 21 Ind. 1, 3.

"Peace," as used in relation to a breach of the peace, means the tranquillity enjoyed by citizens of a municipality or community, where good order reigns among its members, and is the natural right of all persons in political society. People v. Rounds, 35 N. W. 77, 79, 67 Mich. 432; Davis v. Durgess, 20 N. W. 540, 542, 54 Mich. 514, 52 Am. Rep. 828.

Under a city charter authorizing it to enact such ordinances as shall secure the peace of the city and to punish peace breakers, authority is not given to prohibit the keeping open of a store or shop on Sunday for the purpose of labor or traffic. Such acts are not an offense against the public peace, but an offense against public policy, punishable under the laws of the state. The word "peace," in its legal signification, means quiet, orderly behavior of individuals to one another and toward the government. Any riotous, forcible, or unlawful conduct or proceeding is a breach of the peace. Offenses against the public peace include all acts affecting the public tranquillity, such as assaults and batteries, riots, unlawful assemblies, forcible entry and detainer, etc. City of Corvallis v. Carille, 10 Or. 139, 142, 45 Am. Rep. 134.

A clause in the charter of a town, authorizing the mayor and council to pass and enforce all ordinances "necessary for the peace, good order, health, and safety of the town," authorizes an ordinance prohibiting domestic animals from running at large within the town limits. Cochrane v. City of Frostburg, 81 Atl. 703, 81 Md. 54, 27 L. R. A. 723, 48 Am. St. Rep. 479.

As cessation of war.

A bond stipulating that the money should be due "10 days after peace" between the United States and the Confederate States meant merely 10 days after the war is over, and not 10 days after the ratification of a treaty of peace. Chapman v. Wacaser, 64 N. C. 532, 533.

PEACE OFFICER.

Constable as, see "Constable."

A peace officer is defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 154, to be the sheriff or undersheriff, the deputy, constable, marshal, police constable, or policeman of a city, town, or village. Deyoe v. Ewen, 24 N. Y. Supp. 872, 873, 70 Hun. 545; People v. Clinton, 51 N. Y. Supp. 115, 116, 23 App. Div. 473.

A peace officer is a sheriff of a county or subdivision, or constable, marshal, or policeman of a city, town, village, or township. Rev. St. Okl. 1903, § 5243.

A peace officer is a sheriff of a county or his deputy, or a constable, or a marshal or policeman of any incorporated city or town. Rev. St. Utah 1898, § 4609.

A peace officer is a sheriff of a county or his deputy, or a constable, marshal, or policeman of a township, city, village, or town. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 7895; Code Crim. Proc. S. D. 1903, § 96.

A peace officer is a sheriff of a county, constable of a precinct, or marshal or policeman of a town. Ann. Codes & Sts. Or. 1901, § 1593.

The term "peace officer," as used in the Penal Code, signifies any sheriff, coroner, constable, policeman, watchman of an incorporation, city, or town, and such other officer or officers whose duty it is made to enforce and preserve the public peace. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 7720; Pen. Code S. D. 1903, § 815.

Peace officers are sheriffs of counties, and constables, marshals, and policemen of cities and towns, respectively. Comp. Laws Nev. 1900, § 4079.

"Peace officer," as used in the Penal Code, signifies any sheriff, constable, coroner, policeman, watchman of an incorporation, city or town, and such other officer or officers whose duty it is made to enforce and preserve the public peace. Rev. St. Okl. 1908, § 2898.

A peace officer is a sheriff of a county, or his undersheriff or deputy, or a constable, marshal, police constable, or policeman of a city, town, or village. Crim. Code N. Y. 1908, §§ 154, 960.

By the express provisions of Code Cr. Proc. art. 2520, the term "peace officer" includes a sheriff and his deputy. State v. Brooks, 42 Tex. 62, 72.

As used in a statute making it criminal to bribe or offer to bribe any sheriff or other peace officer, etc., the term "peace officer" includes "sheriffs, their deputies, jailors, constables, marshals of incorporated towns, and persons especially appointed to execute criminal processes." O'Brien v. State, 6 Tex. App. 665, 687; Newburn v. Durham, 82 S. W. 112, 115, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 655.

The following are peace officers: The sheriff and his deputies, constables, marshal, constable, and policemen of any incorporated town or city, and any proper person specially appointed to execute criminal process. Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 43. Messer v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 635, 637, 40 S. W. 488, 489.

"Peace officer" is practically synonymous with "conservator of the peace," it being held that an exemption of peace officers from a statutory prohibition against carrying concealed weapons included one who was by law made a conservator of the peace. Jones v. State (Tex.) 65 S. W. 92.

PEACE OF THE STATE.

See "In the Peace of the State."

PEACEABLE ENTRY.

See, also, "Open and Peaceable Entry."

PEACEABLE POSSESSION.

Peaceable possession is such as continues and is not interrupted by adverse suits to recover the estate. Stanley v. Schwalby, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 420, 147 U. S. 508, 37 L. Ed. 259.

"Peaceable possession," within the meaning of a statute giving a right to file a bill in equity to quiet title when any person is in peaceable possession of the lands, claiming to own the same, applies to any possession where the defendant, though setting up a claim of title, has not interfered with complainant's possession by any act which is actionable at law, by a suit which may or will involve the title of defendant. Allaire v. Ketcham, 35 Atl. 900, 901, 55 N. J. Eq. 163.

Peaceable possession means a possession which is acquiesced in by all others, including rival claimants, and need not be maintained by force or threats. If a person enter on land in the actual and peaceable occupation of another, the possession which he occupies cannot be deemed peaceable during the time when it has to be protected by firearms or other demonstrations of force against an attempted or threatened re-entry of the former occupant, who manifests to the intruder by his words and acts that he intended to re-enter at the earliest moment, when he can do so without violence, and who is only prevented from entering by an exhibition of firearms or threats or menaces. Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 45 Cal. 495, 504.

The words "peaceable possession," in the fourth section of the dormant judgment act of 1822, providing that a purchaser or those claiming under him should have been in peaceable possession of real estate for seven years before levy shall have been made thereon, has a meaning very similar to, if not the same as, the words "quiet enjoyment"; and to constitute a breach of such peaceable possession there must have been an actual ouster, and a levy against a landlord is not an actual ouster of the tenant. Gitten's Lessee v. Lowry, 15 Ga. 386.

The peaceable possession of slaves for the space of five years, contemplated by the statute (Gould's Dig. c. 162, § 8), means a possession adverse to the owner, and not as his bailee, or under a loan from him. Spencer v. McDonald, 22 Ark. 463, 473.

"Peaceable possession," within the meaning of the chapter relating to limitations against actions to recover real estate against persons in peaceable and adverse possession, etc., is such as is continuous, and not interrupted by adverse suit to recover the estate. Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3343.

PEAKED ROOF.

A hipped or peaked roof is one running up from all four sides of the building to a peak or ridge in the center. Hannen v. Pence, 40 Minn. 127, 129, 41 N. W. 657, 658, 12 Am. St. Rep. 717.

PEBBLES.

A quantity of spectacles made of glass and steel are dutiable under Act June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. 205, § 9), imposing a certain duty on pebbles for spectacles and all manufactures of glass, or of which glass shall be a component material. The terms "pebbles for spectacles" and "all manufactures of which glass shall be a component material" naturally connects the glass manufacture with the spectacles. There could be no spectacles without them. The colorless crystals in spectacles termed "pebbles," and the manufactures of glass used in spectacles, embrace the same idea, to wit, all pebbles or glass for spectacles. Those substances used in the manufacture of spectacles to aid the sight are described as pebbles or as glass. The pebbles and the glass are the materials which enable spectacles to aid the sight. Arthur v. Sussefeld, 96 U. S. 128, 130, 24 L. Ed. 772.

PECULATION.

"Peculation," as used in the title of Act 1875 (Laws 1875, c. 19), to provide more effectually for the punishment of peculation and other wrongs affecting public moneys and rights of property, indicates that one of the purposes of the act, or perhaps its primary purpose, was to afford additional security against the betrayal of official trusts by imposing severer punishment for embezzlement or other frauds, when committed by public officers in misapplying public property, than was provided by existing laws. Bork v. People, 91 N. Y. 5, 16.

PECULIAR.

In ecclesiastical law, a parish or church in England which has jurisdiction of ecclesiastical matters within itself, and independent of the ordinary, and is subject only to the metropolitan. Black, Law Dict.

PECULIAR BENEFITS.

Peculiar benefits are any enhancement of or increase in the market value of the property condemned by reason of the improvement for which the power of condemnation is exercised. Kansas City Suburban Belt Ry. Co. v. McElroy, 61 S. W. 871, 872, 161 Mo. 584.

The benefits to be assessed to the owner of property on account of a change in grade in a street on which the property abuts are the peculiar and not the general benefits; that is, not benefits which the owner derives from the improvement in common with the public at large, but only such benefits in respect to his property as the law calls "peculiar benefits," since for the general benefits the owner pays taxes along with others. Blair v. City of Charleston, 43 W. Va. 62, 70, 28 S. E. 841-845, 35 L. R. A. 852, 84 Am. St. Rep. 837 (citing James River Kanawha Co. v. Turner [Va.] 9 Leigh, 313; Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Foreman, 24 W. Va. 662).

PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES.

Code, § 2421, providing that all claims of a certain class against the estates of deceased persons, not filed and proved in 12 months after the giving of notice therefor by the administrator, are forever barred, unless the claim is pending in the district or Supreme Court, or unless peculiar circumstances entitle the claimant to equitable relief, should be construed to include the claim of one based on partition proceedings, which were not settled and determined until after the time limited for presenting such claims for allowance. Senat v. Findley, 50 N. W. 575, 576, 51 Iowa, 20.

PECULIAR DAMAGES.

"Peculiar damages," as used with relation to the individual injury necessary to entitle the party to sue to abate a public nuisance or for the obstructing of a highway, exist where complainant is deprived of access to the only public road leading to her market town, or where one had started upon a journey, and was compelled to go back by reason of an obstruction whereby he suffered loss. Cabbell v. Williams, 28 South. 405, 406, 127 Ala. 320.
